MINNESOTA
HISTORICAL SOCIETY

START

CROOKSTON

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL

JAN 4 THRU APR 24
1883 1884

Title:
(Crookston)
POLK COUNTY JOURNAL

6:36 - 7:52

Inclusive Dates: Jan 4 1883 Apr 24 1884

177-3 - 1978

Originals held by: MHS X Other ___

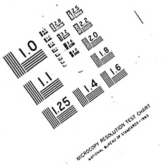
Prepared by: J.J.Wandrick
Date: 3/21/1978
Format: 1A X 2B ___

Filmed by: J.W.
Date: March 27, 78
Camera No. yellow

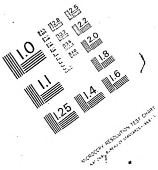
Reduction Ratio: 17
Voltmeter .74/80
No. Expos.

Prelim. Inspection by:
Date:
Density:

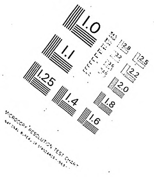
Target Resolution: ________/mm
O.K. ____
Reject ___
Length:



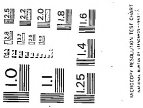
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
MICROCOPY RESOLUTION TEST CHART
NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS-1963-A



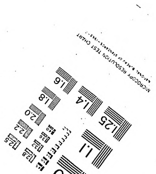
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
MICROCOPY RESOLUTION TEST CHART
NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS-1963-A



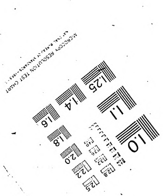
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
MICROCOPY RESOLUTION TEST CHART
NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS-1963-A



1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
MICROCOPY RESOLUTION TEST CHART
NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS-1963-A



1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
MICROCOPY RESOLUTION TEST CHART
NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS-1963-A



1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
MICROCOPY RESOLUTION TEST CHART
NATIONAL BUREAU OF STANDARDS-1963-A

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Proprietor.

DEVOTED TO THE WELFARE OF POLK COUNTY.

VOL. VI. CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1883. TERMS----$1.50 per Annum. NO. 36.

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

H. E. COOKE, Editor and Proprieor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar Fifty Cents, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum sent to any address.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

SPACE.	1 w.	2 w.	3 w.	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 year
½ Inch...	50	$1 00	$1 25	$1 50	$3 00	4 50	6 00
1 Inch.....	75	1 25	1 75	2 00	4 50	6 00	10 00
2 Inches..	1 50	2 25	3 00	3 50	6 50	9 50	13 00
3 Inches..	1 75	2 75	3 75	4 50	8 50	13 50	20 00
4 Inches.	2 50	3 50	4 50	5 50	10 00	16 00	25 00
5 Inches..	3 00	4 00	5 00	6 00	12 50	20 00	30 00
¼ Column	3 50	4 50	15 50	6 50	15 00	25 00	35 00
½ Column	6 00	7 50	10 00	12 00	15 00	35 00	50 00
1 Column	9 50	12 50	15 00	18 00	25 00	60 00	100 00

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class Matter.

FARM NOTES.

From the Minnesota Tribune.

THE WATER SUPPLY ON FARMS.

Pure water for household use is of the greatest value, and the utmost care should be had that it is pure, because none other is fit for domestic use. Everything impure should be kept at a distance from the well, and it should be so constructed that no surface water can get into it. Where a well can be driven it is undoubtedly the best, because nothing can get into it without filtering through the ground; it is considerable cheaper too than a dug well. In digging a well people very often make a mistake in not going deep enough. It is apt to be the case that as soon as a vein of water is reached it is supposed to be sufficient, even if it is small, and so after going down far enough to make a little reservoir it is stoned up, and and the result is that the next summer perhaps the well is dry. This is very annoying, besides being an expensive job.

Water is needed in abundance at the farm buildings, and it should be provided somehow, either by springs, wells, a cistern, or else brought from a distance in a pipe. The best time to dig a well is during a severe drought, and if a good vein is then reached but little fear need be entertained that the supply will fail.

Cisterns should not be constructed under the dwelling, but out of doors. When making a cistern be sure and make it large enough. Undoubtedly there is water enough falls on the roofs of farm buildings in the course of the year to supply the stock with drinking water, as well as water for all household purposes; and if it is properly filtered it is good deal more wholesome than much water that is used.

THE BEST DRAUGHT HORSES.

The Mark Lane Express of London, having circulated questions respecting draught horses among a number of great firms, etc., employing them, has obtained much information in reply. To the question, "Is there any breed of heavy draught horses which, more than any other, is especially adapted to heavy work in paved towns?" the Southampton Dock Company replies: "With 25 year's experience we find that Belgian and English mixed breed horses are best adapted for heavy work on paved roads. Geldings are always prefered, and roans are the favorite color." Messrs. Coarage, great London brewers, object to heavy flesh legged horses for work on the stones. As to heavy legged horses opinions are divided. Mr. Wallis of Dublin, who runs the express wagons of several leading Irish railroads, says that the English and Scotch horses are much more easier managed than the Irish. One authority pronounces in favor of the mixed Belgian and English horses so far as price, power and durability are concerned, but most are decidedly in favor of the breeds of the United Kindom. The feet of foreign breeds, they say, will not stand the stones.

SALT AND LIME.

The following is recommended as an excellent combination for fertilizing purposes: Mix one bushel of salt with two bushels of dry lime, under cover and allow the mixture to decompose gradually, thus forming an intimate chemical union of two materials. For this purpose the mixture should lie at least six weeks before use, or still better, two or three months, the heap being turned over occasionally. This salt and lime mixture when applied at the rate of 20 to 30 bushels per acre, forms an excellent top-dressing for crops. It acts powerfully on the vegetable matter of soils. Fifty bushels applied to a turnip field have produced as large a crop as 20 loads of barnyard manure. It is also very destructive to insects and grubs in the soil. Like salt, it attracts moisture from the air, and has been found useful against drouth. Its decomposing power is remarkable, and if three or four bushels of it are mixed with a cord of swamp muck the latter will soon be reduced to powder. Coarse manure is in a similar manner decomposed and made fine.

HOT MILK AS A STIMULANT.

Of hot milk as stimulant the Medical Record says: "Milk heated to much above 100° Fahrenheit loses for a time a degree of its sweetness and density. No one who, fatigued by over-exertion of the body or mind, has ever experienced the reviving influence of a tumbler of this beverage, heated as hot as it can be sipped, will willingly forego a resort to it because of its being rendered somewhat less acceptable to the palate. The promptness with which its cordial influence is felt is indeed surprising. Some portion of it seems to be digested and appropriated almost immediately, and many who new fancy they need alcoholic stimulants when exhausted by fatigue will find in this simple draught an equivalent that will be abundantly satisfying and far more enduring in its effects."

QALITY RATHER THAN QUANTITY.

An over production to any given article of trade or commerce usually causes a reduction in price. Hence those who count their wealth by the quantity standard are not infrequently sadly disappointed when at the final reckoning of the profits for the season they find them much less than they had expected. It is well therefore that all who would keep on the safe side for success should bear in mind that although the demand for quantity may be more than supplied that for quality is seldom it ever fully met. As a rule the better grades or manufactured articles, as well as live stock, always meet with ready sale. To produce the best animals for the purpose they are designed, should be the aim of every true breeder. He who succeeds in this will scarcely fail of two fold reward—the satisfaction of seeing improved stock about him, and of receiving good prices for what he may have to seel—Swine Breeder's Manual.

MULCHING STRAWBERRIES.

The Epitomist says: Material for mulching the strawberry beds should be caryfully chosen. Last year we tried wheat chaff, thinking it would be convenient and easily applied. The crop of wheat and weeds which resulted was a terror, though in all other respects it answered admirably. This yeor we are experimenting with planing mill shavings, and so far are well pleased. Our ground is heavy clay, and the shavings may prove a benefit. At any rate they will not introduce any weed seeds.

GREEN FOOD FOR POULTRY.

The time is approaching, says the Poultry Journal, when every breeder should see that his fowls are provided with green food for winter use. On a moment's reflection one can see it is necessary to insure health and prolificacy. Fowls, as well as other animals, require a certain amount of coarse and refuse matter to keep them free from constipation, indigestion and other kindred complaints. The prudent and careful poulterer will take "time by the forelock," and before winter sets in will story away cabbage, turnips, rowen, onions and potatoes for his fowls. Cabbage, in ordinary years, is undoubtedly the very best and cheapest green food that can be had. It is not necessary nor economical to purchase prime heads for their use, as the soft heads which are not marketable are just as good and cost one-half less. The same with turnips and potatoes. They can be had cheap by purchasing from farmers the small or refuse part of the crop. These articles can be stored in a dry cellar, and will be found very useful during the four or five months of winter, when the fowls require good artificial feeding in variety to make them lay at all during the frigid term or to incite them to commence their work early in the spring. The lawn mowings and clover heads can be saved and stored in coffee sacks in a dry, cool place until need for use and by steaming or cooking the vegetables with meal or potatoes there is no waste, and during the cold weather is a grand need that must not be lost sight of if the breeder would like to do his stock justice and see them thrive and lay well in the early spring, when their eggs are most valuable for securing early broods.

FLORAL HINTS.

The lily of the valley is quite hardy in all parts of the country, but likes a cool rather than a warm exposure, and if possible it should have a slight shade. Naturally it grows among shrubs and low trees, from which it receives some shade and shelter, and in planting it we should, if possible, give it a location imitating its natural site. In preparing a bed for it, if the material were at hand, we should mix some leaf mould with the soil, but it usually succeeds on most soils without speciol preparation.

The Chinese wistaria is a woody plant with a perennial stem, like the Virginia creeper, that increases in size with age. It is hardy in the northern states and the southern portion of Ontario, receiving injury by the cold at the ends of its shoot only in the most severe winters.

Perfectly double flowers cannot produce seed, since all the reproductive organs are converted into petals. Semi-double or partially double flowers may produce seed, and these flowers possibly may be self-fertilized or may be fertilized by other partially double or by single ones, and in either case may form seed, a considerable portion of which will produce flowers more or less double. Or single flowers fertilized by semi-double ones may produce seeds capable of similar results. Unusually large and vigorous plants are not particularly favorable for the production of seed, but rather, particularly unfavorable; plants of medium vigor, neither stunted nor forced into rank growth, are best. The raising of seeds that will produce double flowers is an art that requires much experience to enable one to practice it successfully, and nearly every kind of flower requires a peculiar and special treatment.

Auratum lily does well under pot culture. Use a 10-inch pot; place in the bottom an inch or two of drainage, and then fill in about three inches of a compost of equal parts leaf-mould, decayed sods and finely pulverized, old leached cow manure, over this a layer of sand about an inch thick, and rest the bulb on it; then fill the compost all around and within half an inch of the top. Give a light watering and set the pot away in the cellar to remain a number of weeks, possibly two or three months, or until a shoot appears, then it can be taken up where it can have more heat and the full light of the sun. While in the cellar do not allow the soil to become dry, but be careful to keep only gently moist. When taken to the light increase the quantity of water with the growth as demanded.

SALTING BUTTER.

Butter, says the Dairyman, is usually salted in accordance with the demands of the market to which it is to be sent. American butter is generally salted at the rate of about one ounce to the pound. Perhaps the greater part of the sweet cream butter has half or less than half that quantity. In the south of Europe, indeed in all Latin countries, oil is in more general use than butter, and unsalted butter, is preferred. The Parisian custom of serving butter entirely unsalted is sometimes aped in England and some American cities, but as a rule the markets demand that the butter shall carry more than half an ounce of salt.

Unsalted butter will keep forever—provided it is butter and only butter. But the butter of commerce is never pure. It retains more or less of the other properties of the milk, and it is these which, while they add very much to its value, are subject to almost immediate deterioration, and in turn tend to injure the butter itself. Even salt will not long preserve them. Unsalted butter does not "keep." The use of salt in butter is more for flavoring than for preservative porposes. The protection and preservation of butter are due far more to the package than to the salt which is put in it.

FRAUDULENT USES OF GLUCOSE.

Mr. L. D. Younkin, in the West Branch, Iowa, Record gives the following on glucose:

A solution of glucose is often mixed with honey and sold as honey. Those buying honey that has been shipped from the East are often deceived by this adulteration. The principal gain is to the man who sells his glucose water for 15 or 20 or 25 cents per pound. Pure honey will become candied if let stand for a time, and when you see a bit of honey comb swimmen about in a liquid syrup of brownish color, be not deceived, for it is likely to be glucose water with a little honey in it.

Glucose is also used extensively in the manufacture of candy; Excepting in liquors and beverages, there is no worse nor more objectionable article made from it; not because of the glucose that is in it, but other stuffs, some of which in larger quantities would be poisonous. Candies are very much adulterated and should be eaten sparingly. Glucose is used in the manufecture of beer. This requires one-third less barley. It is used in whisky, brandy, and many wines. A little rain water sweetened with brown sugar (glucose), to which is added a third or equal quantity of alcohol, makes a coarse article of "rot-gut" whisky. Glucose in used in the manufacture of these liquors because it is cheap and the process is rapid compared with the old way, and then because glucose will ferment, pure sugar will not.

All of these liquors thus made are very inferior articles. It is this that has been so much cendemned as the adulteration of liquors.

From the fact that glucose ferments and sugar does not, brown sugar (glucose) should not be used in preserving nor canning fruits, yet this difficulty cannot always be obviated, for pure sugar is turned to glucose when boiled with any acidulous fruit and is then liable to ferment.

J. ENGEL,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN BAR GLASSER,
Of all kinds and Goods used at Bars Only.
full line of
LAMPS AND CHANDILIERS.
The only House in this line west of Chicago.
No. 23 East Third Street. St. Paul, Minn.

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed by S. R. Norris and Allie A. Norris, his wife, mortgagors, to Andrew C. Johnson, of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 23d day of October, 1879, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on the 20th day of December, 1879, whereby said mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate, situated in the County of Pold and State of Minnesota, to-wit: All of lot six (6) in Section number thirty (30) Township number one hundred and fifty (150), Range forty-six (46) containing twenty-seven and 70-100 acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, to secure the payment of twenty-six hundred and thirteen dollars, and interest thereon from date, at the rate of ten per cent until fully paid, according to the terms of five certain promissory notes in said mortgage described, executed and delivered by said mortgagors to said mortgagee, each in the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, three of which notes have been paid, and one of which notes for the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the 23d day of October, 1879, became due and payable on the 23d day of October, 1882, and has not been paid; and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, on the first day of April, 1880, at three o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., in book "B" of mortgages, on page 231.

And, whereas, the following described pieces or parcels of land was released from the lein of said mortgage, to-wit: a piece or parcel of land beginning at the south-west corner of the south-east quarter of Section 30, Township number 150, Range 46, thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet, to a corner; thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river; thence south thirty-five degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south twenty-four degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south fifteen degrees west one hundred and eight feet to a corner on the south line of said Section 30; thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30) one hundred and fifty-eight feet to the place of beginning; which said piece or parcel of land contains three acres and nine-tenths, and was conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, in Deed Book "B," page 504, and which described piece or parcel of land is excepted from the said described lot six, Section 30.

Also excepting from said lot six, Section 30, aforesaid, all that strip of land thirty-three feet wide off of the north end of said lot six, Section thirty (30); the said strip of land being eighty rods long.

And, whereas, said mortgage was heretofore duly assigned by said Andrew C. Johnson, mortgagee, to Ansel Bates, of Crookston, Polk County, Minnesota, by deed of assignment duly executed and delivered, and bearing date the 20th day of December, 1881, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, on the 30th day of December, 1881, at five o'clock p. m. in book "F" of mortgages, on page 150.

And, whereas, there is unpaid on said mortgage the sum of ten hundred and forty-five dollars and twenty cents, with interest thereon from October 23d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum; that one note or installment, viz: five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, with interest thereon from October 23d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent., is now due and unpaid, amounting to the sum, including the interest thereon, of six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and thirty-five cents ($688.35-100) which is due at the date of this notice, and the further sum of seventy-five dollars which is allowed as an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, by the terms of said mortgage. And no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the amount of said note and the interest thereon, or any part of the debt secured by said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the said mortgaged property, not including the parcels of land hereinbefore mentioned as having been released from the lien of said mortgage, and the balance of said mortgaged property will be sold in one tract by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at public auction to the higest bidder for cash, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the said County and State, on the eighth day of February, 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day to satisfy and pay said debt and interest thereon and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the seventy-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the expenses and disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated this 19th day of December, 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Assignee of Mortgage.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Assignee. [34-40]

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAVING BEEN made in the payment of the sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars, ($3500,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, executed and delivered by James G. McDonald to Ansel Bates bearing date the Third day of April A. D. 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the Third day of April A. D. 1882, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in Book I of Mortgages, on pages 2, 3 and 4, and which Mortgage was given to secure the payment of Thirty-five hundred dollars, and interest according to the conditions of a certain promissory note in said Mortgage described and executed and delivered by said Mortgagor to the said Mortgagee, in said sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars payable on the first day of November 1882, with interest until paid, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and bearing even date with said Mortgage, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: All of Lot six (6) in Section thirty (30) in Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) excepting from said lot six. The following described piece or parcel of land, viz: Beginning at the southwest corner, of the southeast quarter, of Section thirty (30) Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet (560) to a corner, thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river, thence south 35° west one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 24° west, one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 15° west, one hundred and eight feet to a corner, on the south line of said Section thirty (30,) thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30,) one hundred and fifty-eight feet (158) to the place of beginning, containing three acres and nine-tenths, which has been conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, in deed book "B" page 504, and also excepting from said lot six (6) the following described lot of land, viz: All that strip of land thirty-three feet wide (33) off of the north end of said lot six (6) Section thirty (30) Town one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) the said strip being eighty rods long. The land Mortgaged in the above mentioned Mortgage and which will be foreclosed by a sale thereof embraces all the balance of said lot six not included in the above mentioned exceptions and contains twenty-two acres and eight-tenths, which was Mortgaged as and will be foreclosed and sold as one tract of land, situated in the City of Crookston, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the eighth day of February A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 19th, A. D. 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [34-40]

HOUSES MOVED.

Do you want to move your house to another lot? If so, call on or address
[illegible] T. A. HARRIS, Crookston.

150 -150- 150
OVERCOATS AND ULSTERS!
Also 450
Woolen Suits, Cloaks and Dolmans, a large and superb stock very cheap.
GREAT REDUCTION
On Dress Goods,
Flannels, Water Proofs, Ladies' Cloth, Beavers, Velvets, Plushes, Silks and Satins. The largest stock in Ladies' and Gent's Furnishing Goods, Hats and Caps. Also a large stocke of Silverware, Jewelry and Watches.

FOR THE LADIES!

We keep a fine MILLINERY DEPARTMENT, well supplied with ALL OF THE LATEST AND MOST SUPERB STYLES OF MILLINERY, TRIMMED AND UNTRIMMED HATS, of all styles, Flowers, Plumes, Ostrich Feathers in all colors. The Largest and Finest stock euer seen out West. Give us a call and examine goods and prices at the GREAT BANKRUPT STORE, where everybody can save from 20 to 50 per cent

I. & H. BRIN, Proprietors.

McKINNON BROS.
MANUFACTURERS OF
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, WAGONS, CUTTERS, SLEDS, MILL CARTS, &C.
Axles, Springs, and all Repairs kept in stock.

DEALERS IN
FARM MACHINERY.
In Farm Machinery, we have a full line of Hoosier and Wolverine Seeders, Dixon Diamond Tooth Harrows; Davenport, Peru City and Norwegian Walking and Sulky Plows; Chieftain Hay Rake, Iron King Mower Centre Draft; St. Paul, Twine, Self-Binder. Extras for the different Machines always in stock.

MOSER & MOECKEL,
—DEALERS IN THE BEST CLASS OF—
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,
—INCLUDING THE—
FOUNTAINE CITY AND BUCKEYE SEEDERS,
Case Wagons, Cassady, Buford and Hapgood, Walking, Sulky and Gang
---PLOWS,----
Minneapolis Twine Binder, the Meadow Lark and Buckeye Mowers, the celebrated Fargo and Scotch Harrows, Nichols & Shephard Vibrators and Straw and Wood Burning Engines, the Cooper Stationery and Portable Straw and Wood Burning Engines, C. Aultman & Co's new Model Thresher and Monitor Engine. A full line of
—BUGGIES, SLEIGHS, CUTTERS—
—AND PLATFORM SPRING WAGONS.—
In fact everything usually kept in their line.

INSURANE AGENCY.—We write policies only in the best and most responsible companies, at as low rates as can be secured on the class of property insured. Our list of companies will bear inspection.

Money to Loan.

MOSER & MOECKEL.

Red Lake Falls
THE SECOND
MINNEAPOLIS!
The new map of Red Lake Falls
IS NOW READY and on Exhibition at the Merchants' Bank where SELECTIONS OF TOWN LOTS
May be Made.

Van Dyke & Denniston,
PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.
COR. MAIN AND SECOND STREETS,
Will attend to all professional calls promptly.

A. A. JUST, M. D.,
Homeopathic Physician and Surgeon,
Main Street, near U. S. Land Office,
CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINN.

A. H. DUNLAP, M. D.
GRADUATE McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.
Licensed College Physician and Surgeon, Quebec.
OFFICE OVER MERCHANTS' BANK.

AIME GABOURY,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
Graduate Doctor in Medicine Laval University Canada. Licensed Coll. Phy. Surg., Quebec Late of Michigan University, U. S.
☞ Office over the "Arcade" Clothing Store Crookston, Minn.

DR. M. WATTS,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Office on Main Street, one door north of Star Drugstore. Professional calls, by day or night attended to with promptness.

DENTISTRY.
J. H. THOMAS, D. D. S.,
ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN
Artificial teeth from one to an entire set inserted. Gold, silver or artificial filling when desired. Regulating children's teeth a specialty All work warranted.

C. W. BARNES, D. D. S.,
Graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery.
OFFICE AT RESIDENCE ON BROADWAY CROOKSTON

MIDWIFERY.
Mrs. Olena Dawley, a graduate of the mid-wife College, of Christiania, Norway, has opened an office on Fletcher Avenue. Having had an experience of 12 years in Norway and six years in America, she is fully competent to treat all cases entrusted to her. All diseases of women or children carefully and scientifically treated.

JOHN LEO. H. STEENERSON.
LEO & STEENERSON.
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
MAIN STREET,
CROOKSTON, - - - MINN.

—JOHN N. IVES.— —D. K. HALTESTAD.—
IVES & HATLESTAD,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Collection and Land Office Business made a Specialty.
Money secured for final proofs on short notice.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

P. A. DUFOUR,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELOR AT LAW
—MAIN STREET,—
CROOKSTON - - MINN

REYNOLDS & WATTS,
Attorneys at Law,
MAIN STREET, - - CROOKSTON, MINN

CROOKSTON HOUSE,
Main Street, Crookston, Minn.
J. E. MITTEN, - PROPRIETOR.
FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR
☞ Good Sample Room.

COMMERCIAL HOUSE.
W. H. TOPPING, Proprietor,
SECOND STREET - CROOKSTON, MINN
Having leased this new and commodious hotel we are now prepared to supply the needs of the traveling public in first-class style. Our house is entirely new and newly furnished; we have had a long experience in the hotel business and hope to be able to meet the wants of our patrons and friends. We would respectfully invite a share of the public patronage. Call and see us.

ALBION HOUSE,
ISADORE FORTIER, Prop.
Cor. Broadway and Robert Street,
CROOKSTON, POLK CO., MINNESOTA
Terms moderate. Good stabling.

European Hotel
AND
Ladies' and Gents' Restaurant.
Within two blocks of Union Depot, 149 and 188 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.
☞ OPEN DAY AND NIGHT. ☜
THEO. GOLDEN, Proprietor.

Second Street
MEAT MARKET
STANTON & CO., Proprietors.
Choice Meats of every description. Fish and game in their seasons. Everything of the very best quality and lowest prices. Call and see us Stanton & Co., Dobson's Block, Second Street.

NEW HARDWARE FIRM.
DREW BROTHERS,
No. 333 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.
Extensive stock of General Hardware and Mechanics Tools. Our goods are new and quality guaranteed. Agent for the Howe Scales and Trucks

FAIRBANKS
Standard Scales
OF ALL KINDS.
FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO.,
66 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.

FURNITURE STORE.
OAK STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.
BATAGLIA & KNACK, PROPRIETORS
Keeps constantly on hand a well selected stock of Wardrobes, Bureaus, Sofas, Lounges, Bedsteads, Bed Springs, Tables, Chairs, Rockers, Stands, Ornaments, Picture Mouldings and Picture Frames. Repairing done to order. [illegible]

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON THURSDAY, JAN. 4.

The Latest Arrivals

Are always to be found at C. A. & J. R. Chiniquy's.

The Daisy Gem patent flour, A No 1.

White Fish and extra Mess Mackeral,
Hams, Dried Beef, Gold Leaf Lard,
New York Full Cream Cheese,
Canned Fruits and Vegetables of all kinds,
Cigars, Plug, Fine Cut and Smoking Tobacco,
New Assortment of Majolica and Printed-Ware.
Booth's Fresh oysters daily at C. A. & J. R. Chiniquy's, Main and Second Streets, Crookston, Minn.

Thirty cent cigars for a nickel at Sargent & Lewis.'

W. O. Wilson came in from St. Hilaire on Wednesday between 12 m. and dark.

Sargent & Lewis have received a lot of nice fresh butter.

Rev. Page has secured a residence and will remain as pastor of the Congregational church.

Miss Jessie Pratt has returned from her holiday visit; Miss Klepper does not return at present.

Rev. T. J. West received a fine buffalo coat and a pair of fur gloves as a christmas present from friends in Springfield, Mass.

St. Paul Dispatch: Senator H. Steenerson, of Crookston, is a stalwart mentally and politically. He will be heard from.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Oysters, in can or bulk, the finest in the market, at Sargent & Lewis.'

A. R. Vining was cleared of the charge of safe cracking and then cleared himself of his lawyers' bill. A clear case that.

The Billy Marble Comedy Company gave three of their entertainments in the city last week which were hugely enjoyed by all who attended.

Herb Mason has an excellent cigar called "Herb's Own." If you enjoy a good cigar call at the P. O. News Stand and sample one of Herb's Own.

Sargent & Lewis continue to sell goods above cost and so great is the rush there every day for good goods at reasonable prices that they are looking out for fifteen or twenty more clerks to wait upon their customers.

The Dispatch man is so terribly mixed up on the Senatorial question that he dates his issue of Monday last "December 1 1883." Evidently Castle is fearfully rattled and thinks that if it isn't "Dec. 1st 1883" it ought to be.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Miss A. Snyder, who came to our city from Elmira, New York, two years ago next May, who is now teaching in the high schools, at Grand Forks, is in the city spending her vacation with her friends. She is the guest of Miss Miller and Miss Piper.

Mr. N. Dilude's sample room was closed by the stern arm of the law last week. It is said that two loads of the goods tried to go quietly away without proper authority but slipped up on it. Although liquid they did not run well this weather.

Have you seen Sargent & Lewis' large display of fresh canned goods?

Henry Bender and Louis Fried, who have been in the city a few weeks collecting for H. Hammel, will leave for Milwaukee on Saturday evening. They will return early in the spring with a lot of good horses. Mr. Hammel has sold horses in this city for two years and we have yet to hear the first complaint. He sells good horses reasonably.

A lyceum was organized in the M. E. church last Tuesday evening for the mutual improvement of the young people of Crookston. All are cordially invited to join the lyceum and take part in the proceedings. This will supply a long felt want in this place. A meeting will be held every Tuesday evening in the M. E. church, commencing at half past seven.

Alex. Holden, of Ada, was in the city on Wednesday with as fine a sample of butter as was ever made in Orange County, N. Y., or anywhere else, only that butter was a genuine product of the Red River Valley, and is enough to convince the most skeptical that this Valley is good for something besides wheat. While other farmers have made money on wheat, Alex. is making big money on butter. We trust that ere long many others will follow suit.

Sargent & Lewis make fine teas a specialty.

It is said that there are none so deaf as those who wont hear and that is doubtless the reason that a certain attorney, when solicited by a handsome young lady to purchase a ticket to the Wednesday evening entertainment made an ear trumpet of his hand and mildly and mournfully requested the young lady to "speak louder, please, very deaf, you know (?)" And when that young lady howled like a Rocky Mountain blizzard that same mild blankness was visible and "nix verstey" as plainly written upon that countenance as ever until she left in disgust. If she had only suggested a fat fee now!

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston, Minn. [31-44]

No. 1 wheat 81; No. 2 76.

The new County Board met on Tuesday.

1883 seems to be a pretty solid individual.

W. H. McCulough is building a new paint shop on Broadway.

Mr. H. B. Montgomery, of St. Paul looked over the city this week.

The K. of H. New Years Hop was a splendid affair and well attended.

K. Nelson was up from Garfield to participate in the Board meeting.

Mr. F. T. Haseltine and wife have gone to Madison, Wis., for the winter.

Drs. Clark & Leroy are now accessible to the outer world. Summon them by telephone.

Fred Date of Maple Lake was shaking hands with friends in the city during the holiday week.

P. J. McGuire returned from his holiday visit in time to take a hand in the proceedings of the new Board.

Charlie Seeley has a pair of robins that he took when very young. They are kept at the Exchange and are very musical.

If was rumored last week that the N. P. management had captured the St. P., M. & M. R. R. The rumor was promptly denied.

We are selling off cheap for cash. If you do not see what you want, ask for it, we have it.
[34-36] FONTAINE & ANGLIM.

Our thanks are due T. S. White, of St. Paul, for a handsome New Years Card. When you want solid stationery send to True. He keeps none other.

The little folks are joyfully (?) anticipating resuming school duties next week. But they have had lots of fun and will buckle down to business now with renewed zeal.

A. F. Jannecke a brakesman on the yard mashed his right hand badly on Monday evening. Dr. Dampier fixed the hand up in good shape and will doubtless save it.

Buffalo coats, ready made clothing and Gent's Furnishing Goods at your own price at [34-36] FONTAINE & ANGLIM'S.

The Congregational S. S. sleigh ride on New Years day, and supper was a decided success. Hundreds of little hearts were made glad and the older ones who participated seemed to enjoy it muchly.

Messrs Leech & McManus inform us that horse power is too slow—they are now using steam to saw wood with. They say horse-power will answer for soft or rotten wood but theirs is too solid for such foolishness.

Col Bostwick, who was in the early part of last month, reported missing from Duluth was last week heard from in New York City. His friends received a telegram from him at that place announcing that he would be at home soon. It is reported that his affairs as city treasurer were not all O. K.

You can get some good bargains for the next few days at Fontaine & Anglim's. [34-36]

The Holidays passed off very pleasantly with Charlie Seeley, at the Exchange. Roast turkey, roast chickens, and various other roast meats contributed to the success in no small degree. Charlie knows how to entertain.

Rev. T. J. West was in the city from his claim on Union Lake this week. He reports all serene in that neighborhood. He says that the ground in the woods is frozen about one and one-half inches in depth and that one would hardly realize that he was experiencing a Minnesota winter so warm and pleasant it is.

Special offer in Story & Camp's Pianos and Organs, to Feb. 1st at Lambert & Mathews' new Furniture store, Second Street. Tuning and repairing reasonably done. [35-38]

The Concert and recitation exercises, given in Ericsson's Hall on Wednesday evening was a truly enjoyable affair in every particular and shows conclusively that we need not send out of our own city for musical talent of a high order. The recitations given by Miss Marie Hale and Miss Clara Robinson have never been excelled in this city and were highly enjoyed by all. We have not learned what the receipts of the evening were but judging from the size of the audience they must be considerable.

Old Folks' Concert.

The Congregational Society have made arrangments for an Old Folks' Concert to be given at an early date for the benefit of the Congregational Church. Due and timely notice will be given of the event which, judging by the program already partly made will be well worth hearing.

Hank Lowis Roller Patent

Is claimed to be the best brand of flour in the market. Kept by Sargent & Lewis.

Alice Oates

Opera Company have engaged Ericsson's Hall for Friday and Saturday, Jan. 19th and 29th. All who are acquainted with this company will anticipate a rare treat.

Ed Walsh has secured the services of Mr. Halbrook, a practical sewing machine man and is now prepared to repair broken sewing machines and make them [illegible] new. Mr. Walsh is agent for the celebrated Wilson and the unexcelled Domestic Sewing Machines and keeps a full supply of extras for the same. He is also prepared to rent sewing machines on reasonable terms. Call and examine his stock before you purchase. [35-36]

For Sale. To Rent.

Four thousand acres of cultivated and timber lands at the mouth of the Sand Hill on the Red River, for sale. Also farms to rent. Address,
STEENERSON BROS.
[30-tf] Crookston or Fisher.

School Desks.

Districts wanting the best desk manufactured, and warranted to be so will do well to call on W. H. Jennings, Sherman House, Crookston. He represents the Racine School Furniture Co., and warrants from five to ten years. [4-tf]

Notice.

All persons in interest will take notice that I have purchased of N. P. Stone, his undivided one-sixth interest in the Town site of Carman, South Crookston.

The above interest will be sold as a whole or in any part to suit purchasers. For particulars apply to owner, or Reynolds & Watts, Attorneys.
[19-tf] J. H. KLING.

Wanted.

An energetic agent for Polk county. Address Singer Manufacturing company, Fargo, D. T.

$100,000 to Loan.

Prove up you claim. Cash paid for School Bonds and County Orders. Call on or address,
BROWER & MCLEAN,
[24-tf] Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

A fine farm of 183 acres only a short distance from the city. Twenty-three acres timber, 129 acres under cultivation; good house and barn. Apply at JOURNAL office. 21-tf.

OYSTERS.

Booth's Baltimore oysters received daily by express at
C. A. & J. R. Chiniquy in cans and bulk.

Money to Loan.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to loan on improved farms from THREE to FIVE years time at very reasonable rates. Apply at my office on Main street, opposite U. S. Land Office.
[14-tf] H. STEENERSON.

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,761,370.
German American, N. Y.	3,094,030.
German, Freeport, Ill.	1,028,407.
Niagara,	1,557,487.
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,589.
Fireman's Fund, California,	1,160,017.
National, of Hartford.	1,704,803.
N. Y. Alliance,	1,627,849.
Phoenix, of Hartford	2,624,033
Union, California,	1.20,038.
British America,	1,343,909.
North British	1,953,089.

We also represent the Travelers Life and Accident Insurance Co, of Hartford.

BENHAM & UNDERHILL
Insurance Agency
17-tf.

Farmers and others desiring a genteel, lucrative agency business, by which $5 to $20 a day can be earned, send address at once, on postal, to H. C. WILKINSON & Co., 195 and 195 Fulton Street, New York. [34—38]

RED LAKE FALLS, Dec. 2, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the partnership heretofore existing between the undersigned under the style of H. B. Kaufer & Son, is this day dissolved by mutual consent.

Dated Dec. 2, 1882.

H. B. KAUFER.
L. A. KAUFER.

Bobsleds, Cutters.

The McKinnon Brothers have 250 pairs of bobsleds, 45 swell box cutters and also a good supply of cutters suitable for grocers, which they will sell cheap for cash. These sleighs are all their own make which is a good and sufficient guarantee. Call and examine their stock if you intend to purchase.
[29-tf]

If you want a little muscular exercise call at Pete Misgin's for a game of nine pins.

Hair Dressing.

For particulars call at Mrs. I. U. Jennings Millinery Rooms, on Main St., Crookston, Minn.
[30-tf]

Notice.

All parties indebted to us are requested to call and settle by note or cash at our place, do not ask for further credit till settlement is made.
[34-tf] FONTAINE & ANGLIM.

For Sale Cheap.

A second hand cook stove. Call at JOURNAL office. [34-tf]

Call and examine the large stock of fresh confectionery just arrived at Sargent & Lewis.

Oysters.

Five Barrels of selecte, extra fine at Sargent & Lewis.

Herb has a lot of those celebrated White Crow cigars. If you enjoy a good cigar try a White Crow.

Found.

On Tuesday afternoon, several Ostrich Feathers. Owner can recover property by calling at the JOURNAL office and paying for this notice.
[34-tf] ANDERS HANSON.

Pickles.

We have the largest stock and assortment of pickles in Northern Minnesota.

Chow Chow,
Large pickles,
Medium pickles,
Small pickles,
Gherkins pickles,
Sweet pickles,
Fancy mix pickles,
Pickled onions,
Sweet pickled onions.

We sell these in quantities to suit customers by the single pint, or by the [illegible] also in 5, 10 and 40 gallon kegs.
C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for General Debility and all nervous complaint, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it is his duty to make it known to his fellows. The recise, with full particulars directions for prepation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be sent you by return mail, free of charge, by addressed envelope.

DR. J. C. RAYMOND,
164 Washington street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
☞ Mention this paper. [6-35, tf.]

Pianos and Organs.

At bottom prices and warranted satisfactory, at the American Express Office, Crookston, Minn.

Wanted Immediately.

Experienced dress-makers, also plain sewers at MISS PENLEY'S,
[32-33] Main Street.

BORN.

DANIELS.—In this city on Dec. 28th 1882 to the wife of A. Daniels, a son.

DIED.

FORTIER.—In this city on Monday, Jan. 1st 1883, WILLIAM EDMOND, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isadore Fortier, aged 18 months and 18 days.

GENERAL Merchandise.

☞ Call at our New Store on Main street, opposite the U. S. Land Office, when you require articles in our line. We carry a full and complete stock and invite invite inspection.

JUVE & BERGLAND

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk. } District Court, 11th Judicial District.

A. C. Cowing and W. H. Cowing, copartners under the firm name of Cowing Bros Plaintiffs.
vs.
James G. McDonald, Defendant.
} SUMMONS.

The State of Minnesota to the above named Defendant:

You are hereby summoned and required to answer the complaint of the Plaintiffs in the above entitled action, which is filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District in and for the County of Polk and state of Minnesota, and to serve a copy of your answer to said complaint on the subscribers, at their office, in the City of Crookston, in said County and state within twenty days after the service of this summons upon you, exclusive of the day of such service; and if you fail to answer the said complaint within the time aforesaid, the Plaintiffs in this action will take judgment against you for the sum of one hundred and eight and twenty one hundredths dollars ($108 20-100) with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the 29th day of October A. D. 1882, together with the costs and disbursements herein.

Dated December 20th A. D. 1882.

LEO & STEENERSON, Plaintiff Attorney's,
[36 42] Crookston, Minn.

C. CHURCHILL,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,

Kalsomining and Paper Hanging.

Contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors north of Methodist Church. Mainstreet.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1883.

More people have read the SUN during the year just now passing than ever before since it was first printed. No other newspaper published on this side of the has been bought and read in any year by so many men and women.

We are credetably informed that people buy, read and like The Sun for the following reasons, among others:

Because its news columns present in attractive form and with the greatest possible accuracy whatever has interest for humankind; the events, the deeds and misdeeds, the wisdom, the philosophy, the notable folly, the solid sense, the improving nonsense—all the news of the busiest world at present revolving in space.

Because people have learned that in its remarks concerning persons and affairs The Sun makes a practice of telling them the exact truth to the best of its ability three hundred and sixty-five days in the year before election as well as after, about the whales as well as about the small fish, in the face of dissent as plainly and fearlessly as when supported by general approval. The Sun has absolutely no purposes to serve, save the information of its readers and the furtherance of the common good.

Because it is everybody's newspaper. No man is so humble that The Sun is indifferent to his welfare and his rights. No man is so rich that it can allow injustice to be be done him. No man, no association of men, is powerful enough to be exempt from the strict application of its principles of right and wrong.

Because in politics it has fought for a dozen years, without intermission and sometimes almost alone among newspapers, the fight that has resulted in the recent overwhelming popular verdict against Robesonism and for honest government. No matter what party is in power, The Sun stands, and will continue to stand, like a rock for the interests of the people against the ambition of bosses, the encroachments of monopolists and the dishonest schemes of public robbers.

All this is what we are told almost daily by our friends. One man holds that The Sun is the best religious newspaper ever published, because its Christianity is undiluted with cant. Another holds that it is the best Republican newspaper printed, because it has already whipped half of the rascals out of that party, and is proceeding against the other half with undiminished vigor. A third believes it to be the best magazine of general literature in existence, because its readers miss nothing worthy of notice that is current in the world of thought. So every friend of the Sun discovers one of its many sides that appeals with particular force to his individual liking.

If you already know The Sun, you will observe that in 1883 it is a little better than ever before. If you do not already know The Sun, you will find it to be a mirror of all human activity, a storehouse of the choicest products of common sense and imagination, a mainstay for the cause of honest government, a sentinel for genuine Jeffersonian Democracy, a scourge for wickedness of every species, and an uncommonly good investment for the coming year.

TERMS TO MAIL SUBSCRIBERS:

The several editions of The Sun are sent by mail postpaid, as follows:

DAILY—55 cents a month, $6.50 a year; with Sunday edition, $7.70.

SUNDAY—Eight pages, $1.20 a year.

WEEKLY—$1 a year. Eight pages of the best matter of the daily issues; an Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, market reports and literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence make The Weekly Sun the newspaper for the farmer's household. [illegible]

Address I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher,
The Sun, New York City.

THIS SPACE

WILL BE OCCUPIED

NEXT WEEK

—BY—

J. R. CLEMENTS

☞ ANNOUNCING ☜

THE SALE

OF LOTS

—IN—

Clements' 2d Addition

TO

CROOKSTON,

AND

NUMBER OF LOTS

TO BE

GIVEN AWAY

BY HIM TO PARTIES

WSHING TO BUILD

THIS SEASON.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

PIONEER — THE OLD — N. P. R. R.

RAILROAD.

To the Land Explorer,
To the Business Man,
To the Farmer,
To the Mechanic,
To the Laborer,
To the Sportsman,
To the Tourist,
To the Miner

TO ALL CLASSES

For the Raising of Wheat,
For the Raising of Stock,
For Ready and Cash Markets,
For a Healthy Climate,
For Sure and Good Crops,
For Remunerative Investment,
For Business Opportunities,
For Wierd Scenery,

The Northern Pacific Country

HAS NO EQUAL.

Round trip tickets are sold at all ticket offices to all stations at reduced rates.

Pullman Sleepers between Moorhead and St. Paul.

Coupon tickets sold to all eastern points, and baggage checked through a Glyndon.

G. K. BARNES,
Gen'l Passenger Agent, St. Paul.

H. F. PLATO & CO.,

(SUCCESSORS TO POWERS BROS.)

131 EAST THIRD STREET, ST. PAUL. 131

Fall and Winter

—OF—

1882.

FINE GOODS AND LOW PRICES.

We are in a position to offer to the trade visiting St. Paul one of the most complete and attractive stocks of

DRY GOODS

Ever shown in this city.

BLACK AND COLORED SILKS IN GREAT VARIETY.

FINE DRESS GOODS, VELVETS,

PLUSHES AND TRIMMINGS

Of all kinds and quality. An Immense stock of

CLOAKS IN ALL THE NEW STYLES

IN CLOTH, PLUSH AND SILK.

☞ Order business a specialty. The same careful attention given to orders as during the past ten years and satisfaction guaranteed. Agents for Butterick's Celebrated Patterns. Catalogues and samples sent to any address upon receipt of stamp.

H. F. PLATO & CO.

THE PIONEER

HARNESS SHOP.

M. BAUENBUEHLER, Proprietor.

Corner Oak and Third Sts., Crookston Minn., [illegible]

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of that certain mortgage, executed by Ole Anderson and Jorand Anderson his wife mortgagors, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited) mortgagee dated April 30th 1881 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, on May 20th, 1881, at 9:30 o'clock a.m., in book "D" of mortgages on pages 541, 542, 543, and 544, on which said mortgage debt there is claimed to be due and there is due at this date the sum of four hundred and fifty-one sixty six one hundredths dollars (451 66-100) and no action or proceedings has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. The interest due January 1st 1882 not having been paid and the said mortgagee electing to foreclose for the principal amount and interest, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and of the statute in said case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, at public vendue, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on Monday the 15th day of January 1883, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage debt with the interest thereon and costs and expenses of sale and twenty-five dollars ($25.00) as attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in the event of foreclosure. The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the certain tract or parcel of real estate situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, described as follows, to-wit: the south west quarter section six (6) township one hundred and forty-nine (149) range forty-five (45) west, containing one hundred and sixty-nine and forty-four one hundredths acres (169 44-100).

Dated November 20th, 1882.

THE AMERICAN FREEHOLD LAND MORTGAGE COMPANY, of London (Limited.) Mortgagee.
CHARLES J. BERRYHILL, Att'y for Mortgagee,
[30 36] St. Paul, Minn.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 29th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office, at Crookston, on Feb. 7th, 1883, viz: CHARLES N. SANFORD, Pre. D. S., No. 6603, for the se¼ S. 18, T. 148, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Frank Micale, William Marin, C. C. Dillon and Ed Stone, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.
[36 49] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 15th, 1882.

Complaint having been entered at this office by G. A. Cable against Fred A. Palms for abandoning his Homestead Entry No. 6574, dated March 15th, 1882, upon the ne¼ nw¼ and lots 1, 2 and 3, S. 30, T. 149, R. 43, in Polk Co., Minn., with a view to the cancellation of said entry; the said parties are hereby summoned to appear at this office on the 15th day of March, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., to respond and furnish testimony concerning said alleged abandonment.

JOHN CROMB, Register.
[34-37] P. C. SLETTEN, Receiver.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 18th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 20th, 1883, viz: PETER DEROSIER, Pre. D. S., No. 7323, for the ne¼ S. 10, T. 149, R. 44. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Antoine Labombard, Alle Rivaid, of Gentilly, Isac Gervais, of Red Lake Falls, Paul Genereux, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.
[34-63] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 19th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 24th, 1883, viz: EVEN BRYNDSEN, Pre. D. S., No. 6021, for the se¼ sw¼ S. 20 and n½ nw¼, sw¼, nw¼ S. 29, T. 148, R. 44. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: John Gudmundson, Andrew C. Anderson, Albert Anderson and John Anderson, all of Aldal, Polk Co., Minn.
[34 39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 11th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 18th, 1883, viz: CHARLES TEAL, H'd No. 6331, for the sw¼ S. 28, R. 153, R. 43. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Louis Coltet, Neal A. McDonald, William Ellis, of Euclid, W. H. Jennings, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.
[33 37] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn. Dec. 11th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 29th, 1883, viz: KITTEL SEVERSON GREEN, Pre. D. S. No. 4978, for the se¼ S. 10, T. 147, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Ole K. Halven, of Fertile, Even O. Enobery, of Aldal, Ole J. Moen and Andreas H. Hammer of Fertile, Polk Co., Minn.
[33-37] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 7th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 12th, 1883, viz: JOSEPH TURGEON, H'd No. 4112, for the se¼ S. 20, T. 152, R. 43. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Louis Hinze, Lou svill, Joseph Benoit, Euclid, Francois Blais and David Lessard, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.
[33-37] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 1st, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before Register or Receiver U. S. Land Office, at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 11th, 1883, viz: PHILIMON ROBIE, H'd, No. 5522, for the se¼ S 28, T. 150, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of said land, viz: Louis Fontaine, Zephiria Giroux, Alphonse Robie and Charles Provost, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.
[32 36] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 26th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 26th, 1883, viz: GEORGE CHARBONNEAU, H'd No. 5679, for the northwest frac. quarter of S. 30, T. 152, R. 47. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Fred Sutter, Frand Sutter of Euclid, Polk Co., Minn. David Brandt, Fred Zwarek, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.
[35-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 21st, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 29th, 1883, viz: FRANK BENOIT, Pre. D. S. No. 4,763, for the sw¼ Sec. 10, T. 151, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Louie Hans, Joe Wessel, David Beladine, Joe Sturgeon, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn.
[35 39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

NEW

DRUG STORE

IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh

DRUGS, MEDICINES,

PAINTS, OILS,

and YANKEE NOTIONS

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 50 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave orders at my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn.

DR. A. NELSON.

HARDWARE.

EIKEN BROS.,

ARE JUST RECEIVING THEIR LARGE STOCK OF

Hardware,

Tinware,

Stoves

and Shelfware

WE SHALL KEEP A

FULL and COMPLETE

STOCK

OF GOODS,

In and he and Invite the Patronage of all.

COME AND EXAMINE OUR

STYLES AND PRICES.

One door south of U. S. Land Office Crookston, Minn. (Overland's old stand.) EIKEN BROS.

E. D. SCHRAER

LIVERY,

Feed and Sale Stable.

Best Turnouts in the city. Single or Double Rigs, with or without drivers or Saddle horses always ready at a moments notice by day or night. If you want a

NOBBY TURNOUT

—CALL AT THE—

RED BARN.

E. D. SCHRADER,
Cor. Main and Third Streets, Crookston

MERCHANTS'

BILLIARD HALL!

M. L. FRETTS, Proprietor.

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

The Choicest Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand.

Jas. G. McDonald,

MANUFACTURER OF

BRICK AND TILE

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

We are prepared to fill orders for brick in any quantity at the kiln or delivered, and to furnish estimates, plans and specifications, and to complete buildings of every description. Mason work of all kinds done promptly.

Plans and specifications of all building under our charge furnished free, executed by the best architects in the Northwest.

NEW

RESTAURANT!

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

JACK CONFAIR, Proprietor.

Warm meals at all hours. First-class in every particular. TRY THE NEW RESTAURANT at Losey's Old Stand, Main street, Crookston, Minn.

A. Allen,

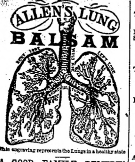
AGENT

FOR THE

HOWE

SCALE

COMPANY.



This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
Harmless to the Most Delicate.

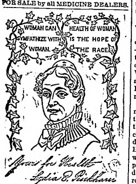
By its faithful use Consumption has been Cured when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

WM. C. DIGGES, Merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes April 4, 1881, that he wants us to know that the LUNG BALSAM has cured his mother of consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says, others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

WM. A. GRAHAM & Co., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of MATHIAS FREEMAN, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The LUNG BALSAM cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

As an Expectorant it has No Equal!

FOR SALE by all MEDICINE DEALERS.



WOMAN CAN SYMPATHIZE WITH WOMAN.
HEALTH OF WOMAN IS THE HOPE OF THE RACE.
Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

A Sure Cure for all FEMALE WEAKNESSES, Including Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Womb, Flooding, PROLAPSUS UTERI, &c.

☞Pleasant to the taste, efficacious and immediate in its effect. It is a great help in pregnancy, and relieves pain during labor and at regular periods.

PHYSICIANS USE IT AND PRESCRIBE IT FREELY.

☞FOR ALL WEAKNESSES of the generative organs of either sex, it is second to no remedy that has ever been before the public; and for all diseases of the KIDNEYS it is the Greatest Remedy in the World.

☞KIDNEY COMPLAINTS of Either Sex Find Great Relief in Its Use.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER will eradicate every vestige of Humors from the Blood, at the same time will give tone and strength to the system. As marvellous in results as the Compound.

☞Both the Compound and Blood Purifier are prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price of either, $1. Six bottles for $5. The Compound is sent by mail in the form of pills, or of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Enclose 3 cent stamp. Send for pamphlet. Mention this Paper.

☞LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS cure Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the Liver. 25 cents.

☞Sold by all Druggists.☜

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family. In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

TUTT'S
PILLS

ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.

Cures Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Bilious Colic, Constipation, Rheumatism, Piles, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Torpid Liver, and Female Irregularities. If you do not "feel very well," a single pill at bed-time stimulates the stomach, restores the appetite, imparts vigor to the system. Price, 25c. 35 Murray St., N.Y.

☞WRITE FOR TUTT'S MANUAL FREE.☜

KIDNEY-WORT

HAS BEEN PROVED
The SUREST CURE for
KIDNEY DISEASES.

Does a lame back or disordered urine indicate that you are a victim? THEN DO NOT HESITATE; use Kidney-Wort at once, (druggists recommend it) and it will speedily overcome the disease and restore healthy action.

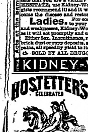
Ladies. For complaints peculiar to your sex, such as pain and weaknesses, Kidney-Wort is unsurpassed, as it will act promptly and safely.

Either Sex. Incontinence, retention of urine, brick dust or ropy deposits, and dull dragging pains, all speedily yield to its curative power.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. Price $1.

Acts at the Same Time on
Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.

KIDNEY-WORT



Hostetter's Stomach Bitters gives steadiness to the nerves, induces a healthy, natural flow of bile, prevents constipation without unduly purging the bowels, gently stimulates the circulation, and by promoting a vigorous condition of the physical system, promotes, also, that cheerfulness which is the truest indication of a well-balanced condition of all the animal powers.

For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued only by LAMBIE & CO., Druggists, Third street, corner Wabasha, St. Paul, Minn. Orders by mail at regular prices.

1000 young men should send 3c stamp for sample set of my alphabets. J. W. Seighman, Eagle River, Mich.

SUBSTANCE AND SHADOW.

They do but grope in learning's pedant round
Who on the fantasies of sense bestow
An idol substance, bidding us bow low
Before those shades of being which are found,
Stirring or still, on man's brief trial-ground;
As if such shapes and modes, which come and go,
Had aught of Truth or Life in their poor show
To sway or judge, and skill to slay or wound.
Son of immortal seed, high-destined man!
Know thy dread gift—a creature, yet a cause:
Each mind its own centre, and it draws
Home to itself, and molds in its thought's span
All outward things, the vassals of its will,
Aided by Heaven, by earth unthwarted still.

—Cardinal Newman.

GORY BATTLE.

A Story of an Old New England Tavern.

From the Youth's Companion.

"Speakin' of Square Battle," said Amasa, one evening, when his old crony and Aunt Desire sat as usual, one on each side of the fireplace, while he sipped his toast and tea from a yellow mug in front of the Franklin stove, "I wonder, Joshuay, if ever you heerd tell of his father's weddin'?"

"I hev!" said Aunt Desire; "for 'twas to this tavern they come and see the end on't."

"Well, I knowed you knowed it, Desire, but I thought likely Joshuay hadn't heerd on't, seein' he wa'n't born till long arterward, an' the Goshen Battle hushed it up."

"I never knew nothing about it; what was't?" asked Joshua.

"Well, old Pythagoras Battle—they didn't never call his hull name, though—he was knowed as Gory Battle all over the country, and one feller who was dreadful funny used to call him Bloody War. He was Square Battle's father, and he was as near a man as ever you see. He fairly begrutched himself the common comforts of life."

"And 'twarn't because he was so old, neither. Some folks are near because they are allus afraid of dyin' poor, ef they live rich. But Gory Battle was as close-fisted when he was a little feller to district school, as he was when he died. He wouldn't never keep no company with the other boys lest he should be put to some spendin' of money, and he didn't pay attention to none of the girls round, because he'd have to take 'em ridin', or sleighin', or to a kitchen dance or some such egregarous highlarity or 'nother."

"He kep' store over to Goshen Hill, and they told all sorts of stories about him in the way of trade. He used ter take the nubbins of the apples and pack 'em into the middle of the barrels, puttin' big, fair ones at both ends so's to sell well. 'N he'd water the rum, an' sand the sugar, and measure off caliker onto his arm 'stead of the reg'lar stick—and he had real short arms, too."

"An' they do say he sold Parson Farmar's wife quite a bill of hardware one day, an' when she sent back for another screw he sent her a bill for't, 'one screw, one cent.' Well, twas the way he was made, I expect, but he wan't real pop'lar amongst folks, and when it come out finally that he was a-keepin' company with Mary Morris, his mother's hired girl, I tell ye there was a buzzin.'"

"Sam Johnson, he was a shifless, larfin, good-natured, happy-go-lucky kind of a feller, a real rogue as ever was. He said 't Gory courted Moll Morris so's to save shoe leather and his Sunday clothes, and mabbe 'twas so."

"She was a pretty girl as ever you see; real spry and capable, chipper as a squirrel, and with a faculty for cookin' vittles ekalled by few an' excelled by nobody, as the ephitap says. And she was real good-lookin'; tall and straight as a poplar, and rosy as a pink hollyhock; but she had a temper of her own, them big black eyes could snap and flash I tell ye!"

"I've heerd grandsir say she'd hit Gory a clip quicker'n winkin' if he durst be anyways oncivil to her. I dono why she kep' comp'ny with him, I'm sure. Women are curus critters. You can't allus tell what they do things for."

"I s'pose men always knows what they're a-doin' every time!" snapped Aunt Desire, with scorn in her accent.

"Well, they think they do gener'lly, but that aint here nor there. Moll Morris might ha' knowed what she was about; she'd summered and wintered Gory Battle, as you may say. But I expect she was influenced some by the house 'n' things, for they had good things; linen and furnitoor and sech, though they wa'n't none of his buyin'; his father's fust wife had fetched 'em into the family."

"Anyway," as I said, "he courted Moll, and she agreed to have him after she'd made him promise to be married to her Aunt's over in Ratlam, and to git the vittles and sech like for the weddin' supper himself; because she said she didn't want to be married like one of the Elwells. They was half Injun folks, livin, over to the lighthouse, and makin' a livin' by pickin' and stealin' as you may say."

"Well, Gory was dreadful took up with the gal. She was kinder cold, and made as though she was sorry about havin' on him. Up to the last minnit she kept him oncertain and anxious, till he was willin' to fetch her the moon if so be she fancied on't."

"I've always noticed, and I've lived a number of years and kep' a lookin' about me, that take the best girl the Lord ever made, smart and kind and knowin', and ordinary, poor Jack pays her attention, and she shows any likin' for him at all, beyond proper p'liteness I mean, why, he don't care a mite for her. She's cheap goods for my master."

"But take a cretur that's wuth about one cent, an' let her put on kind of stand-off airs, and act up-lifted like, as though she thought men-folks was the dirt under her feet, why, they'll all be a-crowdin' and a-taggin' after her."

"Girls don't seem to know that to be follered you've got to run away. Moll Morris knowed it, though, and she got Gory right under her thumb so's't he'd go wheresoever she crooked it."

"Well, he finally lef: all to her. They said that he gave her fifty gold guineas, —this was in Colony times, you know,—for to fix the weddin', and she laid out to hev a fust-rate supper. She was goin' home to her aunt's, who was all the folks she had to get all things ready. She meant to have a fust-rate supper and good clothes out of that fifty guineas, I guess."

"I don't know what the clothes was, but the supper was told of far and near, because of what came on't. There was fourteen kinds of pie, roast pig and b'iled hams, and roast turkeys and Injin puddin's, b'iled twenty-four hours till they was cherry-red inside, and chicken pie, and mashed potaters, and cramb'ry sass, and plum sass, and peach preserves, and pickels, and milk-pans full of doughnuts and ginger cookies, and lots of nuts and apples. 'Twas nigh about Thanksgivin' time, and there was apple-jack and saxifrax tea and lots besides."

"But Gory he wouldn't invite none of the fellers over to Goshen Hill to come to his weddin'. He'd heered how't they made fun of him all along, and he 'wasn't goin' to hev none of 'em to his weddin',' he said it so open that they heered on't."

"They was mad, of course. They had most of 'em kinder wanted Moll Morris, and they resented her marryin' such a tight-fist as Gory Battle; and then they was angrier still becos he wouldn't treat 'em. 'Twas the custom in them days if you had ever so private a weddin', that the man should stan' treat all round to his mates before or after't."

"But Gory give out that he shouldn't do no sech thing, so the fellers of his age to the Hill got together and laid plans, and some of the baser sort, as Scripter calls 'em, they got wind on't and they counselled for to do him some harm on their own account, for Gory kep' his pockets shut as tight as his fist, and there wa'n't nobody in Goshen owned him a good turn."

"Well, the time came they was to be married; there was all the young folks that had been her mates in Ratlam there, and th' was all Gory's cousins an' aunts, besides his mother there, too; and Moll she stepped out to be married lookin' like a big rose in her dimity gownd and pink chintz petticoat, her shiny black hair all a-curlin' down, and tied back with a silver ribbin."

"The supper was set out in the long kitchen, ready to be moved into the keepin'-room as quick as the ceremony was over; and they'd trimmed up the front parlor with ground-peas an' popcorns so's to be kind of high-flown for the 'casion."

"Gory, he stood up as oneasy as a cat with wa'-nut shels onto her paws, in his nankin breeches and blue home-spun coat, beside Moll, while Parson Pitcher married of 'em."

"Somebody said afterwards, jest as some onconsiderate cretur always does, that durin' the long prayer they heered a kind of a scrimmagin' in the kitchen-part, but they durstn't stir to see. But jest as sure as you're born, them sassy of the baser sort as I spoke about, had come in to the back door, and took off every bite and sup off that table into the woods, where I expect they sot and eet it, for the bones and pewter platters was found there shortly after."

"They'd scrawled their 'respects to Gory,' on the table with a bit of chalk, and so he knowed 'twas on 'count of him they done it. Wa'n't he mad! It took all her faculty to soothe him down so's to be half-way decent. The folks had to go off with nothin' to eat but some rye-bread an' butter, and Gory hadn't got over his anger when he and Moll set out to go hum to Goshen."

"Folks rode horse-back in them days mostly, an' the roads wa'n't over'n above good for wheelin', so he'd put a pillion on his black mare for to carry Moll, and she put on her ridin'-skirt and her red hood-cloak over all, and sprung up behind him as nimble as a ever, and they started."

"Twa'n't never handed down to futurity, as you may say, how she felt when she see what other folks, if they was kinder ill-to-do, thought about her husband; nor nyther what she thought when she heerd him swear till he was black in the face on his weddin'-day; but she was one of them that takes things as they be, without worryin' over what they had ought to be."

"It was a splendid moonshiny, October night, crickets a-chirpin' and owls a-hootin', and now and then a fox's sharp bark. So they rid along consider'ble cheerful, though the road was lonesome enough, till they come to the piece of piny woods about three miles from here, on th' old North road, where Gin'ral Burgoyne's army of reg'lars come along a spell after in the old war-times, you remember."

"They didn't see nor hear nothin, out of the way, when all of a sudden there was full twenty young fellers dashed out of the woods before an' behind em', and one of em'—'twas that identikle Sam Johnson—he was mounted on a big gray hoss—they was all a-hossback—and before they could wink he galloped up alongside of Gory, leaned over, and ketchin' Moll by the waist, swung her into the saddle before him, and went off like a streak."

"Well, they said Gory roared like a bear, and clapped his spurs to his black mare, and she r'ared and plunged and snorted, but the fellers got hold of her bridle and pulled her down."

"Then Gory tried to beat em' off with his ridin' whip, but they got that away pretty quick; and by that time he see that th' was about ten of 'em a follerin' the feller that had Moll, and th' was as much as ten left 'long o' him an' 'twan't no use resistin'."

"So they closed up round him, and rode, one an' all, full tilt to this here Petersham tavern, and there they give him to understand that his bride was safe up stairs, but that he'd got to ransom her somehow."

"I tell ye he was angry! He swore and stomped an' fin'lly cried—boohooed right out with clear fury—but they sot round an' laughed an' vowed they'd stay there a week but what they'd hev him stan' treat as a man ought to, and give 'em drink and a supper."

"I expect they'd been kind of forehanded with Grandsir Perkins' for when fin'lly Gory heered Moll a-cryin', and a-callin' him through the floor, —for folks didn't live in ceiled houses in them days,—why, he began to soften down out of his rage; and tha' was a-most a reemarkable meal of vitties set out in that there keepin'-room in a twinklin'."

"Meats and pies a'most ekal to the stolen supper, and lots of drink; flip and rum and apple-jack and cherry-brandy and Holland gin. I warrant Gory shivered inside when he see'em, thinkin' of the bill; but when Moll came down, a real pictur for beauty, her eyes a-shinin' betwixt rage and tears, and her cheeks redder 'n and apple, and they made her and Gory sit down and the fellers waited on 'em first, why I guess he was glad 'twas well-ended."

"And they let 'em go, well on tow'rdst mornin' after Gory had paid the bill; but the Hill boys they caroused around till broad day, and the bride and groom trotted off home ruther down in the mouth, now I tell ye."

"I guess he made up for it out of her knuckles after all," said Aunt Desire, grimly.

"Guess he did," Joshua added. "I remember hearin' that Squire Battle's 'lowed his wife a quart of m'lasses and a quart of vinegar for the year."

"Though such actions aint respectable, and I don't approve of 'em, yet I'm glad he got come up with," said Desire.

"He got his deserts for certain," said Amasa, with an inflection of satisfied justice in his voice, "for it's been a kind of a sayin' in Ratlam ever sence, I've heered, that a stingy feller ought to hev Gory Battle's two sets of guests to his weddin'." Rose Terry Cooke.

Health, Strength and Vigor.

If you are seeking health, strength and vigor, we earnestly request you to give Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla a trial. No medicine ever invented has such a good record as a health renewer, blood purifier and true strengthener of every part of the body.

A Curious Suicide.

The young man, Mathews, who committed suicide the other day illustrated a curious phase of character. He resided in Alleghany City, Pa., with respectable parents until he became enamored of a handsome octoroon girl, whom he afterward married. This unexpected event was a great blow to the pride of the parents, and they sought at once to effect a separation, and to that end induced the young man to come to Chicago, ostensibly to better his financial condition, his wife being left in Alleghaney City. Finding that the plan was to prevent his consummating the relations of man and wife with the octoroon the youth wrote a very pathetic and loving letter to the girl, declaring he had determined to die rather than live without her. His suicide followed after. The body has been sent to his home, and the wife, who has some property, intends to gain possession of it for burial, even if she has to resort to a legal process. The case has excited a great deal of interest in the little town, and a great deal of sympathy is shown for both sides.

DEATH RECORD OF 1882.

The list of great men who have passed away in 1882 is remarkable both for its length and for the eminence which the men had attained. Take, for example, the list of prominent clergymen, and see how it includes names in various denominations and from the highest stations.

The church of England has lost Dr. Tait, who was Archbishop of Canterbury and the primate of all England; and Dr. Pusey, who was the leader of the High church in the same communion.

The Methodist church in the United States has lost its senior bishop, Dr. Scott, and the southern branch of the same church mourns over Bishop Wightman.

The Unitarian denomination has lost Dr. Henry W. Bellows, who was its leading clergyman, and Dr. Orville Dewey.

Of men of science the most eminent name in the list is that of Charles Darwin, whose memory will always be connected with a theory of the manner in which species of plants and animals were created. But America has also contributed to the sad catalogue the name of John William Draper, of New York.

Literature has suffered most severely. The year in which Longfellow and Emerson died will always be memorable, but there are other great names to be added. Berthold Auerbach, the German novelist; Anthony Trollope and Harrison Ainsworth, the English novelists; Richard H. Dana, author of "Two Years Before the Mast;" Dante Gabriel Rossetti, poet and painter, and George P. Marsh, who was the author of many most valuable works and for many years our Minister to Italy.

From our body of American politicians and statesmen have disappeared Mr. Clarkson N. Potter, of New York, Mr. E. W. Stoughton, of New York, who was an eminent lawyer and for a time our minister to Russia, ex-Governor Bullock, of Massachusetts, the Hon. Horace Maynard, of Tennessee, who had been minister to Turkey and postmaster-general, the Hon. Artemas Hale, of Massachusetts in his ninety-ninth year, who, when living, was the oldest ex-member of congress, and Senator Benjamin H. Hill, of Georgia.

Among foreign public men were Senor Valmaseda, who had been the Spanish governor-general of Cuba, Lord Cavendish, the chief secretary for Ireland, who was brutally murdered in Phœnix Park, Dublin, M. Wallon, French philosopher and statesman, Gen. Skobeleff, the Russian general whose speeches excited so much comment only a few months before his death, Gen. Ducot, French soldier and politician, Louis Blanc, French socialist and revolutionary writer, and the Bey of Tunis, —the only wearer of a crown who has died during the year.

In addition to these are many others whom it is not necessary to classify; Mr. Sheffield, the founder of the great scientific school in connection with Yale college, Chief Justice Pierrepont, of Vermont, the Hon. Theophilus Parsons, of Cambridge, Mass., Kun-Hua-Ko, Professor of Chinese in Harvard College, President William B. Rogers, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, one of the greatest instructors in the country, and Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.

The list might be very much extended by including in it the names of those who, in other countries, were as eminent as the Americans we have named. But scores and hundreds of the names would convey little or no information to distant readers.

Among all these we have mentioned only one was a German; and yet Germany has been mourning all the year, as one after another of her men, famous in science or letters has dropped away.

A Breezy Conference Meeting.

A heavy show had begun falling, and had soon completely blockaded a railroad, stopping the train with its single passenger car far from any place of habitation. There were a dozen or more travelers; but, as the prospect of relief within a few hours was good, they were taking the unpleasant situation calmly. Among them was a tall, lank, lay-preacher, whose countenance was chiefly remarkable for a preternaturally big mouth Soon after the train came to a standstill, he arose at the forward end of the car, and with his blandest professional smile, began: "Now, brethren and sisters, we've got to stay here shut up together for an hour or two—so let us make the best of it. I say brethren and sisters—ain't that so? We're all christians, ain't we? Of course we are. Now let us have a little experience meeting here. To begin with, we all believe there's nothing the Lord couldn't do, if he wanted to—we all believe that, don't we?" At this point a green-looking countryman startled him by saying: "Waal, now, I dunno 'bout that. I think I know one thing the Lord couldn't do." "Oh, do you?" exclaimed the preacher with great delight; "do you indeed? Well, let's hear it. Speak up loud, and tell us all here what it is the Lord couldn't do." "Waal," said the countryman with great deliberation, "He couldn't ha' made your mouth any bigger onless he'd ha' sot your ears back!" That ended the conference meeting.

Disowned and Disinherited.

The will of the late General Dorris, of St. Louis, was admitted to probate on Tuesday. Much interest attached to the reading of the document from the general curiosity to know what allusion it would make to Russell Brown, the testator's grandson. That young man was until recently the favorite grandchild, and would, it is said, have inherited $250,000 if he had not committed the indiscretion of killing his grandmother not long ago. These are the words in which he was disinherited: "He shall not share at all in the benefits of any provision, nor shall he have, take or enjoy any of my estate, and, in its division administration and distribution, he or his descendants shall not be considered as entitled therein in the least degree, either directly or by or through either of my children, or any of them. He shall be regarded as a total stranger to me, of no inheritable blood from me, and in the line of descent I declare him absolutely disinherited."

The Illinois Staats-Zeitung says the deutsch-amerikanische press has something better to do than to waste its space on Langtry sonalties.

George H. Mills of Prairie Du Sac suicided Wednesday morning by shooting himself with a revolver. The cause of the rash act is unknown.

Constitutional skin diseases of a scorbutic character are successfully treated with Dr. Benson's Skin Cure, internal and external treatment, both pleasant. It certainly removes scrofula, eruptions, dandruff and tan and makes the skin smooth and healthy.

Mrs. Robeson and Mrs. Blaine are going to spend the winter together in Paris.

"Rough on Rats."

Clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, ants, bed-bugs, skunks, chipmunks, gophers. 15c Druggists.

General Howard insists that fencing is neglected at West Point.

"One man's meat is another man's poison." Kidney-Wort expels the poisonous humors. The first thing to do in the Spring is to clean house. For internal cleansing and renovating, no other medicine is equal to Kidney-Wort. In either dry or liquid form it cures headache, bilious attacks, constipation and deranged kidneys.

New Haven, Conn., has voted $50,000 for a monument to Union dead.

Twenty-four beautiful colors of the Diamond Dyes, for Silk, Wool, Cotton, &c., 10cts. A child can use with perfect success.

The bank of France holds in gold $193,202,605.

Skinny Men.

"Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Debility. $1.

Mrs. Langtry's sister-in-law is coming over to take care of the "beauty."

Dr. S. B. Brittan says: "As a rule physicians do not, by professional methods build up the female constitution, while they seldom cure the disease to which it is always liable in our variable climate and under our imperfect civilization. Special remedies are often required to restore organic harmony and strengthen the enfeebled powers of womanhood; and for most of these we are indebted to persons outside of the profession. Among the very best of these remedies I assign a prominent place to Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

The Grand Lodge of Missouri has declared saloon-keeping "a Masonic offense."

Consumption is a disease we all dread. It often carries its victim to an untimely grave. How important, then, for those who cherish life and health, to prevent that disease in its early stages. Every Cold or Cough should be treated with Allen's Lung Balsam. There is no better remedy.

Extensive frauds are said to have been discovered in the state bank, Boston.

"Buchupaiba."

Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Diseases. $1. Druggists.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Not a Beverage.

They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poor whisky or poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

The best Spring medicine known is that wonderful tonic Brown's Iron Bitters

Let the Trial Proceed.

Arabi Pasha when he heard he had been denied the benefit of English counsel, promptly fortified himself with a bottle of Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters and quietly remarked. Let the trial proceed. Prepared by J. P. Allen, St. Paul Minn.

An Awful Responsibility.

We all deplore the terrible ravages, of consumption but only a few of us seem to have common sense enough to take the proper means of preventing it. Hale's Honey of Horehound and tar, taken as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Difficult Breathing or Hoarseness, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Sold by druggists.

Pike's Toothache Drops cure in one minute.

The Flesh Speedily Reunites when obstinate sores are cleansed with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Of Druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, 50 cents.

Eminent Dr. J. J. Caldwell, Baltimore, Md. states: I have used Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic largely in Debility, Febrile, and Nervous Diseases, and I have found it one of the most reliable of nutrient tonics now in use or to be found in pharmacy." (Take no other.) Of Druggists.

Straighten your old boots and shoes with Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners and wear again.

Try the new brand Spring Tobacco.

Personal—Men Only.

The Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich., will send Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts and Electric Appliances on trial for thirty days to men (young or old) who are afflicted with nervous debility, lost vitality and kindred troubles, guaranteeing speedy and complete restoration of health and manly vigor. Address as above. N. B.—No risk is incurred, as thirty days' trial is allowed.

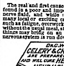
Coughs.—"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are used with advantage to alleviate Coughs, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, and Bronchial Affections.

SICK HEADACHE CURED.

The real and first cause of these headaches is to be found in a poor and impoverished condition of the nerve fluid, and while in this condition there are many local or exciting causes for these headaches, such as fatigue, overwork, bright light, hot sun, going without the usual meal, stimulants, and various other things may bring on an attack, but all because the nervous system is run down. Now for the cure.

DR. C. W. BENSON'S
CELERY & CHAMOMILE PILLS
ARE PREPARED EXPRESSLY TO CURE
AND WILL CURE HEADACHE OF ALL KINDS
NEURALGIA, NERVOUSNESS
AND DYSPEPSIA.

Dr. C. W. Benson
FAC-SIMILE SIGNATURE ON EVERY BOX.



ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad differing from all others, is cup shape, with Self-Adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the Ball in the cup presses back the Intestines just as a person would with the Finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

KIDNEY-WORT

THE GREAT CURE
FOR RHEUMATISM

As it is for all the painful diseases of the KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BOWELS.

It cleanses the system of the acrid poison that causes the dreadful suffering which only the victims of Rheumatism can realize.

THOUSANDS OF CASES of the worst forms of this terrible disease have been quickly relieved, and in short time PERFECTLY CURED.

PRICE, $1. LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.

Dry can be sent by mail.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington Vt.

Acts at the Same Time on
Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.

KIDNEY-WORT

PATENTS NO PATENT, NO PAY. R. S. & A. P. LACEY, Patent Attorneys, Washington, D. C. Full instructions and handbook on PATENTS SENT FREE.

Profitable Patients.

The most wonderful and marvelous success in cases where persons are sick or wasting away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them, (profitable patients for doctors,) is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters—Cincinnati Star.

A true tonic medicine, a blessing in every household, is Brown's Iron Bitters.

The great distinguishing feature of Redding's Russia Salve is its power to reduce inflammation.

Rough on rats, cleans out rats, mice, flies, roaches; bedbugs, ants, vermin. 15c.

Mother Swain's Worm Syrup for feverishness, restlessness, worms, tasteless. 25cts.

Rays of Sunshine

Will shed their radiance on your invalid friend's heart, by sending him or her a bottle of Dr. Halliday's Blood Purifier as a Christmas or New Year's present. Sold by all Druggists.

Petrolia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1879
Messrs. Kennedy & Co.:—My hair is growing out so fast that I can almost see it grow myself, through the use of your Carboline.
D. Nixon.

Free to all Ministers of Churches.

I will send one bottle of the White Wine of Tar Syrup, gratis, to any minister that will recommend it to friends, after giving it a fair test, and it proves satisfactory for coughs, colds, throat or lung diseases.

Sold by all Druggists.

Dr. C. D. WARNER, Reading, Mich.

Pure Cod-Liver Oil made from selected livers, on the sea-shore, by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

Chapped Hands, Face, Pimples, and rough Skin, cured by using JUNIPER TAR SOAP, made by CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., New York.

ROYAL

FULL WEIGHT
ROYAL BAKING POWDER
ABSOLUTELY PURE
ROYAL BAKING POWDER

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

SUFFER

no longer from Dyspepsia, Indigestion, want of Appetite, loss of Strength lack of Energy, Malaria, Intermittent Fevers, &c. BROWN'S IRON BITTERS never fails to cure all these diseases.

Boston, November 26, 1881.
Brown Chemical Co.
Gentlemen:—For years I have been a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and could get no relief (having tried everything which was recommended) until, acting on the advice of a friend, who had been benefitted by BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, I tried a bottle, with most surprising results. Previous to taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, everything I ate distressed me, and I suffered greatly from a burning sensation in the stomach, which was unbearable. Since taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, all my troubles are at an end. Can eat any time without any disagreeable results. I am practically another person.
Mrs. W. J. FLYNN,
30 Maverick St., E. Boston.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS acts like a charm on the digestive organs, removing all dyspeptic symptoms, such as tasting the food, Belching, Heat in the Stomach, Heartburn, etc. The only Iron Preparation that will not blacken the teeth or give headache.

Sold by all Druggists.

Brown Chemical Co.
Baltimore, Md.

See that all Iron Bitters are made by Brown Chemical Co., Baltimore, and have crossed red lines and trademark on wrapper.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

PENSIONS For Soldiers on any disease, wound or injury. Parents, widows and children are entitled. Millions Appropriated. Fee $10. Increase pensions, bounty, back pay and honorable discharges procured. New laws. Send stamp for instructions and bounty table. N. W. FITZGERALD & Co., Attorneys, Box 588, Washington, D. C.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

WHEAT New Wheat. Yield 30 to 45 bushels per acre. New Potatoes—enormous croppers. White Russian Oats. Nothing like it. All kinds Farm & Garden SEEDS. Send for catalogue. John A. Salzer, La Crosse, Wis.

ADD TO YOUR INCOME

Club 13 of the Mutual Investment

Clubs offers the surest means of making regular monthly profits from investments of $10 to $1000 or more dealing in GRAIN, PROVISIONS & STOCKS. Each member gets the benefit of combined capital of the Club. Reports sent weekly. Dividends paid monthly. Club 13 paid shareholders back their money in profits in past three months, still leaving original amount making money in Club, or returned on demand. Shares, $10 each. Explanatory circulars sent free. Reliable correspondents wanted everywhere. Address R. E. Kendall & Co., Com'n Mchts, 177 & 179 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

25 PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION 100
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

Wheat Growers.

Why do you keep plodding along raising 10 bushels soft wheat to the acre when you might be growing 3 times that amount. Get a start of pure seed once more. Try some of the Saskatchewan FIFE, the purest, most prolific and best milling wheat in the world. So pronounced by the millers of Minneapolis. Send to Abernethy & Wellman of Minneapolis for a circular giving particulars

HAIR Send postal for Ill'at'd catalog. HULL'S Hair Store, 38 & 40 Monroe, Chicago.

YOUNG MEN If you want to learn Telegraphy in a few months, and be certain of a situation, address Valentine Bros., Janesville, Wis.

SURE CURE for Epilepsy or Fits in 24 hours. Free to poor. Dr. Kruse, 2844 Arsenal St., St. Louis, Mo.

Card Collectors—Handsome set of elegant Cards for 3 cent stamp. A. G. Bassett, Rochester, N.Y.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

THE OLD RELIABLE CENTENNIAL CEMENT
VANSTAN'S STRATENA!
Best in the world for MENDING ALL KINDS of MATERIAL. Druggists say so. GET THE GENUINE. Full directions in bottle. Stronger than Glue.

A PHYSICIAN'S GIFT.

A book that should be in every house. Contains a list of his favorite prescriptions, and how to be cured at home without sending for a doctor. This book may save your life. Free for one postage stamp. Address Dr. J. P. GILBERT, Lyons, Wayne Co., N. Y.

FREE For Information & Maps of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, write to F. H. SMITH, 46 Clark Street, Chicago.

MAGNETIC INSOLES!! Warm the feet, perfect the circulation, and prevent colds, rheumatism and disease. MAGNETIC APPLIANCE CO., Sole Manufacturers, 218 State St., Chicago, Ill. For sale by all leading Druggists and Shoe Dealers, or sent to any address on receipt of $1 per pair. Send for illustrated paper giving cuts of Magnetic Appliances; have no equal in the world.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE IN THE WORLD IS probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed, it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

This N.Y. Singer, $20

With $4 set of Attachments Free. Warranted perfect. Light running, quiet, handsome and durable. Sent on test trial-plan when desired. Happy Home Organs [illegible] Reeds, 12 stops; Mechanical Sub Bass, octave coupler, Knee-swells, with $1 stool and $1 Book, only [illegible]. Also sent on test trial-plan if desired. Elegant case, magnificent tone, durable inside and out. Circular, with testimonials, free. [illegible] G. Payne & Co., 47 Third Av., Chicago.

SAVE MONEY

By buying at dealers' prices. We will sell you any article for family or personal use, in any quantity at Wholesale Price. Whatever you want, send for our catalogue (free) and you will find it there. We carry in stock the largest variety of goods in the United States.

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
227 & 229 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

SAMARITAN
CURES AND
NEVER FAILS.
NERVINE

Is unfailing and infallible in curing Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Alcoholism, Opium Eating, Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Impotency, Syphilis, Scrofula and all Nervous and Blood Diseases. To Clergymen, Lawyers, Literary Men, Merchants, Bankers, Ladies and all whose sedentary employment causes Nervous Prostration, Irregularities of the blood, stomach, bowels or kidneys, or who require a nerve tonic, appetizer or stimulant, SAMARITAN NERVINE is invaluable. Thousands proclaim it the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system. For sale by all Druggists.

THE DR. S. A. RICHMOND MEDICAL CO., Sole Proprietors, St. Joseph, Mo.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

A HOUSEHOLD FAVORITE.

COLE'S Carbolisalve

Is the Best External Remedy Known.

It will immediately relieve the pain of Scalds and Burns and cure the worst case without leaving a scar.

IT POSITIVELY CURES

PILES, FEVER SORES, INDOLENT ULCERS, CHAPS, CHAFES, CUTS, WOUNDS, BRUISES, CHILBLAINS, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ITCHINGS AND IRRITATIONS, AND ALL DISEASES OF THE SKIN AND SCALP. Get Cole's Carbolisalve; the wrapper on the genuine is black and the letters green. Small boxes, 25c.; large boxes, 75c.

Cole's Carbolisoap

Is cleansing, healing and refreshing; free from all impurities, and is unequalled for the Toilet and Bath. Prepared only by J. W. COLE & CO., Black River Falls, Wis.

Sold by all druggists and dealers in medicine.

AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER
FREE WITH EACH
FREE WITH EACH
WHITE
EVERY BOBBIN SMOOTH AS A SPOOL OF SILK
A THIRD MORE THREAD ON EVERY BOBBIN
SEWING MACHINE
ADDRESS WHITE SEWING MACHINE CO. CLEVELAND, O.

N. W. N. U. No. 1.

When writing to advertisers please say you saw their advertisement in this paper.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

LINCOLN AND DAVIS.

Some Unwritten History of the Civil War.

From the San Francisco Argonaut.

The war had ended many years ago, and the comrades of the Army of the Cumberland had met in Detroit to commemorate one of its battles. Gathered among them was a gray-haired veteran, who had fought in Mexico, stood by Anderson at Sumter and Moultrie in 1861; won two stars during the rebellion, and who now held the rank of colonel of infantry in the regulars, with the thanks of congress stowed away with his various commissions, up from a second-lieutenant to that of major-general. His wounds, his gallantry, and the number of engagements in which he had defended our flag, never once passed his lips, but bits of rebellion history were often on them. I heard him say that Jeff Davis was one of the most billiant men in Mexico, and had proved himself a statesmen of rare ability. "Nevertheless," said he, "he made a fool of himself at the most desperate time of his life." "Jeff Davis had a will and determination, added to his ability, that far outstripped any man in the south." "This," continued the speaker, "prolonged the war years after we all knew it was useless to fight. His sole aim in life was to found a republic that would cherish human bondage and make the sale of mankind legal. He did not abhor the slave-pen, nor did he think the whipping-post unjust; yet, withal, his mind often yielded to lofty aspirations upon southern republicanism. In some article drafted by his own hand the confederate constitution excelled our own, if he could have abandoned the 'lost cause,' and carried with him some of the noble and virtuous ideas of his life into other lands verging upon anarchy, (that border on our land of freedom,) his life might not have been counted lost, and his service as a statesman would have proved beneficial to mankind.

"During the last disastrous days of the rebellion, he could have made honorable terms, stopped the effusion of blood, and saved the nation millions of its immense debt. His stubborn will stood in the way of a bright future for himself and his people. Just before the fatal Sunday, when he was called from divine service to flee from the land he loved so well, he was called upon by the wisest of his cabinet to end the strife and make the best of a losing game. Besought by his most successful and gallant generals, he would not give up a cause he well knew was useless. President Lincoln had returned from City Point to Washington firmly convinced that the dawn of better days would soon take the place of war. What, then, after it was closed, should be done with the cruel instigators of such a useless strife? The red-handed of a successful party in congress might demand 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth;' but this was what our kind-hearted president most desired to avoid. To save those who would surrender their arms under articles of capitulation and return in peace to their homes, there was no question about; but there was one who must suffer death on a 'sour apple tree.' Old and young north of the historic line called for vengeance on his head.

"To save this life, rid himself of this man, and spare the nation a stigma similar to that cast upon Mexico on the execution of Maximillian, caused Lincoln days of serious thought. He had never proposed to his cabinet his own scheme, for fear the call for vengeance would be too strong for him to combat. To let a traitor go never for once entered the mind of Lincoln. But where should he go, and where was it best to send him? Mexico opened a wide door and called upon us to drive out the French who threatened to over-run their land. Although it looked to the outsider as if Jeff Davis had been instrumental in inviting Napoleon III. to invade Mexico, such was not the fact. Mr. Lincoln was aware of this when he proposed to Jeff Davis that Mexico would prove a safe and prosperous haven.

That such a hint was given and refused, there seems no doubt. Mr. Lincoln had hardly returned from the army when he sought the service of a secret agent to carry his verbal message of advice to Davis. That he found the proper person and dispatched him in search of Jeff. Davis, there seems no question. From Richmond to Gaston and Raleigh he went, and at last caught up with him at Charlotteville, N. C., surrounded by a remnant of his fleeing cabinet. The agents instructions were to deal with Mr. Davis and with him alone. It was more personal advice than national diplomacy that brought this meeting about, and so it was considered by the interested parties. Upon this understanding our agent divulged the message he had so carefully guarded. Although Mr. Davis was laboring under great nervous excitement, and much cast down by the defeat of his once proud army, he listened attentively and kindly to the messenger, who bore him perhaps, at that dark hour, some hope for a brighter future.

"Our agent pointed out to him that General Magruder, with his army on the Rio Grande, had not yet surrendered, and was not likely to for some time. He explained the past anarchy of Mexico, its helplessness, and its dependence upon us to drive the French from their soil. The prosperity, wealth, and glory of a new nation with a new ruler were unfolded to this desperate man. If he would go there, and free Mexico, and build up a republic like our own, then would our arms be stayed until an ex-confederate army could be mustered, equipped, and provisioned on the banks of the Rio Grande, which the combined power of Maximilian and Mexico could not resist. Future dependence on our part was neither expressed nor implied. Whether Davis should pronounce himself independent, or coalesce with the Mexicans, was left to his own judgment. Mr. Lincoln's message was; 'Go; go quickly; and you will not be obstructed in your going. Go! Liberate this nation from decay, and make it as proud to the world as you find states once possessed by these people.' These were the works of a kind message to a broken-hearted man, they were to redeem a land and people, long since gone to decay for the want of some hand that could guide the ship of state. Did ever ruler on the verge of despair, fleeing from the land of his birth, pursued by his foe, receive such a noble message of kindness from one who held in his power the weapons of vengeance?"

"We all know that Mr. Davis did not go to Mexico. He dispatched our agent with a few words of thanks and a simple 'No.' That he has ofttimes regretted it, there seems no shadow of doubt. Did he dream that, after all, the tide of war might come back to the confederate arms, or was it the obstinate will that held him spell-bound to his 'lost cause'?"

Our hero of the Army of Cumberland had told his story, and none of us could deny it.

Death of Admiral Schenck.

Rear Admiral James F. Schenck died Thursday at Dayton, Ohio, of neuralgia of the head. He was seventy-five years old. He had lived in Dayton since 1836, coming there after being placed on the retired list of naval officers. He entered the United States naval service in 1821 on board the Hornet as midshipman, and was successively promoted through the various ranks till he eached that of rear admiral in 1868. He saw service under Commodore Stockton in the Mexican war and later commanded a fleet of fourteen vessels in the attack upon Fort Fisher in the rebellion. He was a brother of Gen. R. C. Schenck.

THE RUSSIAN EXECUTIONER.

An Ex-Murderer Retired From Business Does All the Neat Legal Assassination for the Czar.

From the Weekly Magazine Translation.

The following is a narrative of an interview which M. Victor Tissot had at Moscow with Frolof, the Russian executioner of all the Russians, unlike his confrere in Paris, is not a gentleman. He is an ex-murderer retired from business, condemned to death by the tribunals, but whose sentence has been commuted to perpetual imprisonment on condition that he should continue to carry on for the state the little business which he formely carried on for himself.

Frolof has been locked up for the last fifteen years in the central prison at Moscow. If a hanging is to take place at Kiew, Odessa or St. Petersburg, Frolof is sent thither under escort. I had been promised an interview with Frolof. It was even proposed to send him to my hotel, escorted by gendarmes. But I cared too much for my reputation to accede to such a position. Besides that would be taking Frolof out of his sphere; an executioner who is a prisoner must be seen in prison.

One evening on returning home, I found the following dispatch, which I have carefully preserved among my archives of travel:

NOVEMBER 7.—The executioner has arrived. I called to take you with me to the prison. Did not find you at home. Let me know at what time I may call for you to-morrow.

I answered that I would be free from 12 o'clock. At 3 o'clock the next day Mr. X. called for me with his carriage. The lugubrious weather was perfectly in harmony with the thoughts which are apt to fill the brain of a person going to visit an executioner.

Frolof's hands must have been warm from the last execution. He had just returned from St. Peterburg where he hung two nihilists—Pressniakoff and Kiwiatkowski.

The central prison where the executioner resides is situated in the suburbs. Its exterior aspect is not very romantic. Imagine a vast inclosure, surrounded by a palisade twelve feet high, and guarded by sentries in long gray coats with fixed bayonets. In the first court yard was a small hovel, in the basement of which Frolof resided in a kind of underground cave.

We descended a dirty stairway and reached a dark room, which was more like a den of wild beasts than anything else. A woman dragging a dirty urchin came to meet us.

My friend said to her, "Where is Frolof?"

"He is not at home," she answered: "he has gone out to make a few purchases. But he will be back in five minutes. Perhaps you have come to buy some rope?"

"No!"

"Oh! it never was in such demand as it is now. Be seated, my husband will be in presently."

This was the executioner's wife. She had a very sweet voice and blue eyes, but her complexion was heavy and colorless. She wore the costume of the country people—the chemise with large puffed sleeves, the red sarafan and the apron fastened upon her shoulders.

Upon the table a samovar, with a breast of a shining copper color, was singing. Some worn out tooloops were hanging on the well. They looked as if they were spoils taken from the men who had been executed. And in the corner, shining like a great drop of blood, was a small lamp of red glass, burning before an image of the Virgin.

A sound of footsteps was heard in the courts above us.

"Here is Frolof now," said his wife; "the gendarmes who accompanied him have just returned."

In a few minutes he appeared, entirely filling the doorway with his massive frame, his broad shoulders and his immense head, with its shaggy mane of black hair.

He was dressed like a man of the people. He wore a small hat, a red shirt under his tooloop and pantaloons of dark cloth, which were tucked into his boots. Contrary to the expectation of sentimentalists, there was nothing terrifying in the aspect of this indefatigable slayer of men. The only noticeable difference between him and any other moujik was the brute strength shown in his thick neck and his immense muscular arms.

Frolof is as good as twenty gendarmes. When an insurrection threatens to break out among the prisoners, it is only necessary for Frolof to show himself at the door armed with a whip or a club, and order and silence are immediately restored. He once killed two rebellious prisoners with a single blow of his fist. The memory of this exploit is preserved among the prisoners.

Frolof asked us to be seated; then, at our request, he told us about the execution which he had just performed at St. Petersburg. Everything went off smoothly. The scaffold was erected early in the morning, at a distance of 250 metres from the prison. The condemned men clothed in long white robes, their hands tied behind them and carrying upon their breasts a card bearing the inscription: "Condemned for political crimes," were brought to the place of execution in a carriage between two rows of gendarmes on foot and on horseback.

They ascend a small staircase four steps high; in the twinkling of an eye the knot is slipped around the neck, then the stairs are suddenly jerked away, the body falls into space, the limbs twitch convulsively a few moments, and then all is over.

Frolof said that when Pressniakroff saw the two gibbets from his carriage, he smiled, looking proudly and defiantly at his escort.

Kiwiatkowski, on the contrary, was terribly dejected, his head hung down upon his breast, and he was as pale as death. When they were about to be led to the scaffold, Pressniakoff was heard to say to his companion: "Courage, brother, fear not!" Both kissed the crucifix and made the sign of the cross before dying. Kiwiatkowski was thirty years old; Pressniakoff twenty-five.

Frolof told us all this with the simplicity and carelessness of a moujik relating a fairy tale at an evening gathering. It was evident that hanging was an everyday affair to him. He told us that this was his twenty-fifth hanging, and that he he looked forward for still better times.

Then he offered each of us a bit of genuine rope; for he freely acknowledged that if he did not sometimes substitute bogus rope for the genuine he could not make it last. For gamblers—and what Russian will not gamble?—will spend, their roubles freely for those bits of rope, which are supposed to bring good luck to their possessor. Frolof derives a considerable revenge from the hangman's rope.

Frolof accompanied us as far as the foot of the steps of his cave, and when he went back, a gendarme closed upon him the massive door which makes the executioner's residence a true prison.

A number of ladies with new sealskin sacques prophesy that the present winter will be one of the coldest on record.

Personal Paragraphs.

Walt Whitman, in an article on the 124th anniversary of Burns, notes that the letters and speeches will be mostly from people who would not have noticed R. B. at all during his actual life nor kept his company or read his verses.

George Alfred Townsend says Washington was not only the father of his country, but also of the mule. That is, be sent to Europe for Jacks and bred the mule, which Gath says saved the union in the late war.

Grover Cleveland's handwriting is so bad that the people of New York are sighing for the good old days when Horace Greeley used to make manuscripts.

When Joshua Hill was senator from Georgia he bought an old field in the suburbs of Washington for $7000, as an investment for his children. The British Minister built a fine residence in the neighborhood, making it fashionable, and now the property is worth $250,000.

Ex-Governor Israel Washburne, of Maine, is suffering from paralysis, which affects his entire body below the waist. Despite his nearly seventy years however, he is full of courage and declares himself determined to recover.

Governor Stephens, of Georgia, is said to be discharging his official duties with marked fidelity and care, with the closest personal attention to every detail. He has no red-tape, no circumlocution. His office hours are all the hours of the day, and he listens patiently to every one of the many visitors that constantly throng about the rooms.

The following is the formula of the proclamation elevating Gen. Wolseley to the peerage: "The queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the great seal of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, granting the dignity of a baron of the said united kingdom unto Gen. Sir Garnet Joseph Wolseley, G. C. B., G. C. M. G., adjutant-general of Her Majesty's forces, and late general commanding-in-chief the extraordinary force in Egypt, and the heirs male of his body lawfully forgotten, by the name, style, and title of Baron Wolseley of Cairo, and of Wolseley, in the county of Stafford."

Senator Lamar, who hitherto has adhered to the old southern custom of wearing long hair, now appears in Washington with his locks closely shorn. The change was, however, an unintentional one. During a recent visit to St. Louis he entered a barber's shop to get shaved. That operation finished, the sable artist said: "Senator, your hair needs cutting." "All right," said the other, who was so deep in meditation upon other subjects that he did not know what he had replied to; but when at last he arose and looked in the glass he knew, although he hardly knew himself.

The will of the late Robert W. Baker, a shrewd and prosperous man of Racine, Wis., provides that on reaching the age of 21 years each of his children shall have one-third of his or her equal share of his property, and any unexpended portion of the income thereon paid over At 25 years another one-third, with its unexpended income thereon, and at 30 years the final one-third. But the final one-third is not to be paid unless the persons entitled shall make proof to the Trustees that at least one-half of the portions previously paid over have not been lost, squandered, or spent. On failure to do so the trustees are to retain the unpaid share until the person reaches the age of 46.

A sensation has been created in England by the going over to the church of Rome of Sir Tatton Sykes and his family. Lady Sykes is a daughter of Mr. George Cavendish-Bentinck. Sir Tatton is enormously, rich, having a rent roll in the East Riding of Yorkshire alone amounting to some $180,000 a year. The three properties of Lord Herries, Sir Tatton Sykes and Lord Ripon—all three of whom are now Roman Catholics—constitute a continuous stretch of land sixty-eight miles long, reaching nearly across the finest portion of Yorkshire. Another notable conversion to the Catholic faith is also whispered of in London. It is said to be quite as important, and indeed sensational as any of those above named.

ROLLING IN WEALTH.

The Rapidity With Which Rich Men Have Been Growing Richer.

Elmira (N. Y.) Telegraph.

Twenty or thirty years ago—say thirty—the richest man in the United States was not worth any more that Marcus Crassus, the richest man in Rome in the age of Pompey and Julius Cæsar—$10,000,000 to $15,000,000. When old Stephen Girard, of Philadelphi, died, it is said, he was worth $15,000,000, but, in fact, he was not worth $10,000,000. He was then the wealthiest man in the country. When old Cornelius Vanderbilt died his estate was estimated at $40,000,000; a few years thereafter the Stewart estate was reckoned at $30,000,000. These were the richest men in the country ten or a dozen years ago, and there were hardly a score of others worth as much as $10,000,000 each. What a change has taken place since the death of Vanderbilt! The wealth of his son, William H., is now reckoned above $100,000,000. Jay Gould, a bankrupt ten years back, is supposed to be worth $58,000,000; Stanford, Crocker, and the heirs of the estate of Mark Hopkins range from $60,000,000 to $25,000,000 each. There died a man in New York, Moses Taylor, whose property is variously stated at $30,000,000 to $50,000,000, and he hardly attracted any attention as a man of wealth, so numerous have become those of equal rank in fortune. Twelve years ago the richest man in San Francisco was thought to be William C. Ralston, and the aggregate of his possessions did not exceed $6,000,000. At that time two men kept an humble saloon on Washington street, between Montgomery and Sansome, whose whole possessions could not have been cashed for $25,000. They became partners of two other men in mines on the Comstock lode. Of the last two neither was rich. The aggregate wealth of the four did not reach $50,000. Now one of the first is worth $30,000,000, and one of the last two supposed to be worth $60,000,000 or more. It is stated on good authority that two brothers named Armour made $7,000,000 in one year in a "corner" in pork. James R. Keene in 1875 was a poor man in San Francisco—so poor that at times a $20 piece looked as big to him as a full moon. He is now rated a $15,000,000 nabob in New York; all of it the result of eight or nine years successful speculation. It took Steven Girard a lifetime to make half as much, and yet he was accounted the sharpest and luckiest merchant of his time. About the year 1869 there came to California by way of the Central and Union Pacific railways a party of visitors from Chicago. Among them was George Pullman, the inventor of the palace sleeping car. He was then but an experimenter, an adventurer on the wave of fortune. He was understood to be worth a good deal less than nothing. His wealth is now established at $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 and increasing at a rate that will make it $50,000,000 if he lives ten years more.

HTE BABY'S BANK.

"No," said the engineer, as he closed one valve and opened another. "I wasn't always an engineer. I wasn't anything for a long time. I had the knowledge in my head all the while, but it was lost under a heap of rubbish. What fools men are when they're left to themselves, sometimes! Now, look at me. Would you say I was ever a tramp?"

A tramp! His white, muscular throat, white and wholesome under the coal dust, his strong, well-knitted frame, clear eye and firm hand denoted a man of pluck and courage, a practical worker; not the idle, nerveless, relaxed object which is denominated a tramp, and which is a blight on the face of nature. No! this man, guiding the good engine Mohawk, was never a tramp, and we told him so.

"But I was, gentlemen," he said, coolly sighting a long stretch of road over the backbone of his engine, and letting her out a little for a dead level heat. "I was not only a tramp, but the meanest kind of one, and I worked harder and suffered more to get into that condition than I ever did to reach this," and he looked proudly at the polished trimmings of his flying steed.

"I'll tell you how it was," he said at last, as he slowed up to round a curve and then went easily on past the fields clad in their summer verdure, past woods that were panoramic in a flash of beauty and away into the open country. "I was a tramp—no matter how I came to be, or why I lost home, friends, self-respect, all that makes manhood—but I didn't wear a red ribbon at my watch chain then, and my brain was muddled—there were many more like me—and I went from bad to worse, but I had never broken the laws; wronged any one but myself, when I fell in with some fellows who thought they had found a tool, and they had. They say every man has his price, and they offered me mine; but it was the price of my soul, too, and I agreed to take the money and do the work.

It was this—to sneak around and get acquainted with the inside of a house—the house of the richest man in the place and to show them the way; they said I looked the most respectable for the purpose. Gentlemen, you wouldn't trusted one of the gang with a tencent bit, least of all me as I looked then, but I felt almost proud of the compliment, and that afternoon I was to go up to the house to look for work or to ask for food just as it happened to strike me, when there was no one home but the women folks, and look around to see how we would get in that night—for robbing, and, perhaps murder, was what they meant.

"It was just such a pleasant, peaceful afternoon as this, and all the doors and windows open, and not a soul saw me as I lounged in through the garden and up to the verandah; the gang I had fallen in with had made one mistake—they had kept me sober for the work, not clear-headed, but sober enough to make me feel that I was doing a mean dastardly trick, to make me for the first time in many a year ashamed of my own company. But I'd gone so far I must go on. I had walked up the steps and into the house without seeing a soul and I stepped into a long, cool room, and there I saw on the mantel, in a great gold-framed glass, a white face and two red, blood-shot eyes—my own; but what a fright that gave me; and then I saw something else, a small iron bank; such as children keep pennies in. It was made of latticed bars of wrought irons, and between every bar was the gleam of quarters and half dollars, and smaller gold coin. I hadn't a penny to my name. I was hungry, tired, footsore and disgusted with what I had undertaken. It came over me like a flash that I could take this money and get out of the gang; it would be dishonest, but not such as this they had planned. I reached out my hand and stopped. There at my very feet, on a white lace pillow, and all white and fluffy like an angel—lay the lovliest baby I ever saw in all my life! She was asleep, but as I looked at her in startled wonder she opened her eyes as wide and bright as daisies, held up both pretty hands, laughed like a bird singing, and said, 'Joe, Joe,' which wasn't my name at all. I didn't touch the baby. While I stood there a little pale woman came out of her room and nearly fainted when she saw me, and I sat down there and told her the whole story, and asked her to have me sent to jail for protection for myself and others; she sent for her husband, and all the time we were talking the baby laughed and cooed, and called me by the name she had given me, 'Joe,' and the rest of the gang were waiting at the turn of the road for me to come back to them.

"I didn't give them up—it wasn't worth while, when I had to put the people they had designed on their guard, and left the town that night; I didn't go to jail; and the man whose house was not to be robbed gave me some work, but I didn't reform all in a minute, and he never could have reformed me at all—it was the baby did it. She trusted me; when I felt the old boy getting the better of me I went to the baby and she smiled at me and I grew strong right off—it made a man of me. I never could tell what that baby saw in my face to make her help me in that way, but it wasn't for this world. She knew she could save me, and she did it. That was ten years ago, gentlemen, and I am more of a man to-day than I ever was and it's her doing."

"She must be quite a large girl now," we said, inquiringly.

"May be so! I don't know how that is; some folks say they don't reckon them by months and years. I'd like to feel she's the same sweet smiling baby, holding out her hands in that confiding way and call me that same name—but I never wanted anyone else to use the name since she said it the last time. She was going to sleep never to wake up, the doctor said; they told me she wouldn't know me, that I would disturb her. I went in on my knees, I crawled up to the bed and looked at her; dear saint, she was as white as the sheets, and her pretty curls never stirred a hair, and her sweet eyes closed and I groaned in my heart, for I thought she was gone, and then she opened her eyes and there came a great struggle for breath; and oh, my God, I'd have died to help her, and she just looked at me and put one hand up—I fancied she pointed up there—and she smiled on me, and says she, all at once: 'Joe! Joe!' and then she made her mother understand that she wanted something. It was the little bank, and she wanted me to have it. I took it to humor her, and thought I'd give it back to her when she got well. And then she smiled again, and I listened to her say, 'Joe!'—and all was still. You see I never could go wrong now; but how did she know about that little bank and my wicked thoughts? And she forgave and loved me too, pretty dear. The smoke makes me cry. There's our depot at the next station, and we're running on schedule time, as you see, gentlemen."—Springfield News.

A Surprising Newspaper Consolidation.

An arrangement has been completed for the consolidation of the Cincinnati Commercial and Gazette newspapers and the publication of a new daily under the name of Commercial-Gazette. The new paper will be issued as soon as the mechanical preparations can be made. Both Mr. Smith of the Gazette, and Mr. Halstead of the Commercial will be in the management of the new paper, and they will be assisted by such talent from the two papers as is needed to make the new enterprise a success. The paper will be Republican in politics.

BOWIE-KNIFE POTTER.

Not Dying in a Poor-House But at His Farm—The Story of the Pryor Challenge.

Milwaukee Dispatch to Chicago.

The Hon. John F. Potter, who for several terms represented the old first Wisconsin district in the house of representatives, and while there acquired the title of "Old Bowie Knife," is reported to be dying at his modest country house in the town of Mukwonago, Waukesha county. Mr. Potter's public history is an interesting one. A service of one term, in 1856-7, in the state legislature exposed the true mental of the man, and he was elected for the successive terms to congress, serving in the thirty-fifth, thirty-sixth, and thirty-seventh sessions of that body. It was not, however, until the last few weeks of his congressional career that he came to the fore. In April, 1860, there was a hot debate in congress in the house. The precedent established by the gag laws, against which Joshua R. Giddings had battled, existed then in everything but name as strongly as in the past. Southern member after member arose and poured his wrath upon the heads of the mudsills of the north. It was at this juncture that Owen Lovejoy, of Illinois, arose to reply. He denounced the institution of slavery in a manner unheard of before in the halls of congress. Lovejoy marched down one aisle and up another among the southern members, shaking his fist in their faces and denouncing them in unmeasured terms. While this was going on Roger A. Pryor, a Virginian, now a lawyer in New York city, advanced to the center of the hall in a towering passion exclaiming: "The gentleman from Illinois shall not approach this side of the house shaking his fists and talking in the way he has talked. It's bad enough to be compelled to sit here and hear him utter his treasonable and insulting language; but he shall not, sir, come upon this side of the house shaking his fists in our faces." It was then that Mr. Potter arose and said: "We have listened to the gentlemen on the other side for eight weeks, when they denounced the gentlemen upon this side with violent and offensive language. We listened to them gently and heard them through, and now, sir, this side shall be heard, let the consequences be what they may." This, of course, brought the brunt of the battle on to Potter, and Pryor was not slow to rain down his abuse upon him. But the Wisconsin man stood by his words, and on April 12th, one week afterward, received a note from Pryor—Mr. Hindman, of Arkansas, delivering it. It merely asked Mr. Potter to leave the district to receive a written communication. Mr. Potter answered that, as the note contemplated a duel, and that his disqualification was contained in the constitution of Wisconsin, he would not leave the district. This was followed by a peremptory challenge, which Mr. Potter accepted and promptly named the common bowie-knife as the weapon, the duelists to be locked in a room. Chisholm, Pryor's second, protested against the use of so barbarous a weapon, but Lander, Potter's second, would consent to no other weapon, but offered to substitute himself for Mr. Potter, with other weapons. This, of course, could not be agreed to, and no further demands were made upon Potter to fight. This made Potter a great favorite with the republican party, and at the convention which met at Chicago the June following he was presented by the Missouri delegation with a bowie-knife seven feet long, including the handle, with a blade three inches in width, which may now be seen hanging on the wall of his farm house. The handle is of ebony, and the blade of beautifully polished steel. On one side of the blade is the inscription: "Presented to John F. Potter of Wisconsin, by the republicans of Missouri, 1860." On the opposite was; "Will Always Meet a 'Pryor' engagement." The presentation took place at the Tremont house, Frank P. Blair making the speech. When Potter's term expired he was appointed governor of Nevada by President Lincoln, but declined. He was subsequently appointed consul-general of British North America, a place which he filled for a short time and resigned. Since then he has not been in public life, but lives on his farm. He is 65 years of age. Mr. Potter was born in Maine in 1817, educated at Phillips' academy, New Hampshire, and after studying law came to Wisconsin in 1840. He was elected judge of Walmouth county in 1856, serving four years, from which position he went to the legislature, and thence to congress, as above stated. Ever after the episode he was known as Bowie-Knife Potter. Mr. Potter's present home is a modest farm-house standing back a few rods from the road, three miles south of Mukwonago. There, unblessed by this world's goods, the man whose name was in everybody's mouth from Maine to Mexico, and from the Atlantic to the Golden Gate, and even across the Atlantic, is passing the last days of his life in obscurity. Sick and staggering under the weight of years, he is dragging out the miserable hours until death shall come to his relief, which now will not be long.

The Mayflower's Door-Knocker.

The original door-knocker, brought over in the Mayflower, which for several generations was upon the front door of the old Winslow house at Marshfield, still standing upon the Webster farm, has lately come into the possession of the Rev. W. C. Winslow, of Boston, who will probably give it to the Webster Historical Society. "In 1850," says The Boston Transcript, "the Rev. Gordon Winslow, D. D., rector of St. Paul's, Staten Island, while on a visit to Mr. Webster, was presented by him with the interesting relic. It is inscribed, 'From Winslow House, Marshfield, Mass. Came in the Mayflower, 1620.' And on the rim or head to receive the blows of the hammer, the inscription runs, 'Presented by Daniel Webster to Dr. G. Winslow, Sept. 15, 1850.'"

Old and New Boston.

The Philadelphia North American pays this tribute to Boston: "Those who have not of late years visited Boston will find themselves rewarded by finding a new town. Old Boston is still there, but a new Boston, a Belgravian addition, is now tacked on thereto, which it is no exaggeration to say is equal to the finest residential quarter in the United States, and not surpassed by that in any city outside of Paris. A finer suburban effect of its kind than that produced in October, when the President's scarlet-clad cavalry guard clattered down the magnificent commonwealth avenue—which can only be compared to Berlin's Unter-den-Linden—can scarcely be imagined. The new museum, also in this quarter, is well worth seeing, as are the noble churches which have sprung up in its neighborhood."

FIELD AND FARM.

Household Recipes.

OYSTER FRITTERS.—Fifty small oysters, two eggs, one pint of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of salad oil, enough water with the oyster liquor to make a scant half pint. Drain and chop the oysters, add the water and the salt to the liquor. Pour part of this on the flour, and, when smooth, add the remainder. Add the oil and eggs, first well beaten. Stir the oysters into the batter. Drop small spoonfuls of this into boiling fat, and fry until brown. Drain and serve hot.

RICE JAMBOLAYA.—Take some pieces of salt bacon cut in inch squares; put them in a sauce pan with some slices of onion; fry until both are brown. Pour in enough of the liquor from oysters to cook a sufficient quantity of rice to make a dishful. Add water as it may be needed; season highly with salt, pepper, thyme, sweet marjoram and any other herbs you please. Let the rice stew until it is tender, then put in the oysters, and when they have boiled for two or three minutes serve on a platter, heaping the rice in a pyramid with the oysters on the top. Cullens or small oysters are best in this dish.

Oyster Sauce, which is delicious with salmon and with chicken also, is made thus: Let a dozen or more large oysters come to a boil in their own liquor or a very little water, mix equal quantities, say half a cupful, of butter and flour until they are smooth, then put in a stewpan with the oyster liquor, adding salt, cayenne pepper, and a small cup of sweet cream; set the pan on the stove, and let the sauce simmer gently until it is entirely free from lumps and of the requisite thickness; just before removing it from the fire, add the pieces of oysters. Pour over the fish on the platter, but if served with chicken put it into a gravy boat.

A plain plum pudding is made thus: Chop three ounces of suet very fine, add a quarter of a pound of currants, the same quantity of raisins, half a teaspoonful of salt and a teaspoonful of baking powder, a pound of sifted flour, a pint of sweet milk, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, and spice to suit your taste. Mix thoroughly and boil for three hours in a pudding bag. Another recipe for plum pudding is richer and much more expensive, but for certain occasions, say once a year, is preferable: One pound of currants, one pound of raisins, half a pound of citron, one pound of sugar, a pint bowl of grated bread crumbs and a pint bowl of flour two wineglasses of wine, one nutmeg grated, a teaspoonful each of cloves and of allspice, one pound of butter and one dozen eggs. It will be seen at once that this will make a large pudding. Rub the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the other ingredients. Boil in a bag for four hours. Serve with cream and sugar or sauce.

OYSTER LOAVES.—Use some fresh rolls, and cut a thin nice oval hole in the top of each, saving the piece cut out, scoop out all the crumbs, leaving the crust whole. Put the oysters in a stewpan with one-quarter of their liquor, add some bread crumbs, a large piece of butter, a little pepper, nutmeg and mace, if desired. Stew a few minutes, add three large tablespoonfuls of cream, allow all to boil. Fill the inside of the rolls with the oysters, reserving as many oysters as you have rolls. Cover with the pieces cut out, and place an oyster on each roll. These ornamental oysters must be very dry. [Nonparcil Practical Cook Book by Mrs. E. A. M.

A DELICIOUS DESSERT.—Make dough as for soda biscuit; avoid much shortening; roll to quarter inch in thickness; spread with nice dried peaches, well cooked, or other fruit; roll over and over; pinch together well; place in steamer over boiling water, let steam about half an hour; serve hot with a sauce made of sugar and butter, well beaten together. We usually make two rolls for a family of six, and none is ever wasted. I think Samantha Snap will admit that this is better than boiled pudding.

POP-OVERS.—One cup of milk, one cup of flour, one egg, a little salt. This will make one dozen cakes, one teaspoonful to each patty pan. Bake in a hot oven.

Feeding Dairy Cattle on Roots.

It is commonly known that feeding cows heavily with turnips imparts the flavor of the turnip to the milk, but if given in moderate quantities just after milking, so that twelve hours shall elapse for the effect to pass off, little difficulty is experienced. A farmer who carefully experimented in feeding ruta bagas, beets and carrots, each for a fixed period, no less than a bushel a day to each cow, and then a peck of potatoes each day for a like period, found no difference in the milk produced from the beets, carrots, or ruta bagas, or the peck of potatoes, the potatoes producing as much milk as four times the amount of the other roots. He ascribed the absence of any bad taste in the milk, when the cows were fed on turnips, to the grain given at the same time. If fed without grain, he asserts, the odor of the turnips will be imparted to the milk, but with a liberal allowance of grain it will not. He did not mention the amount of grain, or how it prevented the turnip flavor and odor, but his high character as a skillful farmer and accurate experimenter is said to be a sufficient indorsement of his statements.

Food and Flesh.

Many persons object to large fowls because they eat too much. But one cannot get something out of nothing, nor flesh or eggs without food; and after a pretty long time spent in feeding all kinds of farm stock I like those kinds which will eat the most food and make the most from it. As a rule, your unthrifty, gluttonous, unprofitable animals are in bad health and do not digest their food; their appetities are abnormally large and their food is wasted. A healthy animal will eat no more than it can turn to good account, and it pleases me to see my cows well filled with a liberal mess of good food, nicely prepared, lying down, sprawled out, and stretching their legs with comfort and puffing and sighing with contentment; or my pigs full to the muzzle, sleeping in their warm nests in dry comfortable pens and enjoying the pleasing sensation which accompany the change of good food in their stomachs into pork. And in regard to fowls, it is gratifying to see the hens stretched on a bed of clean, dry dust in the warm sunshine in front of the close window of a tight, wind-proof house, with their crops filled with a warm mess of meal and milk, and hear them singing, giving notes in payment for the care bestowed upon them, which are always paid when due. But it is very true that there are some animals which eat only to live, and are unable to do much in the way of working up surplus food into meat, milk, butter or eggs. And it is the farmer's business to get rid of these and to keep those kinds only which are profitable.

The Water Supply.

Pure water for household use is of the greatest value, and the utmost care should be had that it is pure, because none other is fit for domestic use. Everything impure should be kept at a distance from the well, and it should be so constructed that no surface water can get into it. Where a well can be driven it is undoubtedly the best, because nothing can get into it without filtering through the ground; it is considerably cheaper, too, than a dug well. In digging a well people very often make a mistake in not going deep enough. It is apt to be the case that as soon as a vein of water is reached, it is supposed to be sufficient, even if it is small, and so after going down far enough to make a little reservoir it is stoned up and the result is that the next summer, perhaps, the well is dry. This is very annoying besides being an expensive job. I speak from experience. By not digging deep enough the well fails occasionally, and I contemplate driving one near by so as to have, I hope, a never failing supply. Water is needed in abundance at the farm buildings, and it should be provided somehow, either by springs, well, a cistern, or else brought from a distance in a pipe. The best time to dig a well is during a severe drought; and if a good vein is reached, but little fear need be entertained that the supply will fail. Cisterns should not be constructed under the dwelling, but out of doors. When making a cistern be sure and make it large enough. Undoubtedly there is water enough falls on the roofs of farm buildings in the course of a year to supply the stock with drinking water, as well as water for all household purposes; and if it is properly filtered, it is a good deal more wholesome than much water that is used.—N. E. Farmer.

Merit and Pedigree.

Live Stock Journal.

Merit and pedigree cannot be placed as opposed to each other, for while there is great merit in good pedigee, there is very little that is reliable in merit without pure breeding behind it; and the beginner will find that if he bases his hopes on merit alone—ignoring the pedigree—he will be apt to fall very short of realizing his expectations, while with ewes from pure-bred flocks, and judicious selections of rams with good pedigree, he will, with proper attention, study and continued perseverance, reach far better results in the end, though the ewes he starts with may not be of the highest quality individually. This is an important point that he should not lose sight of in making up his flock.

Use of Frozen Cabbages.

Frozen cabbage can be made into sour-krout if they have not been seriously damaged. The heads stripped of the loose outer leaves are shred into thin slices, which are packed into barrels, salt being sprinkled over the krout in sufficient quantity as it is packed down. It is pressed down by a light rammer—a potato-masher for instance—so that the liquid which soon runs from it is on the top, and it should be so kept by putting a loose cover over it when the barrel is full, and pressing it down with a heavy weight. This is to drive out the air from it and to keep it out, and so secure the preservation of the krout, which would soon spoil otherwise. The sugar in the cabbage changes to lactic acid which gives the mild acid flavor to the sour-krout. A reasonable quantity of cardamon seeds mixed with the shred cabbage improves the flavor and helps to avoid its flatulent effect upon some persons.

Hugo on Marrying a Negro.

Paris Letter to the London Truth.

This reminds me of a discussion I heard not very long ago between Victor Hugo and an American "Democrat." The subject was miscegenation. The American was flippant, verbose, and discursive—defects not frequent among his countrymen, who are in general taciturn, dry, and to the point. The one to whom I particularly allude wanted, in trying to break down Victor Hugo's view of "chessboard" (black-and-white) marriages, to convert him to Episcopalianism, as taught and practiced in New York by a clergyman named Dix, and to bring him round to see that he was wrong in placing a nimbus round John Brown's head. The poet had a hard struggle to prevent his annoyance from getting the better of his courtesy. As he was asserting the negro's right to be treated as a man and brother, Jeanne Hugo came forward to bid her grandfather good night. "Hold!" cried the controversial guest; "if a nigger as black as my shoe wanted to marry that young lady, would you consent?" "I should never ask her to take for a husband a man she did not love; and, as I dare say her elective affinities will draw her toward a Caucasian face, I need not trouble myself about your question." "But suppose she did love the nigger?" "In that case I should give them both my blessing." "And do you mean to tell me that you'd like to nurse a wooly-headed, dusky-faced great-grandchild?" "Well, I shouldn't," answered the poet. "It would be a painful duty to perform but I should get through it and console myself with the reflection that after three generations a touch of the tar brush becomes a beauty. The handsomest woman I ever saw was a Brazilian quadroon."

Good for a New Country.

Among the immigrants arriving at Bonaventure depot, Canada, recently, were George Kelsey, a native of the west of England, and forty-two years of age, and his wife, from the same part. The twain have been married eighteen years. Within six years they have had twelve children, namely, triplets no less than twice doublets and "singlets" twice. As the parents sat in the depot surrounded by their offspring, the youngest, an infant in arms, the eldest looking little more than an infant, they were the subjects of the greatest interest, and many were the questions asked the happy mother, especially by the feminine portion of those in the depot awaiting the arrival of the train. The children were all healthy and robust, and the father and mother might be described as the same. The mother stated that her little ones had known no sickness more than the ordinary complaints incident to childhood.

Kaiser William's Diary.

The German emperor's diary must certainly be one of the great historical treasures of the age. For nearly fifty years Emperor William has carefully noted down with his own hand the chief events of each day, such as interviews, conversations, decisions, political intelligence and domestic occurrences. Every morning a fresh sheet of folio size is laid upon the emperor's desk, headed with the date and a sacred text, and the diary already forms several volumes, which are to pass into the crown prince's hands. The diary is illustrated by loose sheets bearing watercolor pictures of the chief occurrences of the emperor's life. Executed by renowned German artists, these sketches are drawn from rough outlines furnished from memory by the emperor, who also corrects the artists' drawing previous to their completion.

Lon Vinson was assassinated in Brownsville, Ala., on Monday night.

HER PARLOR.

The way into her parlor is "up a winding stair";
Gay Japanese umbrellas are fastened here and there,
And fans and peacock feathers hang with a careless air.

The door is low and curtained. I enter—overhead
Glistens a gilded cobweb: with reverence I tread
Upon a Turkish prayer-rug in blue, old gold and red.

A stand is set with dishes, fashioned in years ago;
Blue platters on the mantel, and by the fire's glow
A screen, whose crimson poppies are nodding in a row.

My lady greets me smiling: the violets I bring
Fill all the little parlor with happy thoughts of spring;
Shadows dance on the ceiling—I hope no one will ring.

A JEWEL OF A BOY.

Jack Williamson, acting sub-manager and inspector of branches for the Anglo-Chinese Banking corporation, was sitting one morning in his room at the London head office, sifting the huge pile of letters which the homeward mail had brought. To him enter the chief manager, MacDavid, with a blank look on his face, and a telegram in his hand, who said: "Seen this, Williamson?—pretty go—read it." And then the sub-manager read: "Hankow, May 20. Agency robbed, probably by Chinamen. Eighty thousand dollars, notes chiefly. Comprador murdered. Send inspector at once."

"By Jove! it's a go," said Jack with a long whistle; 'just in the middle of the tea season. What's to be done?' 'Why you'll have to go out. Why can't you start. To-day's Monday. Cathay leaves Gravesend on Friday. Can you do it?' Now, Jack Williamson, the last ten years of whose life had been spent in travelling all over Asia inspecting the various branches and agencies of the bank, needed but little preparation, so accustomed was he to be called upon to start for a distant point at all sorts of odd times, so he merely said, 'All right, I'll go,' and resumed his letters.

So on Friday next Jack walked on board the P. & O. steamer Cathay at Gravesend, with a big cigar in his mouth, as cooly and as unconcernedly as if he were going to Margate or Hastings, instead of 900 miles into the heart of China.

Favored by wind and weather the good ship made an excellent run, touching as usual at Port Said, Suez, Aden, Point de Galle and Singapore. At the last named place he went ashore to the branch, of which the manager was an old chum of his. "Hullo, Jack. Come about the Hankow business, I suppose? It's a rum job, isn't it? What the police call a 'regular put-up job.' Can't find a trace either of the murderers or the stuff, which was half notes and half Sycee. Haven't even a suspicion, so I expect you've got your work cut out for you. Then the police out there are such fools, and I don't think our people could have been much better. Anyhow, I wish you good luck; you've shown yourself more than once as good as a detective; I suppose you've brought on with you?" "Not I; what's the good of a London detective in China? Besides, I like to go to work about these things in my own way, without being bothered by anybody else's ideas and notions. Too many cooks spoil the broth, and in a case like this one head's better than two. But look here. I want a boy; none of your rascals that rob you and cheek you, and get out of the way when they're wanted, but a good, honest, sober, industrious fellow, who doesn't whimper at being taken a hundred miles from home, and who doesn't mind being sworn at now and then." Jack, as an old China hand, knew that Singapore boys were the best as a rule; "I don't mind what I pay him, so long as he's a good one."

The manager called in the comprador—that is, the head of the native department of the bank; a man necessarily of some standing and of good education. Now, Singapore compradors pride themselves on being very different from their brethren in China, inasmuch as they are more Europeanized, and, having attended Eurasian schools, have learnt to speak, not the childish-sounding "pidgin" of Hong Kong and Shanghai, but the English of Johnson and Macauley—very much more Johnsonian and Macaulayan, in fact, than that spoken by average Englishmen.

"Comprador," said the manager, "Mr. Williamson wants a good boy to go to Hankow with him. Do you know anyone who you think would suit him?" "I will retire, sir," replied the great functionary, "and maturely consider your question." In an hour or so he returned. "I dare to imagine, sir, that I have succeeded in discovering the type of individual you require. His appellation is Ah Moon; he enjoys a very good character; is, in fact, a man of some position, who is willing to act in the capacity of boy for a nominal compensation. He does not speak, perhaps, so well as you could wish, but then he has not had the advantage of a Singapore education; but that is his misfortune, sir, and scarcely his fault." "Show him in, comprador," said Jack; and Mr. Ah Moon was introduced. He was a slim, oily-looking man of thirty or thereabouts, with a serene, Buddha-like expression of face, which was marred only by the mark of a fearful wound which ascended the right cheek, and gave him rather a sinister appearance when he laughed. He was spotlessly clean, and looked altogether a very promising retainer. "You are willing to go as far as Hankow and back?" asked Jack. "Yes, sir," replied Ah Moon in a respectful tone. "What wages do you want?" "Twelve dollars a month can do, sir," said the boy. "Moderate enough, anyhow," whispered Jack; "if it wasn't for that villainous scar, he might pass for a mandarin;" and aloud he added, "Very well; that piecy English steamer sail at midnight. Can be ready?" "Can secure, sir," replied Ah Moon, and, with an obeisance, retired.

When Jack Williamson returned on board that night, he found his pyjamahs neatly laid out in his berth; clean white clothes ready for the day, his slippers—everything, in fact, that he should want. "That's a good beginning, anyhow," he thought; "if he only goes on in this style, he'll do; but the worst of these beggars is that, as a rule, they don't go on." Ah Moon's residence was somewhere forward; but, by some method of his own, he learnt always to be in the way when wanted. He was terribly sea-sick on the voyage to Hong Kong; but he was none the less serviceable, and performed his duties manfully, with a face as nearly white as a yellow face could be, and the tears of suppressed agony streaming down his cheeks. Jack told him to go and lie down; but he would not. At Hong Kong he went ashore with Jack, and waited at the table in such a manner as to excite the envy of the local manager, who offered there and then to take him off Jack's hands at increased wages, and give his own boy in exchange; but Jack, when he had found a jewel, knew how to take care of it, and seriously thought of bringing him back to England with him to act in the place of a certain Mary Jane, whose chief predilections were for breaking everything that came into her hands, and for forgetting all that was said to her; in fact, he began to conceive quite an affection for Ah Moon, and declared that his only shortcoming was his delusion with regard to a certain white man who haunted him.

From Hong Kong Jack and his jewel proceeded to Shanghai, and from Shanghai by one of the luxurious American river steamers up the mighty Yang-tse to Hankow.

The murder and the robbery were still the talk of the little place, and the wildest speculations were rife as to whither the authors with their booty had escaped—speculations none the less wild on account of the great facilities afforded for concealment in such a "terra incognita." From what Jack gathered from the agent, half the amount stolen had been in the bank's own notes, and half in Sycee silver. Now sovereigns, or even dollars, are comparatively handy coins to cart away in quantities—the latter, of course, less so than the former; but the fact that some forty thousand dollars' value of the unwieldy silver "hoofs," called Sycee, had been abstracted and successfully hidden away, seemed to prove that several men must have been engaged in the enterprise. The watchman who had been on duty during the night in question, and who had been lying in that most unenviable of domiciles, a Chinese jail, ever since, knew nothing. He was on duty from 8 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock the next morning, it being his business to perambulate the entire "compound" every half hour, clattering together two pieces of flat wood as a token of his watchfulness. He would not swear that he had not taken a snooze once, but his check clock, which he was obliged to move at every round, showed that at any rate he had not missed a half hour. When asked as to what he had been doing previous to going on duty, he said that he had slept as usual during the day, after which he had taken his "chow" of rice, fish and a small measure of wine, not at his own house, but at a public restaurant. Did he feel sleepy at all during the night? Not that he remembered. The comprador lived in rooms over the treasury by himself, and the bank building was the last house in the foreign concession, next to the native town, and about fifty yards from the river; so that it was evident that if the plunder had not been taken to a junk waiting in the river, it had been carried away into the native town, amidst the mazes of which it would be soon concealed. The next question was, how the robbers could have obtained the treasury keys; for the agent, after business hours, checked the contents of the treasury himself, locked it up and carried the keys away to his own bungalow on the bund. This bungalow was not far from the bank building, and the agent lived there alone, his boy and his boy's wife, who acted as house coolie and cook, living in the servants' quarters behind. Suspicion naturally fell upon the woman, as being the person most intimately acquainted with the ins and outs of the house, but she satisfactorily proved that she had been ill in bed during the whole of the day preceding the night of the murder and robbery, while her husband, the agent's boy, who had been in his service for twelve years, had been so affected by the occurrence, and had exerted himself so incessantly in endeavoring to discover some clew, that suspicion had never fallen upon him for a moment.

Jack was leaning over the veranda, smoking a cigar, late one night, previous to turning into bed, and wondering how he was going to work about the mystery, for he was unwilling, not only for the bank's sake, but for his reputation as a zealous and sagacious officer, to return home without having effected something, when his ear caught the sound of voices engaged in a low but vigorous conflict, either on the premises or in the immediate neighborhood. In this climate of pure, clear air, and almost unbroken silence, the voice, although it be but a whisper, rings out with astonishing clearness. Jack would have been none the wiser had he been able to hear every word, for the speakers were Chinese, but he strained his ears if possible to recognize the voices. A movement on his part would have betrayed his presence, so he stood still and listened. Presently the voices ceased, and in a few seconds he saw the shadowy form of a woman glide swiftly out of the compound. Jack clapped his hands for Ah Moon. Ah Moon appeared in a few minutes with a scared face. "Ah Moon," said Jack sternly, "was it you that have talked to that woman just now gone out?" Ah Moon's face broke out into one broad smile of delight. "Ah! you have seen it, sir! I hab talkey you about that white man, and you hab always laugh. Now you hab seen him, and you makey laugh no more." "No," said Jack, "this no belong white man; this belong dark woman." Ah Moon's face fell, as he replied. "Then that no belong all to same I hab see. Three times I hab see that white man on my veranda, and then he stand by my bed and wave his arms and go away." "Well, that's an extraordinary thing," said Jack; "I'll swear I heard two people talk, and then I saw a woman go out of the compound." The next morning he called up the cook and coolies. None of them had been talking to a woman. Jack was a free liver, as are most men who have spent much of their lives in the East, but he was by no means given to over-indulgence in the pleasures of the table, so that the mysterious visitor was no phantom of a wine disordered imagination. He instructed the police to watch the premises closely for several nights after this, but there was no reappearance of the vision, and Jack began to think that perhaps his mind had been excited by the worry and harass of the past week or two, and that he had been just as much a victim of delusion as was the much ridiculed Ah Moon.

Jack noticed that Ah Moon was much more depressed than he had been before, and said to him: "I think you're in love, Ah Moon. You may say what you like, but I believe that woman was talking to you, for I don't suppose you're the first Chinaman that's been fooled by a woman." "No, sir," replied Ah Moon, "it no belong woman. It belong that white piecey man. I hab seen him more often this side than beforetime. I see him always. Supposey I take a walk, that white man he walkee too. Supposey I wait at table, he wait that other side of room. How fashion I can be happy supposey I always see him?"

How this extraordinary fancy had got into the poor fellow's head Jack could not make out. He had heard that old crones in England were in the habit of seeing visions of departed relations, but here was an educated, intelligent man, a very gentleman in habits and deportment, giving way to a fancy at which most English children would laugh.

Jack remained in Hankow for nearly a month longer, and could get no nearer the bottom of the mystery than when he arrived; so he reluctantly resolved to return home. But before setting forth he determined to accept the invitation of a Shanghai friend to make an up-country expedition in a houseboat.

In the voyage from Shanghai to the hills there is so little to describe that it would be a mere waste of space to attempt to spin out something from nothing. The scenery during the greater part of the journey—at least as much of it as temporary depressions in the high mud banks on either side allow to be seen—is of that flat, green, monotonous character which renders life in Shanghai, to the man who prefers the beauties of nature to a constant round of amusement and dissipation, almost intolerable. The only objects that break this boundless uniformity are the graves, an occasional funeral monument, a few pagodas, here and there a filthy, squalid village, some heaps of ruins and the remains of a few exquisite bridges. Nature has done but little to render this part of the world attractive, and man, during the fearful Taiping rebellion, did his best to render it desolate, as the presence everywhere of ruined villages and monuments testifies. Joss man to the contrary, Jack noticed, much to his annoyance, that Ah Moon's fits of the blues returned. He saw his white man at all hours, and most frequently at the dead hours of the night, as the boat lay anchored in midstream, when his fearful cries would rouse the dogs for miles around, and start them barking so as to effectually banish all notions of sleep from the minds of those on board the boat. "I wish to goodness, Ah Moon," said Jack one morning, after a night of unusually protracted howlings, "you try and scare away your white friend. Go to joss house, scatter gold paper for an hour or two straight off; I'll pay for it; do anything you like, but do get rid of him. He's getting an infernal nuisance, and I haven't had a wink of sleep for two nights. I don't want to get rid of you, but one of the two must go, either you or the white man."

As time was of no particular object to them, the voyage was performed in a leisurely manner, and every evening they anchored in midstream, plunged overboard for a swim, had dinner served, and enjoyed not the least pleasant part of the day afterward, sitting on the house-top, smoking and talking of old times, while the crew had their "chow" in the after part of the vessel. They were thus employed one beautiful evening in early June, when they became aware of a sudden excitement among the coolies; the rudder was unshipped, the anchor dragged in with all imaginable haste, and the oars run out to pull the boat near to the bank, as the stream at this point was very narrow.

"What's the matter?" asked Jack of the "lowdah." The man pointed to a large red light which was rapidly approaching: "That belong government boat. Suppose we no get out of the way; he run us down." The boat was made fast to the bank, the red light drew nearer; they could hear the splash of the oars, and the monotonous croon of the rowers in cadence to their strokes. The strange craft, with its great staring eye on each side of the bow, eased as it approached the houseboat, and finally pulled up alongside.

"This belong Mr. S—'s boat," asked an official in full costume, who jumped on board. Jack's friend replied that it was. "I wantchee see your crew, if you please." A man with a lantern accompanied the speaker, and the stream of light had a weird effect on the row of yellow faces, amidst the dense blackness and stillness of all around. The official glanced at each one swiftly but narrowly, and said some words in Chinese to the lantern bearer. "That belong all?" he asked of S—. "There's only this gentleman's boy," replied S—. "I wantchee see all, if you please," said the official. Ah Moon was made to come forward; the light of the lantern showed that he was in a pitiful state of tremble and terror. The official made another remark to the man beside him, who went on board the government boat and returned with two soldiers, who brought a rope with them, with which they began to bind Ah Moon as securely as if he was being prepared for a seance a la Davenport Brothers. "What's the meaning of this," angrily asked Jack; "this is my boy, who came with me from Singapore." "Yes," replied the official; "but he belong all to same that Hankow murderer." Jack's astonishment could find no expression in words: he simply stood and stared, first at Ah Moon and then at the official. "Is this true, Ah Moon?" he asked at length. "Quite true, sir," replied his boy, "and I shall see the white man no more." Thought Jack, "I don't suppose you'll see any man much more," and, addressing the officer, he said, "Are you going to take him to Shanghai?" "No, to Wuchang that belong the district city." "Because I have come this side expressly to find out about this business, and I suppose I shall have to attend the trial." "Trial!" echoed the officer scornfully; "he no catchee muchee trial. In one week time he be crucified." Jack was shocked at the utter indifference with which the official spoke of the fate of the trembling wretch, and resolved that he would get to Hankow as soon as possible. "Well, sir," said Ah Moon, as he was being hurried in the government boat, "good-by, sir; you have been number one good master to number one bad man like me. You will catchee most allo that dollar near that pagoda by Chinkiang. Good-by, sir!" and that was the last Jack saw of Ah Moon. As rapidly as the coolies could row, the houseboat sped back to Shanghai; and by the first steamer leaving, Jack went to Hankow and hurried across the river to Wuchang.

Passing by a broad space in the center of the town, he saw a large crowd collected, and pushing his way through, he came upon the objects of their curiosity—the naked figure of Ah Moon and a woman, impaled upon thick spikes of bamboo, and showing horrible signs of a long and lingering death. Half sickened with the sight, he went to the house of the Taotai, or magistrate, and there he learned what particulars had been forced by torture from Ah Moon.

It appeared that the woman—the agent's cook's wife—had stolen the keys of the treasury during the night; that the watchman had been drugged before going on duty; that Ah Moon and four other men had commenced operations on the treasury; that the comprador, disturbed by an unusual noise, had armed himself with a sword, and come down to see the cause; that Ah Moon had received a blow on the face from the comprador, and had retaliated by cutting him down; that the robbers had safely got off by the river with their booty; and that Ah Moon had promised the woman a weekly payment as reward for her share in the proceedings and to secure her secrecy. The Taotai could not say where the booty was concealed; but Ah Moon had admitted that he had gone to Singapore until the pursuit should have relaxed; meanwhile the payments to the woman had ceased. Upon his return with Jack, Ah Moon had seen the woman, and she had sworn to inform the authorities unless he doubled her allowance; and this was no doubt the subject of the conversation which Jack had heard from the veranda. Then she found that Ah Moon had gone to Shanghai, and imagining that he was attempting to escape from his bargain, and fancying that she would get a free pardon for serving the cause of justice, she had laid the whole matter before the authorities, with the results familiar to us.

Most of the stolen treasure was found buried in the earth near the pagoda at Chinkiang, as Ah Moon had said; and Jack returned to England a wiser man, and perhaps a little sadder at the fate which, just as it was, had overtaken his jewel of a boy.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Bedrooms.

Nothing so marks the distinction between a woman of refined tastes and one of a coarser fiber and more slovenly nature as the appearance of their bedrooms. The room of a woman of innate refinement is pervaded by a subtle charm, due to that vague suggestion of feminine grace and delicacy which hangs over all the details of her toilet. Ivory-backed brushes, tortoise-shell combs, lace curtains looped back from oval mirror—all these may be lacking, and yet a room may strike one as a very bower. For instance, a woman of the kind we have in view would soften the ugliness of her plain wooden brushes by the neat cases she would make for them. At night, when undressed, she would conceal the plainness of her removed garments by the square of white muslin edged with lace she would throw over the chair on which they lay. The elegance of her combing-jackets and dressing-gowns would atone for the inexpensiveness of the materials; and the lack of ornaments on her toilet table would be remedied by the delightful freshness of the muslin with which she made up her pincushion. We will begin with the brush case. This is made out of a piece of mauve satin or glaze, twenty-one inches long and twenty-two broad, covered on one side with spotted muslin. This is then doubled in half, and the two sides are stitched up. The case itself, now lying finished before you, you proceed to trim the uppermost side or cover. A piece of narrow insertion must be placed all round close to the edge, and on both sides of the insertion some narrow white lace must be sewn. The lace on the outer side should project one-quarter inch beyond the sides of the case. The two and one-half yards of pale mauve ribbon should be made up into six small bows, one of these bows being placed at each corner, and two in the center. The center two must be sewn on to the corner of the case, at a distance respectively of about three inches from the top and bottom, and the stitches fastening them down must be taken right through to the under case. By taking the stitches right through a couple of divisions are made into which to slip the brushes. A brush case of this kind can, of course, be made up in all colors to suit carpets and wall papers. The toilet tidy, which generally hangs on the right hand of the dressing table, should match the brush case. A piece of very stiff paper eight inches long and six and a half inches wide should be covered with mauve glaze and spotted muslin. Then it should be rolled up into an ordinary sugar-loaf bag, and made to retain its shape by a couple or so of stitches. From the conical point at the bottom two or three short ends of narrow ribbon should hang, while the mouth of the bag and the projecting point at the top should be bound round with ribbon and finished with a small bow. A second bag, made of note or newspaper, should be placed inside to receive the hair, and should be renewed every fortnight. The night-gown case is a very simple affair. Remembering to have it accord with the rest of your toilet appurtenances, you make this also of mauve glaze and muslin. You require a piece of glaze thirty-two inches long and eighteen inches wide. When you have covered your glaze with muslin you turn a length of twelve inches and stitch up the sides. You border these with lace and insertion, in the same way as you have trimmed the brush case, but the projecting flap you cut into a point and merely bind round with ribbon. The square of muslin to throw over your clothes at night is less often seen than the other things we have been describing. Yet nothing is more desirable in a bedroom than this. It consists of three yards of the muslin of which servants' aprons are made, trimmed round with torchon lace. When you are traveling it comes in nicely as a wrapper to put over the tray of your box. The combing jacket should always be of some washing material. A three-quarters length loose-fitting jacket, with long open sleeves, is the best kind to have. White muslins and percales in summer, and white flannel and serges in winter are the most suitable materials, but ordinary prints, if the pattern be pretty, will answer every purpose of home wear. If meant for invalid wear they should be made as coquettishly as possible—of pale blue cashmere, with jabots of cream-colored lace falling down the front.

Table Covers.

Some suggestions for table covers are here given. Those requiring much work should be commenced at once if they are intended for the holidays, as nothing is gained and much is always lost by doing fancy work in a hurry. A handsome and durable cover is made of a large square drab Aida canvas, with a plush square in the center. The edge of the plush is scalloped and bound with silk or satin, or is button-holed, as one's taste may decree. The border is of the cloth, and is to be embroidered in many colors. The predominating color should harmonize with the plush used at the center. The pattern should be chosen with reference to the effect produced by looking at it from a distance, say from across the room. If economy is not considered, a narrow band of plush above this border and below it makes it particularly handsome. The edge should be finished with a tassel-like fringe. The crazy patchwork which is attracting so much attention, and which, like the little girl, is, when good, very good, and when bad is horrid, is used a great deal in the construction of table covers. A scarf made in this way is much admired; its center is of dark olive felt; across the ends bands of plush are put on diagonally, and then the corners above and below this are filled in with the crazy patchwork; the pieces are all small, and of elegant silk, satins and velvets joined with innumerable fancy stitches in various colored silks; the ends are completed by a fringe of tassels tied in with gilt crescents. Another and more simply elegant square spread is of felt with the corners alone embroidered, in crewels. A square felt cover was recently exhibited in a fancy store, with a border fifteen inches deep, of the crazy patchwork. This was also finished with fringe.

Children at Christmas.

"It cannot be," said a lady to me the other day, "that any child nowadays is neglected or forgotten at Christmas time; any child in a home where they are at all comfortable." This hopeful statement ought to be a true one, but unhappily it is not. Last year, after Christmas was past, there came to my knowledge certain facts which made me "greatly purpose," as Mr. Carlyle puts it, to see that they never occur in my neighborhood again. A boy, aged nine, not a good boy, and still only a little worse than many who fared sumptuously, was affected by the Christmas bustle in the air about him, and after leading an exemplary life for two days ventured to hang his stocking beside those of a younger brother and sister. Their stockings were found in the morning to contain enough of Christmas goodies to make happy the hearts of the young ones, while the bad boy of nine found, on looking in his own lank stocking, nothing but a branch from a currant bush to remind of the sins and punishments of his past. Another case not so disagreeable, it is true, but sufficiently so to me, was that of a little boy who found his stocking empty, with the exception of a dry and seedy fried-cake man. "What can you do about it?" said the good man of the house, when these and several other incidents of a similar nature were related to him. "It's rather a delicate matter to interfere with people's management of their children, however much you may disapprove of it." The good man evidently did not get the idea. In the first place, who was ever affronted by a gift at holiday time? What parent ever resents any little attention his children receive? It seems to me that in the country where one knows one's neighbor it wouldn't be a hard, or by any means unpleasant, task to see that each child in one's neighborhood is remembered by the gift of some trifle adapted to his or her condition. With a silver dollar and some ingenuity, a good many children could be made happy. There are children to whom an orange would be a gift of value, and it is worth while for us to make glad, so far as we are able, all with whom we are connected; on this day upon which, whatever our traditions—though we may be agnostics all the year around—we agree to be good Christians.

Pumpkin Pies.

The standard of taste by which most people judge of food is that furnished by their mother's table. "What is the matter with the pumpkins now-a-days?" said a gentleman the other day. "I never see, and certainly never eat, any more such golden, luscious pies as my mother used to make." After making due allowance for the change in the individual from boyhood to manhood, the fact remains that there is a decline in pumpkin pies. A searcher after the reasons for it declares one to be that too many spices are now used, entirely disguising the flavor of the pumpkin, which, if properly cooked and of good quality, is delicate and agreeable. Ginger seems to be the only legitimate seasoning for a pumpkin pie, but a faint suspicion of allspice or of cinnamon is allowable. Then, too, instead of sweetening with sugar alone, at least half of the sweetness of the pie should be due to molasses. For one medium-sized pie allow one full coffee cup of stewed pumpkin, "poured through the kitchen sieve" after the manner of Sydney Smith's salad. If rich in eggs, allow two or three; if not, make those eggs do duty for two pies, dividing after beating. If the milk used to thin the pumpkin is half cream, so much the better. A teaspoonful of ginger is a liberal allowance for one pie. Bake with an under crust only, and until the top of the pie is brown and a delicate skin has formed over it (for removing which many a child has passed under the rod).

Kitchen Keramics.

A plain plum pudding is made thus: Chop three ounces of suet very fine, add a quarter of a pound of currants, the same quantity of raisins, half a teaspoonful of salt, and a teaspoonful of baking powder, a pound of sifted flour, a pint of sweet milk, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, and spice to suit your taste. Mix thoroughly, and boil for three hours in a pudding bag. Another recipe for plum pudding is richer and much more expensive, but for certain occasions, say once a year, is preferable: One pound of currants, one pound of raisins, half a pound of citron, one pound of sugar, a pint bowl of grated bread crumbs, and a pint bowl of flour, two wine glasses of wine, one nutmeg grated, a teaspoonful each of cloves and of allspice, one pound of butter, and one dozen eggs. It will be seen at once that this will make a large pudding. Rub the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the other ingredients. Boil in a bag for four hours. Serve with cream and sugar or sauce.

A Christmas gift of a pretty table is one that would be appreciated by almost anybody, and a very pretty and elegant one may be made at no great expense. Have made at a carpenter shop a stand with a square top, and with four small, straight legs; cover the top and legs with royal blue velvet or velveteen; around the stand put a sort of valence or lambrequin, from eight to ten inches deep, and if skilled in needle work of the day, work at intervals of five or six inches, a rose or bud, with slight stems and few leaves, in the lovely ribbon embroidery which makes so handsome an adornment, and does not require so much time and material as many other kinds of embroidery. If you choose to have a low shelf on the table, that may be covered with the velvet but need not be decorated. A sofa pillow to match this table is very effective. A square of the royal blue velvet, with a bunch of roses and buds carelessly laid on, is all that is required, and the cushion is handsome if lined with satin, and needs no cord or other finish at the edges.

A useful table scarf, and one that is particularly pleasing to the eye, because it does not suggest almost endless labor, is made by taking a strip of all-wool Java canvass of the proper length for the table upon which it is to be used. Line it with some stiff cloth, and then with silesia. At about three inches from the outer edge sew on two strips of black velvet ribbon, two inches wide. Through the center work a handsome scroll pattern, using bright yellow silk: the velvet stripes may be put on perfectly plain, or may be worked in old fashioned cross stitch, or in some modification of feather stitch. Finish the bottom of the scarf with yellow silk balls. This is suitable for the common sitting room; it is so bright, and the dust can be shaken from it with ease.

The mothers of nursing babies will find it to their advantage to provide themselves with two light flannel sacks, to be slipped on over the nightdress on cold nights. Colds are taken which are followed by more or less serious consequences, by the slight exposure which comes from attending to the needs of little children at night. It is a good plan also to have a pair of warm and loose slippers by the bedside. The slippers which are crocheted of soft Berlin wools, and which have soles of leather thickly wadded with lambs' wool, are especially adapted for this use.

A handkerchief case, which is suitable for a holiday gift, is made of pale blue or pink satin; it is marked in diamonds, and the lines covered with pearl beads. The case unfolds, and so the beads are put on both the outside and inside. The work of putting them on is simplified by having the diamonds on each side correspond; then the beads for each side can be put on at once.

A dainty way to prepare an egg for an invalid is to first beat it until very light, then season it with a little pepper, salt and a tiny lump of butter; then pour it over a slice of dry buttered toast, and set the plate containing it in the steamer; cover closely and let it steam for two or three minutes. An egg prepared thus will not be likely to distress the weakest stomach.

The queen of all pudding sauces calls for two cups of white sugar, a lump of butter the size of an egg, one well beaten egg. Stir these together, then add a teacupful of boiling water, put it in a saucepan until it thickens; do not let it boil; flavor with lemon or vanilla.

Poultry which is to be kept in cold weather should be thoroughly cleansed, then be wiped dry with a cloth and have flour rubbed all over the inner part; then it should be hung in a cool, dry place.

Gossip About the Home.

Globes for gas chandeliers are remarkably handsome this season. They are not only elaborately engraved in novel designs, but are of entirely new shape, large, and open at the top, often with turned rims which are handsomely cut, or they are tinted and painted in colored designs. Chandeliers with six or eight burners have a lower lamp attached to them, the shade of which is usually of tinted or decorated glass.

It is fashionable now to have scarfs or lambrequins for the low shelf which accompanies the long mirror extending from the ceiling almost to the floor in modern reception rooms. Usually this mirror occupies the center of the room, where an open grate would ordinarily be placed, while the mirror which was formerly universally found between the windows is replaced by a long and valuable painting, or, in some cases, by shelves for bric-a-brac.

Holbein work is the most suitable for the decoration of the scarfs which are fashionable for the top of cottage pianos. The design should be worked only in the ends and finished off with a knotted linen fringe.

Portieres are now made in terra cotta turcoman cloth, with a deep dado of stamped velvet or plush, and finished off with a thick, short ball fringe. For looping back bands of the stamped material are preferred.

A new wood, known as red wood, is becoming popular for interior decorations; it is not unlike mahogany in color, takes a high polish, and is very much less expensive than that wood.

GOOD-BOY-LAND.

Did you ever hear of Good-Boy-Land,
The wonderful country of Good-Boy-Land?
Where houses of taffy, on every hand,
And mountains of plum cake and gingerbread stand;
Where the streets are all paved with doughnuts brown,
And a wall of sweet almonds surround each town;
Where a lemonade sea meets a white sugar strand—
Oh, believe me! 'tis jolly in Good-Boy-Land.

arbles, both agates and snappers, are there,
Common as dust in the streets and the square;
Peg-tops in place of green leaves, on the trees
Whiz in the sunshine and hum in the breeze;
Bicycles roll in a very queer way
Over the meadows and hide in the hay,
While as for velocipedes, running so quick,
You'd hit half a dozen in throwing a stick—
Never before was a country so grand
As the wonderful Kingdom of Good-Boy-Land.

Wait till I tell you the very strange rules
Followed in all their flourishing schools!
Out in their gardens their class rooms are set
(They never have rain, so they cannot get wet),
And there upon bushes the lessons all grow;
Plums of arithmetic hang in a row,
Apples of history, grapes of fine writing,
Drooping in clusters so sweet and inviting,
Luscious ripe pears tumbling into their laps
Full of geography questions and maps,
Nuts full of spelling, and oranges sweet
With algebra problems all ready to eat;
Believe me or not, this is certainly so,
And the more that you swallow the more you will know.

Then in the winter 'tis like to a dream,
With frozen pudding and fine ice cream,
But no more cold than a summer day,
And the garden of lessons in bloom alway!
Merry sweet girls and bonny brown boys
Devouring their studies and picking their toys,
Filling their lives in the jolliest way,
With dates and statistics, with sums and croquet,
For a dunce was a thing that they never could stand
In that wonderful country of Good-Boy-Land!

Never a quarrel, and never a scold,
Never a cough there, and never a cold,
Nobody dirty, and nobody bold,
No one too hot there and no one too cold;
Nobody ever comes walking down-stair,
But slides on the banister, feet in the air;
Every one knows how to swim and to row,
Every one owns both a gun and a bow,
A base-ball, a foot-ball, a jack-knife, a watch,
A great pocket full of the best butter-scotch,
And this is the pleasantest part of the frolic—
You can eat it all day without getting the colic!
Oh, where is the government ever was planned
With such law and such order as Good-Boy-Land?

Dolls are there, thicker than crows in the corn,
Beautiful French ones as ever were born;
Story books, splendid in colors and gold,
Full of such stories as never were told;
There's nothing to tear there and nothing to mend,
And every one's every one else's best friend:
Late you get up there and late you lie down,
And always you wear a Kate Greenaway gown;
The wee-est wee girl both dances and sings
(You see it's like heaven, but no one has wings),
And four-button gloves hang in pairs on each hand
In that wonderful country of Good-Boy-Land!

Where is the country, and how do you go?
Well, that's just the thing I am dying to know!
Somewhere, I judge, in the moon or the stars—
Perhaps it is Venus, perhaps it is Mars;
And you travel—who knows?—by the boat or the train,
Which leads one direct to the Castles in Spain,
Or some roundabout way that's not easy to learn,
In the kind of balloon that is made by Jules Verne,
Or a telegraph wire, or the wing of a bird—
But I'll find the way first, and then send you back word.

LORE FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

The Boy Who Was Dissatisfied.

Oscar was a boy who generally disliked to get up in the morning, the more so as he had to rise early and split wood for his mother's fires. There was a little, old, withered fairy, who had taken a fancy to Oscar when he was a baby, who used to come and wake him at daybreak.

"Get up, Oscar," she would say, "and see the sun rise."

"I don't like to see the sun rise," he would answer.

"Get up, Oscar, and see the dew on the grass and flowers."

"I am not fond of looking at the dew."

"Get up, Oscar, and be bright and spry, or you will never make your fortune."

"I don't want to make my fortune," Oscar would sleepily answer.

But the fairy would tease and worry him until she got him up, and then he would slowly put on his clothes, half wash his face, partly comb his hair, slouch down stairs, and lazily begin to split his wood.

One morning, while he was slowly splitting wood, an idea came into his head. As he was too lazy to get rid of it, he let it speak for itself.

"I wish," the idea made him say, "that I could go by steam."

In an instant the little old fairy was at his side. She was always on hand whenever he made a wish.

"Do you really want to go by steam?" she asked.

"Yes," replied Oscar. "I think it would be easier than pottering away as I do, tiring my hands and arms."

"You shall have your wish," said the fairy. Directly Oscar felt and heard a rumbling and a rattling inside of him, and puffs of steam came out of his nose, and his left hand regularly placed pieces of wood upon the chopping block, while his right hand as regularly brought the hatchet down upon them and split them.

So he worked very fast, and the work did not tire his arms and hands in the least, and he hoped that he would soon get such a pile of kindling on hand as should save him for a long time from getting up early and splitting wood.

But he soon learned that even going by steam was tiresome. He wanted to get up and play, and when noontime came he wanted to go home and get his dinner. A wish brought the old fairy to his side.

"If you want your dinner," she said, "you must be fed with coal and water, like any other engine; and you cannot get up and play, because you are what is called a stationary engine, which must work right on until somebody stops it, and cannot move unless it is taken away."

Then Oscar wished to be a locomotive engine, so that he could run a long distance and see a great deal of the world.

In an instant he found himself on the rails, drawing a train of cars, running at the rate of forty miles an hour, and looking down on the cowcatcher.

But it was not long before he learned that there was no fun in being a locomotive engine, as he could never get off the rails and could never stop when he saw anything that pleased or interested him, and at the end of every journey he was shut up with the other engines in a dark house, from which none of them could stir.

Then he wished to be a bird.

"The birds," he said, "have an easy and pleasant time, with nothing to do but to fly about as they plese, and to eat when they feel hungry."

So the fairy changed him into a large and handsome bird.

But he soon learned that it was quite as much work for a bird to use its wings as for a boy to use his hands and feet. He also learned that the birds are put to no little trouble to find the food that is proper for them, and that they have many enemies, of which men are not the least.

When he had been nearly frightened out of his wits by a man who hunted him with a gun, Oscar became disgusted with the life of a bird, and wished to be a squirrel, as he had noticed the free and easy life of the squirrels, and thong that they must have a good time, if anybody had.

After telling him that had better wish to be changed to a goose, the old fairy snapped her fingers, and in a twinkle Oscar was running up a tree, with a bushy tail curling over his furry coat.

Sad to say, he found the life of a squirrel to be even worse than that of a bird, as the squirrels had even more enemies than the birds, and even more trouble in getting their food, and laying it away for the winter.

He also found it to be a fact that it tires squirrels to run and jump quite as much as it tires boys to walk or to work.

Another wish brought the old fairy to the limb of the tree, on which he sat gnawing the shell of a very hard nut.

"What do you want now?" she asked.

"I want to be a boy again," replied Oscar, "and to have nothing at all to do."

In a moment he found himself dressed in his own clothes and seated in an easy chair, with a rest for his feet, and with a bowl of porridge on a table by his side.

There was a high fence around him, so close that he could not move more than his length in any direction.

On the other side of the fence were a splendid orchard and a beautiful garden, filled with apples, pears, plums, cherries, strawberries, raspberries, and all sorts of luscious and tempting fruits and vegetables. He could see them whenever he opened his eyes and could smell them without taking the trouble to open his eyes; but the wire fence was in the way, so that he could not taste or touch them.

He stood this for a while, trying to believe that it was a very nice thing to have nothing to do: but at last he became so tired of his porridge, and the desire to get some of the fruit in the orchard and garden grew so strong that he wished a big wish.

In an instant the old fairy was at his elbow.

"You cannot get at the fruit," she said, "because there is a fence in the way, just as there is always some sort of a fence in the way when we want to get anything nice in this world."

"But I can climb the fence," said Oscar.

"That would be work," replied the fairy. "It would be doing something, and you were placed here because you wanted to have nothing at all to do."

The fairy left him, and Oscar thought he would climb the fence, fill his pockets with fruit, and then get back to his easy chair and enjoy his dainties.

He found the fence a hard one to climb, but he got to the top at last, and was going down on the other side when something happened.

The fence then melted away, the orchard and garden vanished, and he found himself at the woodpile in the back yard and was content to stay there.—[Golden Days.

THE INNER LIFE.

We know there is a life within the life
Of each, who, toiling, treads the checkered way;
Ever a fiercer strife behind the strife
That each is seen to wage from day to day.

We find ourselves contending with a world
In which ambition rules, and pride holds sway;
We drink, and soon, like others, are possessed
With zeal to grasp the baubles as we may.

So we are judged to be alike as base
As he who sells for pottage all he hath—
Who yields not only joy, and love, and truth,
But yields for this his soul's immortal worth.

Be thou serene before this heartless judge,
Brave heart that hath with unseen valor fought;
Strive not to hold against the world a grudge,
And sell the sunshine of thy life for naught.

The world can never know thee as thou art,
Much less with truth can judge thee as it ought;
But if thou hast with courage done thy part,
For thee there's nothing further to be sought.

'Tis well for us to toil, and strive to win
All that our comfort and our health require,
But let the angel still within us reign,
That we may aid the world to something higher.

Then let the inner life be full and free—
Let mind rule with the scepter of its might;
Let heart and soul with aspiration burn
Toward all that's great in nature, grand in thought.

Then be the world in judgment true or false,
The heart secure in consciousness of worth
Can find within its battlements of truth
The greatest pleasure possible to earth.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Religious Sensation at Denver.

Denver, Col., has a mild religious sensation. The Rev. Martyn Hart, dean of the Protestant Episcopal church of that city, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, invited the Rev. Dr. Jeffrey, a prominent Baptist clergyman of Denver, to preach the Thanksgiving sermon in the cathedral. The invitation was accepted by Dr. Jeffrey in the Christian spirit in which it was given and elaborate preparations were made for a great and popular service. The Episcopal church has always been understood to deny the right of non-Episcopally ordained clergymen to officiate in her pulpits, and the announcement that one such was to preach in the Cathedral church of the diocese with the express consent of the ecclesiastical authority, drew together a very large congregation. The people were doomed to disappointment, however. Just before the service, Dean Hart received a formal notice from two Episcopal clergymen of the diocese, that in case Dr. Jeffrey was allowed to preach he (Dean Hart) would be proceeded against in an ecclesiastical court for violating a canon which reads as follows: "No minister, in charge of any congregation of this church (the Episcopal), or, in case of vacancy or absence, no churchwardens, vestrymen or trustees of the congregation, shall permit any person to officiate therein without sufficient evidence of his being duly licensed or ordained to minister in this church." Although Dean Hart believed that the phraseology of this canon was not open to the meaning which these clergymen assumed to put upon it, and that he was certainly not violating its spirit in his contemplated action, he nevertheless, for the sake of peace, thought it better not to lay himself open to a prosecution. And with the full consent of Dr. Jeffrey he announced to the congregation that the latter would not preach, giving the reason therefor. The affair has excited wide comment throughout the State of Colorado, and prominent members of the Episcopal church openly express their regret that such a canon should be allowed to stand in the way of Christian comity. There are, we believe, several instances of clergymen not Episcopally ordained officiating in Episcopal churches in the Eastern States.

Sabbath Laws.

The Interior thus expresses its opinion on the somewhat fanatical and bigoted views of the Methodist ministers' meeting on the Sunday question:

The Methodist ministers' meeting has given the daily papers possession of the handle-end of the whip. Dr. Hatfield said that, by the grace of God, he had been enabled to expel one of his members for delivering milk to his neighbors or customers, or whatever they were, on Sunday. The daily editor would like to know about the fate of the babies thus deprived of their Sunday supply of nutriment. Bishop Merrill classed the publishers of Sunday papers with thieves. The publication of a Sunday paper was a crime. Mr. Fawcett said that, in obedience to a law which forbids the tugboats from taking passengers on Sunday, some persons had been left by a Chicago tug to drown in the lake—thus showing how ready those who violate the law of God were to obey the laws of men. No such incident ever occurred, however. Such an illustration would be very impressive in a colored camp meeting, but was hardly appropriate in a meeting of intelligent ministers. If the efforts to secure the observation of the Sabbath are not to be brought into derision there must be a little clearer idea obtained of what is demanded by the friends of the Sabbath. For Christians the work allowable on the Sabbath is work of necessity and mercy. The milkman must be allowed to deliver his milk. The coachman must be allowed to care for his team and drive the family to church. The cook must be allowed to prepare fresh meals. The mechanic in the city must be allowed to take his wife and babies out into the park for an airing. Christian people must decide, each for himself, what is necessary for the health and comfort of his family—what work it is that, in his individual case, comes fairly under the class of works of necessity and mercy.

Miracles by Prayer.

The subject of faith-cures appears now to be occupying a great deal of public attention. That certain forms of nervous disease have been alleviated, at least for a time, through faith, need not be disputed. All respectable physicians acknowledge the influence which the will has over the physical condition of man. And that a strong belief in the efficacy of prayer and anointing with oil should react upon the physical condition, is simply a physiological fact. Whether or not it is a spiritual fact is hardly within the province of a secular journal to decide. But this at least may be said: No cure has been effected which may not be explained without bringing in a miraculous agency. When the advocates of faith cures have produced a well-authenticated case of a man with a compound fracture of the leg, or a broken neck, having been at once cured through the prayer of faith, there will be something tangible to discuss; not before. This matter has come up in another way this week. A Prof. Brooks of this State has requested that prayers be offered up in all Christian churches to-day for fair weather on the 6th of December, when the transit of Venus will occur. This represents the extreme belief in a special providence, interfering with the settled laws of nature at the request of men. The other extreme is to regard the universe as a Procrustean cage of fate, whose laws never change or vary. The former is the position of the unscientific Christian; the latter is the position of the unchristian scientist. How the larger truth behind these two irreconcilable propositions shall be reconciled, if at all, is a problem that is exercising the ingenuity of all truth-loving Christians and all reverent men of science. In the meanwhile, though faith in the unseen may not cure physical maladies, it sheds a light on the darker passages of human destiny that is a priceless blessing to many a weary son of earth. And though prayer may not change even the slightest of the laws of nature, it changes for good the heart that reverently utters it, and lifts it above the poor commonplace of mere animal existence.

Universalism.

The Rev. R. H. Pullman, a Universalist minister of Baltimore, recently preached a sermon in defense of Universalism in which he said: "The church has now and then had ministers who seemed not clearly to comprehend the Christian foundation of Universalism; so that not a little has been preached in this city that was not Universalism, and had no authority or sanction from the Christian standards of the church. So God preserved through all the years faithful witnesses, and precious names are enrolled of Christian men and women. What has been accomplished? There has gone out from this church, as a center, a steady influence that has softened the tone of all pulpit ministrations, and warmed the hearts of great masses of believers in all the churches with the hope of universal salvation. The richest fruits of our labors are not seen in the simple fact that this church, as a single organization, is large and vigorous, and instant in season and out of season in its Christian work. I congratulate you, brethren, upon the harvests that have been gathered through the fifty years of Christian toil, and the harvests that are now already ripening for the gathering. I congratulate you on the softening of opposition against us, and our growing reputation as a Christian church among all classes who once so strongly opposed us."

An Adventist Vision.

Dispatches this week announce that there is much excitement at Battle Creek, Mich., the headquarters of the Seventh Day Adventists faith, over the promulgation of a so-called vision by Mrs. Ellen G. White, widow of the late Elder James White, who for many years shared with him the leadership of the extensive sect. After her husband's death her power as a leader began to visibly decline, and other younger counsels began to prevail. Her visions have hitherto been accepted as almost as authoritative as gospel revelations, but this time a serious dissension is likely to result. In her last vision she charges with worldliness Elder N. Smith, editor of the Review and Herald, and William C. Gage, business manager of the paper, who is also mayor of the city and proprietor of one of the heaviest denominational publishing houses in the world. Both men are excellent citizens, and it is probable that they may resign at the next meeting. The faith has hundreds of thousands of followers all over the United States and Europe, all of whom are practically governed by the Battle Creek leaders. Mrs. White, or the prophetess, as she is sometimes called, is apparently seeking by means of this vision to regain her ascendancy in the councils of the sect.

Long Pastorates.

The Waterbury American has the following to say on a too frequent change of pastoral relations: "Short pastorates destroy all the sacredness which used to characterize that relation. How much nobler the spectacle of such a relation as that of Dr. Bacon to Center Church, New Haven, where after fifty years of service he still continued pastor, though no longer carrying its burdens alone. In the case of one family, very likely in that of others, he buried their dead from the venerable grandmother down to one of the youngest grandchildren, and officiated at the christenings and marriages of two generations, and when he died, his death meant something more to the survivors than the decease of a favorite preacher or admired theologian. By a man who has occupied such a relation for a working lifetime it can with truth be said: 'The church—it is I.' He has largely made it what it is."

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

There's no last time in heaven; the angels pour
A still new song, though chanted evermore;
There's no night following on their daylight hours,
No fading time for amaranthine flowers;
No change, no death, no harp that lies unstrung,
No vacant place these hallowed bids among.

The Rev. Joseph Cook was requested by the free thinkers of Melbourne to meet Mr. Thomas Walter in open discussion. Mr. Cook declines such work for the following reasons; "First, Freethought, spiritualism and infidelity in general, in America, England and India, and, as far as I know, in Australia, are notoriously connected with schemes for the propagation of immorality. Several of the prominent agitators in support of infidelity and freethought have been sent to jail for distributing infamous publications through the mails. No decent man can consent to appear on the same platform with the representatives of enterprises that have a debasing effect on the public mind. Secondly, I am not open to challenge of which the evident object is to advertise infidelity. Thirdly, not an unoccupied nor an unengaged hour is left open to me in Australia. Fourthly, when when infidels of any kind issue a book that goes through ten editions in ten years, at a dollar a copy, I will reply to it. I have a right to issue this challenge, for several volumes of the Boston Monday Lectures have gone through ten editions in five years. Fifthly, infidels can put their written inquiries, if they choose, into the box at my free question-box lectures."

The Advance: No wonder our Unitarian friends are aroused over the recent deliverances of their venerable and authoritative Dr. Ellis of Boston. He declared solemnly that the Bible was an orthodox book, and that if its statements were to be received as authority the orthodox Christian was right and the Unitarian and Universalists all wrong. That was a firebrand in dry cotton, and The Christian Register and Christian Leader of Boston are compelled to leave the Congregational discussion alone long enough to enter an earnest protest. Dr. James Freeman Clarke preached a sermon against Dr. Ellis's views, and the current press of the denomination has taken it up. Leading Unitarian clergymen, including such men as James Freeman Clarke, Edward Everett Hale, C. A. Bartol, and A. P. Peabody, have come out in a card and repudiated the views of Dr. Ellis. But the good doctor returns to his charge that Unitarians cannot consistently hold to the Bible as authority and preach Unitarianism.

It is Cardinal Manning who relates this incident as having happened to himself: One night I was returning to my residence in Westminster when I met a poor man carrying a basket and smoking a pipe. I thought over this Aristotelian syllogism: He who smokes gets thirsty; he who is thirsty desires to drink; he who drinks too much gets drunk; he who gets drunk goes to hell. This man is in danger of mortal sin. Let us save him. I affectionately addressed him:

"Are you a Catholic?"

"I am, thanks be to God."

"Where are you from?"

"From Cork, your reverence."

"Are you a member of the Total Abstinence society?"

"No your reverence."

"Now," said I, "that is very wrong. Look at me; I am a member."

"Faith, may be your reverence has need of it?"

I shook hands with him and left him.

A week of prayer at the opening of each new year has now become universal, and the Evangelical Alliance, by its representatives throughout the world, has issued an invitation and programme for the week of prayer, commencing Jan. 7, 1883. The suggested topics for the several days cover a wide range of subjects, including thanksgiving, confession, prayer for the church universal, for families, for the nation, and for missions. Special reference is also made to education, to intemperance and to the opium traffic.

The young people of the South Congregational church at Springfield, Mass., turn the church parlors into a free reading room each Sunday from 5 to 7:30 p. m. Now if to this very good step in the right direction they will add another, and open the parlors two or three evenings in the week, the result will be the saving from temptation of many young men who are strangers and have free entrance only into the liquor saloons, where they are always made welcome.

The parishioners of a clergyman in Scotland, in expressing to him their aversion to the use of manuscript sermons, said: "What gars ye take up your bit papers to the pulpit?" He replied that it was best, for really he could not remember a sermon and must have his paper. "Weel, weel, minister, they retaliated, "if ye canna remember the sermon, then dinna expect that we can."

The Methodist conference of Canada recently in session, decided that the educational standard of its ministers should be raised considerably. It was resolved that hereafter all candidates for reception on trial should be required to present a certificate of matriculation in some accredited university, or what should be regarded by the board of examiners as fai[r] as equivalent.

The fifth annual report of the Women's Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, gives the number of auxiliaries as 959, with 21,061 members; and 191 juvenile societies, with 5,344 juvenile members. The total membership, including life members, etc., is 26,763. The total amount raised the past year was $26,739.29.

"Mary Jane," said Dickey, "why would Lot have been a better captain for the ark than Noah?" "Why?" said Mary Jane. "Because," said Dickey, "Mrs. Lot was an old salt." "Dickey," said Mary Jane, "you are a very fresh young woman."

The Universalist State convention of Connecticut held its session at Stafford a few days since. The executive committee reported that $39,000 had been expended during the past year in improving churches and paying church debts. It authorized also the raising of $700 for the support of a State missionary.

As England and Germany seem to be unable to agree upon the appointment of a Protestant bishop of Jerusalem, it is expected that the See will be abolished.

HER PARLOR.

The way into her parlor is "up a winding stair";
Gay Japanese umbrellas are fastened here and there,
And fans and peacock feathers hang with a careless air.

The door is low and curtained. I enter—overhead
Glistens a gilded cobweb: with reverence I tread
Upon a Turkish prayer-rug in blue, old gold and red.

A stand is set with dishes, fashioned in years ago;
Blue platters on the mantel, and by the fire's glow
A screen, whose crimson poppies are nodding in a row.

My lady greets me smiling; the violets I bring
Fill all the little parlor with happy thoughts of spring;
Shadows dance on the ceiling—I hope no one will ring.

A JEWEL OF A BOY.

Jack Williamson, acting sub-manager and inspector of branches for the Anglo-Chinese Banking corporation, was sitting one morning in his room at the London head office, sifting the huge pile of letters which the homeward mail had brought. To him enter the chief manager, MacDavid, with a blank look on his face, and a telegram in his hand, who said: "Seen this, Williamson?—pretty go—read it." And then the sub-manager read: "Hankow, May 20. Agency robbed, probably by Chinamen. Eighty thousand dollars, notes chiefly. Comprador murdered. Send inspector at once."

"By Jove! it's a go," said Jack with a long whistle; "just in the middle of the tea season. What's to be done?" "Why you'll have to go out. Why can't you start. To-day's Monday. Cathay leaves Gravesend on Friday. Can you do it? Now, Jack Williamson, the last ten years of whose life had been spent in travelling all over Asia inspecting the various branches and agencies of the bank, needed but little preparation, so accustomed was he to be called upon to start for a distant point at all sorts of odd times, so he merely said, 'All right, I'll go,' and resumed his letters.

So on Friday next Jack walked on board the P. & O. steamer Cathay at Gravesend, with a big cigar in his mouth, as cooly and as unconcernedly as if he were going to Margate or Hastings, instead of 900 miles into the heart of China.

Favored by wind and weather the good ship made an excellent run, touching as usual at Port Said, Suez, Aden, Point de Galle and Singapore. At the last named place he went ashore to the branch, of which the manager was an old chum of his. "Hullo, Jack. Come about the Hankow business, I suppose? It's a rum job, isn't it? What the police call a 'regular put-up job.' Can't find a trace either of the murderers or the stuff, which was half notes and half Sycee. Haven't even a suspicion, so I expect you've got your work cut out for you. Then the police out there are such fools, and I don't think our people could have been much better. Anyhow, I wish you good luck; you've shown yourself more than once as good as a detective; I suppose you've brought on with you?" "Not I; what's the good of a London detective in China? Besides, I like to go to work about these things in my own way, without being bothered by anybody else's ideas and notions. Too many cooks spoil the broth, and in a case like this one head's better than two. But look here. I want a boy; none of your rascals that rob you and cheek you, and get out of the way when they're wanted, but a good, honest, sober, industrious fellow, who doesn't whimper at being taken a hundred miles from home, and who doesn't mind being sworn at now and then." Jack, as an old China hand, knew that Singapore boys were the best as a rule; "I don't mind what I pay him, so long as he's a good one."

The manager called in the comprador—that is, the head of the native department of the bank; a man necessarily of some standing and of good education. Now, Singapore compradors pride themselves on being very different from their brethren in China, inasmuch as they are more Europeanized, and, having attended Eurasian schools, have learnt to speak, not the childish-sounding "pidgin" of Hong Kong and Shanghai, but the English of Johnson and Macauley—very much more Johnsonian and Macaulayan, in fact, than that spoken by average Englishmen.

"Comprador," said the manager, "Mr. Williamson wants a good boy to go to Hankow with him. Do you know anyone who you think would suit him?" "I will retire, sir," replied the great functionary, "and maturely consider your question." In an hour or so he returned. "I dare to imagine, sir, that I have succeeded in discovering the type of individual you require. His appellation is Ah Moon; he enjoys a very good character; is, in fact, a man of some position, who is willing to act in the capacity of boy for a nominal compensation. He does not speak, perhaps, so well as you could wish, but then he has not had the advantage of a Singapore education; but that is his misfortune, sir, and scarcely his fault." "Show him in, comprador," said Jack; and Mr. Ah Moon was introduced. He was a slim, oily-looking man of thirty or thereabouts, with a serene, Buddha-like expression of face, which was marred only by the mark of a fearful wound which ascended the right cheek, and gave him rather a sinister appearance when he laughed. He was spotlessly clean, and looked altogether a very promising retainer. "You are willing to go as far as Hankow and back?" asked Jack. "Yes, sir," replied Ah Moon in a respectful tone. "What wages do you want?" "Twelve dollars a month can do, sir," said the boy. "Moderate enough, anyhow," whispered Jack; "if it wasn't for that villainous scar, he might pass for a mandarin;" and aloud he added, "Very well; that piecey English steamer sail at midnight. Can be ready?" "Can secure, sir," replied Ah Moon, and, with an obeisance, retired.

When Jack Williamson returned on board that night, he found his pyjamahs neatly laid out in his berth; clean white clothes ready for the day, his slippers—everything, in fact, that he should want. "That's a good beginning, anyhow," he thought; "if he only goes on in this style, he'll do; but the worst of these beggars is that, as a rule, they don't go on." Ah Moon's residence was somewhere forward; but, by some method of his own, he learnt always to be in the way when wanted. He was terribly sea-sick on the voyage to Hong Kong; but he was none the less serviceable, and performed his duties manfully, with a face as nearly white as a yellow face could be, and the tears of suppressed agony streaming down his cheeks. Jack told him to go and lie down; but he would not. At Hong Kong he went ashore with Jack, and waited at the table in such a manner as to excite the envy of the local manager, who offered there and then to take him off Jack's hands at increased wages, and give his own boy in exchange; but Jack, when he had found a jewel, knew how to take care of it, and seriously thought of bringing him back to England with him to act in the place of a certain Mary Jane, whose chief predilections were for breaking everything that came into her hands, and for forgetting all that was said to her; in fact, he began to conceive quite an affection for Ah Moon, and declared that his only shortcoming was his delusion with regard to a certain white man who haunted him.

From Hong Kong Jack and his jewel proceeded to Shanghai, and from Shanghai by one of the luxurious American river steamers up the mighty Yang-tse to Hankow.

The murder and the robbery were still the talk of the little place, and the wildest speculations were rife as to whither the authors with their booty had escaped—speculations none the less wild on account of the great facilities afforded for concealment in such a terra incognita. From what Jack gathered from the agent, half the amount stolen had been in the bank's own notes, and half in Sycee silver. Now sovereigns, or even dollars, are comparatively handy coins to cart away in quantities—the latter, of course, less so than the former; but the fact that some forty thousand dollars' value of the unwieldy silver "shoes," called Sycee, had been abstracted and successfully hidden away, seemed to prove that several men must have been engaged in the enterprise. The watchman who had been on duty during the night in question, and who had been lying in that most unenviable of domiciles, a Chinese jail, ever since, knew nothing. He was on duty from 8 o'clock in the evening until 6 o'clock the next morning, it being his business to perambulate the entire "compound" every half hour, clattering together two pieces of flat wood as a token of his watchfulness. He would not swear that he had not taken a snooze once, but his check clock, which he was obliged to move at every round, showed that at any rate he had not missed a half hour. When asked as to what he had been doing previous to going on duty, he said that he had slept as usual during the day, after which he had taken his "chow" of rice, fish and a small measure of wine, not at his own house, but at a public restaurant. Did he feel sleepy at all during the night? Not that he remembered. The comprador lived in rooms over the treasury by himself, and the bank building was the last house in the foreign concession, next to the native town, and about fifty yards from the river; so that it was evident that if the plunder had not been taken to a junk waiting in the river, it had been carried away into the native town, amidst the mazes of which it would be soon concealed. The next question was, how the robbers could have obtained the treasury keys; for the agent, after business hours, checked the contents of the treasury himself, locked it up and carried the keys away to his own bungalow on the bund. This bungalow was not far from the bank building, and the agent lived there alone, his boy and his boy's wife, who acted as house coolie and cook, living in the servants' quarters behind. Suspicion naturally fell upon the woman, as being the person most intimately acquainted with the ins and outs of the house, but she satisfactorily proved that she had been ill in bed during the whole of the day preceding the night of the murder and robbery, while her husband, the agent's boy, who had been in his service for twelve years, had been so affected by the occurrence, and had exerted himself so incessantly in endeavoring to discover some clew, that suspicion had never fallen upon him for a moment.

Jack was leaning over the veranda, smoking a cigar, late one night, previous to turning into bed, and wondering how he was going to work about the mystery, for he was unwilling, not only for the bank's sake, but for his reputation as a zealous and sagacious officer, to return home without having effected something, when his ear caught the sound of voices engaged in a low but vigorous conflict, either on the premises or in the immediate neighborhood. In this climate of pure, clear air, and almost unbroken silence, the voice, although it be but a whisper, rings out with astonishing clearness. Jack would have been none the wiser had he been able to hear every word, for the speakers were Chinese, but he strained his ears if possible to recognize the voices. A movement on his part would have betrayed his presence, so he stood still and listened. Presently the voices ceased, and in a few seconds he saw the shadowy form of a woman glide swiftly out of the compound. Jack clapped his hands for Ah Moon. Ah Moon appeared in a few minutes with a scared face. "Ah Moon," said Jack sternly, "was it you that have talked to that woman just now gone out?" Ah Moon's face broke out into one broad smile of delight. "Ah! you have seen it, sir! I hab talkey you about that white man, and you hab always laugh. Now you hab seen him, and you makey laugh no more." "No," said Jack, "this no belong white man; this belong dark woman." Ah Moon's face fell, as he replied. "Then that no belong all to same I hab see. Three times I hab see that white man on my veranda, and then he stand by my bed and wave his arms and go away." "Well, that's an extraordinary thing," said Jack; "I'll swear I heard two people talk, and then I saw a woman go out of the compound." The next morning he called up the cook and coolies. None of them had been talking to a woman. Jack was a free liver, as are most men who have spent much of their lives in the East, but he was by no means given to over-indulgence in the pleasures of the table, so that the mysterious visitor was no phantom of a wine disordered imagination. He instructed the police to watch the premises closely for several nights after this, but there was no reappearance of the vision, and Jack began to think that perhaps his mind had been excited by the worry and harass of the past week or two, and that he had been just as much a victim of delusion as was the much ridiculed Ah Moon.

Jack noticed that Ah Moon was much more depressed than he had been before, and said to him: "I think you're in love, Ah Moon. You may say what you like, but I believe that woman was talking to you, for I don't suppose you're the first Chinaman that's been fooled by a woman." "No, sir," replied Ah Moon, "it no belong woman. It belong that white piecey man. I hab seen him more often this side than beforetime. I see him always. Supposey I take a walk, that white man he walkee too. Supposey I wait at table, he wait that other side of room. How fashion I can be happy supposey I always see him?"

How this extraordinary fancy had got into the poor fellow's head Jack could not make out. He had heard that old crones in England were in the habit of seeing visions of departed relations, but here was an educated, intelligent man, a very gentleman in habits and deportment, giving way to a fancy at which most English children would laugh.

Jack remained in Hankow for nearly a month longer, and could get no nearer the bottom of the mystery than when he arrived; so he reluctantly resolved to return home. But before setting forth he determined to accept the invitation of a Shanghai friend to make an up-country expedition in a houseboat.

In the voyage from Shanghai to the hills there is so little to describe that it would be a mere waste of space to attempt to spin out something from nothing. The scenery during the greater part of the journey—at least as much of it as temporary depressions in the high mud banks on either side allow to be seen—is of that flat, green, monotonous character which renders life in Shanghai, to the man who prefers the beauties of nature to a constant round of amusement and dissipation, almost intolerable. The only objects that break this boundless uniformity are the graves, an occasional funeral monument, a few pagodas, here and there a filthy, squalid village, some heaps of ruins and the remains of a few exquisite bridges. Nature has done but little to render this part of the world attractive, and man, during the fearful Taiping rebellion, did his best to render it desolate, as the presence everywhere of ruined villages and monuments testifies. Joss man to the contrary, Jack noticed, much to his annoyance, that Ah Moon's fits of the blues returned. He saw his white man at all hours, and most frequently at the dead hours of the night, as the boat lay anchored in midstream, when his fearful cries would rouse the dogs for miles around, and start them barking so as to effectually banish all notions of sleep from the minds of those on board the boat. "I wish to goodness, Ah Moon," said Jack one morning, after a night of unusually protracted howlings, "you try and scare away your white friend. Go to joss house, scatter gold paper for an hour or two straight off; I'll pay for it; do anything you like, but do get rid of him. He's getting an infernal nuisance, and I haven't had a wink of sleep for two nights. I don't want to get rid of you, but one of the two must go, either you or the white man."

As time was of no particular object to them, the voyage was performed in a leisurely manner, and every evening they anchored in midstream, plunged overboard for a swim, had dinner served, and enjoyed not the least pleasant part of the day afterward, sitting on the house-top, smoking and talking of old times, while the crew had their "chow" in the after part of the vessel. They were thus employed one beautiful evening in early June, when they became aware of a sudden excitement among the coolies; the rudder was unshipped, the anchor dragged in with all imaginable haste, and the oars run out to pull the boat near to the bank, as the stream at this point was very narrow.

"What's the matter?" asked Jack of the "lowdah." The man pointed to a large red light which was rapidly approaching: "That belong government boat. Suppose we no get out of the way; he run us down." The boat was made fast to the bank, the red light drew nearer; they could hear the splash of the oars, and the monotonous croon of the rowers in cadence to their strokes. The strange craft, with its great staring eye on each side of the bow, eased as it approached the houseboat, and finally pulled up alongside.

"This belong Mr. S—'s boat," asked an official in full costume, who jumped on board. Jack's friend replied that it was. "I wantchee see your crew, if you please." A man with a lantern accompanied the speaker, and the stream of light had a weird effect on the row of yellow faces, amidst the dense blackness and stillness of all around. The official glanced at each one swiftly but narrowly, and said some words in Chinese to the lantern bearer. "That belong all?" he asked of S—. "There's only this gentleman's boy," replied S—. "I wantchee see all, if you please," said the official. Ah Moon was made to come forward; the light of the lantern showed that he was in a pitiful state of tremble and terror. The official made another remark to the man beside him, who went on board the government boat and returned with two soldiers, who brought a rope with them, with which they began to bind Ah Moon as securely as if he was being prepared for a seance a la Davenport Brothers. "What's the meaning of this," angrily asked Jack; "this is my boy, who came with me from Singapore." "Yes," replied the official; "but he belong all to same that Hankow murderer." Jack's astonishment could find no expression in words: he simply stood and stared, first at Ah Moon and then at the official. "Is this true, Ah Moon?" he asked at length. "Quite true, sir," replied his boy, "and I shall see the white man no more." Thought Jack, "I don't suppose you'll see any man much more," and, addressing the officer, he said, "Are you going to take him to Shanghai?" "No, to Wuchang that belong the district city." "Because I have come this side expressly to find out about this business, and I suppose I shall have to attend the trial." "Trial!" echoed the officer scornfully; "he no catchee muchee trial. In one week time he be crucified." Jack was shocked at the utter indifference with which the official spoke of the fate of the trembling wretch, and resolved that he would get to Hankow as soon as possible. "Well, sir," said Ah Moon, as he was being hurried in the government boat, "good-by, sir; you have been number one good master to number one bad man like me. You will catchee most allo that dollar near that pagoda by Chinkiang. Good-by, sir;" and that was the last Jack saw of Ah Moon. As rapidly as the coolies could row, the houseboat sped back to Shanghai; and by the first steamer leaving, Jack went to Hankow and hurried across the river to Wuchang.

Passing by a broad space in the center of the town, he saw a large crowd collected, and pushing his way through, he came upon the objects of their curiosity—the naked figure of Ah Moon and a woman, impaled upon thick spikes of bamboo, and showing horrible signs of a long and lingering death. Half sickened with the sight, he went to the house of the Taotai, or magistrate, and there he learned what particulars had been forced by torture from Ah Moon.

It appeared that the woman—the agent's cook's wife—had stolen the keys of the treasury during the night; that the watchman had been drugged before going on duty; that Ah Moon and four other men had commenced operations on the treasury; that the comprador, disturbed by an unusual noise, had armed himself with a sword, and come down to see the cause; that Ah Moon had received a blow on the face from the comprador, and had retaliated by cutting him down; that the robbers had safely got off by the river with their booty; and that Ah Moon had promised the woman a weekly payment as reward for her share in the proceedings and to secure her secrecy. The Taotai could not say where the booty was concealed; but Ah Moon had admitted that he had gone to Singapore until the pursuit should have relaxed; meanwhile the payments to the woman had ceased. Upon his return with Jack, Ah Moon had seen the woman, and she had sworn to inform the authorities unless he doubled her allowance; and this was no doubt the subject of the conversation which Jack had heard from the veranda. Then she found that Ah Moon had gone to Shanghai, and imagining that he was attempting to escape from his bargain, and fancying that she would get a free pardon for serving the cause of justice, she had laid the whole matter before the authorities, with the results familiar to us.

Most of the stolen treasure was found buried in the earth near the pagoda at Chinkiang, as Ah Moon had said; and Jack returned to England a wiser man, and perhaps a little sadder at the fate which, just as it was, had overtaken his jewel of a boy.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Bedrooms.

Nothing so marks the distinction between a woman of refined tastes and one of a coarser fiber and more slovenly nature as the appearance of their bedrooms. The room of a woman of innate refinement is pervaded by a subtle charm, due to that vague suggestion of feminine grace and delicacy which hangs over all the details of her toilet. Ivory-backed brushes, tortoise-shell combs, lace curtains looped back from oval mirror—all these may be lacking, and yet a room may strike one as a very bower. For instance, a woman of the kind we have in view would soften the ugliness of her plain wooden brushes by the neat cases she would make for them. At night, when undressed, she would conceal the plainness of her removed garments by the square of white muslin edged with lace she would throw over the chair on which they lay. The elegance of her combing-jackets and dressing-gowns would atone for the inexpensiveness of the materials; and the lack of ornaments on her toilet table would be remedied by the delightful freshness of the muslin with which she made up her pincushion. We will begin with the brush case. This is made out of a piece of mauve satin or glaze, twenty-one inches long and twenty-two broad, covered on one side with spotted muslin. This is then doubled in half, and the two sides are stitched up. The case itself, now lying finished before you, you proceed to trim the uppermost side or cover. A piece of narrow insertion must be placed all round close to the edge, and on both sides of the insertion some narrow white lace must be sewn. The lace on the outer side should project one-quarter inch beyond the sides of the case. The two and one-half yards of pale mauve ribbon should be made up into six small bows, one of these bows being placed at each corner, and two in the center. The center two must be sewn on to the corner of the case, at a distance respectively of about three inches from the top and bottom, and the stitches fastening them down must be taken right through to the under case. By taking the stitches right through a couple of divisions are made into which to slip the brushes. A brush case of this kind can, of course, be made up in all colors to suit carpets and wall papers. The toilet tidy, which generally hangs on the right hand of the dressing table, should match the brush case. A piece of very stiff paper eight inches long and six and a half inches wide should be covered with mauve glaze and spotted muslin. Then it should be rolled up into an ordinary sugar-loaf bag, and made to retain its shape by a couple or so of stitches. From the conical point at the bottom two or three short ends of narrow ribbon should hang, while the mouth of the bag and the projecting point at the top should be bound round with ribbon and finished with a small bow. A second bag, made of note or newspaper, should be placed inside to receive the hair, and should be renewed every fortnight. The night-gown case is a very simple affair. Remembering to have it accord with the rest of your toilet appurtenances, you make this also of mauve glaze and muslin. You require a piece of glaze thirty-two inches long and eighteen inches wide. When you have covered your glaze with muslin you turn a length of twelve inches and stitch up the sides. You border these with lace and insertion, in the same way as you have trimmed the brush case, but the projecting flap you cut into a point and merely bind round with ribbon. The square of muslin to throw over your clothes at night is less often seen than the other things we have been describing. Yet nothing is more desirable in a bedroom than this. It consists of three yards of the muslin of which servants' aprons are made, trimmed round with torchon lace. When you are traveling it comes in nicely as a wrapper to put over the tray of your box. The combing jacket should always be of some washing material. A three-quarters length loose-fitting jacket, with long open sleeves, is the best kind to have. White muslins and percales in summer, and white flannel and serges in winter are the most suitable materials, but ordinary prints, if the pattern be pretty, will answer every purpose of home wear. If meant for invalid wear they should be made as coquettishly as possible—of pale blue cashmere, with jabots of cream-colored lace falling down the front.

Table Covers.

Some suggestions for table covers are here given. Those requiring much work should be commenced at once if they are intended for the holidays, as nothing is gained and much is always lost by doing fancy work in a hurry. A handsome and durable cover is made of a large square drab Aida canvas, with a plush square in the center. The edge of the plush is scalloped and bound with silk or satin, or is button-holed, as one's taste may decree. The border is of the cloth, and is to be embroidered in many colors. The predominating color should harmonize with the plush used at the center. The pattern should be chosen with reference to the effect produced by looking at it from a distance, say from across the room. If economy is not considered, a narrow band of plush above this border and below it makes it particularly handsome. The edge should be finished with a tassel-like fringe. The crazy patchwork which is attracting so much attention, and which, like the little girl, is, when good, very good, and when bad is horrid, is used a great deal in the construction of table covers. A scarf made in this way is much admired; its center is of dark olive felt; across the ends bands of plush are put on diagonally, and then the corners above and below this are filled in with the crazy patchwork; the pieces are all small, and of elegant silk, satins and velvets joined with innumerable fancy stitches in various colored silks; the ends are completed by a fringe of tassels tied in with gilt crescents. Another and more simply elegant square spread is of felt with the corners alone embroidered, in crewels. A square felt cover was recently exhibited in a fancy store, with a border fifteen inches deep, of the crazy patchwork. This was also finished with fringe.

Children at Christmas.

"It cannot be," said a lady to me the other day, "that any child nowadays is neglected or forgotten at Christmas time; any child in a home where they are at all comfortable." This hopeful statement ought to be a true one, but unhappily it is not. Last year, after Christmas was past, there came to my knowledge certain facts which made me "greatly purpose," as Mr. Carlyle puts it, to see that they never occur in my neighborhood again. A boy, aged nine, not a good boy, and still only a little worse than many who fared sumptuously, was affected by the Christmas bustle in the air about him, and after leading an exemplary life for two days ventured to hang his stocking beside those of a younger brother and sister. Their stockings were found in the morning to contain enough of Christmas goodies to make happy the hearts of the young ones, while the bad boy of nine found, on looking in his own lank stocking, nothing but a branch from a currant bush to remind of the sins and punishments of his past. Another case not so disagreeable, it is true, but sufficiently so to me, was that of a little boy who found his stocking empty, with the exception of a dry and seedy fried-cake man. "What can you do about it?" said the good man of the house, when these and several other incidents of a similar nature were related to him. "It's rather a delicate matter to interfere with people's management of their children, however much you may disapprove of it." The good man evidently did not get the idea. In the first place, who was ever affronted by a gift at holiday time? What parent ever resents any little attention his children receive? It seems to me that in the country where one knows one's neighbor it wouldn't be a hard, or by any means unpleasant, task to see that each child in one's neighborhood is remembered by the gift of some trifle adapted to his or her condition. With a silver dollar and some ingenuity, a good many children could be made happy. There are children to whom an orange would be a gift of value, and it is worth while for us to make glad, so far as we are able, all with whom we are connected; on this day upon which, whatever our traditions—though we may be agnostics all the year around—we agree to be good Christians.

Pumpkin Pies.

The standard of taste by which most people judge of food is that furnished by their mother's table. "What is the matter with the pumpkins now-a-days?" said a gentleman the other day. "I never see, and certainly never eat, any more such golden, luscious pies as my mother used to make." After making due allowance for the change in the individual from boyhood to manhood, the fact remains that there is a decline in pumpkin pies. A searcher after the reasons for it declares one to be that too many spices are now used, entirely disguising the flavor of the pumpkin, which, if properly cooked and of good quality, is delicate and agreeable. Ginger seems to be the only legitimate seasoning for a pumpkin pie, but a faint suspicion of allspice or of cinnamon is allowable. Then, too, instead of sweetening with sugar alone, at least half of the sweetness of the pie should be due to molasses. For one medium-sized pie allow one full coffee cup of stewed pumpkin, "poured through the kitchen sieve" after the manner of Sydney Smith's salad. If rich in eggs, allow two or three; if not, make those eggs do duty for two pies, dividing after beating. If the milk used to thin the pumpkin is half cream, so much the better. A teaspoonful of ginger is a liberal allowance for one pie. Bake with an under crust only, and until the top of the pie is brown and a delicate skin has formed over it (for removing which many a child has passed under the rod).

Kitchen Keramics.

A plain plum pudding is made thus: Chop three ounces of suet very fine, add a quarter of a pound of currants, the same quantity of raisins, half a teaspoonful of salt, and a teaspoonful of baking powder, a pound of sifted flour, a pint of sweet milk, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, and spice to suit your taste. Mix thoroughly, and boil for three hours in a pudding bag. Another recipe for plum pudding is richer and much more expensive, but for certain occasions, say once a year, is preferable: One pound of currants, one pound of raisins, half a pound of citron, one pound of sugar, a pint bowl of grated bread crumbs, and a pint bowl of flour, two wine glasses of wine, one nutmeg grated, a teaspoonful each of cloves and of allspice, one pound of butter, and one dozen eggs. It will be seen at once that this will make a large pudding. Rub the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the other ingredients. Boil in a bag for four hours. Serve with cream and sugar or sauce.

A Christmas gift of a pretty table is one that would be appreciated by almost anybody, and a very pretty and elegant one may be made at no great expense. Have made at a carpenter shop a stand with a square top, and with four small, straight legs; cover the top and legs with royal blue velvet or velveteen; around the stand put a sort of valence or lambrequin, from eight to ten inches deep, and if skilled in needle work of the day, work at intervals of five or six inches, a rose or bud, with slight stems and few leaves, in the lovely ribbon embroidery which makes so handsome an adornment, and does not require so much time and material as many other kinds of embroidery. If you choose to have a low shelf on the table, that may be covered with the velvet but need not be decorated. A sofa pillow to match this table is very effective. A square of the royal blue velvet, with a bunch of roses and buds carelessly laid on, is all that is required, and the cushion is handsome if lined with satin, and needs no card or other finish at the edges.

A useful table scarf, and one that is particularly pleasing to the eye, because it does not suggest almost endless labor, is made by taking a strip of all-wool Java canvass of the proper length for the table upon which it is to be used. Line it with some stiff cloth, and then with silesia. At about three inches from the outer edge sew on two strips of black velvet ribbon, two inches wide. Through the center work a handsome scroll pattern, using bright yellow silk: the velvet stripes may be put on perfectly plain, or may be worked in old fashioned cross stitch, or in some modification of feather stitch. Finish the bottom of the scarf with yellow silk balls. This is suitable for the common sitting room; it is so bright, and the dust can be shaken from it with ease.

The mothers of nursing babies will find it to their advantage to provide themselves with two light flannel sacks, to be slipped on over the nightdress on cold nights. Colds are taken which are followed by more or less serious consequences, by the slight exposure which comes from attending to the needs of little children at night. It is a good plan also to have a pair of warm and loose slippers by the bedside. The slippers which are crocheted of soft Berlin wools, and which have soles of leather thickly wadded with lambs' wool, are especially adapted for this use.

A handkerchief case, which is suitable for a holiday gift, is made of pale blue or pink satin; it is marked in diamonds, and the lines covered with pearl beads. The case unfolds, and so the beads are put on both the outside and inside. The work of putting them on is simplified by having the diamonds on each side correspond; then the beads for each side can be put on at once.

A dainty way to prepare an egg for an invalid is to first beat it until very light, then season it with a little pepper, salt and a tiny lump of butter; then pour it over a slice of dry buttered toast, and set the plate containing it in the steamer; cover closely and let it steam for two or three minutes. An egg prepared thus will not be likely to distress the weakest stomach.

The queen of all pudding sauces calls for two cups of white sugar, a lump of butter the size of an egg, one well beaten egg. Stir these together, then add a teacupful of boiling water, put it in a saucepan until it thickens; do not let it boil; flavor with lemon or vanilla.

Poultry which is to be kept in cold weather should be thoroughly cleansed, then be wiped dry with a cloth and have flour rubbed all over the inner part; then it should be hung in a cool, dry place.

Gossip About the Home.

Globes for gas chandeliers are remarkably handsome this season. They are not only elaborately engraved in novel designs, but are of entirely new shape, large, and open at the top, often with turned rims which are handsomely cut, or they are tinted and painted in colored designs. Chandeliers with six or eight burners have a lower lamp attached to them, the shade of which is usually of tinted or decorated glass.

It is fashionable now to have scarfs or lambrequins for the low shelf which accompanies the long mirror extending from the ceiling almost to the floor in modern reception rooms. Usually this mirror occupies the center of the room, where an open grate would ordinarily be placed, while the mirror which was formerly universally found between the windows is replaced by a long and valuable painting, or, in some cases, by shelves for bric-a-brac.

Holbein work is the most suitable for the decoration of the scarfs which are fashionable for the top of cottage pianos. The design should be worked only in the ends and finished off with a knotted linen fringe.

Portieres are now made in terra cotta turcoman cloth, with a deep dado of stamped velvet or plush, and finished off with a thick, short ball fringe. For looping back bands of the stamped material are preferred.

A new wood, known as red wood, is becoming popular for interior decorations; it is not unlike mahogany in color, takes a high polish, and is very much less expensive than that wood.

GOOD-BOY-LAND.

Did you ever hear of Good-Boy-Land,
The wonderful country of Good-Boy-Land?
Where houses of taffy, on every hand,
And mountains of plum cake and gingerbread stand;
Where the streets are all paved with doughnuts brown,
And a wall of sweet almonds surround each town;
Where a lemonade sea meets a white sugar strand—
Oh, believe me! 'tis jolly in Good-Boy-Land.

Marbles, both agates and snappers, are there,
Common as dust in the streets and the square;
Peg-tops in place of green leaves, on the trees
Whiz in the sunshine and hum in the breeze;
Bicycles roll in a very queer way
Over the meadows and hide in the hay,
While as for velocipedes, running so quick,
You'd hit half a dozen in throwing a stick—
Never before was a country so grand
As the wonderful Kingdom of Good-Boy-Land.

Wait till I tell you the very strange rules
Followed in all their flourishing schools!
Out in their gardens their class rooms are set
(They never have rain, so they cannot get wet),
And there upon bushes the lessons all grow;
Plums of arithmetic hang in a row,
Apples of history, grapes of fine writing,
Drooping in clusters so sweet and inviting,
Luscious ripe pears tumbling into their laps
Full of geography questions and maps,
Nuts full of spelling, and oranges sweet
With algebra problems all ready to eat;
Believe me or not, this is certainly so,
And the more that you swallow the more you will know.

Then in the winter 'tis like to a dream,
With frozen pudding and fine ice cream,
But no more cold than a summer day,
And the garden of lessons in bloom alway!
Merry sweet girls and bonny brown boys
Devouring their studies and picking their toys,
Filling their lives in the jolliest way,
With dates and statistics, with sums and croquet,
For a dunce was a thing that they never could stand
In that wonderful country of Good-Boy-Land!

Never a quarrel, and never a scold,
Never a cough there, and never a cold,
Nobody dirty, and nobody bold,
No one too hot there and no one too cold;
Nobody ever comes walking down-stair,
But slides on the banister, feet in the air;
Every one knows how to swim and to row,
Every one owns both a gun and a bow,
A base-ball, a foot-ball, a jack-knife, a watch,
A great pocket full of the best butter-scotch,
And this is the pleasantest part of the frolic—
You can eat it all day without getting the colic!
Oh, where is the government ever was planned
With such law and such order as Good-Boy-Land?

Dolls are there, thicker than crows in the corn,
Beautiful French ones as ever were born;
Story books, splendid in colors and gold,
Full of such stories as never were told;
There's nothing to tear there and nothing to mend,
And every one's every one else's best friend;
Late you get up there and late you lie down,
And always you wear a Kate Greenaway gown;
The wee-est wee girl both dances and sings
(You see it's like heaven, but no one has wings),
And four-button gloves hang in pairs on each hand
In that wonderful country of Good-Boy-Land!

Where is the country, and how do you go?
Well, that's just the thing I am dying to know!
Somewhere, I judge, in the moon or the stars—
Perhaps it is Venus, perhaps it is Mars;
And you travel—who knows?—by the boat or the train,
Which leads one direct to the Castles in Spain,
Or some roundabout way that's not easy to learn,
In the kind of balloon that is made by Jules Verne,
Or a telegraph wire, or the wing of a bird—
But I'll find the way first, and then send you back word.

LORE FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

The Boy Who Was Dissatisfied.

Oscar was a boy who generally disliked to get up in the morning, the more so as he had to rise early and split wood for his mother's fires. There was a little, old, withered fairy, who had taken a fancy to Oscar when he was a baby, who used to come and wake him at daybreak.

"Get up, Oscar," she would say, "and see the sun rise."

"I don't like to see the sun rise," he would answer.

"Get up, Oscar, and see the dew on the grass and flowers."

"I am not fond of looking at the dew."

"Get up, Oscar, and be bright and spry, or you will never make your fortune."

"I don't want to make my fortune," Oscar would sleepily answer.

But the fairy would tease and worry him until she got him up, and then he would slowly put on his clothes, half wash his face, partly comb his hair, slouch down stairs, and lazily begin to split his wood.

One morning, while he was slowly splitting wood, an idea came into his head. As he was too lazy to get rid of it, he let it speak for itself.

"I wish," the idea made him say, "that I could go by steam."

In an instant the little old fairy was at his side. She was always on hand whenever he made a wish.

"Do you really want to go by steam?" she asked.

"Yes," replied Oscar. "I think it would be easier than pottering away as I do, tiring my hands and arms."

"You shall have your wish," said the fairy.

Directly Oscar felt and heard a rumbling and a rattling inside of him, and puffs of steam came out of his nose, and his left hand regularly placed pieces of wood upon the chopping block, while his right hand as regularly brought the hatchet down upon them and split them.

So he worked very fast, and the work did not tire his arms and hands in the least, and he hoped that he would soon get such a pile of kindling on hand as should save him for a long time from getting up early and splitting wood.

But he soon learned that even going by steam was tiresome. He wanted to get up and play, and when noontime came he wanted to go home and get his dinner. A wish brought the old fairy to his side.

"If you want your dinner," she said, "you must be fed with coal and water, like any other engine; and you cannot get up and play, because you are what is called a stationary engine, which must work right on until somebody stops it, and cannot move unless it is taken away."

Then Oscar wished to be a locomotive engine, so that he could run a long distance and see a great deal of the world.

In an instant he found himself on the rails, drawing a train of cars, running at the rate of forty miles an hour, and looking down on the cowcatcher.

But it was not long before he learned that there was no fun in being a locomotive engine, as he could never get off the rails and could never stop when he saw anything that pleased or interested him, and at the end of every journey he was shut up with the other engines in a dark house, from which none of them could stir.

Then he wished to be a bird.

"The birds," he said, "have an easy and pleasant time, with nothing to do but to fly about as they plese, and to eat when they feel hungry."

So the fairy changed him into a large and handsome bird.

But he soon learned that it was quite as much work for a bird to use its wings as for a boy to use his hands and feet. He also learned that the birds are put to no little trouble to find the food that is proper for them, and that they have many enemies, of which men are not the least.

When he had been nearly frightened out of his wits by a man who hunted him with a gun, Oscar became disgusted with the life of a bird, and wished to be a squirrel, as he had noticed the free and easy life of the squirrels, and thought that they must have a good time, if anybody had.

After telling him that had better wish to be changed to a goose, the old fairy snapped her fingers, and in a twinkle Oscar was running up a tree, with a bushy tail curling over his furry coat.

Sad to say, he found the life of a squirrel to be even worse than that of a bird, as the squirrels had even more enemies than the birds, and even more trouble in getting their food, and laying it away for the winter.

He also found it to be a fact that it tires squirrels to run and jump quite as much as it tires boys to walk or to work.

Another wish brought the old fairy to the limb of the tree, on which he sat gnawing the shell of a very hard nut.

"What do you want now?" she asked.

"I want to be a boy again," replied Oscar, "and to have nothing at all to do."

In a moment he found himself dressed in his own clothes and seated in an easy chair, with a rest for his feet, and with a bowl of porridge on a table by his side.

There was a high fence around him, so close that he could not move more than his length in any direction.

On the other side of the fence were a splendid orchard and a beautiful garden, filled with apples, pears, plums, cherries, strawberries, raspberries, and all sorts of luscious and tempting fruits and vegetables. He could see them whenever he opened his eyes and could smell them without taking the trouble to open his eyes; but the wire fence was in the way, so that he could not taste or touch them.

He stood this for a while, trying to believe that it was a very nice thing to have nothing to do; but at last he became so tired of his porridge, and the desire to get some of the fruit in the orchard and garden grew so strong that he wished a big wish.

In an instant the old fairy was at his elbow.

"You cannot get at the fruit," she said, "because there is a fence in the way, just as there is always some sort of a fence in the way when we want to get anything nice in this world."

"But I can climb the fence," said Oscar.

"That would be work," replied the fairy. "It would be doing something, and you were placed here because you wanted to have nothing at all to do."

The fairy left him, and Oscar thought he would climb the fence, fill his pockets with fruit, and then get back to his easy chair and enjoy his dainties.

He found the fence a hard one to climb, but he got to the top at last, and was going down on the other side when something happened.

The fence then melted away, the orchard and garden vanished, and he found himself at the woodpile in the back yard and was content to stay there.—[Golden Days.

THE INNER LIFE.

We know there is a life within the life
Of each, who, toiling, treads the checkered way:
Ever a fiercer strife behind the strife
That each is seen to wage from day to day.

We find ourselves contending with a world
In which ambition rules, and pride holds sway:
We drink, and soon, like others, are possessed
With zeal to grasp the baubles as we may.

So we are judged to be alike as base
As he who sells for pottage all he hath—
Who yields not only joy, and love, and truth,
But yields for this his soul's immortal worth.

Be thou serene before this heartless judge,
Brave heart that hath with unseen valor fought;
Strive not to hold against the world a grudge,
And sell the sunshine of thy life for naught.

The world can never know thee as thou art,
Much less with truth can judge thee as it ought;
But if thou hast with courage done thy part,
For thee there's nothing further to be sought.

'Tis well for us to toil, and strive to win
All that our comfort and our health require,
But let the angel still within us reign,
That we may aid the world to something higher.

Then let the inner life be full and free—
Let mind rule with the scepter of its might;
Let heart and soul with aspiration burn
Toward all that's great in nature, grand in thought.

Then be the world in judgment true or false,
The heart secure in consciousness of worth
Can find within its battlements of truth
The greatest pleasure possible to earth.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Religious Sensation at Denver.

Denver, Col., has a mild religious sensation. The Rev. Martyn Hart, dean of the Protestant Episcopal church of that city, with the consent of the bishop of the diocese, invited the Rev. Dr. Jeffrey, a prominent Baptist clergyman of Denver, to preach the Thanksgiving sermon in the cathedral. The invitation was accepted by Dr. Jeffrey in the Christian spirit in which it was given and elaborate preparations were made for a great and popular service. The Episcopal church has always been understood to deny the right of non-Episcopally ordained clergymen to officiate in her pulpits, and the announcement that one such was to preach in the Cathedral church of the diocese with the express consent of the ecclesiastical authority, drew together a very large congregation. The people were doomed to disappointment, however. Just before the service, Dean Hart received a formal notice from two Episcopal clergymen of the diocese, that in case Dr. Jeffrey was allowed to preach he (Dean Hart) would be proceeded against in an ecclesiastical court for violating a canon which reads as follows: "No minister, in charge of any congregation of this church (the Episcopal), or, in case of vacancy or absence, no church-wardens, vestrymen or trustees of the congregation, shall permit any person to officiate therein without sufficient evidence of his being duly licensed or ordained to minister in this church." Although Dean Hart believed that the phraseology of this canon was not open to the meaning which these clergymen assumed to put upon it, and that he was certainly not violating its spirit in his contemplated action, he nevertheless, for the sake of peace, thought it better not to lay himself open to a prosecution. And with the full consent of Dr. Jeffrey he announced to the congregation that the latter would not preach, giving the reason therefor. The affair has excited wide comment throughout the State of Colorado, and prominent members of the Episcopal church openly express their regret that such a canon should be allowed to stand in the way of Christian comity. There are, we believe, several instances of clergymen not Episcopally ordained officiating in Episcopal churches in the Eastern States.

Sabbath Laws.

The Interior thus expresses its opinion on the somewhat fanatical and bigoted views of the Methodist ministers' meeting on the Sunday question:

The Methodist ministers' meeting has given the daily papers possession of the handle-end of the whip. Dr. Hatfield said that, by the grace of God, he had been enabled to expel one of his members for delivering milk to his neighbors or customers, or whatever they were, on Sunday. The daily editor would like to know about the fate of the babies thus deprived of their Sunday supply of nutriment. Bishop Merrill classed the publishers of Sunday papers with thieves. The publication of a Sunday paper was a crime. Mr. Fawcett said that, in obedience to a law which forbids the tugboats from taking passengers on Sunday, some persons had been left by a Chicago tug to drown in the lake—thus showing how ready those who violate the law of God were to obey the laws of men. No such incident ever occurred, however. Such an illustration would be very impressive in a colored camp meeting, but was hardly appropriate in a meeting of intelligent ministers. If the efforts to secure the observation of the Sabbath are not to be brought into derision there must be a little clearer idea obtained of what is demanded by the friends of the Sabbath. For Christians the work allowable on the Sabbath is work of necessity and mercy. The milkman must be allowed to deliver his milk. The coachman must be allowed to care for his team and drive the family to church. The cook must be allowed to prepare fresh meals. The mechanic in the city must be allowed to take his wife and babies out into the park for an airing. Christian people must decide, each for himself, what is necessary for the health and comfort of his family—what work it is that, in his individual case, comes fairly under the class of works of necessity and mercy.

Miracles by Prayer.

The subject of faith-cures appears now to be occupying a great deal of public attention. That certain forms of nervous disease have been alleviated, at least for a time, through faith, need not be disputed. All respectable physicians acknowledge the influence which the will has over the physical condition of man. And that a strong belief in the efficacy of prayer and anointing with oil should react upon the physical condition, is simply a physiological fact. Whether or not it is a spiritual fact is hardly within the province of a secular journal to decide. But this at least may be said: No cure has been effected which may not be explained without bringing in a miraculous agency. When the advocates of faith cures have produced a well-authenticated case of a man with a compound fracture of the leg, or a broken neck, having been at once cured through the prayer of faith, there will be something tangible to discuss; not before. This matter has come up in another way this week. A Prof. Brooks of this State has requested that prayers be offered up in all Christian churches to-day for fair weather on the 6th of December, when the transit of Venus will occur. This represents the extreme belief in a special providence, interfering with the settled laws of nature at the request of men. The other extreme is to regard the universe as a Procrustean cage of fate, whose laws never change or vary. The former is the position of the unscientific Christian; the latter is the position of the unchristian scientist. How the larger truth behind these two irreconcilable propositions shall be reconciled, if at all, is a problem that is exercising the ingenuity of all truth-loving Christians and all reverent men of science. In the meanwhile, though faith in the unseen may not cure physical maladies, it sheds a light on the darker passages of human destiny that is a priceless blessing to many a weary son of earth. And though prayer may not change even the slightest of the laws of nature, it changes for good the heart that reverently utters it, and lifts it above the poor commonplace of mere animal existence.

Universalism.

The Rev. R. H. Pullman, a Universalist minister of Baltimore, recently preached a sermon in defense of Universalism in which he said: "The church has now and then had ministers who seemed not clearly to comprehend the Christian foundation of Universalism; so that not a little has been preached in this city that was not Universalism, and had no authority or sanction from the Christian standards of the church. So God preserved through all the years faithful witnesses, and precious names are enrolled of Christian men and women. What has been accomplished? There has gone out from this church, as a center, a steady influence that has softened the tone of all pulpit ministrations, and warmed the hearts of great masses of believers in all the churches with the hope of universal salvation. The richest fruits of our labors are not seen in the simple fact that this church, as a single organization, is large and vigorous, and instant in season and out of season in its Christian work. I congratulate you, brethren, upon the harvests that have been gathered through the fifty years of Christian toil, and the harvests that are now already ripening for the gathering. I congratulate you on the softening of opposition against us, and our growing reputation as a Christian church among all classes who once so strongly opposed us."

An Adventist Vision.

Dispatches this week announce that there is much excitement at Battle Creek, Mich., the headquarters of the Seventh Day Adventists faith, over the promulgation of a so-called vision by Mrs. Ellen G. White, widow of the late Elder James White, who for many years shared with him the leadership of the extensive sect. After her husband's death her power as a leader began to visibly decline, and other younger counsels began to prevail. Her visions have hitherto been accepted as almost as authoritative as gospel revelations, but this time a serious dissension is likely to result. In her last vision she charges with worldliness Elder N. Smith, editor of the Review and Herald, and William C. Gage, business manager of the paper, who is also mayor of the city and proprietor of one of the heaviest denominational publishing houses in the world. Both men are excellent citizens, and it is probable that they may resign at the next meeting. The faith has hundreds of thousands of followers all over the United States and Europe, all of whom are practically governed by the Battle Creek leaders. Mrs. White, or the prophetess, as she is sometimes called, is apparently seeking by means of this vision to regain her ascendancy in the councils of the sect.

Long Pastorates.

The Waterbury American has the following to say on a too frequent change of pastoral relations: "Short pastorates destroy all the sacredness which used to characterize that relation. How much nobler the spectacle of such a relation as that of Dr. Bacon to Center Church, New Haven, where after fifty years of service he still continued pastor, though no longer carrying its burdens alone. In the case of one family, very likely in that of others, he buried their dead from the venerable grandmother down to one of the youngest grandchildren, and officiated at the christenings and marriages of two generations, and when he died, his death meant something more to the survivors than the decease of a favorite preacher or admired theologian. By a man who has occupied such a relation for a working lifetime it can with truth be said: 'The church—it is I.' He has largely made it what it is."

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

There's no last time in heaven; the angels pour
A still new song, though chanted evermore;
There's no night following on their daylight hours,
No fading time for amaranthine flowers;
No change, no death, no harp that lies unstrung,
No vacant place these hallowed hills among.

The Rev. Joseph Cook was requested by the free thinkers of Melbourne to meet Mr. Thomas Walter in open discussion. Mr. Cook declines such work for the following reasons; "First, Freethought, spiritualism and infidelity in general, in America, England and India, and, as far as I know, in Australia, are notoriously connected with schemes for the propagation of immorality. Several of the prominent agitators in support of infidelity and freethought have been sent to jail for distributing infamous publications through the mails. No decent man can consent to appear on the same platform with the representatives of enterprises that have a debasing effect on the public mind. Secondly, I am not open to challenge of which the evident object is to advertise infidelity. Thirdly, not an unoccupied nor an unengaged hour is left open to me in Australia. Fourthly, when when infidels of any kind issue a book that goes through ten editions in ten years, at a dollar a copy, I will reply to it. I have a right to issue this challenge, for several volumes of the Boston Monday Lectures have gone through ten editions in five years. Fifthly, infidels can put their written inquiries, if they choose, into the box at any free question-box lectures."

The Advance: No wonder our Unitarian friends are aroused over the recent deliverances of their venerable and authoritative Dr. Ellis of Boston. He declared solemnly that the Bible was an orthodox book, and that if its statements were to be received as authority the orthodox Christian was right and the Unitarian and Universalists all wrong. That was a firebrand in dry cotton, and The Christian Register and Christian Leader of Boston are compelled to leave the Congregational discussion alone long enough to enter an earnest protest. Dr. James Freeman Clarke preached a sermon against Dr. Ellis's views, and the current press of the denomination has taken it up. Leading Unitarian clergymen, including such men as James Freeman Clarke, Edward Everett Hale, C. A. Bartol, and A. P. Peabody, have come out in a card and repudiated the views of Dr. Ellis. But the good doctor returns to his charge that Unitarians cannot consistently hold to the Bible as authority and preach Unitarianism.

It is Cardinal Manning who relates this incident as having happened to himself: One night I was returning to my residence in Westminster when I met a poor man carrying a basket and smoking a pipe. I thought over this Aristotelian syllogism: He who smokes gets thirsty; he who is thirsty desires to drink; he who drinks too much gets drunk; he who gets drunk goes to hell. This man is in danger of mortal sin. Let us save him. I affectionately addressed him:

"Are you a Catholic?"

"I am, thanks be to God."

"Where are you from?"

"From Cork, your reverence."

"Are you a member of the Total Abstinence society?"

"No, your reverence."

"Now," said I, "that is very wrong. Look at me; I am a member."

"Faith, may be your reverence has need of it!"

I shook hands with him and left him.

A week of prayer at the opening of each new year has now become universal, and the Evangelical Alliance, by its representatives throughout the world, has issued an invitation and programme for the week of prayer, commencing Jan. 7, 1883. The suggested topics for the several days cover a wide range of subjects, including thanksgiving, confession, prayer for the church universal, for families, for the nation, and for missions. Special reference is also made to education, to intemperance and to the opium traffic.

The young people of the South Congregational church at Springfield, Mass., turn the church parlors into a free reading room each Sunday from 5 to 7:30 p. m. Now if to this very good step in the right direction they will add another, and open the parlors two or three evenings in the week, the result will be the saving from temptation of many young men who are strangers and have free entrance only into the liquor saloons, where they are always made welcome.

The parishioners of a clergyman in Scotland, in expressing to him their aversion to the use of manuscript sermons, said: "What gars ye take up your bit papers to the pulpit?" He replied that it was best, for really he could not remember a sermon and must have his paper. "Weel, weel, minister, they retaliated, "if ye canna remember the sermon, then dinna expect that we can."

The Methodist conference of Canada recently in session, decided that the educational standard of its ministers should be raised considerably. It was resolved that hereafter all candidates for reception on trial should be required to present a certificate of matriculation in some accredited university, or what should be regarded by the board of examiners as fair as equivalent.

The fifth annual report of the Women's Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, gives the number of auxiliaries as 959, with 21,061 members; and 191 juvenile societies, with 5,344 juvenile members. The total membership, including life members, etc., is 26,763. The total amount raised the past year was $26,733.29.

"Mary Jane," said Dickey, "why would Lot have been a better captain for the ark than Noah?" "Why?" said Mary Jane. "Because," said Dickey, "Mrs. Lot was an old salt." "Dickey," said Mary Jane, "you are a very fresh young woman."

The Universalist State convention of Connecticut held its session at Stafford a few days since. The executive committee reported that $39,000 had been expended during the past year in improving churches and paying church debts. It authorized also the raising of $700 for the support of a State missionary.

As England and Germany seem to be unable to agree upon the appointment of a Protestant bishop of Jerusalem, it is expected that the See will be abolished.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE
DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Publisher.

CROOKSTON, - MINNESOTA.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The Officers Elected at the Organization of the Senate and House.

Senate, Tuesday, January 2.

The following were nominated on Monday night and elected on Tuesday:

Secretary—C. W. Johnson, of Hennepin county.

Assistant Secretary—J. B. Jones, of Todd county.

Enrolling Clerk—J. P. Jacobson, of Ramsey county.

Engrossing Clerk—A. H. Bertram, of Wright county.

Sergeant-at-arms—C. M. Reese, of Kandiyohi county.

Assistant Sergeant-at-arms—J. A. Westby, of Goodhue county.

Chaplain—Robert Smith, of Ramsey Co.

House, Tuesday, January 2.

The house met at high noon and elected the following officers who had been nominated the previous evening:

Speaker—Loren Fletcher, of Hennepin county.

Chief Clerk—John R. Howard, of Stearns county.

Assistant Clerk—Robert Deakin, of Ramsey county.

Second Assistant Clerk—A. R. Berkdoll, of Fillmore county.

Enrolling Clerk—Carl N. Lein, of Goodhue county.

Engrossing Clerk—T. H. Caine, of Isanti county.

Sergeant-at-arms—F.H. Dayton, of Washington county.

Assistant Serg't-at-arms—Andrew Swenson of Blue Earth county.

Assistant Enrolling Clerk and Postmaster—E. P. Wade, of Ramsey county.

Chaplain—Rev. Dr. M. M. Dana, of Ramsey county.

Grading Wheat in Minnesota.

The following petition to the legislature has been prepared by the committee appointed by the Blue Earth County Farmers' alliance, in regard to the vexed question of wheat grades. Copies have been sent to all the subordinate alliances for signature, and they are then to be returned to the committee for presentation to the legislature:

Minnesota, situated in the center of the spring wheat belt, together with the character of its soil, climate and modes of thought of her farmers, must of necessity be always a great wheat-producing State. The total productions of 1882 exceeded 32,000,000 of bushels, and promises to be greatly increased in the near future. And the large development of the flour manufacturing interest of the State, now exceeding the amount produced by the farmers of the State, places the wheat interest paramount to all others. The present system of grading wheat, by means of the testers, has always been unsatisfactory to the producer. The farmer does not believe that the number of kernels of wheat that a tester will contain, in order to weigh a given amount is the honest expression of the wheat value. It is too often the aim of the buyer to get the tester full with the smallest number of kernels possible, and experience enables him to so manipulate his tester as to effect this object, to the detriment of the seller, and he finds the wheat to weigh 58 pounds, 56 pounds, or 54 pounds, as the case may be, but always takes 60 pounds as the selling bushel. Your petitioners believe that the weight of the wheat alone is not a true test of its value, for experience has taught us that we get as much and as good flour at our custom and tolling mills from Nos. 2 and 3 as from No. 1. The lower grades of wheat, owing to the irregular, angular form of the kernels and larger development of beard in proportion to the size of the kernels, occupy more space in the tester than the smooth, oval, less beardy higher grades; or in other words, the unoccupied spaces between the kernels being greater, and as there are fewer kernels in the tester, it weighs less. It is the belief of your petitioners that the inspection of wheat and establishing of its value should be so controlled by law as to place it beyond the power of the buyer to determine its value, and so thoroughly investigated and illustrated as to make it plain to both producers and purchasers. We offer for your consideration the grading of wheat upon the basis of its food value, as ascertained by chemical analysis. Scientific investigations in our sister States of Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan, through the medium of their agricultural colleges, have solved many a problem of practical value to the farmers, and our university, with its magnificent grant of land by the general government for agricultural education, should lend its aid in solving this and other questions of practical value to the farmer. And scientific men, who investigate questions for truth's sake alone, and have no pecuniary interests at stake, are the proper ones to give an impartial solution to this question.

THE FOLLOWING CHEMICAL ANALYSIS of wheat was made at the university by request of the Blue Earth County Farmers' alliance, and shows upon its face the startling fact that there is no practical difference in the food value of the three grades of wheat investigated, the small margin of difference being in favor of No. 2.

THE ANALYSIS.

	Grade No. 1.	Grade No. 2.	Grade No. 3.
Weight per bushel......	59 lbs.	56½ lbs.	55 lbs.
Grains to weigh 10 grs.	266	474	491
	per ct.	per ct.	per ct.
Foreign matter (seeds, etc.).....	0.41	0.20	1.57
Nitrogen............	2.09	2.08	2.17
Phosphorus............	0.35	0.46	0.46
Water............	12.34	11.31	11.85
Ash............	1.59	1.93	1.07
Albuminoids (nitrogen multiplied by 6¼)....	13.06	13.00	13.56
Cellulose........	2.03	2.37	2.60
Starch, sugar, fat, etc..	79.98	71.40	70.12

The following are the grades and rates established by the millers and wheat buyers in their convention held at Minneapolis, December, 1881: No. 1, sound, dry and clean, and to test 58 pounds or over; No. 2, sound, dry and reasonably clean, and test 56, and worth 5 cents less than No. 1; No. 3, reasonably sound and dry, and test not less than 54, and worth 15 cents less than No. 2; No. 4 must be dry and test not less than 52, being fit for warehousing, and worth 15 cents less than No. 3.

The university procured their samples of wheat for analysis of the agent of the Minneapolis Millers' association, and doubtless they were graded in conformity to the above rules, and shows a vast discrepancy between the result of the analysis and the prices and grading by the association. It is the belief of your petitioners that a grading established upon the result of the chemical and microscopical investigation will give a stability and permanency to the wheat market never enjoyed before, and add greatly to the thrift and welfare of the agricultural community.

Crookston Chronicle: On Saturday last John P. Pillard, the French doctor, at whose house the late county auditor, John Christianson, died very suddenly March 8, a year ago, was arrested, and brought before Esq. Lewis for a preliminary examination, charged with killing Christianson.

Ignatus Hole-in-the-Day, son of the celebrated Chippewa chief that of name, will lecture at St. Peter. Subject: The Chippewa Indians Fifty Years Ago and Now.

Andrew Palmer, Jr., died at his late residence in Albert Lea, aged forty-one years. Deceased was an active and prominent business man of the city and had been for a number of years. He was one of the vice-presidents of the American Butter and Egg association. He was a mason in high standing and was buried under the auspices of that order on Wednesday.

Thomas O'Leary of Blooming Prairie was struck with a streak of ill-luck, last Friday afternoon, that will prove troublesome, if not expensive, in its outcome. O'Leary recently kept a saloon in the village named, and having sold it out, pocketed his money, and came to St. Paul to take in the sights. In his trip about town he dropped in at Carrie Morrison's bagnio, on Fifth street. About two hours after leaving the house he discovered that his pocket-book, containing $275 in bills and $2,500 in certificates of deposit and notes, was missing. Some of the money was recaptured by the police.

Died at 9 p. m. Wednesday, Dec. 27, at her home in Faribault, Mrs. Clarissa Plummer, wife of Isaac Plummer, and mother of Rev. Charles H. Plummer of Lake City and Mr. John Plummer of Faribault.

President Folwell of the State University has made his annual report in which it is stated that sixty-two degrees were conferred by the university in the years covered by the report and 163 since the organization of the university. The whole number of persons graduated is 153, six persons having received two degrees. No honorary degrees are conferred by the university. The number of girls who have graduated is 43, all of whom completed the same course of study as the boys, and were in every respect their equals.

A. D. Mayo of Boston delivered a thoughtful address before the educational association in St. Paul last Thursday evening, in which he showed the relationship of our educational system to good citizenship.

The Lanesboro bank is to be removed to La Crosse or Chicago.

William Otto and Ignatz Grell, who killed Richter, were found guilty of manslaughter in the second degree in the circuit court in St. Cloud, and sentenced to five years and six months imprisonment.

At Carver, Henry Gehl of Chaska was thrown from his sleigh by a runaway team and received serious if not fatal injuries.

The board of commissioners of Morrison county recently issued 8 per cent. bonds of that county in the sum of $35,000 to the Little Falls & Dakota railroad company.

A bad case of attempted murder took place in the township of Cherry Grove, Goodhue county. The wife of Hans Peterson Krogan was the victim. She was in bed and was aroused from sleep by some movement about her neck and shoulders, which proved to be none other than her own husband putting a woolen scarf around her neck. A terrific struggle ensued, and she finally succeeded in tearing the scarf off her neck. It was torn to shreds and was stained with blood. Failing to choke his wife to death he immediately got a common flatiron, with which he struck her many times on the head, inflicting severe wounds. As many as six distinct gashes are discernible on the forehead above her right eye and others on various parts of her head. How she escaped death is almost a mystery, but wounded as she was, and almost in a nude condition, she fled through a deep snow to a neighbor a quarter of a mile distant.

Articles of incorporation of the Minnesota State Association of Spiritualists were filed at the register's office at Minneapolis. The purpose of the society is "to promote the spiritual, moral, intellectual and social development of man; to promulgate truth and disseminate knowledge of things physical and spiritual; to encourage a wider reception of the principle of the true religions progress; to instruct and harmonize the mind, to elevate and spiritualize the soul; to promote brotherly love; to encourage in each a pure, practical and orderly life; to contribute in every practical way to the establishment of peace on earth and good will to men."

Dinners on Time.

Senator David Davis is said to be very much displeased with the determination of the senate to sit daily until 5 p. m., as he likes to dine at 4. Ben Wade, when he was president pro tem. of the senate, was equally anxious for an early adjournment. One day, when Senator Davis was making a long speech, Mr. Wade sat quiet until it was 4 o'clock, when he said: "Will the senator from Kentucky suspend his remarks for the introduction of a motion?" "Certainly," said Mr. Davis. "The senator from Ohio," said Mr. Wade, "moves that the senate do now adjourn. Senators, those in favor say aye, those opposed no! The motion is carried, and the senate stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock." As Mr. Wade was the only senator from Ohio in the chamber, or even in the senate at that time, his coolness in putting his own motion and declaring it carried was much admired.

The Washington Monument.

Course No. 163 upon the Washington Monument was finished on Monday, and the top of it is now 21-2 inches above the highest point of the head-dress of the statue of the Goddess of Liberty on the Capitol. The height of the shaft is 336 feet 57-8 inches above the floor of the obelisk, or 375 feet four inches above the average high water of the Potomac. Calling the level of the east pavement of the capitol 90 feet above high water would make the height of the top of the statue on the dome above this pavement 235 feet 11-2 inches. The distance from the top of the monument to the top of the statue is 7,500 feet.—Washington Star.

COMMERCIAL.

ST. PAUL.

FLOUR—Quotations: Patents, $6@6.75; clears, $5@5.50; straights, $4.75@5.50; common brands, $4@5; in bbls, 25c extra. Buckwheat flour, $8 per bbl. Rye flour, $4.25@4.50 per bbl. Graham, $5@5.50 per bbl. Business of the week has been entirely inactive in character and restricted to local wants.

WHEAT—While other markets have not been stiff, the feeling in St. Paul has been rather steady, based on the idea, expressed by some, that wheat is, at present prices, good property to hold. The milling demand has been moderate and wholly for hard varieties. Receipts have been moderate. Prices are a shade improved upon the quotations of a week ago, though showing no changes since Friday. Transactions are confined to spot deals, especially now, in view of the fact that big deals are to be settled by next Saturday that may change the whole range of values in Chicago and at the seaboard. Tuesday's spot bids: No. 1 hard, 99c; No. 1, 93c; No. 2 hard, 94c; No. 2, 87c; No. 3, 70@80c. Tuesday's sales: 4 cars by sample, 94c; 1 car by sample, 85c; 5,000 bu No. 1 by sample, 93c.

CORN—Supply of new has gradually increased, and with it there has been a better showing of quality. The principal demand for old corn has been for option settlement. During the week there has been 5c decline in this grade, and some shading on new crop. But little has been done in futures. On Tuesday there was but little demand. Quotations: No. 2 old, 55c bid; new Kansas, 56c asked; Iowa, 47c bid, 50c asked.

OATS—The market is much better supplied than it was a week ago. The demand is only fair, and prices are easy at the following: No. 2 mixed, 35c bid, 36c asked; No. 3 mixed, 35c asked; No. 2 white, 36c bid, 38c asked.

BARLEY—This grain has been essentially dull in commission men's hands. The brewers have fair stocks and require but little fresh supplies. Some trade in the shipping line has been done, and hence the market has not been overstocked. Prices have ruled weak but at lowest figures for spot. No. 2, 65@68c; extra No. 3, 50c; No. 3, 42c.

RYE—Has been steady all the week at 45c per bu for No. 2. Trade very light.

MINNEAPOLIS.

FLOUR—There was no improvement in this market, and prices are as follows: Patents, $6@6.40; straights, $5.25@5.75; clears, $5@5.50; low grades, $2@2.75 per bbl.

MILLSTUFFS—Bran was in good demand, and prices were a trifle higher: $7@7.25 bid per ton in bulk, $7.25@7.75 asked. Sacked bran sold at $9 f. o. b., with later offerings at $9.25. Shorts are quoted at $8@9, according to quality. Coarse corn meal nominal; mixed feed, $20@23 on track, $21@23.50 f. o. b.

WHEAT—There was little disposition to operate in this cereal, as sellers are anticipating an improvement in the market and have advanced prices somewhat. Among yesterday's sales were the following: One car No 2 hard on track at 97c; 1 car condemned at 85c; 2 cars No. 1 in store at 95c; 1 car condemned at 85c.

CORN—This market is steady, with indications of higher prices. No. 2, old, 50@55c; No. 2, new, 48@49c; and rejected, new, at 40@45c.

OATS—Firm, with prices unchanged: 35c bid for No. 2, with 36c asked; No. 2 white, nominally 37c, in store.

MILWAUKEE MARKET—Flour, quiet and unchanged. Wheat, higher; No. 2 hard, 98¼c; No. 2, 94¼c; December, 94¼c; January, 93⅝c; February, 94⅛c; the year, 94¼c; No. 3, 79c; No. 4, 65c. Corn, very quiet; No. 2, 51@51½c. Oats, easier; No. 2, 35½c. Rye, quiet and unchanged; No. 1, 57c; No. 2, 54c. Barley, easier; No. 2, 73½c; extra No. 3, 51¼c. Provisions, firmer; mess pork, $17.10 cash and December; $17.20 January. Lard, prime steam, $10.35 cash and December; $10.40 January. Butter, weak; creameries, 28@36c. Cheese, dull and quiet. Eggs, dull and lower. Receipts—Flour, 27,668 bbls; wheat, 102,944 bu; barley, 52,269 bu. Shipments—Flour, 25,636 bbls; wheat, 5,940 bu; barley, 43,605 bu.

CHICAGO MARKET—Flour, nominally unchanged. Wheat, strong and higher; regular, 92⅛c December; 93⅛c January; 94⅛c February; $1.00¾ May; No. 2 red Western, 93¼c; No. 2 Chicago spring, 76c; rejected, 60c. Corn active, firm and higher; 53c cash December; 50¾c January; 50c February; 53⅝c May; rejected, 43½c. Oats irregular; 39¾c cash; 40@40¼c December; 35½c January; 35¼c February; 36¾ May. Rye, easier at 57½c. Barley steady and unchanged; 80c. Butter, good demand at full prices. Eggs, easier; 27@27½c. Flax seed, stronger; $1.16½@1.17. Pork, demand fair and prices higher; $17.15@17.20 cash; $17.22½@17.25 January; $17.40@17.42½ February.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS

Wednesday, December 20.

SENATE.—Five members more than a quorum were present at the opening. After the introduction of numerous unimportant resolutions the senate resumed work on the civil service bill which finally passed by a vote of 39 to 5. The five who voted against the bill were all democrats—Messrs. Brown of Georgia, Call of Florida, Jones of Louisiana, McPherson of New Jersey, and Morgan of Alabama. The bill, as it passed, is a modification of the Pendleton bill and provides for a commission who shall have supervision of the civil service competitive examinations which are required in appointments to office. One of the most important amendments to the bill was one offered by Senator Hawley of Connecticut, and passed prohibiting officers from soliciting or receiving political assessments from subordinate employes of the government. It also prohibits the discharge, promotion or degradation of any employe for voting at a political election, or contributing money or other valuable things for political purposes. The penalty for a violation of this provision is a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than three years, or both, at the discretion of the court. Another amendment was adopted prohibiting intemperance in the service. On this Mr. Edmunds said that employes had been quite as much demoralized and the service had suffered quite as much from the effects of gambling as intemperance.

HOUSE.—Less than a quorum were present, and without transacting a particle of business the house adjourned until Saturday.

Thursday, December 28.

SENATE.—Senator Edmunds scored a decisive victory by the passage, unamended, of his bill to prohibit political assessments, and when this was out of the way Mr. Sherman made a desperate move in the interest of the whisky bill. Only five minutes of the morning hour remained when he called up this subject, and by a systematic series of parliamentary maneuvers the tall Ohio statesman was checkmated and retired to a cloak room to enjoy a smoke.

Senator McPherson of New Jersey was observed industriously circulating among members on the Democratic side and dispatching messengers in quest of absentees, and his intention was quickly manifested when he called up the Fitz-John Porter case for consideration, to take place as unfinished business from day to day until disposed of. The swarthy Logan rose to protest, but the opposition was too strong for him, as upon a demand for the yeas and nays there were 22 of the former and 21 of the later.

HOUSE.—Not in Session.

Friday, December 29.

SENATE.—After the introduction and reference of several bills, on motion of Mr. Groome, the bill appropriating $10,000 for erecting a monument to Baron De Kalb, at Annapolis, Md., was passed.

On motion of Mr. Hoar, the bill to provide for performance of the duties of the president of the United States in case of inability or removal by death, or otherwise, the president and vice president, was then taken up. Discussion of the bill to regulate the succession continued till nearly 2 o'clock, when unfinished business, the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter, was taken and discussed by Logan and others. Logan was very bitter but disclosed nothing new. Senate adjourned until Tuesday.

HOUSE.—Not in session.

Saturday, December 30.

SENATE.—Not in session.

HOUSE.—The two hours' session of the house to-day was a busy one and a number of bills were passed after they had been submitted to Objector Holman for inspection.

Humphrey of Wisconsin sought to secure the passage of a bill appropriating $100,000 for a public building in his state. It was obvious from the outset that this bill was doomed, and it was hardly necessary for the speaker to ask if there was objection. Both sides tried to make the most earnest opposition, and such a chorus has rarely been equaled even by the house. Mr. Humphrey offered to cut it down to $50,000, but this was emphatically sat down on, which caused the representative from the Badger State to declare that no more bills should pass to-day by unanimous consent.

Mr. Townshend called up a bill in relation to sugar in bonded warehouses, but it was soon evident that no more bills could be passed, and the house adjourned till Tuesday.

A Circular to Land Officers.

The following circular has been received at the different land offices:

General Land Office, Washington, D. C., Dec. 20, 1882.—To Registers and Receivers, United States Land Offices: Your attention is called to sec. 3, of the timber culture act of June 14, 1878, which provides "that if at any time after the filing of said affidavit, and prior to the issuing of the patent for said land, the claimant shall fail to comply with any of the requirements of this act, then and in that event such land shall be subject to entry under the homestead laws, or by some other person under the provisions of this act; provided, that the party making claim to said land, either as a homestead settler or under this act, shall give, at the time of filing his application, such notice to the original claimant as shall be prescribed by the rules established by the commissioner of the general land office; and the rights of the parties shall be determined as in other contested cases."

On the 14th ultimo the honorable secretary of the interior held in Frank Rundy's appeal, Oberlin, Kan., that this statute restricts contests against a prior timber culture entry to one who seeks to enter the land covered thereby under the homestead or timber culture laws, and that in the absence of such application there is no right of contest, nor does a preference right attach under section 2 of the act of May 14, 1880. You are therefore directed to dismiss all contest suits now pending in your office against timber culture entries coming within the purview of said decision. The filing of the application aforesaid is a condition precedent to the right of contest under said statue, and the party so applying must be qualified to make an entry.

These instructions are not to apply to entries contested on the ground of illegality at inception. (See case of Wallace Benedict vs. Frank D. Boyer, decided by the honorable secretary of the interior, Nov. 22, 1882, in the Reporter, December number 1882.) Very respectfully, N. C. McFARLAND, Commissioner.

Senator Sawyer's Views.

Senator Sawyer, in an interview, has expressed the belief that both the senate and the house will pass a tariff measure something similar to the report of the tariff commission; that congress will take off the 25 per cent. tariff on sugar, which it placed upon it in 1877; that internal revenue taxes will all be abolished except those on tobacco, beer spirits, and the capital stock in banks. He thinks the civil service reform bill is good as far as it goes; that the Republicans could have gone farther, but that it is safe to stop where it did, and see how the bill will work. He declined to speak about the Fitz-John Porter case, and expressed great confidence in the future of the Republican party.

Indictment of Gen. Reynolds.

The grand jury of Madison, Wis. on Wednesday returned three bills of indictment against Gen. Thomas Reynolds, first, for forging pension receipts; second, for forging pension affidavits; and third, for making false claims against the government of the United States, with intent to commit fraud. It now remains for Gen. Reynolds to plead to the bills "not guilty" or "guilty," and either stand trial or receive sentence.

NEWS CONDENSED.

RAILROAD RUMBLINGS.

The general managers of the Northwestern roads Thursday signed the new passenger agreement on Northwestern business which goes into effect Jan. 1. The important features in which the public are interested are the new passenger tariff, and the question of commissions. After many protestations of honesty of purpose the contract says: "The current passenger tariff rates between Chicago, Englewood, Washington Heights and Blue Island and St. Paul and Minneapolis are specified to be as follows: First-class, unlimited, $14; first-class, limited, $12.50; second-class and emigrant, $9. Between Milwaukee and St. Paul; First-class, unlimited, $11.35; first-class, limited, $10.50; second-class and emigrant, $8. Between Milwaukee and Minneapolis: First-class, unlimited, $11.60; first-class, limited, $10; second-class and emigrant, $8. On ironclad round trip, land tickets the rate between Chicago, Englewood, Washington Heights and Blue Island and St. Paul or Minneapolis, $14.40. Theatrical rates shall not be made for less than four persons and then shall be the usual reduction of 33⅓ per cent. The maximum commission is fixed in the following concisely worded section: From Jan. 1, 1883, no more than the following commissions will be paid on tickets reading from Chicago, Milwaukee, Englewood, Washington Heights and Blue Island to St. Paul or Minneapolis and points north, northeast and northwest thereof or vice versa; First-class, shall be $2; second-class, $1.50; third-class or emigrant, $1.50; first-class, round trip, $3.

It appears to be decided that the St. Paul company will close the gap between Dubuque and Farley, Iowa, early in the spring, and will also build the long-talked of extension of the Monroe branch from Monroe, Wis., to Dubuque, a distance of seventy miles. This construction will give the company a direct line from Milwaukee to Dubuque and thence to points in Iowa.

Mr. Thomas S. Lotz, agent of the Northern Pacific at Fargo, has sent in his resignation to take effect Jan. 1. He will return to St. Paul and engage in business other than railroading.

Northern Pacific securities are again on the advance, a heavy foreign demand for common having created unusual interest in that series.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

Lieut. John O'Connell, Eighth infantry, sentenced to make good a deficiency in his accounts of $1,479 while acting as assistant quartermaster at Benicia barracks, Cala., and be dismissed the service, has had the dismissal part remitted and the amount to be made good reduced to $184. The secretary of war says: The record of proceedings in this case discloses a most discreditable condition of affairs at the post of Benicia barracks during the period when the deficiency of coal charged against the accused occurred. Officers will be called upon to make restitution to the government in several sums due from each for irregular use of coal. It appears that Lieut. O'Connell, allowed the officers to have what coal they wanted without charge.

Reports have reached the Indian bureau from the Cherokee country, Indian Territory, to the effect that white men are erecting buildings and fencing off pastures in the Cherokee outlots. Commissioner Price has addressed a letter to Agent Tufts at Muskogee to warn the white herders to remove, with their stock, from the reservation, allowing twenty days for exit. If the herders fail to get out then, the agent is authorized to call upon the military and eject them.

By direction of Secretary Teller the following land agents and attorneys have been debarred from practice before the interior department and local land offices: George S. Bidwell, Mitchell, Dak., Orlanda J. Letcher, Mitchell, Dak., E. C. Carpenter, Beloit, Wis, D. J. Spaulding, Black River Falls, Wis., and J. L. Ayres, Mitchell, Dak. The disbarments are made because of the connection of the parties with recent land frauds.

A memorial, protesting against the passage of the bankrupt act, signed by 1,280 firms and individuals of New York city, representing all the principal branches of business, was presented to the senate by Mr. Lapham of New York. The memorialists state that the operation of the United States bankrupt law proved an injury to the business interests of the whole country.

The chief of engineers asks that $3,600,000 shall be appropriated by congress at his session for the commencement, continuance and completion of the forts on our sea coast and frontier. This sum is asked for work on the forts and not for the manufacture of guns or torpedoes.

A hot contest is in progress at Washington in regard to the postoffice at Winchester, Ill. The encumbent is the widow of a soldier and her administration has been satisfactory to the people. A blacksmith named Brennan has been selected by the powers that be.

A Star special says the implicated detectives are understood to be Meyers, McDevitt and Voss.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

Henry Trennett, a Milwaukee & St. Paul car repairer at Minneapolis met on Friday a sudden death. From appearances the man was engaged at his occupation, when one car was backed against another, catching his head within a narrow space, and crushing the skull apparently. The only external injury visible was a cut under and a little in front of the left ea and slight abrasions on the left shoulder.

Charles Heydler took a drink in a Columbus drug store, when the druggist's back was turned, but instead of brandy, the beverage proved to be Fowler's solution of arsenic. He will drink no more.

Several public institutions in Baltimore have been quarantined on account of the frightful spread of small pox in that city, there being over 1,000 cases in the city.

Large flour mills at Belfast were burned. One fireman was killed and three injured. Loss £40,000.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

A telegram received at the office of the Northern Pacific railroad in St. Paul from Dr. C. W. Nichols, at Fergus Falls, Thursday night, stated that Mr. Newton, the agent for the road who was shot at Wahpeton cannot live. Mr. G. W. Cross, superintendent of transportation, says that Mr. Newton is above reproach and the last man to be accused of crime, and will believe him innocent until proved guilty. He has telegraphed his sympathies to Mr. Newton's family. The Wahpeton paper states that the girl Nash has a reputation not entirely spotless and her father, who did the shooting, is a worthless fellow. The case is a sad one, especially as the community regards Mr. Newton as an innocent victim of a slanderous report having no foundation in facts.

In Moore county, Mo., three weeks ago, a young man named Staten got married and took his wife to his mother's house to live. A younger brother viewed the marriage with great disfavor, and after brooding over the matter two weeks, he arose from his bed Sunday morning, and without dressing went to his brother's room and shot and killed him while asleep by the wife's side, and then fled, but a few hours later returned and surrendered to the authorities. Threats of lynching the murderer were made, but investigation of the matter developed the fact that the young man is insane.

Loughton Valentine, of the celebrated Houghton stock farm, near Newburg, N. Y. has failed, just as all of his predecessors on that expensive farm had done before him. It is a model farm, has been largely devoted to experimental agriculture, and cost about $35,000 a year to run it, which was much above its income. During the past thirty years the half dozen or more owners of this farm have met similar misfortune, including Robert H. Berdell, ex-president of the Erie Railway.

The inauguration ceremonies took place in the senate chamber. The outgoing and incoming governors entered the chamber accompanied by their staffs and secretaries. Gov. Cornell read his address and was followed by Gov. Cleveland, who with much emotion, pronounced a eulogy upon the administration of Gov. Cornell. The party then retired to the executive chamber, where a reception was held by Gov. Cleveland.

The manufacturing statistics of Indiana, has complied by the bureau of statistics, for the year ending June 30, 1882, show the following totals: Number of establishments, 2,088; capital employed, $50,169,001; value of products $167,067,443; raw material used, $94,290,477, average number of males employed, 69,273; females, 3,698; total 72,971; wages paid, $23,944,804.

During November and December, 1882, Gov. Stephens of Georgia pardoned forty-nine convicts. Twelve of these were murderers, two murderers commuted, three criminal outrage, two for attempt to outrage, and five burglars. Gov. Stephens refuses to be interviewed, but says at the proper time will give his reasons for issuing the pardons.

The second National bank at Jefferson, O., has gone into voluntary liquidation, $50,000 of its funds being missing, the individual notes of the absconding cashier, S. F. Fuller, having been deposited to make up the amount on the books. Stock speculation in New York was the cause of his acts. H. St John, assistant cashier, was Fuller's accomplice.

The city of New York has accepted the proposition of the banks to settle all pending litigations in relation to the taxes of 1880 upon the basis of payment by the banks of the full amount of taxes levied upon their shareholders for that year, without interest and without costs to their party.

Postoffices established; Lebau, Walworth county, Dak; Stanton, Mercer county, Dak. Postmasters commissioned: John Bjorga, Thompson, Dak., J. A. Letford, Sanborn, Minn.; C. Bonney, Bondul, Wis.; B. F. Bryant; La Crosse, Wis.; D. T. Curlu, Lebeau, Dak.; J. McGrath, Stanton, Dak.

The pig iron and furnace men of the Lehigh and Schuylkill valleys will soon meet in Philadelphia or New York to take action on the tariff commission's report. They claim that the proposed reduction on pig iron will affect their business disastrously.

This year's work at the anthracite coal mines of Pennsylvania will be the largest on record. With the outputs for the present week, the shipments will aggregate 29,500,000 tons or nearly 1,000,000 tons more than the product of 1881.

The determination of the state treasurer of Tennessee not to pay January interest on the state debt, has caused much indignation, both in the state and eastern money markets.

They are talking of a special election in Indiana to determine the prohibition question.

The jobbing trade of St. Paul shows an increase this year over 1881 of over $10,000,000.

Over in Oregon they lynched three cowboys "on general principles."

RECORD OF CRIME.

A Fort Dodge, (Iowa) dispatch says: Two men, named Jeffrel and Charles Beckwith, were arrested recently at Humboldt by Sheriff Miles, at the instance of E. Lathrop, a resident of this county, charged with having spirited away his granddaughter, a child of thirteen years. The Beckwiths are brothers, are aged respectively twenty-five and twenty-three years, and claim to live near Blue Earth, Minn. The elder one has been in the employ of Mr. Lathrop as a laborer for six months, and persuaded the girl to go with him, pledging her protection and support. The three stopped over night at a farmhouse, Jeffrel representing the child as his wife and occupying the same bed with her. The sheriff arrived here this evening with the parties. The girl is an interesting and seemingly bright child. She regrets her error, but does not seem to fully realize her outrage and disgrace.

William Walton a coal miner at West Bellville, Mo., shot Jane Milbaum because she would not marry him. He then shot himself. Both died almost instantly. Miss Milbaum was twenty-one years old, a daughter of William Milbaum of What Cheer, Ia., was acting as housekeeper for Mr. S. Stephenson, and was to be married to him in a short time. Walton was an Englishman, was infatuated with the girl, and determined that if she would not marry him she should not be the wife of another.

C. M. Silman manager of the freight and transportation department of the Furst & Bradley manufacturing company, Chicago, has been missing for some days and the firm claims that he has absconded and that a partial examination of his books shows embezzlements of $5,000 and probably thousands more, accomplished by pocketing small sums in the way of rebates for overcharging by railways.

Mrs. Emma Stillwell, an Ohio female who should have lived in the time of the Bergias, on her death bed has confessed that she committed three murders, and attempted the life of her husband. One of the victims of the unnatural mother was her fourteen year old daughter, whom she strangled, with the assistance of her brother.

Reisenhausen & Gibson, who fought a prize fight near Rochester, Pa., last week, which was declared a draw, fought again Wednesday at New Castle, for a purse of $800. At the end of the twentieth round, Gibson failed to come up. Both men were terribly beaten and had to be carried off the ground.

Jack Moony, who murdered Annis, the brakeman, at Mill Grove, Mo., Wednesday night, was arrested at Wilton, Iowa, and taken to Davenport to await a requisition. Annis was shot through the lungs, stomach and thigh.

Bessie Williams and Josephine Green, two heavy-weight colored women, fought four rounds in New York for a purse of $20, the latter being "knocked out."

Harry Brown, a sporting man of means of San Francisco, will put up $5,000 that J L. Sullivan cannot knock out or stop Jem Mace in four rounds.

May Isabella Martin has been sentenced to be hanged at Emporia, Kansas, for killing Mrs. Loroine Kuger.

PERSONAL NEWS NOTES.

Miss Bessie Grattan of Nevada, the guest of Senator and Mrs. Jones for two seasons past, was married Thursday evening to Judge Earnest Diechman, ex-minister to Columbia and now of Wisconsin. The wedding took place at St. John's church, Rev. Dr. Leonard reading the service. The bride entered on the arm of Senator Jones, her mother, Mrs. Grattan, being escorted by the groom, followed by Mrs. Jones and Miss Sterling, who has also been a guest of Senator and Mrs. Jones for two seasons.

Marie Louise Dillon, who has just secured a divorce from the actor John Dillon, on the ground of desertion and habitual drunkenness, was a Miss Hernandez, and she became Mr. Dillon's second wife at Sioux City, Oct. 3, 1872. She says he deserted her in May, 1880. Mrs. Dillon is a petite, light-complexioned, and rather pretty woman apparently not over twenty-five or thirty years old.

H. Dudley & Co. brokers in canned goods in New York made an assignment Saturday. The failure is attribute to over trading and depreciation. Liabilities are reported from $100,000 to $200,000. The assets are believed to be good. John J. Brewer & Son, wholesale dealers in hardware, failed and made an assignment. Their liabilites are estimated from $50,000 to $75,000.

Later developments in the sensational wedding at Yankton show that Sister Mary Paul was guilty of duplicity which is not creditable to any lady. She repeatedly declared that she would not marry Dr. Ross, though the permission of the authorities of the convent to do so, after the cancellation of her vows, was offered; and then—became his wife.

A race riot occurred at Oconee Ga., Saturday. Asa Lawson was killed and Marshall Webster and son William were mortally wounded. All were white men. Three colored brothers, Handy, Jefferson and Squire Washington, were dangerously wounded. Several others of both races were injured.

Thomas B. Connery, who has been very creditably filling the editorial chair of the New York Herald, has been granted an indefinite leave of absence, and will take a season of recreation in Europe. In the meantime Edward Flynn, of the Evening Telegram, takes charge of the Herald.

Harry Knox, son of Henry M., the public examiner, and one of the brightest boys in St. Paul, has just received the appointment of clerk to the receiver of the Pacific bank in Boston, Mass., with a salary of $2,000.

The Rev. Dr. Rankin, the well-known Congregational pastor in Washington, has received a call to the Euclid avenue church in Cleveland, Ohio, and it is feared by his present congregation that he will accept.

Christian Tinman, who recently rescued two girls from a burning building in Providence, was called to the mayor's office on Christmas' and presented with $375 in currency and a suit of clothes.

The body of Chauncey W. Goff, the missing cashier of the Union Steamboat company of Buffalo, has been found in the canal in that city. It is believed that he was murdered.

The Jewell family of Ipswich, Connecticut, have just discovered that they hold a claim of $1,250,000 against the United States for money advanced by their ancestors in revolutionary times.

Col. C.E. Bostwick of Duluth, who so mysteriously disappeared Nov. 21, has been heard from and will be back next week. The news created quite an excitement in Duluth.

Lady McNaghten, a daughter of "Bull Run" Russell, has eloped from Coleraine, Ireland, with the agent of MacArtney estates, leaving seven children behind.

Lieutenant Danenhower, now ill, will, as soon as able, appear before the Jeanette board on behalf of Jerome J. Collins.

J. E. Johnson, who published the first newspaper in Omaha, died in that city on Wednesday.

Eliza Manning Hawthorne, the only sister of Nathaniel Hawthorne, died at Beverly, Mass.

FOREIGN NEWS GOSSIP.

Count Von Wimpffen, the Austro-Hungarian ambassador, at Paris, committed suicide Saturday. He left his home in a carriage at ten o'clock Saturday morning, after having tenderly embraced his children. An hour and a-half later he alighted from the carriage in the Avenue Marceau and leaning against a building drew a revolver and shot himself in the right temple, the ball passing out through the opposite side of the forehead. During the last few days Count Von Wimpffon exhibited considerable mental excitement, caused by announcements connected with his official duties and the furnishing of a new house which he was to occupy as headquarters of the Austro-Hungarian embassy.

London Special: The Rhine and its tributaries, the Neckar, the Main, the Inn, and the Danube are all rising, and already have done great damage, while in the districts along the Rhine, from whither the floods have just receded, the danger of a repetition of disaster is becoming more and more imminent. There has been a ceaseless fall of rain along the Rhine, and from Lake Constance to Cologne it continues to rise rapidly. Numerous bridges and dams have already been washed out, and more are threatened. A number of persons were gathered on a bridge near Larrach Baden, watching the torrents, when the structure suddenly gave way and twenty persons were drowned.

The most tangible thing in Ireland is the distress and misery of the people, in the mountain districts particularly, in the places where there are hundreds of excited families without shelter and starving. The information about these is derived chiefly from the catholic priests, whose own resources are exhausted, and about whose dwellings the unfortunate creatures are gathered, begging piteously for a potato or a pound of corn meal. There are no members of the human race whose condition is so abjectly wretched as that of the starving people in the West of Ireland.

Nine of the principal culprits out of the twenty-one Bedouins implicated in the murder of Professor Palmer's party, have been captured together with the wives and other relatives of the remaining important criminals, who will be held as hostages. The murderers of Palmer and Gill are among the prisoners. Sufficient evidence has been collected for the trial of the accused.

Pen-picture of Rt. Rev. Edward W. Benson, primate-elect of England: Medium height, robust, fair, with a strong-lined face, large chin, thin lips, and an air of mingled firmness, endurance and mildness. In preaching he is forcible and earnest, but makes no attempt at showy eloquence. In conversation he is fluent and most cordial.

London Special: The predictions of want and suffering in Ireland which Davitt made months ago have been verified to everybody's satisfaction, and all classes of people have begun to realize that the condition of a large number of persons is such as to demand immediate relief.

The news of the probable appointment of Count Ardrassy as minister of foreign affairs causes considerable comment in London, as it was entirely unexpected. It is argued that if Andrassy should be called to the ministry it would be evidence of a serious condition of affairs.

The house of Hapsburg is celebrating its 600th anniversary befitting the occasion, and the elite of the empire are gathered at Austria's gay capital.

John J. Slater Relieved by Congress.

Congress has passed a bill for the relief of John J. Slater, late first lieutenant of company K, eighth Minnesota volunteers. He was dismissed from the service in 1864 on the recommendation of Gen. Sibley, for failing to sign the pay rolls of his company while temporarily in command. His defense was that there were some matters as to bounty which should appear on the rolls, and which he did not understand. With his dismissal he lost all pay and allowances. No court of inquiry or court martial was ordered. The senate committee, who reported the bill, are of the opinion that the punishment inflicted on Lieutenant Slater was unduly severe. The bill grants Mr. Slater an honorable discharge as of the date of his dismissal, and orders that the records of the company be amended accordingly, provided that he shall receive no pay or allowance after that date.

Constitutional Amendment Petitions.

The following is the copy of one of the petitions now being distributed all over Minnesota. Petitions of the same character are also being distributed among the non-voters, and all will be presented to the legislature in January for its consideration:

To the legislature of the State of Minnesota: We, the undersigned, non-voters of the ——— senatorial district, county of———, do hereby petition your honorable body to submit to the people of this state, for their approval or rejection, an amendment to our constitution, which shall, in express terms, prohibit the manufacture or sale, or keeping for sale as a beverage, any kind of intoxicating liquors, including distilled, fermented or vinuous, and that such an amendment be submitted to the people at an especial election, to be held on the fourth Tuesday in June, 1884, for that purpose. And your petitioners will ever pray.

DEATH OF GAMBETTA.

The Distinguished French Statesman Breathes His Last After Days of Mortal Anguish.

Leo Gambetta died at 3:30 a. m., Monday. His death agony lasted two hours. The physicians state that his death was due to pyemia, caused by suppressed erysipelas. A clot of blood formed in the heart and suffocated the deceased.

A state funeral is expected to be given. The death of Gambetta has created an immense sensation here. Groups were gathered on the boulevards by 9 o'clock this morning discussing it. It is reported that he will be buried at Nice, beside his mother. President Grevy was much affected by the news. Gambetta left no political testament. He made a private will Saturday. The papers reporting his death are selling on every street and crowds are struggling to procure them. Telegrams were sent President Grevy and other authorities immediately after his death. Gambetta died in a state of unconsciousness, but in the course of the afternoon he exclaimed "Jesuis perdu. Il est inutile de dissimuler; mais j'ai tant souffert que cesera une deliverance." [I am lost. It is useless to deny it; but I have suffered so much that it will be a deliverance.]

About three weeks ago he was shot in the hand, and to this slight cause are due the physical ailments which have just culminated in his death. There are three statements to the nature of his shooting. One is that it was done accidentally while handling a revolver; another that his mother, an ignorant peasant woman, having become enraged at him for some reason shot him; and one scandalous version has it that he was shot by a Jewish mistress. This woman, the story goes, had been occupying Gambetta's box at the theater. Gambetta afterwards forbade her going; but she went, nevertheless, and found the statesman's box occupied by another mistress a woman, of noble birth. The bullet followed the line of the thumb and came out at the forearm, midway between the wrist and elbow.

A Minnesota Sensation.

A dispatch from Fergus Falls says that Constable Lacy returned to Pelican Rapids Wednesday morning with the runaway Mrs. Deith, having found her alone in Grand Forks, her paramour having there left her with an unpaid hotel bill and without a cent of money. The officer first found trace of the couple at Fargo, where Graham registered under the name of Monroe. Thence they were followed to Hillsboro and Grand Forks, where the officer found the name of "M. Moore, St. Paul," upon the register, but a railroad conductor had advised Graham of the officer's presence in the city and given him time to get away toward the British possessions. Mrs. Deith's story is that she had been induced to go with S. B. Graham on the representation that he had procured a divorce for her and would marry her at Fargo. There he refused to have the ceremony performed, and told her that the divorce was fraudulent. She wanted to leave him at once, but was not permitted until when at Grand Forks she found out that Constable Lacy was in town, and knowing that she would be protected, she withstood even Graham's threats to shoot, and the man had to skip to save himself from arrest and leave the woman to be taken home by the officer.

Vanderbilt Prophesies Peace.

In an interview, Wm. H. Vanderbilt states that the object of his trip to Cuba is simply for relaxation. In talking upon plans which it was said were being considered: "I will say to you," said Mr. Vanderbilt, with a smile, "that I expect the roads will all be operated in harmony. Peace accomplishes more than war. The railroads are all doing a good business, and when they were fighting, their general percentages were no larger. When they come to foot up at the end of the year they found their shares in the business were the same. It was a question whether they should keep peace and earn a million or so a year, or go to war and not increase their proportions. I do not think the people are benefited by these wars. I look for nothing but peace among the roads, and I hear of nothing else."

DALLYING WITH SPIRITS.

Mr Cumberland's Mind Reading—Strange and Successful Experiments.

From the New York Times, December 2.

Mr. Stuart C. Cumberland gave an informal reception to members of the press at the Everett House last evening explaining and illustrating his powers of mind-reading. Mr. Cumberland's "experiments," as he termed them, were wholly impromptu, and were designed by each of his visitors in turn. He claimed the power of being able to interpret the will of any one present, and gave illustrations.

He being absent from the room, watched by a committee, a visitor took a dime from his pocket, touched with it first the knob on the closet door and then the pendant of the gas-fixture. The coin was then given to another person, who secreted it under the lining of a silk hat on the mantel. Mr. Cumberland was then called, and entered the room blindfolded. He seized the hand of the owner of the coin, held it a moment to his forehead, and then, rapidly crossing the room, laid his finger upon the knob which had been touched. Hesitating then a moment, he moved under the chandelier and almost instantly indicated the pendant as the second place of contact. Turning quickly, he then grasped the hand of the one who had hidden the dime, and without a moment's delay produced the coin from its hiding-place in the hat.

The Times' representative was asked to think of any object in the room while Mr. Cumberland was absent. He focused his soul upon a lurid watch-charm glowing upon the waistcoat of Major Pond, but turned his eyes steadily toward the annunciator knob at the end of the room. Mr. Cumberland was then called. He entered the room blindfolded, as before, merely touched the Times' man's hand, and then ran across the room and lunged at Major Pond's midriff, to the gentleman's consternation, and indicated the watch-charm as the object thought of.

A Wall street man was asked to try and recollect, if he could think of anything that could be expressed in numbers. While the mind-reader was out, the Wall street man smiled ghastly, and whispered to the company that he would think of the exact number of cocktails he had filtered since the afternoon call. Mr. Cumberland entered as before, touched the wild spectator's finger-tip and wrote a large 9 upon the wall. The multitude roared, the mayor applauded, and the Wall street man sank back with a gasp, acknowledged that the number was correct, called up a small, but vigorous boy, and set 'em up for all hands round. This experiment was unanimously voted to be the most thoroughly interesting of the evening.

We have received as many as a dozen orders for the weekly Pioneer Press during the past two weeks unaccompanied by the cash. While we should be pleased to fill those orders, we are unable to do so for the simple reason that an order to the Pioneer Press is n. g. without the almighty dollar. We do offer the weekly Press and the JOURNAL to our subscribers for the small sum of $2.50 per annum CASH IN ADVANCE. If any one doubts that let him put up his cash and see how quickly his order is honored. We also club with other papers but ONLY upon the same terms—SPOT CASH one year in advance. [36-4t]

Duluth Bee: A short time since Capt. Pate, in charge of a corps of engineers, was sent out by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad Company to survey, and also look over the line already surveyed by the Duluth & Winnipeg road from Crookston to Duluth. The party run the line and arrived here some days ago, but few knew anything of it. What does this mean? Does it mean that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba road want to steal a march on the other company, and while they are arranging about who is to be "boss" slip in here and take the cake. It is evident that something of a game is being played.

Capt. Castle, of the St. Paul Dispatch is, on general principles, a pretty level headed individual, but it seems that even he is not infallible. He is 'way off his base on the U. S. Senatorship business and is going to get badly left, because Senator Windom is going to win and that, too, on his merits—because he deserves to win. Monday's issue (which the Capt. calls Dec. 1st, 1883) of the Dispatch, says:

"How does the press of Minnesota stand on the "Windom question?" Our columns, during the past three months have teemed with expressions of their unbought and unbiased views. It has been the custom of the hireling organs of the rings and their Boss, to sneer at the papers opposing Windom as few in number, 'characterless' and inconsequential. We give below conclusive proof of the falsity of that allegation. The following is a list of the exchanges which come to our table, all of which opposed to Windom's re-election, all of which are opposed to the domination of the caucus, and from all of which we have liberally quoted on these points within a very brief period. Read the roll."

Here follows a list of papers, among which appears the Enterprise, of Moorhead, the Bee, of Duluth, Telegram, of Fergus Falls, and a great many other papers that have been started within the past few months and the "Crookston Independent!" After his list he says that these papers are all recognized as the oldest, and most ably edited papers in the State. The Captain is certainly off his reckoning. The fact is that many of his so-called "old" newspapers are but a few months old, and most of those on their last legs; the Moorhead Enterprise was dead before he published his article and the Crookston Independent was never printed at all in Crookston. We have known Crookston for the past ten years, ever since there was any Crookston here and we know that no paper called the Independent was ever printed in Crookston. The JOURNAL is the first paper ever printed in this city and has nearly completed its sixth year. The Captain has a bad case and evidently knows it.

U. S. LAND OFFICE.

CROOKSTON, Minn., Dec. 27, 1882.

Patents for the following named persons have been received at this office and are now ready for delivery upon presentation of receipts:

Andreus, Joseph A
Anders, Charles G
Aldrich Curtis
Anderson, Ole T
Anderson, Heine
Anderson, Swan
Bischoff, Mathew
Drouillet, Gedeon
Burger, Jacob S
Bellnehe, Charles H
Box, William N
Britton, Warren A.
Butler, Bernhert M
Barrett, Norbert
Burkhard, John P
Clifford, Michael
Campbell, S Fanny
Christiansen, Nils
Crowell, James W.
Collins, Stanhope L
Clark, Oliver P
Campbell, Mathew
Dolze, Joseph
Dandenean, Narcisse
Dandenean, Jean Bapt'st
Doer, Joseph
Danras, Alfred
Dainault, Gilbert
Dinehart, Zacheus
Day, Calvin K
Dejarlis, Charles
Evans, Eddie J
Framberg, August
Fuller, Charles O
Gosler, Louis C
Gaylord, Levi P
Grover, Joseph
Gunderson, Gredoon
Gervais, Jennie
Gregoire, Felix
Goodroad, Peter
Garneche, Joseph
Goodin, Frank
Gray, James Kirkman
Gray, Joseph
Gjertsen, Jens
Helmer, Charles M
Hanson, Norman
Hall, Wilber C
Hogensen, Bendt
Hovland, John A
Hoch, George G
Hillgrove, Sarah
Hall, John
Huber, Louis
Haaness, Saverin A
Herbranson, Nils
Herfendahl, John Olsen
Herman, Edward
Isaakson, James
Joly, Peter
Johnson, Ed
Jervis, Lewis
Jewell, Willington H
Jackson, Silas D
Johnson, Andrew
Jacobson, Cornelius
Justus, Daniel
Johannesson, Jane H
Johnson, Ann C T
Krabbenhoft, Wolf
King, John
Larson, J Swen
Laballe, William
Lo, A Maggit

Lapointe, Laurence
LaDuc, Samuel P
Lien, Peder C
Matton, Henry
Misner, Harvey O
Misner, Charles H
McDonald, Patrick
Miro, Ole A
Morinville, Louis
McClure & Clarke
Myhre, Peter A
McLean, Allen
Nelson, Knud
Moore, Sylvester
Miller, Anthony
Mauritsen, Lars
Morrow, William J
Myhre, Martin
Mathews, Lois
McKinstry, William
Metz, Theodore
Norton, John C
Nelson, Nels
Nymand, Ole
Oleson, Ole E
Olson, Peter E
Oleson, John
Perkins, William H
Peterson, Andrew P
Paine, Amanda A
Perault, Zecherin
Peck, Frank F
Palmer, Henry
Paulunsen, Peter
Ross, Nehemiah D
Ruedy, Peter
Ral, Chester Olson
Batty, Max
Remillard, Joseph
Ranche, John B
Ritchie, Robert
Rischoe, Fred
Roy, John
Sitter, John
Snennlng, Mary
Suennlng, Anne
Smith, Pat
St Martin, Manuel
Swenson, Peder
Sturtevant, Charles H
Steenerson, Andrew
Saceyare, Alexis
Taine, John
Tibbin, Hugh
Tonquet, Etienne
Tontant, Gaspard
Teal, Robert
Turgeon, Joseph
Thompson, Robert
Tracey, James
Thouson, Thomas
Thompson, Iver
Thomas, Isaac M
Tummerdahl, Ole P
Thompson, Andrew
Vliet, Dennis
Waldron, Jacob C
Ward, Robert E
Waddskamper, Lewis
Weisman, Joseph
Walde, William
Ward, Hubert
Wright, Christian H
Wood, Franklin L
Yotts, Bernhard

FARM NOTES.

From the Minnesota Tribune.

FEEDING PIGS DURING THE WINTER.

The Drover's Journal remarks that there could be no better feed for pigs in the winter, than good, well cured clover cut fine and soaked in warm water having also a small amount of corn meal soaked with it. Pigs will also thrive rapidly on carrots, turnips and potatoes, where they are fed in a proper way, that is, mixed in judiciously with other feed. Potatoes can often be fed to pigs and young hogs to the best kind of advantage so far as economy is concerned, when the potato crop is abundant and prices are low. It is always better to feed them in this way than to move them from the farm. They should be boiled and have a small amount of corn meal mixed with them.

COLORED MEN AS FARMERS.

As the year draws to a close, says the Tallahasse Floridian, the results of farming operations by those not engaged in truck-gardening are being ascertained, and some colored men are among those who have been very successful in their planting operations this season. Most colored men in Leon county farm on a small scale, which, however, is no drawback to successful and profitable farming. Primus Nelums, a colored man farming on Mr. H. S. Elliott's Lake Jamonia plantation, with one small steer to do his plowing, has this season raised enough corn, fodder and other truck, to last him until the next crop is harvested, and has nine bales of cotton to sell for cash. Mike Gordon, also colored, cropping on the plantation of Mrs. Cotten, with a bovine to pull his plow, has more than $300 to be placed on the profit side of his farm account for 1882.

FROZEN CABBAGE.

It has been discovered that cabbage may be prevented from rotting after freezing by simply cutting them open, or by making one or two incisions in them with a knife. After freezing, the cabbages commence to rot in the center, caused by the heating inside. When opened sufficiently to let out the heated gases and enable them to become cold in the center they will not decay.

FOOD FOR MILK.

In every question pertaining to milk the cow should be recognized as all important. Since science has settled the question that milk is simply liquified cells, and not a secretion from the blood, the capacity and excellence of the machine have become prominent. It has also simplified the question of profitable food for the cow during the milking period.

The supply of milk depends essentially upon the rapid growth of new cells in the milk glands. These cells consist largely of proteine. The caseine and fats (cheese and butter elements) are formed from the proteine; hence profitable dairying must depend largely on the amount of proteine contained in the food and made on cheap food; where rations, rich in proteine, are food, such as clover and oil meal, the following results may be noticed:

(1.) A decided increase in the quantity of milk and very little shrinkage for a long time.

(2.) Considerable gain in the solid matter of the milk, as shown by chemical test, or by the increased butter and cheese production.

(3.) A gain in the quality of the milk where fodders rich in carbohydrates and fats are given; the slight increase in quantity and richness of the milk is not due to any direct action these have, but to the assistance they afford the proteine in preventing its oxydation. Animals fed mainly on sugar beets, potatoes or corn will give considerable milk, but is it done at the expense of the proteine of the body, and after a while the animal will suddenly waste away.

In view of these well established facts, what shall be the economical milk ration for farmers?

Calculated upon the basis of the amount of proteine contained in each, and taking corn as the unit of value when corn is worth 50 cents per 100, pounds, the following articles will approximately be worth per 100; Corn, 50 cents; oats, 60 cents; barley, 55 cents; wheat, 65 cents; wheat bran, 70 cents; oil meal, $1.55; clover hay, 80 cents; timothy, 50 cents; potatoes, 10 cents.

This is not absolutely correct, because the carbohydrates and fats in some of these would materially aid the proteine and hence would be worth relatively more than above represented.

It is, however, sufficiently correct to show that the cheap foods for milk in Iowa are well cured clover hay, wheat bran with a little corn meal and oil meal added.—Prof. S. A. Knapp, in Iowa Homstead.

Pembina Pioneer: Pass him around, brethren.—We mean S. K. Hunt who claims to be the champion heel-and-toe pacer in the world. He took a skip-and-go-as-you-please from a hotel bill as well as a printing bill.

Charlie Hicks, however, entered the race and came up with the champion at St. Vincent, and succeeded it getting a part of his hotel bill. We are left, however, with about six dollars' worth of experience, and the only thing left for us to do is to pass him around to the craft. "Catch on, boys".

Seeley's Exchange.

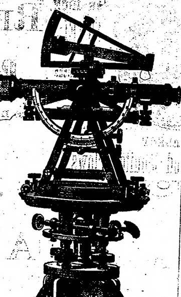
This popular resort is now fully completed, having been artistically painted and papered, the walls being adorned with hundreds of fine pictures, and Charlie is prepared to greet his friends with his usual genial smile. His stock is the best in the market and his lunch table, spread from 10 to 12, is a surprise to the natives. He extends a cordial invitation to the boys to drop in and see him.

O. L. HAMERY,

CIVIL ENGINEER,

DEPUTY COUNTY SURVEYOR.

Having a new and complete set of Instruments I am now prepared to do all kinds of work in my line with promptness and dispatch. Satisfaction guaranteed. address



O. L. HAMERY,

Fertile, Polk County, Minnesota.

POLK COUNTY.

Polk County, one of the newest in the State is 45 miles north and south by 79 miles east and west. Previous to the year 1872, the year in which the St. P. M. & M. R. R. entered her borders and was completed to Crookston, the whole of this broad fertile area was as a wilderness—a wilderness, however, of natural beauty. Here the untutored red man trapped the lesser game and hunted the buffalo that roamed at will over these fertile prairies by thousands and fattened upon the nutritious native grasses. The face of the country is well diversified by woodlands, lakes and streamlets the principal woodlands lying along the water courses. The principal rivers are, the which forms the western boundary line This river is navigable for boats of from 300 to 400 tonnage as far south as Grand Forks, at any stage of water and as far south as Moorhead at a high stage of water. The east bank is fringed with a heavy growth of hard wood timber, and in places is 100 feet above the average water level. Nearly, if not quite all of the government lands along its course are taken for settlement and cultivation.

RED RIVER OF THE NORTH,

THE RED LAKE RIVER.

The largest and deepest stream in the county has its source in Red Lake and discharges its waters into the Red River at Grand Forks. It is navigable as far as Fisher (by rail 11 miles from Crookston) though boats have ascended as high as Crookston. The banks are high and dry and well timbered. Its sinuous course and rapid movement afford many excellent water powers of which some are being improved and put in working order. The government land along its course is nearly, if not all, taken by actual settlers and fine farms attest the prosperity of their happy and prosperous owners. Its chief tributaries are the Thief, the Black and the Clearwater, all finely wooded, the latter having a large amount of white pine along its banks which is anually cut and rafted to market down the Clearwater and Red Lake Rivers. Along the course of these three tributaries much fine government land is yet in market though the sure coming of the Duluth & Winnipeg railroad has induced a settlement unprecedented and the time is not far distant when these fine lands will all be taken.

CROOKSTON.

The county seat of this magnificent empire of Polk County, is beautifully situated in a neck of the Red Lake River which encircles her in a loving embrace and by that same token gives her an advantage of location unrivalled by no city in the Northwest, as it furnishes her a water power sufficient to run saw-mills, flour-mills and manufactories of all kinds. A short canal, cut across the neck of the peninsular formed by the river, does the business, giving a sufficient fall in a half mile to furnish a magnificent power and plenty of room for mills and manufactories. In the spring of 1878 our city, then unincorporated, was a little hamlet of between 150 and 200 souls, with three general stores, one drug store, two lumber yards, two agricultural implement firms and two hotels. To-day we have a population of over 3,000, six stores of general merchandise; Four large ready made clothing houses; four stores that carry ready made clothing, ladies and gent's dress goods, boots and shoes, hats and caps &c., &c.; two large drug stores; two jewelry shops; three banks; six grocery stores; seven hotels and 14 or 15 boarding houses; three large flour and feed stores; two harness shops; three hardware stores; three tin shops; three meat markets; five agricultural implement firms four contractors and builders who furnish work for a dozen carpenters or so apiece; four boss masons who make more work than 50 men can do; eleven lawyers; seven physicians; four ministers; two dentists; thre blacksmiths shops; three barber shops; one tailor shop; three livery, sale and feed stables; three paint shops; three lumber yards, ten sample rooms; three boot and shoe shops; one photograph gallery; one nursery; three restaurants; seven confectionery shops; two bakries; two millinery shops; five dressmaking establishments; one furniture shop; a dozen or so real estate dealers, U. S. Land Office; Railroad Land Office and two newspapers. Our city also has a mayor and council men, has a fine brick engine house, an engine and a No. 1 fire company to man her. She also has many fine brick residences and store buildings a fine large court house costing upwards of $25,000 and the National Bank building (brick) costing $10,000, and the Merchants' Bank (also brick) costing $10,000.

1883. 1833.

THE

ST. PAUL GLOBE!

DAILY, SUNDAY AND WEEKLY.

ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

SPECIAL WIRE FROM ST. PAUL

TO THE EASTERN NEWS CENTERS.

FULL ASSOCIATED PRESS PRIVILEGERS.

ISSUED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

THE ST. PAUL GLOBE is now acknowledged to be the

LEADING PAPER IN THE NORTWEST.

THE GLOBE has recently been enlarged to an

EIGHT-PAGE PAPER.

It is cut, folded and trimmed. It has a special wire for its exclusive use, which connects its editorial room direct with Chicago, New York and Washington. It has, besides, full Associated Pres privileges, which supplemented to its special telegraph wire puts it in the front rank of American newspapers.

Politically the GLOBE opposes all monopolies and stands by the interests of the people. It is not chained down, but meets issues as they arise fearlessly and vigorously.

It invites subscriptions

BECAUSE IT

FURNISHES ALL THE NEWS better than any other paper.

BECAUSE IT

Furnishes the BEST MARKET REPORTS.

BECAUSE IT

Stands by the INTEREST OF THE PEOPLE.

BECAUSE IT

Approves the right and opposes the wrong, regardless of who suffers thereby.

THE GLOBE invites those not already enrolled to make a trial subscription. You can obtain it of your newsdealer or order it direct from the publication office. Inspect it and judge for yourself. All editions postage paid.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE DAILY GLOBE.

SEVEN ISSUES PER WEEK.

DAILY and SUNDAY GLOBE, ONE DOLLAR PER MONTH.

SIX ISSUES PER WEEK—BY MAIL.

One month	$0.90
Three months	2.50
Six months	5.00
Twelve months	10.00

THE WEEKLY GLOBE.

THE WEEKLY GLOBE is an eight-page paper, the same size as the DAILY GLOBE. It is the best paper for the farmers in the State. It is send to any address, one year, postage paid, FOR ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTEEN CENTS.

For three months on trial for 25 cents.

All subscriptions payable invariably in advance.

Address,

GLOBE PRINTING COMPANY,

St. Paul, Minn.

GOLDEN STAR

WHEAT

The Best Wheat in the Market!

Yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre and weighs 64 pounds per bushel.

Price $2.50 per Bushel.

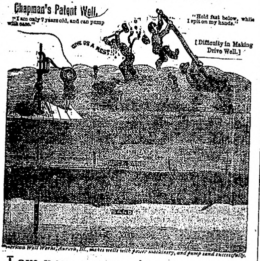
☞ Leave orders at Juve & Bergland's or Eiken Bros., where samples may be seen.

T. O. BERGLAND.

NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spring stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respectfully,
C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.
Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!



Chapman's Patent Well.
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
"Give us a rest!"
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
Quicksand
Sand

American Well Works, Aurora, Ill., makes wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.

Address R. W. RANNEY,
Carman, Polk County, Minn.

CHICAGO

Dry Goods House

Main Street, Crookston, Minn.,

CONTAINS ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS OF

Dry Goods, Notions,

GENTS' AND LADIES'

FURNISHING GOODS,

----Trunks and Valises,---

Cloaks, Boots and Shoes, Clothing,

HATS AND CAPS,

Ever brought to this city. Our purpose is to sell goods as low as they can be bought in St. Paul. It will be for your interest to

CALL AND EXAMINE STOCK AND PRICES

☞ BEFORE YOU PURCHASE. ☜

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY

READY, FIRE!

WOOD

Is much better than kerosene and paper--cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to

LEECH & McMANUS,

OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

Wood Office and Yard on Elm Street, east of Planing Mill.

CLOSING OUT SALE.

Our Immense Stock of

CLOTHING,
OVERCOATS,
UNDERWEAR,
CAPS,
Ladies' Cloaks,
Furs,

And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.

HACK & GALLASCHE,
Opposite Merchants' Bank.

LIVERY, FEED.

—AND—

SALE STABLES

Two doors north of U. S. Land Office

Main St., Crookston, Minn.

T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.

Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.

For a stylish rig, by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

—THE—

RED LAKE FALLS

FLOURING

MILL

Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.

BUSE & COLBENTSON,

PROPRIETORS,

RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos

—AND—

Organs

W. W. KIMBALL CO.

Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. [35 tf]

CrookstonNurseries.

Tree-Claim-Stock.

Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $5.00 per acre, also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.

H ABELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT,

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all

CALL AND SEE ME

At my New Store on Main Street.

A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. B. KAUFER & SON

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

and are now prepared

you furnish everything in their line as cheaply as else can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere else in the New Northwest. Our work is guaranteed to be as good as any and our prices as reasonable. Call and see! H. KAUFER & SON.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Fournet & Herron,

DEALERS IN

FLOUR,
FEED,
CORN,
OATS,
POTATOES

Robert Street,

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

TIME TABLE

Of the Arrival and Departure of Malls at the Post Office at Crookston, Minn.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
Grand Forks, Fisher,	10:30 a. m.	10:45 a. m.
South	7:30 a. m. 11:30 a. m.*	4:00 p. m.* 8:45 p. m.
North	7:30 a. m.	8:45 p. m.
Red Lake Falls, Gentilly,	2:30 p. m†	9:00 a. m.‡

*Carries only mall to St. Paul, Minneapolis and beyond.

†Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

‡Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE

FOR CROOKSTON.

GOING NORTH

		ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No.	Passenger,	9:55 p. m.	10:10 p. m.
" 5	"	10:30 a. m.	10:40 a. m.
" 11	freight.	4:30 p. m.	8:00 p. m.
" 13	"	7:20 p. m.	6:30 a. m.
" 17	"	5:45 p. m.

GOING SOUTH.

		ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 2	Passenger,	4:40 a. m.	4:40 p. m.
" 6	"	4:30 p. m.	11:15 a. m.
" 12	Freight,		5:55 p. m.
" 14	"	5:15 p. m.	2:05 a. m.
" 18	"	1:30 a. m.

GRAND FORKS BRANCH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 9 Mixed	10:00 a. m.	10:30 a. m.

No 1, daily except Sunday. No. 5 daily. No. 11 except Sunday. No. 13 except Monday. No. 17, daily

No. 2 except Sunday. No. 6 daily No. 12 except Sunday. No. 14 daily. No. 18 except Sunday.

C. H. MIX, Agent.

Polk County News.

Carman Courier Dec. 28th.

Our friend James Thompson left for Edinburg, Scotland, on the evening train south yesterday. It comes from pretty good authority that a certain flaxen-haired, bright eyed damsel has induced Mr. Thompson to cros the waters to his "faderland" in order to be joined in holy wedlock to the girl he left behind him.

Several ladies from Crookston met with a mis(s)-hap opposite Corser's elevator Monday while enjoying a sleighride. The horse became frightened and upset the occupants of the lines, thus saving what might have been a serious accident.

Mr. W. D. Bailey returned home last Sunday to spend the holidays with his family of this place. He has been engaged the fore-part of the winter in fulfilling a contract for putting in 5,000,000 feet of logs near Duluth and south of the Northern Pacific junction. Mr. Bailey has already placed nearly a million and a quarter feet of logs at the landing, and expects to complete the contract in the course of two or three months.

If a correct description of the nights during the past week could be conveyed to the imagination of THE COURIER's numerous readers in the East, not one in a hundred would believe the pen picture. The majority of the evenings were really warm, the sky assuming a deep-blue tint, while small particles of frost floated through the air giving forth a thousand different colored tints and sparkling like so many jewels. Above all high in the solar systems a full moon shed its light over beautiful nature as she passed underneath in on vast panorama, while around all a thin and transparent vapor cast its hallowed mantel, presenting one of the most brilliant pictures we ever witnessed. Come to the glorious State of Minnesota if you wish to see one of these beautiful winter evenings.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator Dec. 27th.

We understand that Mr. Kelly of Crookston has taken the contract of putting down an artesian well on Crocker & Cundy's & Nelson's addition. The machinery is on the way, and work will be commenced at once.

Mr. S. O. Cundy did not hang up his stocking on Christmas eve, but he got as valuable present all the same. It was a fine gold watch, best Raymond movement, and is worth in the neighborhood of $200. It was presented to him by his partner, Mr. Geo. Crocker.

The saw mill being started here by Sorsoliel & Campbell, commences operations this week. The firm have already a good supply of logs and will turn out lumber at a rapid rate. They will either saw on shares or by the thousand, and will have lumber for sale at their mill. Their advertisement appears in this week's issue, and will be found interesting to those in need of work in their line.

Mr. J. N. Milne, passed through here on Saturday last, en route for his claim which is situated about fifteen miles up the Thief river. Besides some other household furniture he had on his sleigh a $350.00 organ, which he intends putting in his frontier mansion. Mr. Milne is an old printer, having formerly been foreman of a paper in Hastings. He has also represented the old 41st, district in the state Senate. His claim on the Thief river is said to be a fine one, and he has it stocked with six horses, sixteen head of cattle, and chickens and pigs to match. He says he has been in this state twenty-five years, and has seen all the best land both here and in Dakota, but has never seen anything to equal the Thief river country, either in beauty of scenery or richness of soil. He will put in a large crop next spring and intends turning his whole attention to farming.

MARRIED.

JOHNSON—HOFF—In St. Hilaire, at the residence of Mr. K. Steenerson, by K. O. Gaigstad Esq. on the 27th inst. Ole J. Johnson to Isabelle B. Hoff.

This is the first marriage which has taken place in St. Hilaire, and the Spectator joins in wishing the contracting couple a long and happy life.

Grand Forks Fancies.

From the Daily Herald Dec. 30th.

Yesterday Judge Cox returned from Crookston. He cleared "Sam," the man who [illegible] $2,000 recently, and after the trial Samuel skipped without paying his lawyers.

A Great Scheme.

A few details of a scheme which rivals Col. Seller's most extravagant ones, has come to light. Mr. LaChapelle the proprietor of the Lake View House Crookston, has two pieces of Sioux half breed scrip, which he proposes to lay on the townsite of Odessa. He claims to have some clue on the land on which the townsite is located, and will scrip it at once. He has consulted eminent legal lights on the subject, and either owing to an alleged defect in placing the scrip by the syndicate, or through some virtue in the half-breed scrip itself, as he says that Sioux half-breed scrip will hold against Valentine scrip even though located subsequently, he believes he can destroy the title of the syndicate. It is hinted that if he is let into the syndicate and given a number of shares, there will be no move made to avoide the title of the company and those who hold under it. The details and particulars of Mr. LaChapelle's plans could not be fully learned at this writing.

Photographer Johnson informs us that his business has been extra good during the fall and winter so far and a look through his gallery will convince any one that he is deserving of a good trade as he thoroughly understands the art and has the facilities for doing good work. Call at the gallery on Robert Street and see how it is yourself.

On Tuesday Mr. T. O. Bergland brought in a sample of the celebrated Golden Star wheat which for beauty and plumpness takes the cake. It is as fine a sample as we have ever seen. Mr. Bergland, in 1881 sowed one quart and last spring sowed the product thereof and now has 250 bushels of fine, clean wheat for sale for seed wheat. If you want to see a sample of WHEAT call at our office and examine the Golden Star.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

We call the especial attention of postmasters and subscribers to the following synopsis of the newspaper laws:

1 A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the laws) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and states the reason for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publishers for payment.

3 Any person who takes a paper from the post office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether a subscriber or not, is responsible for the pay.

3 If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and collect the whole amount, whether it be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

4 If the subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time and the publisher continues to send it, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post office. The law proceeds upon the ground that a man has to pay for what he uses.

5 The courts have decided the refusing to take a newspaper and periodicals from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, as "prima fabie" evidence of intentional fraud.

Extraordinary Offers.

FOR ONE MONTH!

The Farmers' Union

AND

Minneapolis Weekly Tribune

One of the Largest, Ablest, Brightest and Best News and Family Papers in the United States.

FREE! FREE! FREE!

For one year to any subscriber to the

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

ANY SUBSCRIBER to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL who is in arrears on subscription one year or more, and who will pay his account in full to date and one year in advance, will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMERS' UNION free.

ANY PERSON who will subscribe for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and pay in advance for not less than twenty-four months will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMER'S UNION free.

THE FARMERS' UNION

Is a weekly journal of eight large pages of seven columns to the page, and in all the features of a pure, bright, able, interesting news and family paper it is not surpassed by any journal in the country.

RECOGNIZING the demand of the intelligent progressive people of the Great Northwest for a newspaper that in all its departments shall not only fully up with the times, but shall keep pace with the wonderful development of the region in which it is published, the FARMERS' UNION has perfected such arrangements as will meet all the requirements of a first-class newspaper.

MOST COMPLETE.—It contains the most complete commercial and market reports received by telegraph up to the hour of going to press, a large amount of matter specially prepared for farmers and their families on the very best methods of tillage of crops of all kinds, stock growing, fruit culture, and every subject in which farmers are specially interested.

A HOUSEHOLD DEPARTMENT is devoted specially to the work of the homes of the land brighter and happier, and of lightening the labor of women in making them so.

BESIDES these popular and valuable features the FARMERS' UNION contains choice stories and sketches, interesting and instructive to old and young; poetry, choice miscellany, the news of the week from all parts of the world, and, in brief, the constant aim is to make it as nearly as possible a perfect news and home paper.

WE HAVE great pleasure in offering such a paper as this FREE to our subscribers on the terms named above. Orders should be sent in promptly, as the offer will remain open only for a limited time. Address,

H. E. COOKE,
Ed. and prop. POLK COUNTY JOURNAL,
Crookston Minn.

E. M. WALSH,

DEALER IN

HEAVY AND SHELF Hardware, Tinware Of all kinds. JOB WORK a specialty.

RATHBONE, SARD & CO. ACORN STOVES & RANGES.

BAR IRON, STEEL, AND Blacksmiths SUPPLIES Building Paper, Sash, Etc.

ALSO AGENT

For the Celebrated Monitor Plows.

CROOKSTON, MINN.

RESERVED FOR

E. D. CHILDS & CO'S

LUMBER YARD.

CARMAN, MINN.

MONEY TO GIVE AWAY IN BARGAINS

at MARKHAM'S,

THE LEADING GROCERY HOUSE

AND THE LARGEST BOOT AND SHOE STORE

IN CROOKSTON.

Goods Delivered to any Part of the City FREE OF CHARGE.

THE ONLY 5 AND 10 CENT COUNTER.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM,

MAIN STREET,

HAVE ALWAYS ON HAND A WELL SELECTED STOCK OF

Groceries, Dry Goods,

Notions, Boots and Shoes, Clothing, Hats and Caps,

And everything usually kept in a General Store. We also have on hand a full line of first-class

FARM MACHINERY.

Including the Osborne and Champion Twine Binders, Reapers and Mowers, John Deere and First and Bradley Walking, Sulkey and Gang Plows, The Pride of the West, and Buffalo Pitts Straw Burning and Horse Power Threshing Machines, Rockford and Fish Bros. Wagons, &c., &c.

Call and Examine Our Stock!

STEWART & LAWRENCE,

Dealers in

Pine Lumber.--Pine Lumber.

Windows, Doors, Mouldings, Building Paper, &c.

YARD ON OAK STREET. NORTH OF BROWN'S LIVERY STABLE.

CITY PAINT SHOP.

W. H. McCULOUGH,

HOUSE, SIGN AND GENERAL PAINTER.

Broadway, - - Crookston, Minn.

Great Bargains

IN

REAL ESTATE!

RESIDENCE LOTS

Are now offered in the Choicest Portion of the City,

Sletten & Cromb's

ADDITION,

AT PRICES

Within the Reach of All!

Those who invest now are sure to DOUBLE THEIR MONEY before Spring. Call early, for they are going off rapidly.

All persons are cautioned not to Cut or Remove Timber from Sletten & Cromb's Addition.

SLETTEN & CROMB,
Crookston, Minn.

REAL ESTATE AGENCY.

LANDS, LOTS, AND PROPERTY OF ALL KINDS Bought and Sold,

Property Rented and Rents Collected

LOANS NEGOTIATED, TAXES PAID FOR NON-RESIDENTS,

If you want to Buy, Sell or Rent, call or write to us and have your your wants supplied.

JAMES W. LILLY,
ATTORNEY AND R. E. AGENT, CROOKSTON, MINN.
MAIN STREET, OPPOSITE POST OFFICE.

CROOKSTON CITY BAKERY!

EARNEST MILLER, Proprietor.

(SUCCESSORS TO THE PLUMB BROTHERS.)

Takes advantage of the occasion to say that he will keep a full line of all goods that are usually found in a

FIRST-CLASS BAKERY,

And that the citizens of Polk County will find none but the best at his place of business. A fine line of

CIGARS AND TOBACCO, NUTS, FRUITS, CANDIES, PIES, CAKES, BREAD,

AND EVERY THING TO FILL OUT A HUNGRY MAN.

JOHNSON, STEPHENS & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE

MINNESOTA CHIEF THRESHER,

CELEBRATED DEERING MARSH HARVESTER,

THE DEERING AND WARRIOR MOWERS,

Moline Plows,

Orvis Hollow Tooth Drag,

DIAMOND TOOTH DRAG, THE VAN BRUNT SEEDER.

☞ All machines purchase of us are Subject to Trial. Satisfaction guaranteed. Warehouse at Crookston and Fisher.

Benham & Underhill,

(Successors to John McLean.)

Attorneys at Law,

AND

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

LOAN, LAND

AND

Insurance Agency.

(Established in 1879.)

Money Loaned to Prove Up with!
Money Loaned on Improved Farms!
Money Loaned on City Property!

U. S. LAND OFFICE BUSINESS ATTENDED TO! ENTRIES MADE AND LAND PROVED UP!

500 City Lots in Crookston for sale! Business and Residence Lots for sale!

Improved and Unimproved Farms in Polk County for sale on easy terms!

A Full Line of Old Reliable Fire Insurance Companies REPRESENTED.

CROOKSTON, POLK CO., MINN.

Merchants' Bank,

OF CROOKSTON,

CASH CAPITAL, $32,000.00.

J. KELSO, PRESIDENT
Bellvue, Iowa.
M. R. BROWN, VICE PRESIDENT.
Crookston, Minn.
H. B. MONTGOMERY, 2D VICE PRES'T,
St. Paul, Minn.
W. M. ROSS, CASHIER
Crookston, Minn.

WILL RECEIVE DEPOSITS, AND ALLOW INTEREST BY SPECIAL CONTRACT.

BUY AND SELL FOREIGN & DOMESTIC EXCHANGE.

Make Collections, And do a strictly Legitimate Business.

Agents for Foreign Passage Tickets
De skandinaviske Sprog tales her
W. M. ROSS, Cashier.

FOR A CHOICE

STEAK OR ROAST

GO TO THE CITY

Meat Market,

H. STEEGE, Proprietor.

THE CHOICEST
STEAKS,
ROASTS,
VENISONS,
PORK STEAKS,
FRESH PORK,
MUTTON CHOPS

In fact everything of the very choices in the line of

Meats, Fresh or Salt,

MAY BE FOUND AT THE CITY MARKET.

FOR

Choice Butter

GO TO THE

City Meat Market,

Robert Street. - Crookston, Minn.

M. N. BERG,

Practical Watchmaker

AND DEALER IN

WATCHES, CLOCKS AND JEWELRY.

ROBERT STREET

Crookston, - - Minn.

First National Bank,

OF CROOKSTON.

PAID IN CAPITAL - - $50,000.00.

ROBT. H. BAKER, President.
M. R. BROWN, Vice President.
ANSEL BATES, Cashier.

Receives Deposits, Buys and Sells Exchange on all parts of the United States and Europe. Careful attention to collections and prompt remittance. Negotiate loans, pay taxes for nonresident owners. Correspondence solicited.

DIRECTORS—Robt. H. Baker, Racine, Wis.
J. I. Case, Racine, Wis.
M. R. Brown, Crookston, Minn.
Wm. Anglim, " "
Ansel Bates, " "
E. D. Childs, Carman, Minn.

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.

PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.

ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA

Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line promptly attended to in the latest styles of the art. [illegible]

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Proprietor.

DEVOTED TO THE WELFARE OF POLK COUNTY.

TERMS---$1.50 per Annum.

VOL. VI. CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA. THURSDAY, JANUARY 11, 1883. NO. 37

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

H. E. COOKE, Editor and Proprieor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar Fifty Cents, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum sent to any address.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

SPACE.	1 w.	2 w.	3 w.	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 year
½ Inch...	50	$1 00	$1 25	$1 50	$3 00	4 50	6 00
1 Inch.....	75	1 25	1 75	2 00	4 50	6 00	10 00
2 Inches..	1 50	2 25	3 00	3 50	6 20	9 50	15 00
3 Inches..	1 75	2 75	3 75	4 50	9 50	13 20	20 00
4 Inches.	2 50	3 50	4 50	5 50	10 00	18 00	25 00
5 Inches..	3 00	4 00	5 00	6 00	12 50	20 00	30 00
¼ Column	3 50	4 50	5 50	6 50	15 00	25 00	35 00
½ Column	6 00	7 50	10 00	12 00	15 00	35 00	50 00
1 Column	9 50	12 50	15 00	18 00	25 00	60 00	100 00

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class Matter.

Don't Whine.

Don't be whining about not having a fair chance. Throw a sensible man out of a window, he'll fall on his feet and ask the nearest way to his work. The more you have to begin with, the less you will have in the end. Money you earn yourself is much brighter than any you get out of dead men's bags. A scant breakfast in the morning of life whets the appetite for a feast later in the day. He who has tasted a sour apple will have the more relish for a sweet one. Your present want will make future prosperity all the sweeter. Eighteen pence has set up many a peddler in business, and he has turned it over until he has kept his carriage. As for the place you are cast in, don't find fault with that; you need not be a horse because you were born in a stable. If a bull tossed a man of mettle sky-high, he would drop down in a good place. A hard-working young man with his wits about him, will make money while others will do nothing but lose it. "Who loves his work and knows how to spare, may live and flourish anywhere." As to a little trouble, who expects to find cherries without stones, or roses without thorns? Who would win must learn to bear. Idleness lies in bed sick of the mulligrubs, where industry finds health and wealth. The dog in the kennel barks at flies; the hunting dog does not even know that they are there. Laziness waits till the river is dry, and never gets to market. "Try" swims it and makes all the trade. "Can't-do-it" would not eat the bread cut for him, but "Try" made meat out of mushrooms.

Loafing.

Many persons who would scorn the idea of telling a lie, will yet be acting a lie their whole lives. They will, perhaps, be engaged to work for another a certain number of hours, yet will shrink or not half do their work, making their life a lie. It is as much a crime to act falsely as to speak falsely. It is an unsatisfactory and unprofitable thing to be a loafer. Once fully embarked on the sea of loaferdom and you bid farewell to every sail that sails under an honest and legitimate flag. Your consorts will only be the buccaneers, of society. It costs money, for, though the loafer may not earn a cent or have one for months, the time lost might have procured him much money, if devoted to industry instead of sloth. It costs health, vigor, comfort, all the true pleasures of living, honor, dignity, self respect, and respect of the world when living, and finally, all right of consideration when dead. Be a gentleman, then; it is far cheaper.—[Farm and Fireside.

Corn vs. Oats for Horses.

The comparative value of corn and oats as food for horses may be briefly stated as follows: Corn is deficient in many of the elements of nutrition so necessary for recuperating the constant wear and tear which necessarily takes place in the body of a living animal. On this account, horses which are exclusively fed on corn and hay do not receive that kind of nourishment which appears necessary for the due support and maintenance of the animal fabric; hence, we must not be surprised that corn-fed horses show evidence of being languid, by sweating profusely while being worked, lack of vitality, etc. Oats, on the contrary, contain more of the essential elements of nutrition than any other article of food whith can be fed with impunity to horses. Oats are not only the most natural food for horses, but are decidedly the most nutritious. They are the cheapest, because there is less risk in feeding them, and experience has proved that horses properly fed on oats and timothy hay can, with regular exercise, good grooming, the proper sanitary regulations, be brought to the highest state of physical culture, and can perform more work with less evidence of fatigue than when fed on any other article of food.—[Live Stock Journal.

FARM NOTES.

From the Minnesota Tribune.

JERSEY REDS AND DUROCS.

The original and the purest type of a Jersey Red, says the Breeder and Sportsman, is a coarser and larger hog than the Duroc, and, of course, they are superior to the latter, so much as greater in size is an advantage. The Durocs are finer boned and will mature sooner and fatten younger. Both families possess the general characteristics of strong constitutional vigor and hearty appetites, with strong digestion and prolificness most remarkable—the natural result of their characteristics. They are wonderfully hardy and possess an ability to take care of themselves, which is quite gratifying. Several breeders met together a few years ago and determined to begin breeding the Durocs, as they were called—the name being a fancy of Mr. Kelsey's, after the noted stallion Duroc—by selecting the best blood to be obtained and the nearest like a good Berkshire type. They adopted a standard of characteristics, which has been put on record, but which it would be well to repeat. They also determined to give these hogs their true name—Red Berkshire. The color should be red, varying from dark glossy cherry red and even brownish hairs, to light yellowish red, with occasionally a small fleck of black on the belly and legs. The darkened shades of red are preferred by most breeders, and this is the type of color most desirable. In disposition they are remarkably mild and gentle, and are so docile that they are readily confined by low fences. They are kind and careful mothers and wonderfully prolific. They have a remarkable ability to digest food and make growth. This is owing to their hardy constitutions and perfection in the proportions of their bodies, and the strong blood which has made its mark so notable for more than half a century. It is a common thing for Duroc pigs, at six months of age, to weigh 300 pounds, and at eight and ten months to turn the scales at 400 or 500 pounds. Hogs a year and a half old have weighed from 700 to 800 pounds. Pigs four weeks old will weigh from 20 to 30 pounds, and measure over two feet in length and from six to eight inches across the shoulders. For rapid growth and ability to lay on flesh the Durocs are not excelled. The meat is not coarse-grained, but fine and tender. Their powers of assimilating food are so great that they readily eat coarse food that more dainty breeds would not touch, and will even fatten on grass alone; and in winter will eat with avidity clover, hay and roots whith other hogs will refuse. They are not subject to mange or liable to get sunburnt; and are adapted to all climates.

BEST FOWLS TO WINTER.

The head of a fowl has much to do with its ability to stand cold or exposure to dampness. The crests of the Polands and Houdans when saturated with water are slow in drying, the result often being an attack of roup. Fowls that have large, tall combs, such as Leghorns, Black Spanish, Cochins and Plymouth Rocks, are easily frosted in winter. Such fowls can be safely deprived of their combs by cutting them off. The rose comb fowls are the Hamburg, Dominicks and American Sebrights. The Brahmas have very small peacombs.

TO PREVENT PINKEYE.

During the past few years owners of horses have been large losers of horses, labor and horses' lives by a disease commonly, but erroneously, called pinkeye. Local horse doctors have ignorantly treated it as such, and owners have continuel to use horses afflicted with the symptoms, thereby losing many valuable animals that if properly used and treated would now be as valuable as ever. My opinion is, that by careful investigation, every horse that has been afflicted and succumbed to it, if the truth were known, will be found to have had a disease nearly allied to, if not identical with, pheumonia. Many horses have been taken suddenly while driving fast on a sharp, frosty day, while others have got a cold, seemingly slight at first, and only showing the usual symptoms of a simple cold and their owners have kept them at work and in a short time the horse developed what was called pinkeye. By carefully following the disease through its entire course I think that any intelligent person will find it almost identical with pleuro-pheumenia. All its general weakness, lassitude, swelling of limbs, want of appetite and finally water thrown out by the overcharged and imperfectly working vessels of the system—more especially the lungs. Why horses should be troubled in this way, as never very generally before, is a mystery for the wise ones to attempt to solve.

The atmosphere may predispose the horse to it, as it has seemed to cause a large increase of late years of pheumonia in the genus homo.

The thing for horse owners to do, is to prevent and arrest the disease if possible in its early stages. First—I believe that fast driving on a very cold day is extremely dangerous to a horse as several horses in the very act of going at a high rate of speed on our principal street during the past winter, have actually given out there and then, and these horses had not been driven far enough to distress them in the least in warm weather. A horse in the stable where I had a good one wintering, was taken and they just saved him On inquiring of the owner if he had been driven fast, he said: "Net to my knowledge," but on further inquiry I found that his hired boy had been trying his speed in the farmer's milk team. I belive that in almost every instance, similar circumstances will be found to be the prime cause, and then the horse has been kept to his work instead of being kept in a stable away from draughts of air, dosed with a good tonic and fed on light food, till he shows strong symptoms of returning appetite.

For a tonic I shall name something that will surprise most, if not all of your readers. It is a strong tincture of quinine powders. Give the horse heavy doses three or four times during the day and evening, and keep in a warm place with light food as I said before.

The action of the quinine is similar to that in the human being—a preventive of fever, and a gentle tonic and stimulant, thus assisting in a natural way.

By taking these precautions, I believe many valuable horses would be saved, and the socalled "pinkeye" would be rarely known. H.

BREED UP.

If a common cow has the mark of a good milker, it is wisdom to breed from her. Whether or not her calf will inherit her good qualities, time alone can tell. It is right here that the value of improved stock is greatest. Its characteristics are fixed, and will be reproduced. It is here, too, where the value of a registered pedigree is apparent The fact that a book contains the brief statement of the ancestors of an animal is nothing of itself. But the fact that it tells that an animal has certainly come from a long line of ancestors, which have regularly transmitted their characteristics, is everything, for it not only shows that the animal itself passesses the family characteristics to a greater or less degree, but that it in turn will be able to transmit them. The common cow may reproduce herself, and he may not. The purely bred cow will reproduce herself, with possibly slight variation, under proper breeding. It is too often the case that the owners of common cows get an erroneous impression when their attention has been called to the desirability of improving their herds. They are convinced, perhaps, that it would be to their interest to breed up, or rather to improve the character of their herds; but thinking that the only way to do this is to purchase outright, they may not feel like going to the expense. Some of the best cows in the country are crosses of our common stock with the improved breeds and if a man owns a common cow that has proved herself a valuable dairy animal, he has excellent encouragement to use her for crossing. It is every man's duty to breed up. It is throwing away money to keep an inferior animal when we can just as well have a better one.

DAIRY FIELD OF THE FUTURE.

Western agriculturists claim the dairy garden of the future will be located in the area included within the northern third of Illinois, the southern quarter of Wisconsin, the whole state of Iowa, and the southern half of Minnesota. It is claimed for these lands, although now cultivated in corn, wheat and other farm crops, that they possess great natural advantages for the pasturage of cows and the production of butter and cheese. The proprietors have discovered that of their ordinary farm products in the shape of grain, they receive about 50 per cent. of the commercial value of what they produce—the market price being fixed by the foreign demand for the supplies. They find also that, putting their land in pasture, they can with a proper supply of cows, obtain for their products 90 per cent. of their market value—only 10 per cent. being taken for transportation and brokerage.

We find the above in an exchange, and copy it for the purpose of saying that the portion of Dakota east of the Missouri and up as far as the 47th degree is reached, should be included. Northwestern Minessota should also be added, and we expect a good deal of the territory of Montana will eventually become prolific in the dairy industry.

We call attention to a valuable list of books offered to agents by the Sun Publishing Co., of St. Louis, advertised elsewhere in this paper.

HOUSES MOVED.

Do you want to move your house to another lot? If so, call on or address [illegible] J. A. HARRIS, Crookston.

1883. 1833.

THE

ST. PAUL GLOBE!

DAILY, SUNDAY AND WEEKLY.
ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.
SPECIAL WIRE FROM ST. PAUL
TO THE EASTERN NEWS CENTERS.
FULL ASSOCIATED PRESS PRIVILEGERS.
ISSUED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

THE ST. PAUL GLOBE is now acknowledged to be the

LEADING PAPER IN THE NORTWEST.
THE GLOBE has recently been enlarged to an

EIGHT-PAGE PAPER.

It is cut, folded and trimmed. It has a special wire for its exclusive use, which connects its editorial room direct with Chicago, New York and Washington. It has, besidew, full Associated Pres privileges, which supplemented to its special telegraph wire puts it in the front rank of American newspapers.

Politically the GLOBE opposes all monopolies and stands by the interests of the people. It is not chained down, but meets issues as they arise fearlessly and vigorously.

It invites subscriptions
BECAUSE IT
FURNISHES ALL THE NEWS better than any other paper.
BECAUSE IT
Furnishes the BEST MARKET REPORTS.
BECAUSE IT
Stands by the INTEREST OF THE PEOPLE.
BECAUSE IT
Approves the right and opposes the wrong, regardless of who suffers thereby.

THE GLOBE invites those not already enrolled to make a trial subscription. You can obtain it of your newsdealer or order it direct from the publication office. Inspect it and judge for yourself. All editions postage paid.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE DAILY GLOBE.

SEVEN ISSUES PER WEEK.
DAILY and SUNDAY GLOBE. ONE DOLLAR PER MONTH.
SIX ISSUES PER WEEK—BY MAIL.
One month $0.90
Three months 2.50
Six months 5.00
Twelve months 10 00

THE WEEKLY GLOBE.

THE WEEKLY GLOBE is an eight-page paper, the same size as the DAILY GLOBE. It is the best paper for the farmers in the State. It is send to any address, one year, postage paid, FOR ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTEEN CENTS.

For three months on trial for 25 cents.
All subscriptions payable invariably in advance.
Address,
GLOBE PRINTING COMPVNY.
St. Paul, Minn.

THIS SPACE
WILL BE OCCUPIED
NEXT WEEK
—BY—
J. R. CLEMENTS
ANNOUNCING THE SALE
OF LOTS
IN Clements' 2d Addition
TO CROOKSTON,
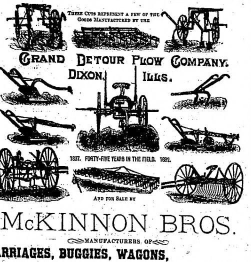
AND
NUMBER OF LOTS
TO BE
GIVEN AWAY
BY HIM TO PARTIES
WSHING TO BUILD
THIS SEASON.

THIS SPACE
RESERAED FOR THE GREAT
BANKRUPT STORE.
Broadway, - - Crookkston, Minn.



THESE CUTS REPRESENT A FEW OF THE GOODS MANUFACTURED BY THE GRAND DETOUR PLOW COMPANY.
DIXON, ILLS.
1837. FORTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE FIELD. 1882.

AND FOR SALE BY

McKINNON BROS.

MANUFACTURERS OF
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, WAGONS,
CUTTERS, SLEDS, MILL CARTS, &C.
Axles, Springs, and all Repairs kept in stock.

DEALERS IN
FARM MACHINERY.

In Farm Machinery, we have a full line of Hoosier and Wolverine Seeders, Dixon Diamond Tooth Harrows; Davenport, Peru City and Norwegian Walking and Sulky Plows; Chieftain Hay Rake, Iron King Mower Centre Draft; St. Paul, Twine Self-Binder. Extras for the different Machines always in stock.

MOSER & MOECKEL,
—DEALERS IN THE BEST CLASS OF—
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,
—INCLUDING THE—
FOUNTAINE CITY AND BUCKEYE SEEDERS,
Case Wagons, Cassady, Buford and Hapgood Walking, Sulky and Gang
---PLOWS,----
Minneapolis Twine Binder, the Meadow Lark and Buckeye Mowers, the celebrated Fargo and Scotch Harrows, Nichols & Shephard Vibrators and Straw and Wood Burning Engines, the Cooper Stationery and Portable Straw and Wood Burning Engines, C. Aultman & Co's new Model Thresher and Monitor Engine. A full line of
—BUGGIES, SLEIGHS, CUTTERS—
—AND PLATFORM SPRING WAGONS.—
In fact everything usually kept in their line.

INSURANE AGENCY.—We write policies only in the best and most responsible companies, at as low rates as can be secured on the class of property insured. Our list of companies will bear inspection.

Money to Loan.

MOSER & MOECKEL.

J. ENGEL,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN BAR GLASS,
Of all kinds and Goods used at Bars Only.
full line of
LAMPS AND CHANDILIERS.
The only House in this line west of Chicago.
No. 18 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.

GENERAL
Merchandise.
Call at our New Store on Main street, opposite the U. S. Land Office, when you require articles in our line. We carry a full and complete stock and invite inspection.
JUVE & BERGLAND

Van Dyke & Denniston,
PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS,
COR. MAIN AND SECOND STREETS.
Will attend to all professional calls promptly.

A. A. JUST, M. D.,
Homoeopathic Physician and Surgeon.
Main Street, near U. S. Land Office.
CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINN.

A. H. DUNLAP, M. D.
GRADUATE McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.
Licensed College Physician and Surgeon, Quebec.
OFFICE OVER MERCHANTS' BANK.

AIME GABOURY,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
Graduate Doctor in Medicine Laval University Canada. Licensed Coll. Phy. Surg., Quebec Late of Michigan University, U. S.
Office over the "Arcade" Clothing Store Crookston, Minn.

DR. M. WATTS,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Office on Main Street, one door north of Star Drug store. Professional calls, by day or night attended to with promptness.

DENTISTRY.
J. H. THOMAS, D. D. S.,
ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN
Artificial teeth from one to an entire set, inserted. Gold, silver or artificial filling made as desired. Regulating children's teeth a specialty. All work warranted.

C. W. BARNES, D. D. S.,
Graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery.
OFFICE AT RESIDENCE ON BROADWAY CROOKSTON

MIDWIFERY.
Mrs. Olena Dawley, a graduate of the mid-wife College, of Christiania, Norway, has opened an office on Fletcher Avenue. Having had an experience of 12 years in Norway and six years in America, she is fully competent to treat all cases entrusted to her. All diseases of women or children carefully and scientifically treated.

JOHN LEO. H. STEENERSON.
LEO & STEENERSON.
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
MAIN STREET,
CROOKSTON, - - MINN.

—JOHN N. IVES.— —D. E. HALTESTAD.—
IVES & HATLESTAD,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Collection and Land Office Business made a Specialty.
Money secured for final proofs on short notice.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

P. A. DUFOUR,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELOR AT LAW
—MAIN STREET,—
CROOKSTON - - MINN

REYNOLD'S & WATTS,
Attorneys at Law,
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

CROOKSTON HOUSE,
Main Street, Crookston, Minn.
J. E. MITTEN, - PROPRIETOR.
FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR
Good Sample Room.

COMMERCIAL HOUSE.
W. H. TOPPING, Proprietor,
SECOND STREET - CROOKSTON, MINN
—o—
Having leased this new and commodious hotel we are now prepared to supply the needs of the traveling public in first-class style. Our house is entirely new and newly furnished; we have had a long experience in the hotel business and hope to be able to meet the wants of our patrons and friends. We would respectfully invite a share of the public patronage. Call and see us.

ALBION HOUSE,
ISADORE FORTIER, Prop.
Cor. Broadway and Robert Street,
CROOKSTON, POLK CO., MINNESOTA
Terms moderate. Good stabling.

European Hotel
AND
Ladies' and Gents' Restaurant.
Within two blocks of Union Depot, 149 and 153 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.
OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.
THEO. GOLDEN, Proprietor.

Second Street
MEAT MARKET
STANTON & CO., Proprietors.
Choice Meats of every description. Fish and game in their seasons. Everything of the very best quality and lowest price. Call and see us. Stanton & Co. Dowsen's Block Second Street.

NEW HARDWARE FIRM.
DREW BROTHERS,
No. 338 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.
Extensive stock of General Hardware and Mechanics Tools. Our goods are new and quality guaranteed. Agent for the Howe Scales and Trucks

FAIRBANKS
Standard Scales
OF ALL KINDS.
FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO.,
66 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.

FURNITURE STORE.
OAK STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.
BATAGLIA & KNACK, PROPRIETORS
Keeps constantly on hand a well selected stock of Wardrobes, Bureaus, Sofas, Lounges, Bedsteads, Bed Springs, Tables, Chairs, Rockers, Stands, Ornaments, Picture Mouldings and Picture Frames. Repairing done to order. Goods of all kinds kept constantly on hand.

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON THURSDAY, JAN. 11.

The Latest Arrivals

Are always to be found at C. A. & J. R. Chiniquy's.

The Daisy Gem patent flour, A No 1,

White Fish and extra Mess Mackeral,
Hams; Dried Beef; Gold Leaf Lard,
New York Full Cream Cheese,
Canned Fruits and Vegetables of all kinds,
Cigars, Plug, Fine Cut and Smoking Tobaccos,
New Assortment of Majolica and Printed Ware,
Booth's Fresh oysters daily at
C. A. & J. R. Chiniquy's, Main and Second Streets, Crookston, Minn.

And Wednesday was another.

Paul Sletten went to St. Paul on Monday evening.

Rev. Page's family have arrived to cheer him in his labors.

Mr. Wilder has accepted the vacant clerkship in the post office.

Mr. O. A. Ullen, of St. Hilairo left for St. Paul on Monday evening.

Mr. Andrew Eiken returned on Tuesday from a two weeks visit in Fargo.

Mr. J. G. McDonald is in the city on business connected with the brickyard

Lawyer Pierce is moving his office to Broadway, opposite the U. S. Land Office.

The U. S. Land Office has been removed to the corner of Third and Broadway.

Miss Ida Piper has left the post office to accept a situation as teacher in the city high school.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston, Minn. [31-44]

A boxing exhibition delighted those who enjoy those things, on Saturday last, at Ericsson's Hall.

Mr. Wm. Allardyce, of Winnipeg, is in the city on a visit to his son Alex, of the Real Estate Exchange.

Mr. L. O. Hetterdahl, of Hawley, Clay Co., was in the city this week the guest of Mr. Peter Cornelius.

Conductor Sands dropped in a minute on Monday to say "howdy" and set his subscription ahead a peg or so.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Mr. Geo. Bucknam has received the appointment of Deputy Clerk of the Court. An excellent appointment.

It's no slouch of a blizzard that gets right up on its hind legs and howls, like the one of Tuesday—it's a terror to snaix.

The Hon. H. Steenerson spent the Sabbath with his family in the city, returning to his Senatorial duties on Monday evening.

Judge Reynolds seems to be gaining slowly but surely. On Monday he was out a short time, and on Tuesday he spent two hours in his office down town.

The lawyers' offices are grouping about the new U. S. Land Office building. The building must be a drawing card for even the court house steeple leans that way.

Special offer in Story & Camp's Pianos and Organs, to Feb. 1st at Lambert & Mathews' new Furniture store, Second Street. Tuning and repairing reasonably done. [35-38]

The Pillard case was called on Tuesday and adjourned for two weeks as it was found that on Saturday night, January 6th, the doctor got badly frozen, which prevented his appearance in court.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Curtis Gallop, Dept. Sheriff of Grand Forks County, was greeting his old friends in the city. Grand Forks Co. is to be congratulated upon having Curt. as Deputy Sheriff. He is the right man in the right place.

Mayor Brown, of Grand Forks smiled his sweetest upon his friends in the city this week. He grades No. 1, full weight and is that kind of a citizen whom it is safe to tie to. Grand Forks owes much of her prosperity to him.

Judge Spendly has been having some fun with neuralgia. Meantime Mr F. D. Ensign presides with dignity and grace at the Register's office. We are pleased to see that the Judge has got the better of his foe and his genial countenance is once more seen upon our streets.

Jokes about the poverty of newspaper men are becoming stale and should be obsolete. They are not as funny as they used to be since people have found out that they are wholly untrue. Take for instance James Gordon Bennett, Jay Gould, Robert Bonner and—and the rest of us!

Sheriff W. F. Zwickey has assumed the duties of his office and goes to work in earnest. He has appointed Mr. A N. Hopkins, Deputy Sheriff, and Mr. M. B. Hayes, assistant deputy, which indicates that he means to start out right. Fred will be a good official or we miss our guess.

Mr. S. P. Norton was in from Maple Lake last week and reports the loss of one of those twins—the little girl. Its little life on this earth was very brief yet it had twined itself around the hearts of the home circle ere it took its flight into the great unknown future, and it is deeply mourned by the bereaved parents.

Glorious News.

No. 1 wheat 84 cents No. 2, 79 and the prospects are that No. 1 will reach 90 ere the close of the week.

Mr. H. C. Misner, of Euclid, showed the light of his pleasant countenance on our streets on Monday.

The I. O. G. T. lodge has secured Ericsson's Hall for a dance to be held on the evening of Washington's Birthday.

Mike Johnson languishes in a dark cell with bracelets on and don't like the fun of thirty days as well as he anticipated.

Ed, Bivins and Miss Hattie returned on Tuesday morning and report having had a good time.

Mr. E O. Flanders returned from a visit to Hudson, Wis., on Tuesday. He brings his wife with him this time

F. J. Rothpletz has purchased the Red Lake Falls Era and enters at once upon his new field. He can get up a newsy nywspaper.

During the high wind on Tuesday the court house steeple got a decided inclination to go south-east. It leans that way now.

It was Crookston vs St. Hilaire, (with Crookston a trifle ahead) until Kœppe stepped in and attempted to pool the issues and got left on the pool by two green horns.

We take pleasure in laying before our readers this week the Governor's message in full. It is an able and instructive document and will amply repay a careful perusal.

S. W. Ritchie and Max Ericsson went dawn to Winnipeg on Monday night. Max returned on Wednesday morning having had enough of that but S. W. remained awhile longer.

Messrs. McGrew & Jennings are building an office near the new U. S. Land office, and Brower & McLean intend to move their office up there as soon as the weather will permit.

Mr. J. B. Roome and daughter start for a visit to their old home in Wabasha County, to-morrow evening. This will be Mr. R's first visit since he come here and we trust it will be an agreeable one.

Carpenters are busy at work on the Norsk hotel addition all the same as though it was not the dead of winter. In old York State they wouldn't think of being out doors to work even with the mercury at zero.

Herb Mason has gone to Menominee, Wis., where he will consult an eminent occulist who will attempt to fix his eyes up in good shape. We trust that Herb way not be disappointed but that he will receive the benefit he hopes for

Two cases were before Justice Sargent on Wednesday. The city vs. S Malette, assault and battery, fined $4 and costs, and the state of Minnesota vs. August Terrault, assault, fine remitted on request of complaining witness.

The ladies of the M. E church will give a soiree in the church on Wednesday evening the 17th inst. There will be refreshments served and a program rendered consisting of addresses, music, recitations etc. A pleasant time is anticipated.

An opportunity is now offered to obtain a cheap course of lessons in music. Prof. Dusso, whose card appears elsewhere in this issue is a fine musician who thoroughly understands his business and the chance afforded is a rare one at the price. See ad elsewhere.

The dulcet strains of sweet music caught onto the ear of our reporter on Wednesday evening and impelled him in whence it came out and revealed to him Lewis, Lawrence, Confair and Martin sawing away right lively and making the welkin ring right lively We have heard many a worse orchestra

Mr. W. O. Wilson is in from St. Hilaire to superintend the building of his new addition to the Norsk hotel. The structure will be 25x60 with 24 foot posts which will treble the size of the hotel when completed. It is the intention to move the present hotel back nearly its length and build up a large front.

Last week we announced that the Alice Oates Opera Company would visit our city and give an entertainment on the 19th and 20th. We said it upon good authority but since that time the arrangments have not been perfected and may not be at all. It seems the management want Max to assume all of the risks and he very wisely declines to do so. He however says that they may have the hall very reasonably as an inducement for them to come. He has written them to that effect but as yet has had no reply.

Geo. Inwood, a former resident of Detroit, Becker Co., was before the Land Office last week to show cause why the other fellow should not get away with George's tree-claim. George showed to the satisfaction of all concerned that he had ten acres in to trees according to Hoyle, that he "did it with his little hatchet" and all concerned being perfectly satisfied George departed for his home at Barnesville as happy as a clam at high tide.

Chas. Ferguson and Mike Johnson were released from durance vile in the county lock-up on Monday at ten a. m., and started down town to have a little fun with the boys. They had it. During the evening they were gobbled up and escorted to the cooler simply because they did not have a distinct idea of the difference between meum and tuum in its application to two pairs of gloves one pair of which left Fontaine & Anglim's store without leave and the other left Juve & Bergland's store unpaid for. They attempted to sell the gloves and the cruel sharks of the law dropped onto the racket and gathered them in. On Tuesday morning they were taken before his honor, Esq Lewis, and Johnson allowed that he had got away with the baggage but had forgotten to pay for it at the time. He got thirty days in the county jail while Ferguson got a warning from his honor to git, vamoose, absquatulate, or in other words to shake the dust of the city from off his feet instanter or—"thirty days." He chose to fly on the wings of the wind and Dept. Sheriff Hopkins got his first job in that line by furnishing an escort for Johnson to the barracks.

Attempted Suicide.

About 11 o'clock on Monday evening a man walked into Max Ericsson's sample room and approaching Ben McKinnon, asked in a faint voice, "take me to the cooler." Ben, who was talking to a party, did not notice him at first, when the request was repeated and, turning, Ben was horrified to see that the man was literally covered with blood, which was streaming from a fearful gash in his throat. All who were in the room, startled at Ben's emphatic exclamation, came flocking around, and while one went for a doctor, Ben and Joe took the man to the engine house, where doctor Watts soon sewed up the gash and made him more presentable. In reply to the question as to whether some one had tried to kill him, the man yes, but he did not know who. He afterwards confessed that he had done the business himself wich an old jack knife, that he had no work, was tired of life and had gone into Pete Misgen's barn and tried to kill himself. Failing to accomplish it, he had then gone wandering about the streets in search of the police. He gave the name of Ed. Bowes to the police, but last fall when he quit work on the road in John Wright's gang, he went to Pete Misgen, gave him $35 to take care of for him, telling Pete that his name was Ed. Ryan. He made a wretched failure of his attempt to take his life, but furnished a good job for the doctor, as he is liable to be laid up for some time.

Our reporter called at the engine house this (Thursday) morning to interview the would-be suicide and found a pale, medium-sized young man reposing quietly on a cot by the stove. When asked to give his name and statement of the case he said: "I would rather not say anything about it, would rather you would give my name as Ed. Ryan, but my real name is Ed. Bowes." He was very reticent and says that he knows nothing about how it occurred nor why he did it, but remembers that he had felt very much discouraged previous to the time he did the desperate deed and that he had had no food for three days His brother-in-law, Mr Coleman from Chippewa Falls, arrived this morning and is trying to find board for Bowes at some private house until he is able to go to his home in Wisconsin where he has a wife. It would seem that Bowes was insane at the time he made the attempt upon his life.

Singing School.

All those who desire to join a singing class, either elementary or chorus are requested to meet and spend Saturday evening in singing with Prof. Dusso at Lawrence' Hall at half past seven o'clock. In the elementary class the instruction is adapted to the comprehension of children as well as adults, and pupils get a practical knowledge of reading music in all the keys. The time in the chorus class is given to the drill of church music, glees, sacred and secular choruses. Tuition, $2 for twelve lessons in either class.

Minnesota Tribune: Hon. Paul Sletton, of Crookston, is at the Merchants. The Tribune recalls the fact that two months before the election Mr. Sletton made to one of its representatives an estimate of results in the 5th district which proved to be wonderfully accurate. When it comes to counting political chickens Sletton is hard to beat.

Farmers and others desiring a genteel, lucrative agency business, by which $5 to 20 a day can be earned, send address at once, on postal, to H. C. Wilkinson & Co., 195 and 195 Fulton Street, New York. [34—38]

RED LAKE FALLS, Dec. 2, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the partnership heretofore existing between the undersigned under the style of H B. Kaufer & Son, is this day dissolved by mutual consent.

Dated Dec. 2, 1882.

H. B. KAUFER.
L. A. KAUFER.

Bobsleds, Cutters.

The McKinnon Brothers have 250 pairs of bobsleds, 45 swell box cutters and also a good supply of cutters suitable for grocers, which they will sell cheap for cash. These sleighs are all their own make which is a good and sufficient guarantee. Call and examine their stock if you intend to purchase. [20-tf]

Hair Dressing.

For particulars call at Mrs. I. U. Jennings Millinery Rooms, on Main St., Crookston, Minn. [30-tf]

Notice.

All parties indebted to us are requested to call and settle by note or cash at our place, do not ask for further credit till settlement is made.

[84-tf] FONTAINE & ANGLIM.

For Sale Cheap.

A second hand cook stove. Call at JOURNAL office. [34-tf]

Call and examine the large stock of fresh confectionery just arrived at Sargent & Lewis.

Pickles.

We have the largest stock and assortment of pickles in Northern Minnesota.

Chow Chow,
Large pickles,
Medium pickles,
Small pickles,
Gherkins pickles,
Sweet pickles,
Fancy mix pickles,
Pickled onions,
Sweet pickled onions.

We sell these in quantities to suit customers by the single measure, and also in 5, 10 and 30 gallon kegs.

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY.

Wanted.

An energetic agent for Polk county. Address, Singer Manufacturing company, Fargo, D. T.

For Sale. To Rent.

Four thousand acres of cultivated and timber lands at the mouth of the Sand Hill on the Red River, for sale. Also farms to rent. Address, STENERSON BROS.
[30-tf] Crookston or Fisher.

School Desks.

Districts wanting the best desk manufactured, and warranted to be so will do well to call on W. H. Jennings, Sherman House, Crookston. He represents the Racine School Furniture Co., and warrants from five to ten years. [4-tf]

Notice.

All persons in interest will take notice that I have purchased of N. P. Stone, his undivided one-sixth interest in the Town site of Carman, South Crookston.

The above interest will be sold as a whole or in any part to suit purchasers. For particulars apply to owner, or Reynolds & Watts, Attorneys.

[10-tf] J. H. KLING.

$100,000 to Loan.

Prove up you claim. Cash paid for School Bonds and County Orders. Call on or address,

BROWER & McLEAN,
[24-tf] Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

A fine farm of 183 acres only a short distance from the city. Twenty-three acres timber, 129 acres under cultivation; good house and barn. Apply at JOURNAL office. 21-tf.

OYSTERS.

Booth's Baltimore oysters received daily by express at C. A. & J. R. Chiniquy in cans and bulk.

Money to Loan.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to loan on improved farms from THREE to FIVE years time at very reasonable rates. Apply at my office on Main street, opposite U. S. Land Office.

[14-tf] H. STEENERSON.

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,761,379.
German American, N. Y	3,094,030.
German, Freeport, Ill.	1,028,407.
Niagara,	1,557,487.
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,589
Fireman's Fund, California,	1,160,017.
National, of Hartford,	1,704,893.
N. Y. Alliance,	1,627,849.
Phoenix, of Hartford	2,624,683
Union, California,	1,20,038.
British America,	1,343,909.
North British	1,953,089.

We also represent the Travelers Life and Accident Insurance Co, of Hartford.

BENHAM & UNDERHILL
Insurance Agency

17-tf.

Pianos and Organ:

At bottom prices and warranted satisfactory, at the American Express Office, Crookston, Minn.

MARRIED.

WALKER—CUNNINGHAM.—In this city by the Rev. A. W. Edwards, on Monday Jan 1st, 1883, Mr. L. H. Walker to Miss Sophia E. Cunningham.

Notice to Contractors.

CO. COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Polk County, Minn.,
Crookston, Jan. 10, 1883.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m., for performing the following work and providing all the materirls therefor, according to the plans and specifications for same now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said county, to-wit:

For putting Ice Breakers at the County bridge across Red Lake River adjacent Red Lake Falls. (as shown in plan.)

For moving the county bridge at Fisher to a point to be designated by the Board.

For building a bridge across a creek on the town line between Fisher and Roame Townships at a point where the Crookston and Frog Point county road is intercepted by said creek, (See plan.)

For building a bridge across the Morais at Sec. 12, Town 151, R. 50.

For building piers (ice-breakers) at a county bridge across Red Lake River about six miles east of Crookston. (See plan.)

Bids will be received for each separately and not as a whole.

The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Notice to Owners of Real Property.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m. for furnishing the county a tract of land not exceeding 160 acres; and also for furnishing a tract of timber land not exceeding 20 acres, to be used as a poor farm.

Proposals must show the description and location of land, improvements on said land.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners at January session, 1883.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Notice to Physicians.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m. from physicians, stating the amount for which he or they will agree to furnish medicines and medical attendance (including surgery) to the paupers of the 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th commissioner districts respectively.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., from the proprietors of Newspapers eligible to be designated as "The Official Paper of Polk County, Minn." wherein the list of delinquent real estate taxes for the year 1882 shall be published, for publishing such list, and also for furnishing stationery, etc. to this county.

Every such proposal must be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 with at least two sureties thereon in order to receive attention.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners of Polk County.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAVING BEEN made in the payment of the sum of Thirty five hundred dollars, ($3500,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, executed and delivered by James G. McDonald to Ansel Bates bearing date the Third day of April A. D. 1882, an, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the Third day of April A. D. 1882, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in Book I of Mortgages, on pages 2, 3 and 4, and which Mortgage was given to secure the payment of Thirty-five hundred dollars, and interest according to the conditions of a certain promissory note in said Mortgage described and executed and delivered by said Mortgagor to the said Mortgagee, for said sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars payable on the first day of November 1882, with interest until paid, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and bearing even date with said Mortgage, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: All of Lot six (6) in Section thirty (30) in Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) excepting from said lot six: The following described piece of land, viz: Beginning at the southwest corner, of the southeast quarter, of section thirty (30) Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) thence north a distance of three hundred and sixty feet (360) to a corner, thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river, thence south 35° west one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 24° west, one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 15° west, one hundred and eight feet to a corner, on the south line of said section thirty (30), thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30) one hundred and fifty eight feet (158) to the place of beginning, containing three acres and nine-tenths, which has been conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, in deed book "B" page 504, and also excepting from said lot six (6) the following described lot of land, viz: All that strip of land thirty-three feet wide (33) off of the north end of said lot six (6) Section thirty (30) Town one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) said strip being eighty rods long. [illegible] and will be foreclosed and sold as one tract of land, situated in the City of Crookston, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the eighth day of February A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 19th, A. D. 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [34-40]

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed by S. A. Norris and Allie A. Norris, his wife, mortgagors, to Andrew C. Johnson, of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 23d day of October, 1879, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on the 29th day of December 1879, whereby said mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate, situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: All of lot six (6), in Section thirty (30) Township one hundred and fifty (150), Range forty-six (46) west, containing twenty-seven and 70-100 acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, [illegible]

Dated this 19th day of December, 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Assignee. [34-40]

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed by Ole Anderson and Jorand Anderson his wife mortgagors, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited) mortgagee dated April 30th 1881 and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in the County of Polk, State of Minnesota, on May 25th, 1881, at 9:30 o'clock a. m., in book "D" of mortgages on pages 541, 542, 543, and 544, on which said mortgage there is claimed to be due and there is due at this date the sum of four hundred and fifty-one sixty six one hundredths dollars ($451.66) and no action or proceedings has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof. The interest due January 1st 1882 not having been paid and the said mortgagee electing to foreclose for the principal amount and interest, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided, said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, at public vendue, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on Monday the 15th day of January 1883, at two o'clock in the afternoon of said day to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage debt with the interest thereon and costs and expenses of sale and twenty-five dollars ($25.00) as attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage to be paid in the event of foreclosure. The premises described in said mortgage and to be sold are the certain tract or parcel of real estate situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, described as follows, to-wit: the south west quarter section six (6) township one hundred and forty-nine (149) range forty-five (45) west, containing one hundred and sixty-nine and forty-four one hundredths acres (169 44-100).

Dated November 29th 1882.

THE AMERICAN FREEHOLD LAND MORTGAGE COMPANY, of London (Limited) Mortgagee.
CHAS. J. BERRYHILL, Att'y for Mortgagee,
[30-36] St. Paul, Minn.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 29th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office, at Crookston, on Feb. 7th, 1883, viz: CHARLES N. SANFORD, Pre. D. S. No. 6263, for the se¼ S. 18, T. 148, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Frank Michie, William Marin, C. C. Dillon and Ed Stone, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[36-43] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 15th, 1882.

Complaint having been entered at this office by G. A. Cable against Fred A. Palmer for abandoning his Homestead Entry No. 6574, dated March 15th, 1882, upon the sw¼ nw¼ and lots 1, 2 and 3, S. 3, T. 148, R. 43, in Polk Co., Minn., with a view to the cancellation of said entry; the said parties are hereby summoned to appear at this office on the 15th day of March, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., to respond and furnish testimony concerning said alleged abandonment.

JOHN CROMB, Register.
[34-37] P. C. SLETTEN, Receiver.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 18th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 20th, 1883, viz: PETER DEROSIER, Pre. D. S. No. 7134, for the ne¼ S. 10, T. 142, R. 41. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Antoine Labombard, Alie Rivold, of Gentilly, Isac Gervais, of Red Lake Falls, Paul Genereux, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[34-38] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 18th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 25th, 1883, viz: EVEN SOVNDSEN, Pre. D. S. No. 6934, for the se¼ S. 30 and s½ nw¼, sw¼ ne¼, S. 29, T. 148 R. 44. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: John Gudmundson, Andrew C Anderson, Albert Anderson and John Anderson, all of Aldal, Polk Co., Minn.

[34-38] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 11th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 18th, 1883, viz: CHARLES TEAL, H'd No. 6301, for the sw¼ S. 28, T. 150, R. 48. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Louis Colter, Neal A. McDonald, William Ellis, of Euclid, W. H. Jennings, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[34-37] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 11th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 20th, 1883, viz: KITTEL SEVERSON GREEN, Pre. D. S. No. 1076, for the se¼ S. 10, T. 147, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Ole K. Halvorson, of Fertile, Even G. Zneberg, of Aldal, Ole J. Moen and Andreas H. Hammer of Fertile, Polk Co., Minn.

[34-37] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 7th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 12th, 1883, viz: JOSEPH TURGEON, H'd No. 4142, for the se¼ S. 20, T. 152, R. 46. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Louis Hinze, Lou will, Joseph Benoit, Euclid, Francois Blais and David Lessard, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[33-37] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 26th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 26th, 1883, viz: GEORGE CHARBONEAU, H'd No. 5679, for the nw¼ S. 20, T. 152, R. 47. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Fred Gueter, Fred Sutter of Euclid, Polk Co. Minn., David Brault, Fred Zwarek, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[35-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 21st, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 29th, 1883, viz: FRANK BENOIT, Pre. D. S. No. 4,763 for the sw¼ Sec. 10, T. 151, R. 48. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Louis Hinze, Joe Wassel, David Belodine, Jos. Sturgeon, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn.

[35-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

NEW

DRUG STORE

IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh

DRUGS, MEDICINES,
PAINTS, OILS,
and YANKEE NOTIONS.

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 50 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave order at my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn.

DR. A. NELSON.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan 4th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Feb 15th, 1883, viz: FRANK PELKEY, Hd. No. 989, for the sw¼ Sec. 10, T. 150, R. 48. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Felix Fournet, Hippolyte Paris, Bartime Norman, Benjamin Daly, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn. [37-41]

HARDWARE.

EIKEN BROS.,

ARE JUST RECEIVING THEIR LARGE STOCK OF

Hardware,
Tinware,
Stoves
and Shelfware

WE SHALL KEEP A

FULL and COMPLETE STOCK
OF GOODS.

In our line and Invite the Patronage of all.

COME AND EXAMINE OUR STYLES AND PRICES.

One door south of U. S. Land Office Crookston, Minn., (Overland's old stand.) EIKEN BROS.

E. D. SCHRAER

LIVERY.

Feed and Sale Stable.

Best Turnouts in the city. Single or Double Rigs, with or without drivers or Saddle horses always ready at a moments notice by day or night. If you want a

NOBBY TURNOUT

—CALL AT THE—

RED BARN

E. D. SCHRADER,
Cor. Main and Third Streets, Crookston.

MERCHANTS'

BILLIARD HALL!

M. L. PRETTS, Proprietor.

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

The Choicest Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand.

Jas. G. McDonald,

MANUFACTURER OF

BRICK AND TILE

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

We are prepared to fill orders for brick in any quantity at the kiln or delivered, and to furnish estimates, plans and specifications, and to complete buildings of every description. Mason work of all kinds done promptly. Plans and specifications of all building under charge furnished free, executed by the best architects in the Northwest.

NEW

RESTAURANT!

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

JACK CONFAIR, Proprietor.

Warm meals at all hours. First-class in every particular. TRY THE NEW RESTAURANT at Losey's Old Stand, Main street, Crookston, Minn.

A. Allen,

AGENT

—FOR THE—

HOWE

SCALE

COMPANY.

power or authority not sufficiently defined by the law. It is of course admitted that there is no question in which the people at large are interested in a greater degree than the preservation of health. The establishing of sanitary regulations is an essential feature in the proper government of every community. A constant influx of immigration is liable at any time to bring with it contagious diseases which may become epidemic and, unless summarily dealt with, spread beyond control. It is of the highest importance that boards of health be vested with the authority necessary to efficient action in such emergencies.

The report of the State board of health suggests many changes in the law wherein experience in its practical operation has shown it to be defective. I commend the requests and recommendations of the report to your favorable consideration.

BOARD OF IMMIGRATION.

The State board of immigration reports the expenditure of $9,900.45 in the preparation of pamphlets, circulars, etc., in different languages, which were distributed to the extent of 77,800 pamphlets, 39,000 circulars with map of the State, 3,500 reports of a statistical character. The secretary estimates that the population of the State has been increased the past two years over 100,000 by immigration alone. I have no doubt this board is efficient in the work it was created to perform. The judicious distribution of printed matter representing the "resources and capabilities" of our State, throughout those countries from whence there is a continuous flow of emigration, should be continued, and I recommend a moderate appropriation for that purpose.

INSURANCE COMMISSIONER.

The insurance commissioner's report presents an interesting review of the business of his department since the establishment of the office in 1872. The history of insurance in the State, as illustrated by the comprehensive tables and other data of his report, is an interesting subject for examination. The growth of the business is shown by the following comparative statement:

	Risks Written.	Premiums.	Losses.
1881	$122,070,500	$1,596,353	$914,950
1882	48,718,176	689,758	306,839
Increase	$73,352,324	$906,615	$608,111

The commissioner remarks that "ten years ago, from an insurance stand point, Minnesota was a small and inconspicuous State; to-day, twenty-five States must yield the precedence to her."

HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

The Historical society suffered considerable loss by the burning of the capitol. Its main library was mostly saved in good condition, but the fine museum of archæological and historical curiosities was nearly entirely destroyed, together with many publications, pictures, &c., that constituted an interesting feature of its collections. The valuable manuscripts and greatly prized collection of bound Minnesota newspapers were in a fire-proof vault and escaped unharmed. The society at once removed to the basement of the temporary capitol and began vigorous efforts to repair its losses. The library was soon restored, and considerable additions have since been made until it now numbers over 10,000 volumes of carefully selected and valuable works. The society is now in a very prosperous condition, and prepared to enter upon a career of more enlarged usefulness than before the fire interrupted its work. It has been its desire for many years to erect on its own ground near the capitol a building constructed with special reference to its peculiar needs. For this purpose a subscription of $15,000 has already been pledged. It is the intention, when $25,000 is thus raised, to ask the State to contribute an equal amount. The great usefulness of the society, its past energetic efforts to fulfill its objects and its success in the face of many difficulties, should commend such a request when made to a favorable consideration.

THE LIBRARY.

Among the most serious calamities entailed by the burning of the old capitol was the almost total loss of the public library. As appears by the report of the state librarian, there were saved from the fire but 849 volumes out of over 15,000. The foresight of the librarian had provided an insurance of $10,000 upon the library, though no legislative authority had been given for doing so. With this amount, which was promptly paid, and the appropriation of $9,000 made for the purpose, there have been purchased 3,899 volumes. There have been received by donation 4,631 volumes, and by exchange 373, making a total of 9,752 volumes now in the library. The librarian cites many instances of great generosity upon the part of States and individuals in donations of valuable books, for which suitable acknowledgment was duly made.

LOGS AND LUMBER.

Reports of surveyors general of logs and lumber have been made according to law and are herewith transmitted. They show the following transactions:

Logs scaled, feet—

	1881.	1882.
First district	260,045,720	276,595,640
Second district	228,648,210	319,211,780

Lumber manufactured, feet—

	1881.	1882.
First district	No report.	126,820,591
Second district	317,398,970	423,069,250
Fifth district, estimated		239,000,000

FISH CULTURE.

The fish commissioners submit a report containing much interesting information upon the general subject of fish culture, and in their detailed exhibit show much industry upon their part in the distribution of whitefish, trout, salmon, and numerous other varieties of fish in the waters of the State. There were distributed during two years 1,683,166 fish, the product of the State hatchery.

AGRICULTURE.

The agricultural statistics of the State as presented by the report of the commissioner of statistics indicate the existence of a progressive spirit pervading this great industry of our people. There is gratifying evidence of improved methods and a more intelligent system of management in this important interest, which is the basis of the wealth and prosperity of the State. In sections that have heretofore been almost wholly devoted to the production of a single staple, recent harvests have returned in gratifying abundance a great diversity of crops, and as an exporter of stock and products of the dairy, Minnesota makes a showing full of promise for the future. There has been a marked increase of interest in stock raising and much effort made to introduce those breeds best adapted to our climate. The officers of the State Agricultural association informed me that parties who exhibited fine breeds of stock from abroad at our last State fair, have since introduced such stock in large numbers in different parts of the State by sale to farmers who became acquainted with their superior qualities at that exhibition; that the demand for such stock for breeding purposes throughout the State is active, and that they believe Minnesota is making rapid strides towards becoming a large stock-producing State. It is our duty in every practicable way to encourage the growing interest in this new departure of our agriculture. I believe a most effective way in which such encouragement may be extended is to aid the State and county associations in their annual exhibitions. The State should grant them liberal appropriations and the people should encourage them by their personal presence. I recommend an increase of the appropriation to the State association to $3,000 per annum, and a like amount to be distributed to the county societies.

We are intelligently committed to the policy of encouraging forestry. In that connection I commend the suggestion that the State assume the expense of printing a considerable edition of a revised manual of instructions for tree culture, and for its free distribution to those who seek information.

The American Forestry congress is expected to hold its next meeting in St. Paul next August. It will be an occasion of great importance to our people. The use of the rooms of the capitol are tendered as far as they may be serviceable, and it seems proper that the State Forestry association be provided funds at least sufficient for the manual referred to, and for their incidental expenses in connection with the expected meeting.

RAILROADS.

The vast aggregations of capital concentrated within the control of the monster corporations of the country within the past few years, are suggestive of danger and possible disaster to the vital interests of the public. The increasing aggressiveness and the bolder defiance of corporate power, especially represented by great railroad corporations, must ultimately be met and restrained by the power and authority of the State. Through consolidation and absorption the entire railroad system of the country is rapidly passing under the control of a few men who may by the despotic use of the power they thereby wield greatly injure the material interests of entire communities of people. The knowledge that such power lies in the control of these huge monopolies to be exercised almost at will, creates a feeling of disquiet and distrust, if not dismay, among the people. While we recognize the fact that these corporations confer great benefit upon the country, that they are mighty in their influence for the spread and development of our civilization, and should receive the cordial support of public sympathy in the exercise of their reasonable and legitimate functions, yet they should on their part feel that they are the servants and not the masters of the public: that like the citizen, they are amenable to laws whose majesty at once affords them protection and commands them to respect its restraints. They should be reminded that they are creatures of the authority of the State; that it has endowed them with valuable franchises and enormous subsidies, and that it affords them that protection and enjoyment of possessions which gives to all property its greatest value. They should be impressed with the fact that their legitimate resources are wholly derived from the patronage of the public, and that their proper and legal relation to the public can only be maintained by dispensing exact justice to every individual and locality with which they have to deal.

That the State has power to exercise control, within reasonable limits, over these corporations, is a principle long since established, and that it has not exercised such control to a greater degree is due to the patience and forbearance of the public. While the authority of the State should be exercised with the utmost care and prudence, and all the rights of these corporations respected and given the amplest protection, yet they should be placed under such restraint and accountability as will guarantee the people equal protection of their rights and secure prompt redress of every just cause of complaint. The State has been slow to lay its restraining hand upon corporate power. The policy has prevailed to grant corporations the largest liberty consistent with public rights, but a too free exercise of that liberty has sometimes taken the form of license, and the interests of the public have been ignored as though they did not exist. Indeed, recent events suggest the necessity of legislation to protect these corporations from each other.

The "war of rates" that was lately inaugurated between the rival systems operating in the Northwest developed some features in the policy of railway management to which public attention had not before been specially directed. The question of "territorial rights" has become an essential element in the economy of railroad management. With the pretensions and the assumptions of an autocrat, a railroad manager publicly asserts the right to control the territory his system of roads traverses, and gives notice that it must not be trespassed upon under penalties that involve disaster to the business interests of the country. Corporations have become to such an extent a law unto themselves, that continued, unrestrained indulgence in the immunities they assume, will in time subject the country to a domination against which the people will rebel.

The subject of legislative action imposing restraints upon the management of railroads is one that should command your earnest and careful attention. The foregoing considerations are not suggested altogether by the attitude of the corporations existing or operating in this State, but they are applicable in a modified form to the question as presented before you.

The very able and comprehensive report of the railroad commissioner will furnish you much valuable information obtained by thorough research and industrious investigation. His exhaustive discussion of the railroad problem in its several phases, as presented at this time, covers many suggestions of much practical value. His recommendations are numerous, and of a character that point toward progress in the solution of this complex problem.

The classification of railroads upon the basis of income, and the establishment of a "board of control," to fix rates of transportation, limited by a maximum for each class and fixed by law, would, I believe, provide a remedy for those complaints of discrimination and extortion to which the commissioner's attention is being constantly called. I recommend such legislation as will embody this principle. It may be said that legislation of somewhat like character some years ago was disappointing in its results. To this may be answered that the conditions are greatly changed. Then the railroads of the State were struggling against adverse circumstances. Many of them were practically bankrupt; their lines were largely located in sparsely populated or wholly uninhabited districts, and in some cases without income sufficient to meet their expenses. A decade has wrought a wondrous change in our railroads, as in all other material interests of the State. They are now, with hardly an exception, wealthy corporations, earning dividends and carrying a surplus in their treasuries. The wilderness they traversed has been occupied by populous communities; their tonnage has increased eight-fold, and their equipment is taxed to its utmost to do the business pressing upon them. The legislation of 1871 was crude and ill-considered. The same principle embodied in provisions comprehending a more enlightened understanding of the question, gained by the experience of a decade, would prove a success where it was a failure ten years ago.

The railroad commissioner recommends that telegraph companies be placed on the same basis as to inspection, surveillance and taxation; that sleeping car companies now untaxed, be required to report to him and pay taxes on basis of income; that more effective legislation be had to compel railroad companies to perform their duty as common carriers in the shipment of grain; that a railway commission composed of the governor, auditor and railroad commissioner for purposes of appeal and more important questions be established, and that more power be given the commissioner's office over railway companies for the enforcement of existing laws and regulations affecting railways. The reasons for each of these and other recommendations of the report will appear in his elaborate exposition of each subject.

During the year closing with Dec. 1, 1882, there were constructed 531 87-100 miles of new railway, making a total of 3,749 13-100 miles within the boundaries of the State. The total cost of the railroads of the State is given at $149,312,631.30, an average of $43,934.13 per mile. The total amount given to these railroads by the people of Minnesota in lands and bonds on a cash basis, as estimated by the commissioners, is $76,489,790, an average of $23,331 per mile.

The earnings of all lines in the State for the year ending June 30, were: From passengers, $4,816,218.14; freight, $13,158,697.41; miscellaneous, $830,277.58; total, $18,805,193.13. Total operating expenses, $10,221,783.69. Average earnings per mile, $5,612.24; expenses, $3,066.90. There were 9,962,393 passengers carried and 5,882,120 tons of freight transported during the year.

The following statement shows the amount of taxes paid to the State by railroad companies since 1861:

From 1861 to 1872	$322,523 50
1873	10-,779 65
1874	109,029 01
1875	132,119 13
1876	145,791 58
1877	161,150 96
1878	200,171 14
1879	260,476 44
1880	315,482 54
1881	415,222 99
1882	470,513 33
Total	$2,541,254 27

Your particular attention is called to the cases cited by the commissioner of an effort upon the part of two of the companies to evade payment of taxes upon part of their income. It would be a dangerous precedent if they should succeed in establishing the claim for immunity which has been set up in these cases. If further legislation is required to compel these companies to pay their full tribute to the State it should be promptly enacted.

STATE INSPECTION OF GRAIN.

The grievous complaints of the agricultural class in some sections of the State in regard to the warehousing and grading of grain, is a subject that demands attention. The abuses complained of are of a character that cannot be ignored, though they may not be fully sustained by the facts in all cases. It is equally in the interest of the buyer as well as the seller of grain, that some system be devised by which the differences arising between them may be arbitrated and settled through agencies entirely disinterested. The farmer now complains that he has no option or appeal in the transaction involving the disposition of his product, but must perforce accept the judgment of the buyer as to its quality and value. A system of State inspection which comprehends the fixing of grades of grain and the adoption of rules regulating the management of elevators and warehouses, has been tried with success in other States. I recommend a careful consideration of this subject upon your part, and an examination of the methods and results of such a system in its operation elsewhere, with a view to its adaptation to the exigencies of the situation in this State.

REMOVAL OF JUDGES.

Twice within the last five years impeachments have been prosecuted against district judges. The disgraceful details of evidence occupied the public attention week after week, and the expense in one case was more than ten times the salary of the chief justice.

Impeachment is authorized by most State constitutions in the case of judges of district courts as well as other State officers, but there is also provided in a majority of the States a less imposing and expensive means of removing such judges for reasonable cause. This is by the concurrent action of both branches of the legislature, for which in a majority of cases the assent of two-thirds of all the members elected to each is requisite. Formal charges are required, which, in some States, may be only for minor offenses, or causes not impeachable, and in others for any reasonable cause, whether impeachable or not. The accused, of course, has his right of defense. Many years may probably elapse before we have occasion again to desire the immediate removal of a district judge, but the necessity for such a result at some time is not beyond reasonable expectation. I recommend the proposal as a constitutional amendment of a new section, providing for the method of removal by legislative address for any reasonable cause, impeachable or otherwise.

THE MILITIA.

The moderate encouragement given the militia organizations of the State by the act of 1881 has had the effect to considerably stimulate the zeal and martial spirit of the volunteer companies then existing, and to induce the formation of additional companies to the limit of the full quota allowed by that act. As appears by the report of the adjutant general, there have been organized within the past year companies in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Albert Lea, Fairmont, Mankato, Austin, and Fergus Falls. The Minnesota National guard now consists of ten companies of infantry, two troops of cavalry, and two sections of artillery, all armed as infantry except one section of artillery, which is well equipped in that arm of the service. This force is organized into two battalions of infantry and one independent battery. The guard has greatly advanced in discipline and efficiency during the past year, much of which is due to the instruction received during the encampment held last July. The opportunity that occasion afforded for practical experience of soldiers on duty was fully improved, and the beneficial results of the experience acquired have been most manifest in the improved esprit du corps of the entire organization and the stimulus given to its growth. I deem it important that all proper aid and encouragement be given the State militia. These annual encampments are very useful in imparting such instruction as will enable the organization to act together with intelligence, and secure that degree of efficiency that will make the militia reliable for such possible service as it may be called upon to perform. The expense is moderate, and I therefore recommend an appropriation for the purchase of tents and other camp equipage sufficient for a regiment. There are several localities now awaiting authority to organize companies. A moderate increase in the organization would seem to be suggested by the growth of our population. I therefore recommend that the authorized aggregate force of the Minnesota National guard be increased to sixteen companies of infantry and two sections of artillery, and the annual appropriation for its maintenance be increased to $12,000.

The adjutant general's office has procured the allowance of pension claims during the past two years to the amount of $181,687 50. There are now pending 1,624 cases, of which the office has charge. New claims are being filed in number sufficient to prevent the list of those pending to become perceptibly reduced.

BIENNIAL ELECTIONS.

The advantage accruing to the State by the adoption of biennial sessions of the legislature is so generally recognized that I doubt if the wisdom of the change is now questioned in any quarter. It is no longer regarded as an experiment, but a demonstrated benefit in the economy of our State affairs. I believe experience would induce a similar judgment in behalf of biennial elections. The people are surfeited with the agitation and excitement attendant upon our often recurring elections. They would accept as a measure of relief a proposition to have them occur but once in two years. I have no doubt they would emphatically approve an amendment to the constitution embodying this proposition, and I earnestly recommend that your body provide for the submission of such an amendment at the next general election. As a question of economy it recommends itself with especial force. The expense of each general election held throughout the State is estimated to be fully $100,000. The saving of this sum every alternate year would prove an appreciable relief to the burdens imposed upon the people. I believe this change would also have a healthful influence upon and elevate the character of our political contests. The better elements of the community, feeling it less a tax upon their time, would give more attention to their political duties, and the tendency would be to eliminate much that is objectionable, which now marks and demoralizes our politics. Some changes would have to be made in the terms of State and county officers, and elections must be held the year in which members of congress are chosen. In this connection I would also suggest that the date be fixed on which the political year of the State shall commence. The indefiniteness and uncertainty which now attaches to this matter renders possible complications of an embarrassing character.

The growth of population in our State institutions involves a corresponding increase in the consumption of every class of supplies. A portion of these supplies, more particularly fuel, could undoubtedly be purchased with greater economy if done by some one officer of the State, who, by inviting bids, could secure the benefit of competition from abroad. The consumption of coal at all the institutions amounts to several thousand tons per annum. This could be purchased in the manner indicated, for delivery at different points in quantities required, at much less relative prices than those now paid. Your attention is invited to this matter.

I transmit for your information and such action as you may deem best to take thereon, a petition from a number of citizens of the State who hold claims against the Transit Railroad company, which were filed for adjustment under the act of 1881, "providing for the adjustment of certain alleged claims against the State," asking that the balance of their claims be paid by the State.

In July last, I received from the treasury of the United States, drafts to the amount of $37,203.57 in allowance of a claim of the State under the act of congress, approved Feb. 26, 1857, for 5 per centum of the net proceeds of the sale of lands upon the Winnebago and Sioux reservations. The agent appointed by the governor in 1874 (Gen. J. B. Sanborn), under the joint resolution of the legislature of that year, "authorizing the appointment of an agent to prosecute certain claims against the United States," made claim to 15 per cent of the amount so allowed for services in prosecuting this claim, under his contract made with the State concurrent with his appointment. The matter was submitted to the attorney general, who gave it as his opinion that authority did not exist for paying the claim. In that opinion he says: "The joint resolution authorizes the governor to appoint an agent for the purposes therein named, and directs that a stipulation or contract be made with such agent of the tenor stated in said resolution. No other or further power in the premises is conferred upon him. I am therefore of the opinion that when such agent was appointed, and a contract made with him by the governor of the State, that the duties of the executive department relative thereto were at an end. That all questions arising under such contract were reserved by the legislature, and must be settled and adjudicated by it; that your excellency, therefore, has no authority to adjust or pay this claim." Other questions were raised by the attorney general which need not be quoted, as his opinion in full, together with correspondence had with the treasury department upon the subject, are herewith transmitted.

The joint resolution under which the agent was appointed provides that his compensation "shall only be paid in case of successful issue of said prosecution, and only out of moneys realized from the payment of said claim and not otherwise." At the request of the agent and under the advice of the attorney general, I have retained 15 per cent of the amount received as above stated ($5,580.53), and deposited the same in bank to the credit of the governor of the State, to await your action in the matter. If you shall decide to allow the claim its payment should be authorized by joint resolution.

The State has made claims through the agent to other sums on account of public lands located with military land warrants and otherwise disposed of, the allowance of which will probably depend somewhat upon the zeal and industry with which they are prosecuted. It is due to the agent, and I think would prove of advantage to the State, that authority be granted the governor, within well defined limits, to adjust claims for this service of the State agent.

CONCLUSION.

The foregoing reflections and recommendations are suggested by such an examination of the facts bearing upon each subject referred to, as I have been able to make. They are the expressions of my judgment submitted for your review. You are fresh from the people, and presumably acquainted with their views and their demands. Your action here will no doubt reflect their wishes, and result in the promotion of their best interests. To co-operate in securing that end, will be the earnest wish and purpose of the executive department.

L. F. HUBBARD, Governor.

J. J. Johnson, of Richmond, Ind., writes: If every one knew what a good medicine Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla is, there would be fewer invalids. It cured my wife of general ill health. I think it the best medicine I ever used."

A Brother's Signature.

From the Lewiston, (Me.,) Journal.

A man from a neighboring town wished one of our banks to take his note, a short time ago. The directors said they would cash the note if his brother would endorse it. The next day in came the man with his brother's signature on the note. The bank took it and paid the money. When the note became due the signer did not pay it, and the bank notified the brother. That gentleman came into the counting-room in amazement, and asked, "What have you against me?" "Didn't you endorse a note for your brother?" asked the cashier. "Not that I know of," replied the man. "Isn't this your signature?" demanded the official, producing the note. The man looked at his name, written on the paper, and rubbed his eyes. "Yes," said he, "that's my signature, sure; but I should think he might have allowed me to write it!" He paid the note.

Railway Construction in Wisconsin.

The exact amount of railroad construction in this state during the calender year just passed is 391 miles. Of this the Northwestern built 7 miles, St. Paul 83 miles, Omaha 132, Wisconsin and Michigan 41, Northern Pacific 5, Milwaukee & Lake Winnebago 65, Wisconsin Central 4, St. Paul Eastern Grand Trunk 11, Lake Shore and Western 45. The amount of construction in 1881 was 300 miles, in 1880, 238 and 1879, 94. In 1871 there was 414 miles constructed, the most of one year in the history of the state.

Why suffer from a state of ill-health? Why be troubled with dyspepsia? Brown's Iron Bitters will cure you.

Profitable Patients.

The most wonderful and marvelous success in cases where persons are sick or wasting away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them, (profitable patients for doctors,) is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters.—Cincinnati Star.

Indorsed by the Clergy.

We take the pleasure in recommending Dr. Warner's White Wine of Tar Syrup to the public, and especially to any public speaker that may be troubled with throat or lung disease. Rev. M. L. Booher, Reading, Mich.

Sold by all Druggists.

Rev. J. T. Iddings, Albion, Mich.

Rev. V. L. Lockwood, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Personal—Men Only.

The Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich., will send Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts and Electric Appliances on trial for thirty days to men (young or old) who are afflicted with nervous debility, lost vitality and kindred troubles, guaranteeing speedy and complete restoration of health and manly vigor. Address as above. N. B.—No risk is incurred, as thirty days' trial is allowed.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are excellent for the relief of Hoarseness or Sore Throat.

Highly Offended.

When the girl with pink-and-white powder on her face got into the street-car, and the two passengers who had been talking about breadstuffs resumed their conversation. Said one,—

"Flour is plenty and cheap enough; have you noticed?"

"That's because it's so much kneaded," responded the other, with a feeble attempt at a pun.

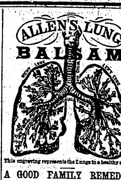
The first speaker threw up his hands in affected horror. "To this complexion have we come at last," he quoted.

Then the girl rose up. "I think your just horrid!" she exclaimed. "I won't sit here and have no such remarks passed on me!"

"We didn't mean"—one of the gentlemen attempted to explain; but she was not to be appeased.

"Let me out! I'd rather walk, indeed!" and she flounced off.—Detroit Post.

General Grant's dinner in honor of the Japanese Prince cost $2,000.



This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
Harmless to the Most Delicate.

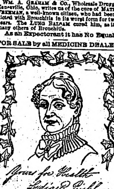
By its faithful use Consumption has been Cured when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

Wm. C. Diggs, Merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes April 4, 1881, that he wants us to know that the Lung Balsam has cured his mother of consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says, others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

Wm. A. Graham & Co., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of Mathias Freeman, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The Lung Balsam cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

As an Expectorant it has No Equal!

FOR SALE by all MEDICINE DEALERS.



LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.
Is a Positive Cure
For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population.

A Medicine for Woman. Invented by a Woman. Prepared by a Woman.

The Greatest Medical Discovery Since the Dawn of History.

☞It revives the drooping spirits, invigorates and harmonizes the organic functions, gives elasticity and firmness to the step, restores the natural lustre to the eye, and plants on the pale cheek of woman the fresh roses of life's spring and early summer time.

☞Physicians Use It and Prescribe It Freely.☜

It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulant, and relieves weakness of the stomach.

That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this Compound is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER will eradicate every vestige of Humors from the Blood, and give tone and strength to the system, of man woman or child. Insist on having it.

Both the Compound and Blood Purifier are prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price of either, $1. Six bottles for $5. Sent by mail in the form of pills, or of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Enclose 3ct. stamp. Send for pamphlet.

No family should be without LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS. They cure constipation, biliousness, and torpidity of the liver. 25 cents per box.

☞Sold by all Druggists.☜ (1)

ECZEMA, TETTERS,
HUMORS,
PIMPLES,
Diseases of Hair and Scalp,
IMFLAMMATION,
ERUPTIONS,
ULCERS,
ITCHINGS,
ALL VANISH
BY USE OF
DR. C. W. BENSON'S SKIN CURE.

KIDNEY-WORT
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF CONSTIPATION.

No other disease is so prevalent in this country as Constipation, and no remedy has ever equalled the celebrated Kidney-Wort as a cure. Whatever the cause, however obstinate the case, this remedy will overcome it.

PILES. THIS distressing complaint is very apt to be complicated with constipation. Kidney-Wort strengthens the weakened parts and quickly cures all kinds of Piles even when physicians and medicines have before failed.

☞If you have either of these troubles

PRICE $1. USE Druggists Sell

KIDNEY-WORT

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT

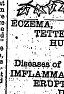
Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.

In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

TUTT'S
PILLS
ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.

Cures Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Bilious Colic, Constipation, Rheumatism, Piles, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Torpid Liver, and Female Irregularities. If you do not "feel very well," a single pill at bed-time stimulates the stomach, restores the appetite, imparts vigor to the system. Price, 25c. 35 Murray St., N.Y.

☞WRITE FOR TUTT'S MANUAL FREE.☜



Hostetter's Stomach Bitters gives steadiness to the nerves, induces a healthy, natural flow of bile, prevents constipation without unduly purging the bowels, gently stimulates the circulation, and by promoting a vigorous condition of the physical functions, [illegible]

For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

"Durability is better than show." Durability of health is worth more than the wealth of a Vanderbilt. Kidney-Wort is man's co-laborer in maintaining health. With healthy liver, bowels and kidneys, men and women will always be in good health. If the bowels are torpid, if piles torment, if the back is full of pain, get a package of Kidney-Wort and be cured without more suffering.

The St Paul banks show an exchange business of $100,000,000 for the year.

The most brilliant shades possible, on all fabrics are made by the Diamond Dyes. Unequalled for brilliancy and durability. 10 cts.

Winona, as well as Duluth, has a brass band composed of little boys.

"Buchupaiba."

Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Diseases. $1. Druggists.

The public debt decrease during December was $15,413,223.00.

From China to Peru and back again a thousand times in a night, will the mind of the nervous sufferer travel, while blessed sleep forsakes his eyes. He can enjoy sweet rest by the use of Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills. Sold by all druggists.

Rear Admiral Balch, U. S. N., will be retired Jan. 3, 1883.

Ladies of all ages who suffer from loss of appetite; from imperfect digestion, low spirits and nervous debility may have life and health renewed and indefinitely extended by the use of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies for all complaints incident to the female constitution. We have not only a living faith in Mrs. Pinkham, but we are assured that her medicines are at once most agreeable and efficacious.

The Lanesboro bank is to be removed to La Crosse or Chicago.

"Rough on Rats."

Clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, ants, bed-bugs, skunks, chipmunks, gophers. 15c Druggists.

The Dakota legislature will convene at Yankton on the 9th of January.

Consumption is a disease we all dread. It often carries its victim to an untimely grave. How important, then, for those who cherish life and health, to prevent that disease in its early stages. Every Cold or Cough should be treated with Allen's Lung Balsam. There is no better remedy.

The building improvements of the past year in Winona amounted to $595,000.

Skinny Men.

"Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Debility. $1.

An Awful Responsibility.

We all deplore the terrible ravages, of consumption but only a few of us seem to have common sense enough to take the proper means of preventing it. Hale's Honey of Horehound and tar, taken as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Difficult Breathing or Hoarseness, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Sold by druggists.

Pike's Toothache Drops cure in one minute.

The Flesh Speedily Reunites when obstinate sores are cleansed with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Of Druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, 50 cents.

Eminent Dr. J. J. Caldwell, Baltimore, Md. states: I have used Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic largely in Debility, Febrile, and Nervous Diseases, and I have found it one of the most reliable of nutrient tonics now in use or to be found in pharmacy." (Take no other.) Of Druggists.

Not a Beverage.

They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poor whisky or poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

Look Out For Frauds.

The great popularity of Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters has induced unscrupulous manufacturers to imitate the name as nearly as possible and still escape the severe penalties of the law. In order to guard against such base imitations, see that the signature of J. P. Allen, Druggist and Manufacturing Pharmacist, St. Paul, is on the front label of every bottle. All others are counterfeits.

Rodding's Russia Salve has genuine merit, as all who use it will testify. Price 25c. Try it.

"Rough on rats." Clears out rats, mice, flies, roaches, bed-bugs, ants, vermin, 15 cts.

Mother Swan's Worm Syrup, for feverishness, restlessness, worms. Tasteless, 25 cts.

Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners keep new boots and shoes from running over. Sold by shoe and hardware dealers. 25 cts. a pair.

Petrolia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1879

Messrs. Kennedy & Co.:—My hair is growing out so fast that I can almost see it grow myself, through the use of your Carboline.

D. Nixon.

Rays of Sunshine

Will shed their radiance on your invalid friend's heart, by sending him or her a bottle of Dr. Halliday's Blood Purifier as a Christmas or New Year's present. Sold by all Druggists.

Why be weak? Why not be healthy, robust, and strong, by using Brown's Iron Bitters?

Try the new brand Spring Tobacco.

Vanderbilt Prophesies Peace.

In an interview, Wm. H. Vanderbilt states that the object of his trip to Cuba is simply for relaxation. In talking upon plans which it was said were being considered: "I will say to you," said Mr. Vanderbilt, with a smile, "that I expect the roads will all be operated in harmony. Peace accomplishes more than war. The railroads are all doing a good business, and when they were fighting, their general percentages were no larger. When they come to foot up at the end of the year they found their shares in the business were the same. It was a question whether they should keep peace and earn a million or so a year, or go to war and not increase their proportions. I do not think the people are benefited by these wars. I look for nothing but peace among the roads, and I hear of nothing else."

An employe of the railroad company at Sleepy Eye, named Tim Toomey, was run over by the cars and killed in the yard while attempting to get out a caboose.

Health is Wealth!

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment: a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued by LAMBIE & CO., Druggists, Third street, corner Wabasha, St. Paul, Minn. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention.

FREE For Information & Maps of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, write to E. H. SMITH, 46 Clark Street, Chicago.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

YOUNG MEN learn Telegraphy here and we will give you a situation. Circulars free. VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES. Sure relief ASTHMA. [illegible] Stowell & Co., Charlestown, Mass.

Mensman's Peptonized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutritious properties. It contains blood-making, force-generating and life-sustaining properties; invaluable for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, nervous prostration, and all forms of general debility; also, in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, overwork, or acute disease, particularly if resulting from pulmonary complaints. Caswell, Hazard & Co., Proprietors, New York. Sold by Druggists.

ROYAL

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

SEEK

health and avoid sickness. Instead of feeling tired and worn out, instead of aches and pains, wouldn't you rather feel fresh and strong?

You can continue feeling miserable and good for nothing, and no one but yourself can find fault, but if you are tired of that kind of life, you can change it if you choose.

How? By getting one bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters, and taking it regularly according to directions.

Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 26, 1881.

Gentlemen:—I have suffered with pain in my side and back, and great soreness on my breast, with shooting pains all through my body, attended with great weakness, depression of spirits, and loss of appetite. I have taken several different medicines, and was treated by prominent physicians for my liver, kidneys, and spleen, but I got no relief. I thought I would try Brown's Iron Bitters; I have now taken one bottle and a half and am about well—pain in side and back all gone—soreness all out of my breast, and I have a good appetite, and am gaining in strength and flesh. It can justly be called the king of medicines.

John K. Allender.

Brown's Iron Bitters is composed of Iron in soluble form; Cinchona the great tonic, together with other standard remedies, making a remarkable non-alcoholic tonic, which will cure Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Malaria, Weakness, and relieve all Lung and Kidney diseases.

THE
PACIFIC NORTHWEST!
Oregon, Washington & Idaho.

Offers the best field for Emigrants—viz.: a mild, equitable, and healthy climate; cheap lands of great fertility, producing all varieties of Grain, Fruit, and Grasses, in wonderful abundance; an inexhaustible supply of Timber; vast Coal Fields, and other mineral deposits; cheap and quick transportation by railroads and river navigation; direct commerce with all parts of the world, owing to its proximity to the Pacific Ocean.

NO DROUTHS, NO INSECT PESTS, NO HURRICANES, WHIRLWINDS, OR OTHER DESTRUCTIVE PHENOMENA.

The Lands of the Pacific Northwest show an average yield of wheat per acre largely in excess of that of any other section of the United States.

No failure of crops has ever occurred.

Oregon Wheat commands a higher price than that of any other country in the Liverpool market.

An immense area of very fertile Railroad and Government Lands, within easy reach of the trunk lines of the Northern Pacific R. R., the Oregon Railway & Navigation, and the Oregon & California R. R. Co's and their numerous branches in the great Valleys of the Columbia and its tributaries, are now offered for sale at Low Prices and on Easy Terms, or open to pre-emption and Homestead Entry.

The great movement of population to the Columbia region now in progress will be enormously increased by the completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Co.'s systems. This renders certain a rapid increase in the value of Lands now open to purchase or to entry under the United States Land Laws.

For Pamphlets and Maps, descriptive of the country, its resources, climate, routes of travel, rates and full information, address

A. L. STOKES,
General Eastern Agent,
52 Clark st., Chicago, Ill.

KIDNEY-WORT
IS A SURE CURE
for all diseases of the Kidneys and
LIVER

It has specific action on this most important organ, enabling it to throw off torpidity and inaction, stimulating the healthy secretion of the Bile, and by keeping the bowels in free condition, effecting its regular discharge.

Malaria. If you are suffering from malaria, have the chills, are bilious, dyspeptic, or constipated, Kidney-Wort will surely relieve and quickly cure.

In the Spring to cleanse the System, every one should take a thorough course of it.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Price $1.

KIDNEY-WORT

HAIR Send postal for Ill'st'd catalog. HULL'S Hair Store, 38 & 40 Monroe, Chicago

SEEDS [illegible] D. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford, Ill.

Wheat Growers.

Why do you keep plodding along raising 10 bushels soft wheat to the acre when you might be growing 3 times that amount. Get a start of pure seed once more. Try some of the Saskatchewan FIFE, the purest, most prolific and best milling wheat in the world. So pronounced by the millers of Minneapolis. Send to Abernethy & Wellman of Minneapolis for a circular giving particulars

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address True & Co., Augusta, Me.

Educate For Business at the Oldest & Best Commercial College. Circular free. Address C. Bayliss, Dubuque, Ia.

WHEAT New Wheat. Yield 30 to 45 bushels per acre. New Potatoes—enormous crops. White Russian Oats. Nothing like it. All kinds Farm & Garden Seeds. Send for catalogue. John A. Salzer, La Crosse, Wis. SEEDS.

PATENTS Procured, or NO PAY. Also, Trade Marks, Etc. Send Model and Sketch, will examine and report if patentable. Many years' practice. Pamphlet free. N. W. FITZGERALD & CO., Patent Attorneys, Washington, D. C.

CONSUMPTION. I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address. DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

MAGNETIC INSOLES!! Warm the feet, perfect the circulation, and prevent colds, rheumatism and disease. MAGNETON APPLIANCE CO., Sole Manufacturers, 218 State St., Chicago, Ill. For sale by all leading Druggists and Shoe Dealers, or sent to any address on receipt of $1 per pair. Send for illustrated paper giving cuts of Magnetic Appliances; have no equal in the world.

I CURE FITS! When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS. SOLD BY ALL DEALERS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

WISE'S AXLE GREASE. Never Gums. IT KEEPS MOIST, OILY AND CLEAN. Those who use it once always use it. Ask for "WISE'S" where you trade.

Piles Piles Piles. A sure cure for Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles. A single box of Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment has cured the worst chronic case of Thirty Years standing. Sold and recommended by all Druggists. Price $1.00. NOYES BROS. & CUTLER, St. Paul, Agents.

This N.Y. Singer, $20 With $3 set of Attachments Free. Warranted perfect. Light running, quiet, handsome and durable. [illegible]

ADD TO YOUR INCOME. Club 12 of the Mutual Investment [illegible] GRAIN, PROVISIONS & STOCKS [illegible] F. E. KENDALL & CO., Com'n Mch'ts, 177 & 179 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Is unfailing and infallible in curing Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Alcoholism, Opium Eating, Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Impotency, Syphilis, Scrofula and all Nervous and Blood Diseases. [illegible] SAMARITAN NERVINE is invaluable. [illegible]

THE DR. S. A. RICHMOND MEDICAL CO., Sole Proprietors, St. Joseph, Mo.

WE DRESS THIS CARD IN MOURNING,

Because there are so many thousands of our fellow mortals suffering and dying who might be cured by using

"Dr. Sykes' Sure Cure for Catarrh."

Ask druggists for it, or write to
DR. C. R. SYKES,
169 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.,
for full information, testimonials, etc.
Cut this out now, for this Card will be of value to you.
☞Name this paper when writing.

AUTOMATIC
BOBBIN WINDER
FREE WITH EACH
FREE WITH EACH
WHITE
EVERY BOBBIN SMOOTH AS A SPOOL OF SILK
A THIRD MORE THREAD ON EVERY BOBBIN
SEWING MACHINE
ADDRESS
WHITE SEWING MACHINE CO.
CLEVELAND, O.

N. W. N. U. No. 2.

When writing to advertisers please say you saw their advertisement in this paper.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

CONDENSED LAND LAWS.

What are termed agricultural lands are divided into two classes, one at $1.25 per acre, designated as minimum, lying outside of railroads limits; the other at $2.50 per acre as double minimum, lying within railroad limits. Titles are acquired by purchase at public sale, by ordinary "private entry" and in virtue of the pre-emption, homestead, timber culture and other laws. Purchases at public sale are made when lands are "offered" at public auction to the highest bidder by proclamation of the president or by order of the General Land Office. Lands so offered and not sold, and not since reserved or withdrawn from the market, can be secured by "private entry" or location.

But none of the lands in Northern Dakota have ever been "offered" at public sale, all having been reserved for homesteads, pre-emptions and tree claims on account of their agricultural value, and because this system is more in accordance with the interest of the masses, and not for speculators, as under the public sale system. Sioux half-breed scrip can be used to purchase any surveyed land, but very little of this scrip is now outstanding. Soldier's additional homestead entries can also be purchased and laid upon any vacant surveyed land, thus acquiring title without residence thereon.

THE PRE-EMPTION LAW.

Heads of families, widows, or single persons (male or female), over the age of twenty-one years, citizens of the United States or who have declared their intention to become such under the naturalization laws, may enter upon any "offered" or "unoffered" lands or any unsurveyed lands to which the Indian title is extinguished, and purchase not exceeding 160 acres under pre-emption laws. After making settlement, if on "offered" land the applicant must file his declaratory statement with the district land office within thirty days, for which a fee of $2.00 is required, and within one year from date of settlement make final proof of his actual residence on and cultivation of the tract, and pay therefor at $1.25 per acre if outside of railroad limits, or $2.50 per acre if within these limits, and he may pay in cash or by military bounty land warrants, agricultural college, private claim or supreme court scrip.

When the tract has been surveyed and is not "offered" land, the claimant must file his or her declaratory statement, and make proof and payment within thirty-three months from date of settlement. Settlement is the first thing to be done under the pre-emption laws.

When settlements are made on unsurveyed lands, settlers are required to file their declaratory statements within three months after the date of the receipt at the district land office, of the approved plat of the township embracing their claims, and make proof and payment within thirty months from the expiration of said three months, payments the same as in case of offered land.

Pre-emptors may submit proofs of residence and improvements at any time after six months of actual residence. He must show by his own testimony and by two credible witnesses such actual residence and cultivation—a habitual dwelling and other improvements, to the satisfaction of the land officers that the spirit of the law has been complied with.

At any time before the expiration of the time allowed for proof and payment the settler may, by making proper application at the land office and payment of the required fee, convert his claim into a homestead, and the time he has resided upon the land is credited on homestead residence if he desires. No person who abandons his residence on his own land to reside on public land in the same state or territory or who owns 320 acres of land is entitled to the benefits of the pre-emption laws. It is held, however, that this does not apply to a house and lot in town. Claims cannot be transferred until title is prefected. The second filing of a declaratory statement, by any pre-emptor, when first filing was legal in all respects, is prohibited. Before proof and payment on pre-emption claims, written notice must be given by the claimants to the register, who must post a notice in his office and cause the same to be published in a newspaper nearest the land for at least thirty days, as in case of homesteads.

THE HOMESTEAD LAW.

Any person who is the head of a family or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States or has filed his declaration of intention to become such, is entitled to enter one-quarter section or less quantity of unappropriated land under the homestead laws. The applicant must make an affidavit that he is over the age of twenty-one or is the head of a family, and that he is a citizen of the United States or has declared his intention to become such, and that the entry is made for his exclusive use and benefit and for actual settlement and cultivation and must pay the legal fee and that part of the commissions required to be paid when entry is made, as follows:

When within railroad limits, for 160 acres, fee $10, commission $8; for eighty acres, fee $5, commission $4. Outside of railroad limits, fee $10, commission $4, and in proportion for eighty or forty acres. When these requirements are complied with the Receiver issues his receipt in duplicate and the matter is entered upon the records of the office. After faithful observance of the law in regard to actual settlement and cultivation for the continuous term of five years, at the expiration of that term or within two years thereafter, final proof must be made, and, if satisfactory to the land officers, that part of the commissions remaining unpaid(the same in amount so paid on entry) must be paid. The register then issues his certificate and makes proper returns to the general land office, as the basis of a patent.

Any settler desiring to make final proof must first file with the register a written notice of his intention, describing the land and giving the names of four witnesses by whom the facts as to settlement, continuous residence, cultivation, etc., are to be established. This notice must be accompanied by a deposit of money sufficient to pay the cost of publishing the notice which the register is required to publish for thirty days (five times) in a newspaper designated by him, or arrange with the publisher of the paper therefor. Notice is also posted in the land office for the same period.

Final proof cannot be made until the expiration of five years from the date of entry, and must be made within two years thereafter. In making final proof the homestead settler may appear in person at the district land office with his witnesses and there make the affidavit and proof required, or he may, if by reason of bodily infirmity or distance, it is inconvenient for him to appear at the land office with his witnesses, appear before the judge of a court of record of the county and state, or district and territory in which the land is situated, and there make final proof. When a homestead settler dies before he can prove up, the widow, or in case of her death, her heirs, may continue settlement and obtain title upon requisite proof at the proper time. In case of death of both parents, leaving infant children, the homestead may be sold for cash for the benefit of the children, and purchaser will receive title.

The sale of a homestead claim to another party before completion of title is not recognized. In making final proof the settler must swear that no part of the land has been alienated except for church, cemetery, or school purposes, or right of way of railroad.

Homestead claims may be relinquished, but in such cases the land reverts to the government. If a settler does not wish to remain five years on his tract, he may pay for it, as under pre-emption law, in cash or warrants at any time after six months of actual residence. This proof must be made before the district officers. Homesteaders are allowed six months after entry to commence improvements and establish residence.

The law allows but one homestead privilege to any one person.

Any person who served not less than ninety days in the army or navy of the United States during "the recent rebellion," who was honorably discharged and has remained loyal to the government, may enter a homestead, and the time of his service shall be deducted from the period of five years, provided that the party shall reside upon and cultivate his homestead at least one year after he commences improvements. The widow of a soldier, or, if she be dead or has married again, the minor heirs (if any) may, through their guardian, make a homestead entry, and if the soldier died in the service, the whole term of his enlistment will be credited upon the terms of required residence. Soldiers and sailors as above may file a homestead declatory statement for 160 acres of land through an agent, after which they have six months to file their homestead. This latter entry may be made in person. Thus a soldier who desires to secure a claim may do so by sending a power of attorney and certified copy of his discharge to some responsible party who can file for him upon the land selected. Lands acquired under the homestead laws are not liable for any debt contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor.

TIMBER CULTURE CLAIMS.

Under the timber culture laws not more than 160 acres on any one section, entirely devoid of timber, can be entered, and no person can make more than one entry thereunder.

The qualifications of applicants are the same as under the pre-emption and homestead laws. The land office charges are, for 160 acres or more than eigthy acres, $14 when entry is made and $4 at final proof. For 80 acres or less $9 at entry and $4 at final proof. The applicant must make affidavit that the land specified in his application is exclusively prairie, or other land devoid of timber, that his filling and entry is for the cultivation of timber for his exclusive use and benefit; that the application is made in good faith and not for the purpose of speculation, or directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person or persons; that he intends to hold and cultivate the land and comply with the laws, and that he has not previously made an entry under the timber culture law.

The party making an entry of a quarter section is required to break or plow five acres covered thereby during the first year, and five acres in addition during the second year. The five acres broken or plowed during the first year he is required to cultivate by raising a crop or otherwise during the second year, and to plant in timber, seeds, or cuttings during the fourth year. For entries of less than 160 acres the amount of land to be cultivated must be pro rata. Provision is made for extension of time in case drought on grasshoppers destroy trees. These trees he must cultivate and protect, and if, at the expiration of eight years from date of entry, or at any time within five years thereafter, the entrant or, if he be dead, his heirs, shall prove, by two creditable witnesses, the planting, cultivating and protecting the timbers for not less than eight years, and that there were at the end of eight years, at least 675 living, thrifty trees on each of the ten acres required to be planted, he, or they will be entitled to a patent. It should be added, that in making final proof it must be shown "not less than twenty-seven hundred trees were planted to each acre." Fruit trees are not considered timber in regard to cultivation of an entry under this act.

It is not necessary that the ten acres should be in a compact body.

Failure to comply with any of the requirements of the law at any time after one year from date of entry renders such entry liable to contest. And upon due proof of such failure the entry will be cancelled. No land under this law will in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts, contracted prior to the issuing of the final certificate therefor.

OTHER REQUIREMENTS.

Declaratory statements, (erroneously called pre-emptions) homesteads and tree claims, can be filed through the clerks of district courts.

Final proofs can be made, contests initiated and heard, without the parties thereto being compelled to appear before the U. S. land office, and in fact all business pertaining to government lands can be transacted by the said clerk of the district court the same as at the land office.

When homestead applications are made through the clerk of the district court, the applicant must be at the time actually residing upon the land to be entered, and must have bona fide improvements thereon: if homestead entries be made at the land office, applicants have six months from date of entry within which to establish residence and commence improvements on the land.

Land embraced in "declaratory statements" must be improved before application is made, which application can be made at any time within three months from date of such improvement or settlement. The present secretary of the interior has decided that a declaratory statement made before the tract has been settled upon and improved by application is void.

A qualified applicant cannot take a homestead and pre-emption claim at the same time. A man may take a pre-emption and a tree claim, and, after proving up and obtaining title to his pre-emption, may then enter a homestead, (or he may commute and pay for his homestead and then take a pre-emption) and thus secure 480 acres of land.

We the undersigned, have carefully read the above epitome of the land laws and find them correct.

HORACE AUSTIN, Register.
THOS. M. PUGH, Receiver.

How to Make a Timber Plantation.

From the Chicago Herald.

We copy the following interesting and instructive interview from the Farmer's Review of this week. The gentleman interviewed was Mr. A. R. Whitney, of Franklin Grove, Illinois' most extensive orchardist as well as one of the most successful forest tree planters in the west. The interviewer, as will be inferred, was a man who has contracted the western tree-planting fever, in common with a large number of people all over the country. What Mr. Whitney said is based on his own experience, backed by close and long observation:

Claim owner—Mr. Whitney, in common with many persons from my country I have been up north to see "The Promised Land," and, as most people do who go there, I have located a claim under the homestead act, and also one under the timber culture act. I am going to Dakota to make my home, and I want you to give me all the information you can, consistent with old friendship and good nature, concerning planting a forest and its after care.

Mr. Whitney—What I know is at your service.

In the first place, how shall I prepare my land. It is high and dry prairie.

Break and raise one or more crops of wheat, or other small grain, before beginning your forest plantation. The second year plow and prepare your land as you would for corn. Harrow and mark out four feet each way. Plant in spring, sure, as soon as the ground is in good condition.

How old should my trees be from seed?

One or two years, according to variety.

How much help will I need to do my planting?

Three men make a good team for forest tree planting—two with spades and one to carry the trees. The first take a row each, and prepare the holes. The carrier thrusts the tree in, and the men with the spades compact the soil about the trees. In dry soil pack it firmly; in wet soil this will not do.

How many trees can these three men set in a day?

From 3,600 to 4,500 in ten hours.

How deep should the trees be set?

From one to two inches below the collar.

How many trees do I need per acre, planted in this way?

Twenty-seven hundred and twenty.

What varieties would you advise me to set?

The kinds that do best in your locality, if there are any plantations, or native trees about you.

There are no trees but the cottonwood.

Then set the black walnut, butternut, green and white ash, soft maple and box elder (ash-leaved maple), and the cottonwood also, if you like it.

Shall I plant each variety by itself?

Yes, with the exception of the walnut and butternut. To make valuable trees these latter must be set from one to two rods apart each way. The other trees act as nurses to them. Walnuts by themselves do not succeed set four feet each way. In after years, in thinning out, you leave the walnuts and the timber becomes valuable. Decidious trees are never seen growing near mature walnut trees. They die out of themselves if not removed.

Can I grow any kind of crops among my young trees?

No, sir.

Shall I cultivate them in any way?

Cultivate for two years as you would corn—just as faithfully, but no later than you would corn, or you will get an aftergrowth that will not mature.

Do the black walnuts transplant well?

Yes, sir, if you cut the tops down to six or eight inches before planting.

Do any or all of these varieties of trees need after pruning?

But very little. If more than one leader, cut back all but one to within six inches of the body. This will give you a well-shaped tree. Do the pruning after the leaves fall and before freezing.

Is it not better for me to plant seeds where I want the trees than to plant the seedlings?

My experience is that it is not best. If you want to plant the seeds, plant in nursery rows and cultivate one season before transplanting.

I hear a great deal about the catalpa of late. You do not mention it in the list you gave me. Will it not do for me?

Your location is too far north. It is doing well in Green and Ida counties, Iowa, about the latitude of Milwaukee. I would not recommend it farther north, though it sometimes does well.

With my plantation nicely established, with trees four feet apart, when should I begin to thin them out?

Eighth to tenth year according to growth.

How many should I remove?

Every other row running north and south. This will give the remaining trees more air and sun.

At what time of year shall I do this thinning?

Do it in August.

Why?

If you cut in August and let the trees remain untrimmed until winter you get better wood for fuel or any other farm purpose. Besides this, the young suckers from the stumps will start and be killed by the succeeding winter, and the next year none will appear to amount to anything.

To what economic use besides fuel can I put these saplings?

Use them for fence posts and to spike on in place of boards to complete the fence, for poles and stakes and other uses.

When will it be necessary to again thin out?

In four or five years begin thinning the other rows, removing every other tree, or the weaker ones.

Of the different kind of timber you have advised me to plant, which in your opinion, will prove the most remunerative?

Ash and soft maple will give the quickest returns. The walnut will be most valuable, but it will be later.

I have a few acres of rather low, wet land. Can I plant any kind of trees to advantage on this land?

Yes, the willow, either the golden or the gray, sometimes called white. Cultivate and thin out the same as the other plantation. You may drain the land and plant the other varieties as I have told you.

Can I allow any kind of stock to run in my timber lot?

After the fourth year you can admit either sheep or calves. You must protect from stock when young or your plantation will be ruined.

Plague Stricken.

There is probably nothing in the world more appalling than the raging of "the plague." To see the human bodies and infected clothes dragged out from the dwelling by long hooks, carried by men entirely enveloped in tarred garments, and then to see those bodies jumbled heedlessly together into an open cart and borne away to some common receptacle, to be added to the still more loathsome mass already congregated there, must fill one's mind with indecribable loathing. But to see one dear to us falling a victim to the disease—to see him die, and taken away from us in the rudest manner possible, and by strangers, and yet not to be able to approach the once-loved form—in fact, from a sense of the utter uselessness of our efforts and the instinct of self-preservation, flying the very presence of such a one—must overwhelm the heart with inexpressible anguish and horror. Mr. G. L. Dilson, while in Odessa, was told the following thrilling story of the plague which, some years ago, almost depopulated several of the cities of the Turkish empire and eastern Russia. It illustrates the awful peril of infection from such an epidemic, and the frequent futility of all efforts to escape it:

A man had a wife and six lovely children, his great fondness for whom made him so extremely cautious during the raging of this scourge that he shut himself and family in the house and yard, and had no communication with any one! His gates were never ununbarred, and nothing was received on his premises except food which he attended to himself—making sure that it was not handled till it had been thoroughly washed in vinegar and water, which sufficiently purified it. This he strictly adhered to till report said that the plague had ceased—till the commissary one day in going his rounds assured him through the small hole cut in the gate, for the purpose of conversation and passing the necessary viands, that he believed the epidemic had disappeared.

The inmate happy at the intelligence, and that he and all his family had escaped, said to the commissary, "I will give you something to drink for the good news you bear."

He accordingly brought a tumbler and spirit and gave some to the man, then took the tumbler back, bade him good-day and went in.

The commissary moved only a little further on his rounds when the plague seized him and he expired.

The gentleman within the house took the disease—and in less than thirty-six hours neither he nor any person of his whole family was alive.—A Tour to the Caucasus.

Emperor William of Germany.

A few weeks ago the newly-chosen Prussian Diet was opened, with much ceremony and state, by the hale old German Emperor. This fact of itself made the occasion a memorable scene. The Emperor William is well-advanced in his eighty-sixth year; yet, as he stood before the representatives of his Prussian Kingdom, his broad shoulders still erect, his cheeks ruddy with the autumn breezes, his eye undimmed, his gray mustache sweeping his face, he presented a right kingly and heroic figure.

Kingly, indeed, is stalwart old William of Hohenzollern, in other ways than in personal presence. Of all the rulers of Europe, he is the incarnation of the idea of the divine source of kingship. No mediæval monarch could have been more firmly persuaded of his right to yield absolute power, or of the holy sanction of his mission to reign with iron hand and resolute will.

When on the 18th of October, 1861, William became formally the sovereign of Prussia, in succession to his insane brother, he performed an act which clearly betrayed his belief in the divine right to rule. Standing proudly at the altar, he would not accept the crown from human hands; but taking it himself from the altar, he raised it aloft, then placed it on his head, saying solemnly,—

"I receive this crown from the hands of God."

During his long and splendid reign, William has sternly adhered to this idea of a right to rule derived from heaven itself. No monarch ever more stoutly imposed his will upon his subjects; or more sturdily resisted the invasion of popular rights upon his perogative.

But on the other hand, William has always confessed that his royal power is intrusted to him, to be used for the benefit and interest of his people, and for the power and greatness of his country. He has not been a capricious tyrant, or a selfish votary of pomp and pleasure.

His life has been simple, almost like that of a man of the middle class. He has been an indefatigable worker, always in the service of his realm. With all his lofty idea of his perogative, his life has been spent in laboring for those over whom he reigned.

The brilliant success of his devotion to affairs of state has served to strengthen his own hands, and to make even his iron rule popular. The creation, under his auspices, of the German Empire; his elevation to the arbitership of Europe; the magnificent victories of his armies; the solid results of Bismarck's statesmanship,—have made the old emperor, with all his haughty notions and arbitrary nature, beloved and irresistible.

The political condition of the German people, under a ruler so absolute, is peculiar, and without parallel in any other European State. The Germans are the most intelligent, studious, patient, and seaching of all continental peoples. It may be said that no other continental people is so well fitted for a free and democratic political system.

They are amply capable of governing themselves wisely and well. Yet we find them submitting quietly to a more despotic rule than is to be seen in any other European nation, Russia alone excepted.

The hale old emperor cannot have many more years of life and reigning. With him, we may expect to see the old state of things, to some extent, at least, pass away. The prestige of his triumphs will vanish with him. He has, perhaps, been the man for his age and task. But Germany will not many years longer be content without political liberty. It was William's mission to make Germany united; let us hope that it may be that of his son and successor to make her politically free.—Youth's Companion.

Governor-elect Cleveland, according to the official organ at Albany, has no idea of marrying and will keep bachelor's hall at the capitol.

FARM AND HOUSE.

Agricultural Items.

The Germantown Telegraph states that artesian wells are superseding the old methods of water supply, to some extent in Montgomery County, Pa.

An Iowa patch of White Elephant potatoes is mentioned as having been "sweet scented" on account of profuse blossoming, each stem bearing "from three to five branches of pure white flowers."

The teaching of my experience is to avoid overcrowding in all horicultural operations. I keep increasing the distance between the rows and also the plants in the rows of all the fruit and vegetables I raise. The best brings the best price and also honor to the producer. With rich soil, high cultivation, plenty of room to receive light and air, that foliage and fruit may perfectly develop, nature can do her perfect work. —W. V. S. Bkeman.

In the case of an unusually large and "well developed heifer" there is no objection to having her first calf before she is two years old, but when undersized or at all weakly, it is safer to let her reach the age of 2 1-2 or three years. If thrifty heifers come in at an early age and are properly attended to, they usually make better milkers than when they come in late.—A Dairyman.

It is pleasant to read in the Michigan report that Secretary Garfield's efforts to secure improved condition and ornamentation of school grounds have succeeded beyond expectation. James Vick's sons, of Rochester, N. Y., continue for 1883 their father's offer of seeds of twelve varieties of the most desirable annual flowers to each of the five schools of each county in every state in the country that shall first apply for them. Any school officer may make the application who will engage to have them cultivated on the school grounds and to have the result reported by the 1st of November.

MILK-PRODUCING POWER.

Dairy Discussions.

Dr E. Lewis Sturtevant, before the State Dairymen's Association, in Cortland, N. Y., last week, summarized some of the interesting conclusions of his devoted study of the physiology of milk production. Though influenced by feed, milk is not simply strained through the cow. There is a difference in breeds and in individual animals, and the dairy power of each varies both as regards quantity and quality. The cream-guage is not reliabe. Some milk throwing up a small skim of cream gives a good return of butter, while other milk on which but little cream rises is excellent for consumption, being rich and nutritive. Thorough weeding and selection are of more consequence than breed or pedigree, yet improvement comes from careful breeding. Milk-producing power is largely inherited, and may be varied by a long line of breeding. There are phenomenal milkers. He once had a cow whose milk rarely showed more than 10 or 12 per cent. of cream, and yet one day he was greatly surprised to find her milk reading off 60 per cent. on the cream-gauge. In one experiment with the milk of each teat, taken separately, the proportion of cream varied from 24 to 42 per cent. In these cases the results were dependent upon local inflammation in the udder, which affected the character of the milk-globules in such a way that the same globules occupied greater space than customary in their rising. So far as her is at present aware, there is no way of determining the butter quality of milk except by the churn. Milk which contains but a small precentage of fat may give a good quantity of butter. Milk from cows fed upon different foods and from different cows, may show to analysis the same quantity of butter-fat, and yet be of very different quality when subjected to the analysis of the churn. Professor Alvord read a judicial paper on ensilage, rather favorable to this feed when supplemented with other rations. Exclusive ensilage gave to the milk, in his experience, a very perceptible alcoholic smell and taste, but the yield between the lot of cows fed on dry rations and those restricted to ensilage varied but little.

The Diet of Children.

From Cassell's Magazine.

Permitting children to sit at table with their elders is the cause of a good deal of mischief and injury to their youthful digestions. A variety of dishes should never be permitted, and any attempt at wastefulness should be checked at once. Economy and self-denial can be taught at the children's table far more easily than at school.

The diet of children can hardly be too plain. If they require to be encouraged to eat by the administration of dainties, there must be something radically wrong somewhere. It is unlikely that that something is constitutional, more probably insufficient exercise is taken, or taken at wrong times, or the nursery is stuffy, or the bedroom badly ventilated, or the parents have forgotten that sunshine and fresh air are as necessary to the healthy life of a child as wholesome food itself is.

The want of cleanliness, or frequent use of the bath, is many times the cause of indifferent appetite in children. Without cleanliness of clothes and cleanliness of person you cannot have healthy children. Without this the young blood seems poisoned, the child has neither buoyancy nor heart, appetite is depraved or absent, and he grows up as pale and poor as a sickly plant.

Injudicious clothing is another cause of dyspepsia. It is bad enough to encase the body which has attained its full development in a tight dress, but it is ruinous for a child to be clothed in tightly fitting garments. Every organ of a child's body requires room to grow and expand; if it be in any way compressed, the circulation through it becomes lessened, and it is therefore sickly and rendered weak.

Tightness, therefore, of any portion of a child's clothing ruins not only the organ directly underneath the constriction, but indirectly those at a distance from it, for no damming up of the circulation can be tolerated by nature. Tightness round the waist in children and young people is the cause of many cases of dyspepsia, and in a lesser degree so is tightness of the neckerchief, by retaining the blood in the brain. Have your children's clothing loose, then if you would see them healthy and happy. See, too, that at night they sleep not on feather beds, and that though warmly they are not heavily clothed.

Children should be fed with great regularity day by day. The parents, having chosen the hours for dinner, breakfast and tea, ought to see that the times are strictly adhered to.

Irregularity in meal-hours, and times of getting up in the morning and retiring to bed at night, is not only prejudicial to the present health of a child, but it teaches him habits which are greatly against his chances of success in after life.

I need hardly speak here about the quality of the food that is placed before a child; against indigestible or too rich food, against sauces and spices of all kinds, including entries: against heavy foods of the pancake, dough and dumpling kind, against unripe fruits, against too hot soup, against strong tea, and coffee, or beer, or against over-much butchers' meat.

Pray, mothers, do not forget that an interval of rest should ensue between the meals you give your children, and do not ruin their young digestions by cramming them with cake, or buns, or sweets of any kind. To do so is worse than cruel, it is a sin, and a sin which you are but little likely to commit if you truly love them, and really wish to see them generate into strong and healthy men and women. Tarts and sweets and confectionery would be bad enough in all conscience for children, even if they were always pure and unadulterated. But they are too often poisonous. Feed on plain and wholesome food regularly from day to day, permitting no stuffing between meals, and not forgetting the benefit that accrue from frequent changes of diet, more especially as regards dinner. Do this and your children will live to bless you; do otherwise, and expect to see them sickly, with veins and arteries possessing no resiliency, with mucous membranes pale and flabby; pipes of lungs that the accident of a slight cold is sufficient to close, muscles of limbs so weak that exercise is a penance instead of a pleasure, and flesh so unwholesome that a pin's prick may cause a fester, and all this because the blood is impoverished through errors in diet.

Keep Warm if Possible.

"Bank in your fires" is the message that rattling iron, ringing streets and frosty panes convey to each human being. The strong vitality of middle age can bear much more exposure, more tax upon it than either little children or elderly folks. "To save heat" is what their clothes must do. Ankles are at the end of what might be called a long gallery of the circulation; by the time the blood reaches these outposts it does not need any additional chilling by the surface of shivering skin. If it has to go back to the heart chilled and sluggish, all the worse for the heart; all the worse for the lungs. Neither children nor old people have the strength to bear such exposure, so, with both growing and waning life, let care be taken to "bank the fires." The sudden deaths at this season by heart disease are many of them due to imprudent exposure. Suddenly starting out of a very hot atmosphere into the cold, running after a horse car, making any other sudden and violent tax, gives the cold weather a chance to slay. The forces of nature, as Dr. Pepper has well said, are always pressing upon us with drawn swords. If we drop our defenses for a moment, they have us down.

Whether we get up or not depends on constitutions, on care, on elastic rebound or stubborness in vital habits. It is not always the cold to be warded off; sometimes it is heat, the plus quantity, of which cold is only the minus. It is dirt, dust, contaminations of all sorts, from neighbors' diseases, in the air it may be; from wrong foods, from many ignorances that punish us. But there is no reason that the children should be punished for the foolishness of grown persons, who ought to understand how to dress and provide for healthy small folks. Dress has so much to do with winter health, well shod feet and doubly protected legs, and cleanly kept skins underneath, that fashionable neglect to keep little children warm is criminal. Put ourselves in their clothes, in thought for a few minutes, and face the December wind that way, and you will want to muffle up the children with warm, light clothing, put on in the right places, and well covering all the sensitive spots, so that they will not lose their slender little fibers. When the tiny fire burns very low, a trifling attack will put it out.

The American Turkey.

Consul Tanner, of Liege, Belgium, in his report just at hand treats of the egg and poultry trade of Europe and the United States, and makes this curious observation about the turkey. "There ought to be equally a market found for the American turkey and chickens in most of the European States. The turkey is never seen here on the table except in rare cases, such as wedding feasts and the like, save of course for the tables of the opulent. In America it is no dearer than the chicken in proportion to its size; I am sure of it being as marketable fowl in Europe as I am of its being in America, with a little effort on the part of our exporters. There are thousands of well-to-do people in Europe that have never tasted this fowl, and I have traveled in most of the European countries, and dined many times at the table d'hote of the best hotels here, and never in my life have I seen it on the table. Now this is a strange fact that this bird that so justly ranks as the first for our tables in point of merit should be almost unknown in Europe, while it is within reach, and frequently forms part of the dinner of our laboring classes in America. It is manifestly for the want of effort on our part that this is the case, and I sincerely hope that this effort will be made, and that the American turkey will one day be as well known here as the American hog."

Witty Waifs.

A marine disaster: "Yes," said the captain of the ocean steamship, "we had a very expensive trip this time. Very little sea-sickness; passengers ate frightfully."

Exceptions prove the rule: Professor—"If you attempt to squeeze any solid body it will always resist pressure." Glass smiles and cites examples of exceptions which prove the rule—Columbia Spectator.

The terrible infant: "Julia, my little cherub, when does your sister Emma return?" Julia—"I don't know." "Didn't she say anything before she went away?" Julia—"She said if you came to see her that she'd be gone till doomsday."—

Journalistic recruit: "Father, I wish to live so as to show the world my contempt for wealth," remarked a young philosopher, who was just recovering from the effects of a fifty cent cigar. "That's easy enough," said the old man; "become an editor."

A queer story is told of the way in which Tallyrand became possessed of the benefice of Saint Denys de Reims. He had come to Paris with little more capital than his wit. This, however gained him a reception everywhere. One afternoon he was at Madame Dubarry's, where a gathering of young dandies were boasting of their conquests among the fair sex. Tallyrand was abnormally quiet, and the king's favorite rallied him, saying: "Monsieur l'Abbe, what renders you so silent?" "Alas! madame, I am oppressed by a mournful reflection." "Indeed! And what?" "That it is a good deal easier in Paris to become possessor of a mistress than benefices." Dubarry carried the bon mot to Louis XV., and Tallyrand became Abbe of St. Denys, with returns of eighteen thousand livres yearly.

A Clever Travesty of an Obituary Style.

We are deeply pained to announce the loss of our promising young friend and fellow-townsman, Mr. Jabez C. Pennifeather, the son of our esteemed contributor, Deacon Pennifeather, whose emporium on Main street enjoyed an enviable popularity, which arises not only from the high commercial quality of the deacon's goods, but from that liberal spirit of business enterprise which has always characterized this pillar of the Second M. E. church, and which is nowhere better exemplified than in the column announcement which appears on the last page of this weeks Tocsin, directly following reading-matter. Readers who have for many years taken pleasure in perusing this large and artistically worded advertisement will observe that even in this hour of grief and bereavement, Deacon Pennifeather's sense of duty to the public of Tonawanda moves him to sacrifice the man to the merchant; and the emporium will be closed only between the hours of twelve and one o'clock P. M., during which time the funeral of his lamented son will take place, as per announcement under head of "Deaths and marriages." In Mr. Jabez C. Pennifeather this community has lost a member who gave promise of reflecting great credit on the town of Tonawanda, and adding a new lustre to the fame which our beloved burgh has already achieved throughout the length and breadth of the state. A young life is blotted out, a golden sunrise is quenched in the murky clouds of a premature night, the potentiality of an illustrious citizen is hopelessly annihilated beyond all possibility of resurrection, and a gloom is cast over a happy household of which he was the joy and pride, as well as a most assiduous helper in his father's popular emporium. Although but a young man—having cast his maiden vote at last election for the grand old party whose sons cling to her in the hour of defeat as nobly as in the days of victory—Mr. Jabez C. Pennifeather had already evinced a notable degree of business ability, and had developed a sweet and touching character and a principle far beyond his years. As an illustration of both of these qualities, we may refer to the pleasure experienced by his friends in beholding him on the anxious seat at the recent revival in the Second M. E. Church, and to the keen financial eye which he displayed in securing the two-acre lot on the canal, which was formerly the property of the widow Dolliver, and which Deacon Pennifeather has since sold at two hundred per cent. advance on the purchase price. What makes the sudden and unexpected taking off of your young townsman the more sad is the fact that he had but recently entered in the holy bonds of matrimony with a most estimable and attractive young lady from Toughakawaska, Miss Mehitabel Hostetter. The young couple were, indeed, on their wedding tour when death gently beckoned them both to his arms, and it was only by the exertions of several talented physicians that the fair bride was prevented from obeying the summons, and was fairly snatched from the arms of the relentless destroyer. Trusting and confident, they had gone down to the modern Babylon—the great city of New York—not to share in its lurid dissipations, for both were young people of high moral training and strict abstainers on principle, but to study it noble monuments and pace hand in-hand through its museums and its libraries. Repairing to a temperance hotel of well-known and high reputation, they retired at an early hour and blew out the gas.—Puck.

Madame de Pompadour.

Never did a woman gain so much power, wealth and worldly splendor in return for an untrue life, as she whose history we are about to give in outline. Her name—Jeanne Antoinette Poisson—is known to every reader of history. She was a girl of remarkable wit and beauty. She had dramatic power of a high order, was a brilliant musician and a lover of fine arts. Many suitors sought her favor, and at an early age she married a wealthy man—Le Normay l'Etioles. He loved her devotedly, and lived almost wholly for her happiness.

Her mother was an ambitious woman. Dissatisfied and scheming, she taunted her daughter with having married a banker when her beauty and her wit were worthy of a palace.

Fickle, unprincipled and eager for position, Jeanne soon tired of her beautiful home and devoted husband, and resolved if possible to attract the attention of the King, Louis XV., who had inherited the wealth and glory of his father, the Grand Monarch.

She placed herself before his carriage in the park, dressed in the most attractive manner, that she might be seen by the King. Dazzled by her beauty, he sought her out, invited her to his palace, and soon she became the mistress of Versailles; In vain her husband plead with her; she heartlessly abandoned him to become the favorite of a king.

Her ambition was gratified. Her influence with her royal lover became supreme. She made and dismissed ministers of state, created cardinals, declared war and arranged terms of peace. The Council of state used to meet in her boudoir. She once declared that her very lap-dog was wearied with the fondlings of nobles. She virtually compelled Maria Theresa to address her as ma cousine, and a jest at her expense is said to have been the origin of the Seven Years' War.

There were concerts, private theatricals, games, masques, constantly going on under her direction in the palace. She squandered enormous sums from the State Treasury in furnishing entertainments for the king.

The age of forty found her prematurely old, and with a corroding sense of unworthiness in her heart. She had had her will, and with what result? Listen to her own words:

"What a situation is that of the great! They only live in the future, and are only happy in hope. There is no peace in ambition. I am always gloomy; the kindness of the king, the regards of courtiers, the attachment of domestics, affect me no longer."

"I have no more an inclination for all that once pleased me. My residence at Bellevue is charming, and I alone cannot endure it. I do not live; I am dead before my time. The public hatred grieves me exceedingly. My life is a continued death."

She breathed her last amid the splendors of Versailles, at the age of forty-two.

The day of her burial was tempestuous. The king stood at the window of the palace as the funeral cortege moved away. He had long since tired of the woman who had violated conscience and God's laws for his favor, and now he looked with silent indifference on her burial car fading away in the storm. No love of husband or of child followed it; few tears were shed.

"The marchioness has a rather wet day to set out on her long journey," he jestingly said.

Long journey! The pomps of the palace had faded; the illusion was done. She had sown to sin, had reaped its rewards, and in the pitiless rain they put away the form of Madame de Pompadour forever in a dishonored grave.—Youth's Companion.

CONTRASTS.

A short June night, now brightening fast to dawn:
A house with doors and windows open wide;
A silent sick-room, where a dying man
Lies prostrate in his youth and manhood's pride.

A bird's sweet carol, entering glad and shrill—
A bird that sings of Hope, when Hope has fled;
And the sound smites the watcher with a thrill
Of agony—as if some voice had said:

"Weep on—and watch! but I shall sing as sweet
Among the roses—though thy dear ones die;
And all the world shall pass with careless feet,
Although thy heart be broken utterly!"

O little bird! how tuneful was that lay,
That fell so bitterly on mourners' ears;
Yet it was Summer—and what tongue will say:
"'Twere well if Nature too could share our tears!"

CROPPLE-CROWN'S WEDDING.

"An' now, air you goin' to tell me, or not?"

Dead silence, broken only by the rattle of beans from hand to pan.

"You can't cover it up nor hide it, nohow, Slocum saw ye, an' more'n once, too, an' he knows there's letters."

Still silence. Mrs. Jennison pushed up her glasses, gave a pull to the black silk sheath which did duty as cap, and from which her wisps of gray hair seemed to sprout, and gasped once or twice, as words crowded faster than tongue could manage or thought arrange. Then she burst out, determination evident under a snarling tone, which might have been taken as an indication of mere peevishness, had not the face held something much stronger and more persistent in quality than would be indicated by any characteristic marked as peevishness alone.

"You'll go your own way when you're twenty-one, an' not a day before. Talk to me! 'Siah Perkins! A hoss-drivin', godless feller, never inside a meetin'-house onless he's on the lookout for some gal, an' never the same gal three months runnin'. His father afore him, way for way, the same, an' not two gals in the boro' that he didn't snickle over their wearin' the willow for him. A thriftless, mis'able set, an' I wash my hands o' you if you give in to one of 'em. Now, mark my words! Out of this house you don't go without me. I haven't saved an' toiled an' brought you to be some stand by to me to have you throw it away on 'Siah Perkins. That's the end on't."

Mrs. Jennison picked up her knitting, dropped in the energy of accusation, and knit a round with her sharp, small eyes still fixed on the flushed cheeks turned from her and bending over the pan of beans. Midsummer, it is true, and pork and beans hardly in order, even for the most ingrained New Englander, but to Mrs. Jennison beans and dried apples, codfish and salt pork represented all the possibilities, and compressibilities as well, of food. Who sighed for anything beyond was guilty of worse weakness than the old Israelites in their moan for the leeks and onions of Egypt. Dried beans, and dried beans only—even string beans being a wild and wicked waste, a reckless destruction of what should make six dinners, where, in their infant state, but one could be had.

For Mrs. Jennison belonged to the happily decreasing number of women who, having been born to the New England farmer's unceasing struggle with the foundations of the earth, which crop up more persistently and battle with the soul more steadily there than in any other portion of the farmer's territory, valued proportionately every product wrested from the soil.

Hardscrabble had been her native district, and Hardscrabble it remained, the hillsides a wilderness of ledges or rolling stones, and the sunniest meadow still holding more stones than grass.

Many children came to the gaunt, sharp-faced mother, and one by one took their places in the lengthening row on the Huggins lot. Whatever love might have helped them to linger longer had gradually died out. Interruptions from beginning to end, Peter Huggins—lean and weazened, with myriads of fine wrinkles about his eyes, and the look of a musty parchment—had always regarded them, and frowned determinedly on any attention not absolutely essential, and on some that were. Patient, bony, sad-eyed little objects, the babies lay where they were put, following the mother's steady progress from one piece of work to another with looks always more and more wistful, till the low, damp kitchen, sunless and cheerless, in which the grinding days went by, had done its work, and the starved little lives flickered out, to find a kindlier welcome in a country where the inhabitants take time from the reservoir known as eternity.

In such homes now and then grows up a flower, delicate and fragrant as the arbutus in its setting of rough leaves, but to the Huggins homestead none had come. Huldah, the last, and apparently with less vitality than the seven others who slept quietly under the small mounds and headstones, held to life with a tenacity unexpected; but, on the whole, welcome, and at four stood on a "cricket" to wash dishes and round clothes: at five made a bed-quilt, and at six could knit her father's stockings. Pinched and preternaturally old, she followed her mother about like some gray, uncanny elf or gnome, born in mine or mountain, and hid always from sun and air. She knew the market value of every egg, the possibility of every drop of cream, and at seven had made a bargain with her father—a bargain which drew from him a chuckle of admiration—to exchange the maple sugar of her crust coffee, or occasional cake or doughnut, for its full equivalent in money.

Schooling was had only that Peter Huggins might secure his share of the tax, grudgingly paid, and grumbled over from one collecting time to another, and Huldah learned quickly and well, taking especially to figures, and casting up interest with something almost enthusiasm. The sugar fund grew year by year in the Claremont Savings bank, and Peter shook his head over the bargain which he was too honest to evade or end, for honesty ruled and was the one saving grace. Mean, miserly, narrow almost beyond belief, he never lied and never cheated, and Huldah grew to womanhood—girlhood being left out altogether—so true a copy of him that the neighbors, who at long intervals penetrated the mysterious region of the best room, said:

"It's a pity she hadn't been a boy, to keep up the farm after old Huggins died."

Old Huggins died at last, followed quickly by his wife, who lived too long under the direction of his file-like voice to find independent action possible; and who closed her eyes, as he had done, with no sign of what picture either past or future held, in that last moment of pause between the two. Huldah reigned alone, and contented to be alone; and, when the long winter ended, hired a silent and wiry little Frenchman from the hollow, and ran the farm on shares. Whatever thought Antoine Desprez may have had as to possible money to be made out of her ignorance, or oversight was quickly dismissed; and the farm, where long ago every loose stone had taken its place in the well-built walls, came to be regarded as one of the best pieces of property in that region.

In time Miss Huldah, as she came to be called, owned her shay and drove into town with her own butter and eggs, and on Sundays to the old church on the green, the faces in which she had known from childhood, but with no interest or attempt at other knowledge. Then, to the consternation of every one, she had married, without warning or intimation that even the most indefatigable news purveyor could glean, a man who had appeared from "the West," otherwise Central New York, and bought a farm in the same district.

There was no change in life or look. The same routine went on from hour to hour and day to day. The bank account swelled slowly and surely, and the Jennisons came to be looked upon as one of the rich families. Then slowly Jennison himself sickened and died, and his wife, who gave but this one token of bereavement or loneliness, cast about for some one to, in degree, fill the empty place, and found it in a waif and stray, born in the poor house and having grown up in its shadow. Silent and shrinking, people wondered that Huldah Jennison [illegible] justified her choice, and Mary Nichols grew into a housewife as practical and [illegible] as Mrs. Jennison herself. [illegible]

[illegible] of a new brood or coddled a setting. "There was no attempt at a [illegible] or any modern method. Hens laid where they would, and being nomadic beyond the common run, gave Mary moments out of doors that would otherwise have been denied. Instinct seemed to lead her to the last hiding place of the most secretive hen, and there were conveniences for such in strange nooks in the rambling old barn, built by a man of ampler notions than old Peter Huggins.

In one of these nooks, from which the hay was never fully removed, the new crop piling in on the remnants of the old, Mary kept the treasures her mistress' prying eye would long ago have rooted out from chest or drawer—a book or two, the property of her unknown mother; a shell some one had given, and in time, as she grew into a delicate, even graceful girl, a little pin, some earrings, put on on the way to church after the house was well out of sight and taken off in the same way; then a little package of letters, awkwardly written, and spelled as awkwardly, but holding the secret Mrs. Jennison had just discovered.

For, as years went on, a new phase developed. Beans and dried apples might hold all the refreshment she needed, or Mary should be allowed, but no one should think she could not have more if she chose. From an occasional church-going, where she listened with deep contempt to the flowing periods of the lately-settled young minister, fresh from the Cambridge divinity school, Mrs. Jennison suddenly appeared at the "Society," gave her views in full on the various objects for which it worked, and so nagged and beset the life-long members that the president resigned and staid at home three weeks. Having brought things to the degree of effervescence which seemed as much the necessity of later life as saving and seclusion had been of the earlier, she invited all to meet at her house, opened the long-closed best room, brought out the patchwork quilt of a past generation for the bed room, where "things" would be taken off, and prepared a supper beyond the wildest dream of the average society mind. Mary followed with bewilderment, but inward delight, the unaccountable and unaccustomed lavishness, and studied the cook-book bought for the occasion, with a wonder that such delights had been so long known to human palates.

Whatever qualms may have come, Mrs. Jennison gave no sign, and, thereafter, the ceremony was gone through with once a year. The outer world having once gained admission was not to be put out. Mary was looked for as an essential in the few and rather mournful festivals of the New England hill town, and gird as Mrs. Jennison might, the young people claimed her. In spite of the poor-house taint, the expectation gained more and more ground, that she must finally be Mrs. Jennison's heir, and though restricted to calico, painfully skimpy at that, Mary's beauty had come to be undeniable.

Long ago 'Siah Perkins had found it out, and with small care whether money would be gained or lost in the suit, pressed it with an ardor irresistible, and carrying its own surety of response.

Once more the course of true love had been troubled, and Josh Slocum, a sulky and rejected admirer had walked with Mrs. Jennison to her "shay" as she left the village store, and, as he helped her in, said some words that brought a flash and a quick snap to the sharp eyes. And so we are back once more to where our story begins, and Mary, very determined and very silent, picked over her beans and gave no sign, save a flush that would not be put down, that she heard or cared.

That was three months ago, and Mrs. Jennison had kept her word. No more hunts for eggs and precious stray minutes reading book or letter. Up and down, through the lot, in the barn, not one moment was allowed in which Mary could have given word or look to the lover, who had first haunted the place, then took to moody silence and much pondering of ways of escape for both.

One point alone was uninvaded—the far corner of the upper loft, where Cropple-Crown still lay, and where only Mary could climb, but which Mrs Jennison approached as nearly as possible, going up the first ladder to the mow, and eyeing the pegs leading to the second with a half determination to try them. The half one day became a whole, and when, after repeated calls, Mary, driven to desperation, had failed to answer, and deliberately remained looking over the precious bundle, she climbed cautiously up the post and had put out one foot for a final stretch to the loose boards of the loft, when the treacherous peg gave way, and with a clutch that covered her with hay, she fell, sliding from the friendly mow to a manger just below, and falling, to the painful amazement of old Dobbin, at his side and almost under his feet. A scream, and Dobbin's frightened neigh brought Mary at once, who searched everywhere but in the manger, and who was nearly in despair, when Mrs. Jennison's voice sounded from some unknown region:

"Call a man from somewhere, for my leg's broke."

Happily Dobbin was not a kicker and merely turned his head inquiringly at intervals until Antoine, and then the doctor appeared.

The fracture was compound, and there followed a long season of confinement, and, as it seemed to the girl, a slow fire for nerve and body. The need of quiet was absolute, and the old woman, suddenly aged and haggard, raged against it with a fury that did much to retard recovery.

Close prisoner for the first time in all her sixty-five years, no wild animal ever girded more fiercely at the bars that shut him in, and when common sense asserted itself, just for the sake of speedier recovery, she lay passive, if not silent, the conflict weakened and depressed her almost beyond bearing. Two months of miserable endurance for the unhappy Mary, who, day and night must be within sight and call, and whose roses had long ago departed, and then, as Mrs. Jennison once more began her daily round, a stiffened limb made the old freedom of movement impossible.

But vigilance did not relax. Mary was hers, body and soul, and hers she would remain, and, certain that her purpose was in part accomplished, and that 'Siah at least was tired of the pursuit, she chuckled and bly over her success.

In the meantime a new order of things had developed in the "Society." Worn out with the always increasing burden of a supper, which every member, since Mrs. Jennison's ever memorable, sought to make more and more elaborate, the sensible ones had at last revolted, and decided that each should bring a sufficient portion for one, and the table be set with this provision, the hostess providing only tea and coffee. Gradually this had changed, and one provided cake, another biscuit, and so on, the names of such being given out in turn at each meeting. Mrs. Jennison had said she would be at the next one, and her name was sent up as the maker of cake for the coming meeting, and once more butter and eggs and fruit were used with a lavishness that was never any less confounding than in the beginning. The loaves were ready—dark and rich under the smooth frosting, and lying in the basket ready for carrying.

The day was bright and cool, and at 3 o'clock Mrs. Jennison called to Mary to harness Dobbin, and stood in the door to oversee the operation. Dobbin bent his head to receive the collar, and whinnied a low and satisfactory whinny as Mary gave him the bit of bread he loved. Then she led him to the shay, ancient now and weather worn from its long years of service, but as she dropped the bridle and took up the shafts to wheel it forward slightly, a subdued and well-known cluck warned her of some new vagary of Cropple-Crown's. The cushions had been taken out to beat. The box lid in the seat was open, and had been for a fortnight, and there on a "buffalo," folded and half filling it, sat the unmoved Cropple-Crown, top-knot and bright eyes just visible at one the box.

"What's the matter?" called Mrs. Jennison as she came forward. "Don't be all day about a thing. Of all the pokin' an' useless waste o' time that I ever see, you're gettin' to be the very goat. You're slower'n molasses."

By this time Mrs. Jennison had reached the shay, and bent forward to see where the difficulty lay.

"Lawful heart! If that ain't the pesky hen! An' she's the one that won't stan' movin' one inch, and her brood's worth any three common ones. Run and tell Antoine to bring up the light wagon, an' I'll go in that, tho' gracious knows how I'll ever get in!"

Mary started obediently, to return shortly with the word that Antoine had gone to Claremont and wou'd not be back before night. [illegible]

[illegible] latter slipped into measure of corn or lying deep in meal or flour bin. And tho' 'Siah could not know of this happy chance, at least she should pass the house, and Mrs. Perkins would see and perhaps speak. She looked wistfully toward the chimneys, just visible over the little wood between her and them, then quickened her pace as she heard a step behind her, and remembered how dark and lonely the wood was.

"Mary," a voice said softly, and she turned to meet the lover, who wasted no time, but then and there took her into his arms and kissed her with a most un-New-England-like ardor, and then without a word drew her through a thicket into an open space, shut in absolutely from road or cowpath; and thus from chance of intrusion. What words were said then, there is no need to write, events holding all their substance, and these events being, first, the emergence and then the disappearance of the two, who walked straight to the minister's house and then and there were married, without question or pause, by the old man, who knew the story well, and who held his own youth still so well in mind that even 'Siah had never failed to love and honor him.

"She didn't know she was makin' the weddin' cake," the latter chuckled, as the basket being left on the way home, Mrs. Evans, who saw the state of the case, cut huge slices of each and insisted on their being eaten then and there, the girls rushing forward and claiming bits of Mary's to dream on.

An hour later Mrs. Jennison, shading her eyes as she looked down the road, and vowing this time was the last the gal should get out of her sight, turned first red and then pale, and sat down suddenly on the doorstep. Two figures advanced toward her, one hesitant, the other with calm assurance.

"Hold your hosses!" called the last, as Mrs. Jennison, still sitting, opened her mouth, but could give no other sign of the indignation and wrath behind. "Hold your hosses, for sure as you don't I'll take her off this minute, and you may go on then all you've a mind to."

"She's und r age. I'll have the law of ye!" gasped Mrs. Jennison.

"She'll be over it by the time you get it," returned the imperturbable 'Siah. "See here, now, you've had your way with her for seven years, and that's as long as the Bible 'lows for one term o' service. She's goin' to give me a turn now, but she's too much conscience to leave you as I'd have her do, and she says she'll stay till you find somebody else. I've got her now, and kin afford to be gen'rous. But look out how you sass her, or I'll have her away before you can say Jack Robinson."

Still speechless, Mrs. Jennison rose, closed the door, pushed the bolt, and as she lowered the window, shot thro' it two words of final defiance.

"Git sout!"

"That suits me," said 'Siah to the girl down whose cheeks a few tears were running. "You beat all, Mary. Even if I was a gal, seems to me I should n't care to be well rid of an old termagan like that."

"It isn't her exactly, but it's the place, and—and—Cropple-Crown!" sobbed Mary, and Cropple-Crown answered with a cluck.

Many broods chipped the shell and grew from fluffiness to pin feathers and all the usual course of henhood before Mrs. Jennison relented, but relent she did at last, and had even been known to smile at the curly headed 'Siah, Jr., who, in time, made his way fearlessly into the old lady's domain. And, when at last grim death took possession of the victim, almost as grim, meadow and hill farm were found to be left, not for Mary, but for Mary's children, their heirs and assigns forever. Copple-Crown's last brood came thus to the pair who owed sudden deliverance from the long tangle to her good offices, and, tho' for the deliverer herself clucking and scratching ceased long ago, 'Siah still tells the story of Copple-Crown's wedding.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

An Inexpensive Carpet.

The dull, neutral tints, the discharge of all color, which taste nowaday declares is true art, can easily be arrived at on our floors without leaving them bare, or paying great prices for æsthetic patterns. Many a prairie farmer's wife arrives at the consummation so devoutly wished for, but not always attained by her town acquaintances, and has an æsthetic carpet without knowing it, and unknown, probably to all who see it, or contributed to its making. In one of the prettiest artistic drawing rooms in Rome, beneath fifteenth century carved oaks, tarsia of the seventeenth century, and mosaics worth a good many Turkey rugs, is a carpet of soft brown, woven in and out with delicate strands of golden yellow. This yellow gives it a sunny flush, and the effect is of dull russet gold. Everybody who sees the carpet for the first time speaks of its unique beauty, and then the artist hostess laughs and explains that it cost her 50 cents a yard, and that it is made from cast-off woolen garments, cut in strips and woven "hit or miss," and that it is, in fact, nothing in the world but a "rag carpet" which she made herself in her leisure moments, believing that she could thus get the color that she had set her heart upon better than by ransacking Italian stores.

Kitchen Keramics.

A "Constant Reader" wishes to know how she shall make a silk quilt. There are so many ways in which this may be done there is some difficulty in deciding upon the most satisfactory. If your pieces are of good size, and all fresh and handsome, one way is to cut out blocks of cotton cloth, either square or diamond-shaped. Cut enough blocks to make the quilt the desired size, then baste on the pieces of silk, satin or velvet; lap the edges and turn the upper one under; then cover every seam with feather-stitch, cross-stitch, or any other fancy stitch you can learn to do, or can invent. Another way is to cut the pieces in diamonds or squares. Join them in a manner similar to that described above. Save all the corners and little strips of silk, and use them to make a border for the quilt. This may be placed in stripes, as in "crazy" work. The blocks of plain silk or satin can be made still brighter by working flowers or figures on them. For these figures patterns may be found in illustrated papers and in fashion magazines; but they may also be found on handbills and wrapping paper — sometimes, for instance, quaint little fans and umbrellas, the outlines of a bird's figure, or a child's head. All these pictures may be used to advantage. Small pieces of silk and satin, and sometimes of velvet and plush, can be obtained at the remnant counter of some large dry goods store.

A convenient arrangement of shelves in one corner of your room is easily made. Have a carpenter or some other competent person nail or screw cleats to the wall, on which the three-corner shelves may rest; have them fastened securely so it and see that they are level. These shelves may be three in number, and it is a good plan to have the lowest one at about the height of an ordinary table—a trifle lower, perhaps; the reason for this is that it is more easily taken care of and kept free from dust than if it is so low as to oblige one to stoop or kneel down. These shelves may be made of common pine (well seasoned, of course), or of black walnut. They may be finished with narrow lambrequins, scalloped at the bottom; fringe is not desirable in a common room, as it catches dust. A shelf similar to one of these is especially convenient in the dining room. I saw one placed about as high as the top of a side table; it held a pretty tete-a-tete set, and was an ornament to the room. This was covered with cretonne, and had a band of the same for a lambrequin.

"How can I whiten my hands?" is a question that is asked by a correspondent. Doubtless one way to do this is to avoid doing the work which has made your hands rough and dark, but often this work may be done with such care that the hands will not be injured. If one is obliged to sweep her house, to empty the ashes from grate or stove, and to wash dishes, she can not expect to keep her hands as white as idle hands are, but if she takes the precaution to put on a pair of old gloves or mittens, when she sweeps and is doing dusty work, one cause of rough skin will be removed. Then there are preparations which one may use; powdered borax is excellent to soften the skin. A mixture which is said to be a sure cure for undue perspiration of the hands is made of quarter of an ounce of powdered alum, the white of one egg, and enough bran to make a thick paste; after washing your hands apply this; let it remain on your hands for two or three minutes, and then wipe off with a soft, dry towel. Lukewarm water is better than [illegible]

An excellent pudding is made by soaking one pint of fine, nice bread crumbs in a pint of sweet milk; beat the yolks of six eggs and the whites of three till they are very light; beat in with them one coffee-cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of melted butter; stir these in with the bread crumbs, add the grated rind and the juice of one lemon. Bake in a deep pudding dish. When done, spread a layer of tart jelly over the top, and then a meringue made of the whites of three eggs which should be reserved for this purpose. Set it in the oven to brown the top; this takes a very short time if the oven is hot, not more than four minutes being required for it.

A handsome curtain of lambrequin to be fastened to the bottom of the lowest shelf on a hanging ebony cabinet is made of olive satin. It is about ten inches deep; a vine is painted on it of bright but small flowers; the edge is trimmed with a velvet band; it is straight at the lower edge, but scalloped at the upper. It should be run on at the bottom, then turned, and the scalloped part blind-stitched on. The scallops may be ornamented by putting several rows of yellow silk around them. Catch the silk at short distances with black or scarlet silk.

Nurse's aprons, to be worn when washing and dressing the baby, are made of soft flannel. Very pretty ones are made of white flannel, with a deep hem, which may be fastened with feather or cross stitch; but useful ones of drab flannel are also much worn. These aprons should be made very long, so that if a door is suddenly opened in the nursery, the apron can be thrown up over the baby. Aprons made of canton flannel, with the soft side for the right side, are inexpensive, and may be used in place of the flannel, although that is preferred if the expense is not too great.

A new way, to many cooks, to prepare sausages for the table is to bake them. Do not make an objection to this way of cooking them until you have tried it once, and then I predict that you will not think of so doing. Put them in a baking-tin, turning them when necessary, just as if you were frying them. Brown them well; they are less greasy than if fried, and are altogether more delicate in every way. If possible, apples in some form should always accompany sausage or pork of any kind to the table.

Delicious sherbet is made of canned pineapple: To one can of pineapple allow a pint of sugar and one heaping tablespoonful of gelatine; chop the pineapple till it is very fine, add the juice from the can, and the sugar; soak the gelatine for an hour or more, until dissolved, in cold water; then add half a cup of hot water; stir this in with the pineapple. Let it stand until cold. This may be served with cake and ices at the close of supper.

The housewife who is on the lookout for little ways to economize will find it to her advantage, if she has seamless sheets which have been used for several years, to tear or cut them in two in the center, and sew the outside edges together; lap them and stitch with a machine. Or they may be sewed over and over. Hem the raw edges. Sheets turned in this way will last for a long time.

Serviceable and very pretty coverings for the sofa pillow in the common sitting-room are made by using the plaid or striped Turkish towels which are so inexpensive, and yet so pleasing to the eye.

Needlework Notes.

For a chair-back use toile Colbert in a soft gray shade, with a border of drawn work. Around the edge work a border of heraldic animals in cross-stitch of one colored silk, either blue, brown, or ruby-red. This idea may be amplified into a table cover with excellent results. It is now quite a matter of fashion to find upon a lady's work-table a series of dainty piles of breakfast and dinner napkins, or serviettes for lunch, awaiting a monogram or crest in embroidery from the hand of the fair owner. Dozens of more homely hand towels have been more than once seen of late in the same unwonted spot. It is a satisfaction to observe this practical turn of the decorative embroidery mania. There is probably no housewife who is proof against the charm of neatly folded napery, shining with the subdued luster of its own quality, not with the vulgar gloss of starch. But in our country and in our generation there are few who can boast of having their own sign manual in the way of fine needle work marking upon such treasures. To mark ordinary hand towels one can make for one's self a stencil of card board, pricking on it an outline of the initials previously drawn in ink or pencil. Through the holes thus made, rub with a spool end covered with chamois skin, any red, blue or black powder; indigo from the laundry will serve, or charcoal powdered; this leaves an outline of the letters, which it is well to secure upon the spot by going over them with pen and ink. Thus having dispensed with the services of the stamping shop, you are independent enough to complete the task. Work the letters with one stem-stitch in blue or red ingrain cotton, and if you wish to elaborate them, fill in with French knots. To mark in cross-stitch it is easier to work over canvas, afterward withdrawing the threads. It is effective to work the upper portion of the fringe with the same colored cotton.

A decided novelty is the adoption of blankets into the world of decoration. We, in America, know well the effect that may be produced by one of those softly-dyed, fine-webbed Navajo blankets, brought by the travelers from the West, when thrown across a sober-hued couch. But in default of these it is possible to have a blanket, dyed of any tint that may be selected, and to superadd embroidery in silk and crewel that will make it a most luxurious lounge covering. A carriage rug was made of a blanket, dyed dark-blue, bound with a darker blue velveteen and worked with sunflowers in outline. A portiere of deep Burgundy-red blanket was framed and banded with plush of a darker shade of red, and decorated with a conventional band of old gold crewel work.

In Russia a much-embroidered towel is used to hang in front of the towels in ordinary use; for this purpose one has been made with a design of stiff scrolls and geometrical figures, outlined by running stitches in colored washing cotton. The ground between the patterns is then entirely covered by a spaced cross-stitch in contrasting tints. This effect is produced by leaving two threads of canvas between every cross and filling them up in the following row. The towel is finished by an edge of drawn work and a fringe of long tassels knotted from the loose strands of the raveled stuff.

Some beautiful library curtains in mahogany-colored plush have an applique design of conventional honeysuckle in pinks and grayish greens, placed like a frieze just below the curtain rings, and are supplemented by curtain loops in the same embroidery. Others are made of dark-blue brocaded jute velours, having a decoration similarly applied at the top. In this leaves in grays and browns have a darned background.

Combinations of cross-stitch and drawn work still hold their own, and the introduction of a wide variety of canvas-like materials affords the worker much scope in this pretty method of decoration. A table cover of silk canvas has a double drawn work border, and on the intervening spaces is worked, in colored silks and gold thread, a quaint pattern in cross-stitch taken from a Russian towel.

A Funny Present.

On Christmas Grandma Melville sent something from the farm to be hung on the Christmas tree for Ava.

It was alive, so it couldn't really be hung, you know. It was snow-white, but it wasn't a rabbit with his winter coat on. It had feathers and a pair of bright eyes, but it wasn't one of Grandma Melville's doves—not a bit of it.

Papa made a little cage for it by nailing slats across a box; and then he put it behind the Christmas tree.

They unloaded the Christmas tree in the afternoon, because there were lots of little cousins who must get home before dark; but when the blinds were shut tight, and the lamps lighted, it was a good deal like night-time.

All of a sudden, breaking right through the talk and laughter, came a sharp little "Cut—cut—cut—cut—da—cut! Cut—cut—ker—da cut—da—cut—da—cut!"

"What is it? Oh, what is it?" cried Ava.

"What do you guess?" asked papa, laughing.

"It sounds like a hen-biddy," said Ava, "but maybe it's a turkle."

Then everybody laughed; and papa pulled the little cage out from behind the tree.

"It is a hen-biddy!" cried Ava.

Sure enough. There was a snow-white little hen.

And as true as you live the snow-white little hen had laid a snow-white little egg. [illegible]

THE OLD YEAR.

The white dawn glimmered, and he said, "'Tis day!"
The east was reddening, and he sighed, "Farewell!"
The herald sun came forth, and he was dead.

Life was in all his veins but yesternoon.
And ruddy health seemed laughing on his lips;
Now he is dust, and will not breathe again!

Give him a place to lay his regal head,
Give him a tomb beside his brothers gone,
Give him a tablet for his deeds and name!

Hear the new voice that claims the vacant throne,
Take the new hand outstretched to meet thy kiss;
But give the past—'tis all thou canst—thy tears!

—James T. Fields.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Is the Church Declining.

New York Tribune: The Baltimore Day recently sent a number of its reporters to some of the prominent clergymen of that city with numbered questions relating to the power of the church. The answers of the various clergymen were published in full, and together they make up an interesting symposium on a subject that is just now of vital interest. The Rev. Campbell Fair, an Episcopalian, did not think the church was losing its hold on men; on the contrary, he thought it was becoming stronger. Skepticism prevails largely among the members of trades unions who give us strikes and riots and pillage. Among the 800 doctors of Baltimore he had only heard of one infidel. The Rev. John J. Murray, a Methodist, thought that the preaching of to-day is as interesting as it ever was, and that the church never was so strong as it is at the present time. The Rev. R. H. Pullman, a Universalist, presented the other side of the case. He drew a distinction between the church and Christianity, saying while the church is surely declining, Christianity as a religion was never stronger, and Jesus never more truly Lord than he is to-day. The cause of the church's decline, he says, "is found in the character of the so-called evangelical creeds. The doctrine that the sin of Adam involved the endless damnation of the whole human race, and the doctrine of the atonement that Christ suffered this penalty on the cross—paid the debt in full—so making it possible for all those having faith in this transaction to be saved, i. e., escape this hell; the doctrines of probation, of plenary inspiration, and of endless suffering in hell; also the doctrine of an arch fiend, called the devil, possessing superhuman power, roaming at will through the universe, omnipresent, and not second to God himself in omnipotence it judged by his following—these doctrines, fundamental in the so-called evangelical sects, are losing their hold on thinking men because of the unspeakable horror and blood-thirstiness of some of them, the inconsistency and absurdity of others, and the unscripturalness of them all. While I believe there has been a stand-still and that the church as a whole is not keeping up with the increase of population, and so is on the decline, I am strong in the cheerful conviction that this decline is being overruled for good, in that attention is now being called to the cause of the decline, the good effect of which is already suggested in the mighty revolution developing against the old creeds and confessions of faith within the very ranks of the so-called evangelical sects, which is full of promise of a brighter day for Christianity, a day of greater unity and sweeter fellowship. Discussions of the doctrines of probation, inspiration and endless hell occupy large space in both the religious and secular newspapers and magazines of the day, which is significant of the revolution. While, then, I see decline I see also signs of the morning full of hope for the day when Christianity, relieved of the weight of dead dogmas, will teach with new life the world it is designed to save. The best preaching to-day is the so-called liberal preaching. Its tone is clear and ringing in the Unitarian and Universalist pulpits; nor is it confined to these. In many other pulpits advanced preachers have given up preaching the old creeds and are doing noble work for the cause of real Christianity. Whenever it is known that a liberal preacher is in any of the orthodox pulpits, there the people go in crowds. This is one of the signs of the times, and indicates that liberal preaching is the strongest and most effectual against the skepticism of the time. What is needed more than all else is the preaching of religion as Jesus preached it—plain, simple, beautiful. Real religion has attraction for every human heart; there is no subject that can be made more popular than religion with the heart of Jesus in it; there is no theme more practical or more sublime. Let the preachers of to-day bring out religion as a life the most beautiful, and the safest and most successful to be embraced, because it is life, the highest and the most divinely real; let this be shown and it will not need the promise of a future heaven to bribe people to take it, nor the threat of endless hell if they don't. Religion is life. So understood it will stand on its own merits, and will attract with an irresistible persuasiveness to itself."

English Church and State.

The position of the English church as a state establishment brings with it many anomalies one of the most striking of which is the mode by which bishops are nominated and elected. This important act is performed by the state alone. In theory no system could be more execrable in practice; however, its results have been generally admirable. The men who have been chosen by the sovereign, or more strictly speaking, by the premier, may not always have been the men who would have been elected in a free and independent convocation of the church; but they have been, as a rule, men of wisdom and foresight, and in many cases gifted with the most fervent piety. They have in nearly every instance adorned the exalted position accorded to them as shepherds of the church and peers of the realm. It is indeed very doubtful if the church would have fared as well if it had exercised a free and unbiased choice in selecting its bishops. For while the clergy are in the main commendably zealous for the best interests of the church, experience has shown that they are swayed by passion or prejudice as often as men in the secular walks of life. From all accounts Bishop Benson, the archbishop-elect of Canterbury, will be another illustration of the practical wisdom of the state in its selections of men to wear the miter. He is a scholar of some note, with an experience in ruling gained from his connection with one of the great English public schools. The rapidity of his promotion shows that he possesses that sturdy common sense which the average Englishman so largely possesses, and which he is so fond of seeing in his rulers. Archbishop Benson may not have the pre-eminent ability possessed by some of his predecessors, but he bids fair to carry on to a successful issue the policy of the late archbishop, which though often inconsistent, like many things in England, received the approval of the nation.

Gen. Sherman's Son.

Mr. Thomas E. Sherman, a son of Gen. Sherman, is a Roman Catholic and is not only studying for the priesthood, but intends to become a Jesuit. He recently delivered a lecture before the students of Loyola college on The Inquisition in which he defended that institution. He likened the church to a beautiful mansion ornamented with all that was precious in the sight of man. This sublime structure had a dark, damp and dismal cellar in which some of the family persisted in living, while the others resided above. In course of time those in the cellar became sick and bred contagious diseases, which threatened the lives of the upper residents. The obnoxious creatures, to obtain light, picked holes in the wall which threatened to crumble the mansion. The people above, to save themselves, cast out their brethren below. So it is with the Catholic church. It had the inquisition to prevent the spreading of heretical disease. In America, where there is so much said of the court of inquiry, the Puritans of New England burned people at the stake and indulged in other horrible butcheries, which the inquisition did not.

Novel Christmas Celebration.

The Protestant Episcopal Church of the Ascension in Chicago celebrated Christmas in an elaborate and gorgeous manner. An altar to the Nativity was erected. Large numbers of [illegible] chest for congratulation. Possibly he may have had a rare copy of the mass book used by Jesus and his fisherman friends on the Syrian hills centuries ago.

Droppings From the Sanctuary.

"Speak, for thy servant heareth."
Thus give us grace, O Lord,
To listen and to answer
Whene'er thy voice is heard;
Whether we wait expectant
Its sounds to guide us home;
Or all unsought, unwelcome,
Its sudden warning come.

The Churchman announces that a society has been established in Stockholm, Sweden, having professedly for its object "the extension of a reasonable faith in God, and the awakening of a religio-moral life founded thereon." Writings are to be circulated to this end, and "educated missionaries" are to be sent out who will labor especially among the working population of both the cities and the country, "for the promotion of a scientific, historical and religious enlightenment, and oppose a false devotion, faith in dogmas and superstition, thus paving the way for a purified idea of God, and for a morally worthy of man."

Dr. MacGregor of Edinburg recently preached at Stockport the ninety-ninth annual sermon of the most wonderful Sabbath school in the world. It has 400 teachers and 4,500 children, and nearly 95,000 children have passed through the school since its commencement. The singing is led by an orchestra, and there are sixteen violins among the instruments. Dr. MacGregor declares that when he heard the hymns sung by from 3,000 to 4,000 young voices, with the accompaniment of the orchestra and the full force of the organ, he felt as if the windows of heaven were opened.

The report at the thirty-fifth annual meeting of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, pastor, showed a total membership of 2,548, fifty-four having been added to the church and fifty removed during the past year. The number of children in the Sunday school and the mission was 2,400. The money received for pew rents was $38,000, and by collections in the church $5,464. The cost of music was $6,070.

The Old South church society, of Boston have, with a most commendable liberality, voted unanimously to continue the salary, $4,000 a year, of Rev. Dr. Manning to his family until April 1, 1883, and after that period to pay to his family $3,000 a year for six years. The society also voted to erect a monument to the memory of Dr. Manning.

The congregation of the First Presbyterian church, Atlanta, Ga., recently presented their late pastor, Rev. Dr. J. H. Martin, with a purse containing $1,500. The ladies of the congregation presented his daughter and himself each with a gold watch.

Dr. Elijah Newland of New Albany has presented the Episcopal church of that city with a house worth $6,000 for a parsonage.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

WINTER JEWELS.

I see a thousand diamonds,
I see ten thousand pearls;
Hurry, hurry and get them,
You darling little girls.

Alas, the glistening diamonds,
And the pearls in shining bands,
Have been stolen by a sunbeam,
Right out of the children's hands.

But something better than jewels
They found in the magic place,
For they all came hurrying home again,
Each with a rose in her face.

The Story of a Christmas Tree.

At the very tiptop of a long hill stands a big white house; and at the foot of the hill stands a little house which the winds and rain and sun have painted black.

Mrs. Deane, who lives in the big white house, has one little girl, and Mrs. Day, who lives in the little black house, has three.

Every Monday morning the three little Days tug a big basket up the long hill to the white house, after the weekly "wash;" and every Thursday afternoon they tug it up again, filled with clothes as sweet and clean as sweet and clean can be. For Nora and Nannie and Bess have no papa, and their mamma has to work early and late to earn clothes for their growing bodies, and bread enough to fill their hungry little mouths. Sometimes there isn't enough.

Now I have come to the story.

It was the week before Christmas, and little May Deane, in the pretty sitting room of the house on the hill, was chatting to her mamma and Dicky, the canary, about Santa Claus, and what she was sure he would bring her, when there came a knock at the door.

It was Thursday afternoon and Nora and Nannie and Bess had brought home the clothes.

Mrs. Deane asked them in to wait for the basket; and when they were in Dicky sang for them, and May kept up her chatter, tipping her head sideways, and looking almost like a canary herself, with her yellow curls and bright eyes.

"What do you suppose Santa Claus will bring you?" asked she.

The little Days stared very hard at each other and at May. Nora answered; she is the oldest,—

"We don't know who he is."

It was May's turn to stare. In all her life she had never before found anybody who didn't know Santa Claus.

"Then, who gives you things Christmas?" she asked.

"We don't have any," answered Nora, "'hout's sometimes we get our winter shoes then."

"Why, don't you hang up your stockings?"

"No," said Nora.

"Nor have any Christmas tree, ever?" May asked.

"No," said Nora again; and then Mrs. Deane came back with the basket, and the three little Days made three little curtsies and went away.

May stood at the window and watched them go away down the snowy road. Her face was very sober.

"Mamma," she asked, "why don't Santa Claus ever go to their house?"

"Perhaps the chimney's too small for him," answered mamma, with a smile.

"It isn't a chimney at all; it's a stove-pipe," said May. "Maybe it is too small."

She look out of the window for a long time, without speaking. At last she said:

"Don't you s'pose he'd go there this year if I wrote him a letter and asked him to?"

"Perhaps," mamma answered, "if he had gifts enough in his pack."

"If he hadn't mamma, he needn't come here."

Mamma smiled. "Then I think he might," she said. "But the stove pipe—how could he manage that?"

May thought a moment. Then she clapped her hands and whirled about like a live top, spinning right up to her mother's side at last.

"O mamma, mamma!" she cried, "let me be their Santa Claus and make 'em a tree, like the one Aunt Bella made for me last year, and I looked in the parlor and caught her tying on the oranges! O mamma, can't I, please?—with strings of pop-corn and candy horns and apples? And then I won't care if Santa Claus, the really truly Santa Claus, mamma, doesn't come here. Can't I, please?"

And mamma kissed her little daughter's lips. "I think you can," said she. "You may ask papa about it."

"I just the same's know he'll say I can!" cried May. And so he did, pinching her round cheeks red, and teasing her a good deal about getting sooty going down Mrs. Day's stove-pipe.

What fun it was! May went about the house with dancing eyes. You see she had a secret, and I'd like to know if there ever lived a little girl who didn't enjoy a secret—such a beautiful secret, too! It was just the best sport to peep into the parcels which papa brought home from the village. Then there was the corn to pop and string, and the apples to get ready; and of course this work would take a great deal of time if you wanted it to (so to bring Christmas quicker), and string a good deal of corn and tied a good many apples, just as May did.

So Christmas came, or the day before Christmas, which is almost as much fun; and May's papa went to the wood lot and brought home the tree, a trim little fir, with dark green, glossy boughs. He planted it straight and firm in a tiny tub, filled with sand, which May stuck full of twigs and bits of evergreen.

"So nice for Nannie to wash her doll's clothes in," said she. "It's just big enough." She meant the tub.

Then she hung the apple and candy horns on the branches, and the strings of pop-corn, like little snow wreaths, and the gifts.

There was a warm shawl for Mrs. Day, a dress for each of the three little girls, a doll, with real hair, for Nannie, a tea-set for Bess and a pretty work-box for Nora.

That night, when the stars began to peep out, May's papa took her on the big sled with the tree, and away they flew down the long hill to the little black house. Papa set the tree on the door step. Then he knocked gently, and whisked her away around the corner of the house. [illegible]

[illegible] And after all Santa Claus paid the bill. For if it wasn't really he who made the "Days'" Christmas tree, you know—it was only little May Deane.

FACTS FOR THE FARMERS.

The Profit of Sheep Raising in Minnesota.

The PIONEER PRESS has often called attention to the advantages which Minnesota possessed as a sheep-growing State. The particular point in its favor has been the healthfulness of the flocks. No disease of any kind has been known to prevail and a scabby fleece has never yet been bought to the North Star Woolen mills which was grown on Minnesota soil. But in addition to this the sheep grower here is much more sure to make a handsome thing on his flock if he manages well and knows anything of his business than he is of reaping a crop of wheat when sown, even if he is a master of the best known principles of farming. While sheep, it is true, are subject to destruction by dogs and wolves, they are not nearly so liable to prove a loss as is the wheat crop, which is dependent on a variety of conditions of weather, soils and seed for its successful development and ultimate ripening into a profitable harvest. We have before us some figures furnished by Mr. M. H. Bibbins of Chatfield, Minn., manager of the farm of J. C. Easton at that place, which tell their own story.

Statement of sheep account for the year beginning Nov. 1, 1879:

533 sheep on hand, at $3.50 per head	$1,865 50
125 lambs on hand, at $1.50 per head	187 50
275 lambs on hand, at $2 per head	550 00
817 sheep purchased of Maplewood farm, at $3.25 per head	2,655 25	$5,258 25
COST OF FEED AND LABOR.
200 tons of hay at $4.50	$900 00
2,653 bushels of corn at 27 cents	716 85
20 tons of screenings at $5	100 00
12 tons of shorts at $7	84 00
1,000 bushels of oats at 25 cents	250 00
Labor of wintering 1,750 head at 25 cents per head	437 50
Shearing 1,715 head at 8 cents per head	137 20
Herding, extra labor, etc	275 00	2,900 65
Interest at 7 per cent on 358 acres of land, valued at $50 per acre	$1,250 00
Taxes on land	61 94
Taxes on sheep	26 25
Interest at 7 per cent on sheep, valued at $5,258	368 06	1,706 25
Sheep account Dr		$9,865 05
Nov. 1, 1880—
1,570 sheep on hand, valued at $3.50	$5,495 00
400 lambs on hand, valued at $3	1,200 00
200 lambs on hand, valued at $2.50	500 00
85 lambs on hand, valued at $1.50	127 50	7,322 50
10,236 pounds of wool at 27½c and 1,874 lbs of wool at 20c	$3,154 11
Sold 115 head mutton sheep	371 25
Sold pelts	38 00
100 tons of hay raised on Trout Pond farm in 1879, and fed in 1880	450 00	4,023 36
Sheep account, Cr		$11,345 86
Sheep account, Dr		9,865 05
Net profit		$1,480 81

Statement of sheep account for the year beginning Nov. 1, 1880:

2,250 sheep on hand, value	$7,322 50
230 sheep purchased at $4 per head	920 00
14 bucks at $10 per head	140 00
1 Shropshire buck	85 00
1 Shropshire buck lamb	35 00
6 Shropshire ewe lambs at $30	180 00	8,632 50
COST OF FEED AND LABOR.
285 tons of hay at $5	$1,425 00
2,678 bushels of corn at 33c	883 74
940 bushels of oats at 25c	235 00
75 tons of screenings at $4	300 00
Cost of labor wintering 2,250 head at 25c per head	562 50
Shearing and tying wool from 2,200 head at 10c per head	220 00
Herding sheep during summer	450 00	4,076 24
Interest at 6 per cent on 358 acres of land valued at $50 per acre	1,074 00
Interest at 6 per cent on 580 acres of land valued at $25 per acre	240 00
Taxes on land	75 00
Taxes on sheep	35 00
Interest at 6 per cent on sheep valued at $7,322.50	439 35	1,863 35
Sheep account, Dr		$14,622 09
Nov. 1, 1881:
2,056 sheep valued at $4 per head	$8,224 00
925 lambs valued at $3 per head	2,775 00
43 bucks valued at $10 per head	430 00
1 Shropshire buck	85 00
1 Shropshire buck lamb	35 00
6 Shropshire ewe lambs at $30	180 00	11,729 00
330 sheep sold	965 50
4 Merino bucks sold	65 00
16,000 lbs. wool valued at 28c per lb	4,480 00	5,510 50
Sheep account, Cr		$17,239 50
Sheep account, Dr		14,622 09
Net profit		$2,617 41

Statement of sheep account for the year beginning Nov. 1, 1880:

3,200 sheep on hand valued at $12,344 00		$12,344 00
COST OF FEED AND LABOR.
350 tons of hay at $5	$1,750 00
6,000 bushels of corn at 40c	2,400 00
800 bushels of oats at 30c	240 00
30 tons of screenings at $5	150 00
Extra labor at lambing season	95 00
Cost of labor, wintering 3,200 sheep, at 25c per head	800 00
Shearing and tying wool, 3,150 sheep, at 10c per head	315 00
Herding sheep during summer	450 00	$6,200 00
Interest at 6 per cent on 358 acres of land valued at $50 per acre	$1,074 00
Interest at 6 per cent on 580 acres of land valued at $25 per acre	870 00
Taxes on land	100 00
Taxes on sheep	140 00
Interest at 6 per cent on sheep valued at $12,344	740 64	2,924 64
Sheep account, Dr		$21,368 64
Nov. 1, 1882—
2,610 sheep on hand valued at $4 per head	$10,440 00
850 lambs on hand valued at $3.50 per head	2,975 00
40 bucks on hand valued at $10 per head	400 00
28,000 lbs of wool sold at 24½c	6,860 00
600 sheep sold at $5	3,000 00
75 lambs at $3	225 00
Sheep account, Cr		$23,500 00
Sheep account, Dr		21,368 64
Net profit		$2,131 55

A Great Sorghum Sugar Refinery.

Dr. Wilhelm, formerly of the Faribault refinery, has turned up in Kansas, where he has organized, according to the Prairie Farmer, an immense corporation to give the good people down there all the sweets they can take care of. Says the veracious correspondent of that paper: Dr. Wilhelm informed me that he had given years to practical experiment and scientific study in this direction, and that he has organized a stock company with a capital of $500,000, which will establish a central refinery at Lawrence, Kans., with tributary factories in outlying districts to convert the juice of the cane into semi-syrup, in which state it will be shipped to the central refinery and there converted into sugar. He calculates that by planting early and late varieties a working season of three months or more can be relied on for the outlying factories, while their products will keep the central refinery busy the entire year in converting them into sugar and refining the molasses. This is the shape the business will probably take in this country as the most economical and giving the best results. Each of the outlying factories, the doctor informs me, will be in charge of an expert who has been trained by him so as to secure uniformity of product.

A Big Butter Record.

Lady Moll 2d, No. 1705 Cattle Club Register, of the Glenwood herd of Jerseys, owned by Col. Charles F. Mills of Springfield, Ill., has a right to take one of the highest places among butter yielders. [illegible]

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Publisher.

CROOKSTON, - MINNESOTA.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Tuesday, January 2.

At 12 M., Lieut. Gov. Gilman called the Senate to order for the first time in the new chamber, which is greatly admired.

Rev. Robert Smith, nominated for chaplain read a few verses from St. Paul's epistle to Timothy, and followed the reading with an elegant prayer, in which he gave thanks for the many blessings vouchsafed by Providence, and called for aid and guidance in the discharge of official and moral duty.

The members then took the oath which was administered by Justice Vanderburg and the senate proceeded to the election of officers (elsewhere printed) most of whom received a unanimous vote.

The rules of the last session were adapted and a committee appointed to wait on the governor who said he would deliver his message on Thursday.

House, Tuesday, January 2.

The house was called to order at high noon by the secretary of the state, who, assisted by Assistant Secretary Hjertsberg, proceeded to call the members, by districts, to the bar of the house, where they were duly sworn into office by Associate Justice Dickinson of the spureme court, in parties of ten or twelve.

The house then proceeded to the election of speaker, Hon H. G. Hicks presenting the name of Hon. L. Fletcher. The Democrats made no nomination. All the votes cast were for Mr. Fletcher. The other nominees of the Republican caucus were elected without opposition—(names elsewhere.) After selecting seats Mr. Smith, from the committee appointed to wait on the governor, reported that the governor would be prepared to deliver his message on Thursday morning.

Senate, Wednesday, January 3.

The law showing that a joint canvass by the legislature of the vote for judges was not necessary, the resolution for such joint session was rescinded.

Ernest Shalleen and Charles Castle have been appointed pages in the senate. This business was presented and the senate adjourned.

House, Wedneday, January 3.

James Zieske of Brown county, was appointed to take charge of the coat room.

Mr. Cole moved that the speaker be authorized to appoint an assistant postmaster and assistant doorkeeper. Adopted. A. D. Sergeant, of Rice, was appointed assistant doorkeeper and A. B. Wilgus, Jr., of Ramsey, assistant postmaster.

Mr. Rahilly moved that 210 copies of the journal of the house be printed daily. The number was amended to 400, and the motion carried.

By Mr. Rahilly: That the chief clerk be authorized to subscribe for several daily newspapers, or their equivalent in weeklies for the use of each of the members of the house. The ayes and noes showed 71 ayes and 23 noes, and the resolution was declared adopted.

Senate, Thursday, January 4.

Several bills were introduced in the senate yesterday, the important ones being Rice's to tax real estate mortgages and Wheat's amending the law so as to make 8 per cent. the legal rate of interest. The others related to wards and probate court proceedings.

An additional clerk was allowed the secretary and janitors for cloak and committee rooms appointed.

The senate met the house in joint convention at 2:30 p. m., and heard the governor's message.

Afterward, adjournment was taken until 8 p. m., Monday.

House, Thursday, January 4.

J. E. Child, of Jackson, introduced a bill which was duly briefed as House File No. 1. The bill provides for the punishment of any one who shall willfully or maliciously set on fire any woods or prairies. This is not to be construed as affecting any one who burns his own prairie land adjoining cultivated property. To be referred to judiciary committee when one is formed.

The chair announced the appointment of A. H. Helling, Brown county, as janitor of the cloak room, and Erick Olson of Grant to take charge of the committee rooms.

Speaker Fletcher has appointed Charles Hamilton, St. Paul, and Frank Reif, White Bear, as pages. He has not made the other page appointments.

In joint convention of the two houses, Governor Hubbard read his annual message (printed in full elsewhere). He read distinctly, and was listened to throughout with respectful attention.

The governor committed the reading of the longer tables, as they would be more intelligible in printed form. He commenced reading at 2:40, and closed at 4:08, the time occupied being one hour and twenty-eight minutes.

Toward the close Gov. Hubbard's voice grew a trifle husky, but his vocal organs withstood wonderfully well the unusual strain put upon them.

House adjourned until Monday in order to allow time for the selection of committees, an arduous job, as most of the members are strangers to the speaker.

Monday, January 8.

Both houses met at 8 p. m., but there was scarcely a quorum in either branch. The house adjourned without transacting any business; but in the senate bills repealing the dog license law, amending the probate law relative to statue of limitations in dower and minor heir homestead interest, and making more flexible the law pertaining to punishment for larceny, were introduced.

Medical College at the Minnesota State University.

At a meeting of the Board of Regents of the State University of Minnesota held at St. Paul last week, Dr. W. W. Leonard, C. N. Hewitt and W. H. Folwell, constituting the Medical college committee, appeared before the board and read and explained in detail their report, submitted at the last meeting of the board. The report, proposed by-laws and regulations which were ordered spread on the records of the board. The committee's report to the board of a working plan for the college of medicine is of great length and very full in its details.

The following resolution, offered by Regent Nelson, was adopted by the board:

Resolved, that there be, and hereby is, commenced in the University of Minnesota, a college or department of medicine, substantially in conformity with the plan embraced in the report made and submitted by Drs. Leonard, Hewitt and Folwell, and this day ordered spread on the records of the board.

The following resolution was also adopted:

Resolved, That Regents Hubbard, Pillsbury and Clark be appointed a committee to select and nominate to this board names of persons to constitute the medical faculty.

Regents Gov. Hubbard, Gov. Pillsbury and Judge Greenleaf Clark were constituted a committee to select and nominate the medical faculty. It is understood that this is the inception of a movement which will give Minnesota one of the most thorough medical institutions in the country. The standard of the profession should be elevated to the highest possible plane, and such an institution as is contemplated by the proposed plan will be a substantial superstructure.

The first National Bank of Anoka opened for business succeeding the State bank, with no change in management or of stockholders. Capital paid in, $50,000; authorized $250,000. The officers are H. L. Ticknor, president; R. M. Taylor, vice president; P. E. Pratt, cashier.

A case of small pox is reported in Minneapolis.

Owen Edwards, an old settler, in Blue Earth county and a man addicted to the use of liquor, was found dead Saturday morning near the Milwaukee railroad track in Mankato, He had just returned from a visit to Nebraska, had been drinking heavily during the night and sometime between midnight and morning he wandered off, fell down and laid there till he froze.

Hugh Patterson, about eighty-five years of age, living near Little Falls, fell down stairs in the Douglass house, Aitkin, Christmas night, breaking his neck, and causing instant death.

Dr. S. P. Starret of Anoka, died on Wednesday, of diptheria.

Edward McDermott, aged twenty-three years, yardmaster of the Midland railroad, at Wabasha, while passing between cars that were being coupled on Thursday last, received injuries from which he died next morning. He was buried on Sunday.

THE CONGRESS.

Friday, January 5.

SENATE.—Mr. Ingalls presented a petition for the admission of Dakota as a state, and remarked in his opinion the opposition to such admission was wholly partisan and malignant.

Mr. Vest denied that the opposition was of the character stated by Ingalls, and asserted that it was made by republicans as well as democrats, and based upon unanswerable facts.

Mr. Garland charged that the first objection on the floor to the admission of Dakota came from Hale, on account of the manner in which the county of Yankton had dealt with its creditors.

Mr. Hale said he had objected to the admission of Dakota on the ground stated by Mr. Garland, because the repudiation of Yankton county had been sanctioned by the territorial legislature, and he thought it neither fit nor fair that his action should be characterized as it had been by Ingalls.

Senator Vest reported his Yellowstone park bill. It provides for the most stringent protection of game animals, birds and fish, and natural curiosities. He proposes to unite the authority of the war and interior departments to carry out the objects of the bill.

The rules for the protection of the reserve are to be made by the secretary of the interior and the secretary of war, to detail soldiers to watch for, warn off, or expel persons violating the act. The jurisdiction of Gallatin county, Mont., is extended over the territory, to provide a court before which the offenders may be brought on information.

HOUSE—Nothing was done, but to consider and pass the District of Columbia bill, which appropriates $3,443,447.

Saturday, January 6.

SENATE.—The house bill permitting the exportation free of duty of tobacco to adjoining foreign territory passed. The presidential succession bill occupied the attention of the senate nearly the entire day.

Messrs. Maxey and Lapham discussed the constitutional phases of the measure, generally favoring its provisions. In the course of his speech Mr. Lapham argued that it was necessary to take prompt measures to avoid the recurrence of the difficulties which followed the assassination of President Garfield. He was of the opinion that the vice president simply discharged the duties of the president. This brought out an interruption from Mr. Hoar, who asked if he (Mr. Lapham) had been in the place of Mr. Arthur would he have taken the oath of president?

"No," Mr. Lapham replied, "I would not."

"Would you have taken the salary?"

"Yes," Mr. Lapham said; "but I should have paid it over to the widow of the late president."

Mr. Lapham, however, approved of Mr Arthur's good taste in not at once assuming the presidential chair. Soon after this the senate went into executive session.

HOUSE.—Mr. White offered a resolution inquiring whether the presence of the commissioner of internal revenue in Illinois is necessary for the collection of taxes due upon the immense quantities of bonded whisky in that state.

The shipping bill came up, and Mr. Cox of New York made a most eloquent speech in favor of restoring the importance of our merchant marine.

After giving a detailed account of the navigation laws he said: "Amid divided marine dominion, in which one power alone has half the rule of the ocean, America sits sceptreless and forlorn, dethroned, ignoble, dispirited and disgraced. The symbol of our nationality, taking its stars from the vault of heaven, by which brave men sail, is an unknown emblem upon the sea. We welcome every race to our shores in vessels of other nations. Our enormous surplus, which feeds the world is for others to bear away. We gaze at leviathans of commerce entering our harbors and darkening our sky with pennons of smoke, but the thunder of the engines is under another flag and the shouting of the captains, is in an alien tongue. Others distribute produce, capitalize moneys, gather glories and elevate their institutions by the amenities and benignities of our commerce; and we, boasting of our invention, heroism and freedom, allow jailers and hated and selfish policy to place gyves upon our energy and imprison our genius in sight of these splendid achievments. Mr. Speaker, if you would that we should once more fly our ensign upon the sea, assist us to take off the burdens from our navigation and give to us, first, last and best the indispensable condition of civilization by commerce, liberty?" [Applause.

Monday, January 8.

SENATE.—Mr. Van Wyck introduced a bill repealing a portion of the law establishing post routes from Niobrara to Deadwood and from Chamberlain to Rapid City. Nearly the entire day was devoted to speeches on the presidential succession bill.

A very touching scene occurred at the close of the session of the senate this evening. Senator Edmunds had closed his scathing arraignment of Hoar's presidential bill.

The Massachusetts senator felt considerably cut up at the rough handling of his pet measure, and rose to reply. He charged Senator Edmunds with coming in at this late day in an unfair opposition to the measure when it had been for months all through last session pending before the committee on the judiciary, and nothing had been heard from the senator, who absented himself. His criticism was severe to the verge of cruelty.

Mr. Edmunds rose to reply. He said the senator from Massachusetts did him a great injustice in arraigning him for absence during the last session, under the circumstances. He knew— He stopped short, made a great effort to articulate something, failed, and sat down with tears streaming from his eyes. A deathlike silence prevailed.

Some senator in a low voice moved to adjourn. The motion prevailed, and the senators noiselessly left the chamber, awed into silence by the manifestation of grief from their venerable colleague. The cause of Mr. Edmund's absence last session was the late illness of his daughter, who was the idol of his heart and to whose loss he seems unable to reconcile himself.

HOUSE.—Bills were introduced creating a postal telegraph, reducing letter postage to one cent and limiting the silver dollar coinage to the requirements of the people.

A resolution was adopted for a committee to investigate the charge that Chief Clerk Bailey of the house was acting in the interest of the Washington Gaslight and Coke company and influencing congressional action. The shipping bill was debated at great length.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Delivered to the Legislature in Joint Session Thursday, January 4, 1883.

Full Text of Gov. Hubbard's First Annual Message—Condition of State Institutions and Finances.

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives: You assemble at this time under circumstances favorable for careful and considerate action upon the questions that will command your attention. You bring with you from your several localities the assurance that the people of the State are prosperous and enjoying that feeling of contentment that follows well rewarded industry. The various material interests of the State have developed and prospered during the past two years, to an extent not exceeded by any previous experience for a like period in her history, and all existing conditions are favorable to a continued rapid and healthy growth. The exercise of a wise and careful judgment upon your part in the deliberations of this session, will greatly aid in realizing for our State that promise which the future presents before us.

It is a pleasure, gentlemen, to greet you as the first legislative assembly convened in the new capitol building. Though in a somewhat incomplete state, it will doubtless afford you sufficient facilities for the proper prosecution of your duties.

The old Territorial capitol, completed in 1853, was destroyed by fire on the night of March 1, 1881, during the last days of the session of the legislature of that year. It was thought probable, immediately after the fire, that the foundation and a portion of the walls of the burned building could be utilized for a new structure, and an appropriation of $75,000 was made with the expectation that the expenditure of that sum would substantially restore the old building. It was decided after a more thorough inspection that it would be unsafe to build upon the ruins of the old capitol. It was then determined by my predecessor to erect an entirely new structure, and the plans of this building were adopted by him, and the foundation laid during the summer of 1881. The abandonment of the old building and the adoption of new plans involved a much greater expenditure than was anticipated or had been provided for. At the extra session of November, 1881, an additional appropriation of $100,000 was made to "finish and furnish" the new building, which sum, it was provided by the terms of the act making the appropriation, should "complete the building in all respects." The autumn months of 1881 were very unfavorable for the prosecution of building operations, hence no work was done upon the superstructure, though it was largely contracted for, and a portion of the material for the walls and roof delivered upon the ground.

Upon a careful examination of the matter shortly after my accession to the executive office, I felt much doubt as to the sufficiency of the amount appropriated to complete the building according to the plans adopted and the terms of the act of the legislature. I therefore called upon the architect for an estimate of the amount required to complete the building, including what had already been expended. In response thereto he submitted an estimate aggregating $245,000.

This was largely in excess of the appropriations made, which were $184,000, including $9,000 made for repairs, etc., for the old capitol, which were deemed available for the new building. This exhibit, which showed a deficiency of $61,000, was disappointing, and a surprise to many who believed the appropriations were sufficient to complete the building. I was assured by gentlemen familiar with the facts, among whom were members of the legislature to whom the details had been submitted, that the final appropriation for the purpose was understood to be ample to cover the full estimates of the architect. A further consultation with the architect disclosed the fact that he had made, some months previous, and submitted to my predecessor, an estimate contemplating a cheaper construction and a finish of quite a different character, and which omitted some essential features of the building altogether, notably the tower, fire proofing, etc., which reduced his figures to a point within the appropriations. It appeared, however, that the estimate was made at a time when labor and material were cheaper, and that the same figures even for the cheaper finish, could not then be duplicated. I made a formal call upon the architect for his lower estimate which was furnished, but which in my judgment it was not for the interest of the State to adopt, as it contemplated a very cheap interior finish of the building, excluding all fire proof features, and in most respects quite out of harmony with the exterior construction, the contracts for which were already let. The lower estimate was, however, out of the question in any event as it was made upon the basis (as stated by the architect) of prices for labor and material below those prevailing or at which it was possible to obtain them. The correspondence and estimates referred to are submitted for your further information.

The appropriations being entirely inadequate for the completion of the building, I had determined to prosecute the work so far as to complete the contracts already let, and add such further expenditure as would enclose the structure and protect it from the elements, and await future action of the legislature. Upon the announcement of this determination on my part, a tender of $40,000 was made to me by the citizens of St. Paul, for the purpose of putting the building in proper condition to be occupied by the legislature at this session. The tender was made without conditions, and was accepted without assurances upon my part (which, of course, I could not give) as to the future reimbursement of the persons making it. I was encouraged by this generous action of the citizens of St. Paul to continue the work, and thereupon made additional contracts and purchases of material necessary to prepare the building for your occupancy. Though I incurred no obligation to do so in accepting this aid, yet I feel it is due the gentlemen whose liberality and public spirit thus came to the rescue, as well as to the dignity of the State, that I should recommend that the amount thus tendered and expended be returned to them.

The estimates of the architect for the work already done and authorized are largely exceeded by the actual cost of the same; and to meet this excess and to provide the dome to the tower, stone steps to the several entrances and prepare and enclose the grounds an additional sum will also be required. I have called upon the architect to prepare final estimates covering the entire structure, which will soon be submitted and which will probably show that about $120,000 will be necessary to meet the full and final cost of the building, including the $40,000 received from the source referred to. I therefore recommend that an appropriation of the sum named be made. It will require an additional sum to furnish the rooms occupied by the several departments, a careful estimate of which will be submitted at an early day, and for which an appropriation should be made.

I have given the work of construction upon this building much personal attention. I have been careful that every item of expenditure should be as carefully and economically made as possible. I believe the State has received value for every dollar expended, notwithstanding much of the work has been done at some disadvantage. To put the building in condition to be occupied by your body necessitated the employment of labor with less economy, to some extent, than might have been done had more time been allowed. The first brick was laid upon the foundation on the 4th day of last April, hence the construction of this almost completed structure has covered a period of but nine months' time. It is in all essential respects a fire-proof building. It will furnish ample accommodation for all departments of the State government for a generation to come. It will cost, when completed, in all respects, about $300,000; and I state with confidence my belief that contracts could not be made to-day to duplicate this structure for the money it will have cost when completed.

In this connection it is proper that I should refer to the generous offer made by the city of St. Paul of their Market house for the use of the State pending the construction of the new capitol. Before the illumination caused by the burning of the old capitol had begun to fade, the city of St. Paul, through its authorities, tendered to Gov. Pillsbury the use of the Market house for the legislature and State officers, and nearly at the hour for its usual meeting, on the following day, the legislature was engaged in the routine of its regular order in the new quarters thus provided. The State has occupied the building since that time, a period of twenty-two months. It has been no inconsiderable sacrifice upon the part of the city and her citizens to be deprived of the facilities and conveniences this building was designed to afford them. Its use has been of very great public benefit. I submit that it would be but just for the State to compensate the city in a reasonable amount for the use she has made of the building; that it does not comport with the dignity of the State to remain in money values the beneficiary of any citizens or municipalities. This suggestion is wholly my own, no intimation having ever reached me that compensation was desired or would be accepted.

FINANCES.

The following statement made by the auditor's department exhibits the financial operations of the State treasury during the past two years:

RECEIPTS.

	1881.	1882.
Cash balance, Nov. 30, 1880	$264,151 99	....
Cash balance Nov. 30, 1881	....	$557,744 27
State taxes	504,660 80	402,610 08
Taxes from railroad, insurance and telegraph companies	362,294 73	509,383 43
Fees of insurance companies	6,534 00	6,333 00
Payments by counties for seed grain loans, 1877-'78	35,800 13	18,405 93
Board of United States convicts	736 75	494 25
County indebtedness to reform school	9,843 00	21,391 18
Interest on State deposits	12,531 65	8,417 23
United States 5 per cent on sales of public lands	3,115 98	49,561 43
Sale of grass on school lands	746 80	1,293 11
Sale of pine timber on State lands	26,633 47	80,174 68
Principal received at sales of school lands	27,026 46	20,718 65
Principal received on former sales of school lands	134,774 07	210,963 21
Interest paid on contracts of school lands	171,887 18	187,157 46
Principal received at sales of int. imp. lands	21,861 00	8,810 74
Interest received at former sales of int. imp. lands	9,440 63	23,377 39
Interest paid on contracts of int. imp. lands	30,147 27	32,832 78
Principal recived sales of ag. col. & un. lands	6,280 68	484 36
Principal received former sales of ag. col. & un. lands	10,703 19	12,027 56
Interest paid on contracts of ag. col. & un. lands	20,213 89	20,326 60
Interest paid on pine stumpage account	438 68	2,833 17
Interest paid on permanent school fund bonds	103,898 33	81,225 10
Interest paid on permanent university fund bonds	9,355 00	9,473 06
Interest paid on int. imp. land fund bonds	9,500 00	4,010 00
Redemption of Minnesota bonds, 1873-8	100,000 00	104,000 00
Redemption of United States bonds, 6's gold	10,000 00	....
Redemption of Missouri bonds 6s	....	21,000 00
Payment by counties for school text books	13,847 92	12,066 [illegible]
Insurance on State library	10,200 00	....
Sale of United States 4 per cent bonds, $339,000	....	395,517 60
Sale of United States 6 per cent bonds, $212,000	....	272,192 00
Sale of Missouri 6 per cent bonds....$123,000	....	135,594 50
Miscellaneous	3,350 94	2,093 86
Totals	$1,979,558 06	$3,201,416 79

DISBURSEMENTS.

	1881.	1882.
Legislative expense, regular session	$78,206 03	$18 00
Legislative expenses, extra session	46,132 35	....
Senate court of impeachment	....	28,867 65
Executive	63,545 74	59,980 19
Judicial	69,796 86	79,502 47
Support of insane hospitals, prison, reform school, deaf, dumb, blind and imbeciles, and normal schools	308,463 47	312,413 00
Support of university	47,000 00	43,881 41
Public buildings	174,617 24	331,983 53
Public printing and stationery	33,989 79	23,208 34
Printing laws in newspapers	32,044 60	1,305 40
Interest on State debt, loans '73 and '78	10,485 65	11,706 15
Interest on State debt, R. R. ad'g State bonds	....	88,066 45
Apportioned school funds	259,414 96	259,097 69
Purchase of bonds for invested funds, including premiums, etc	79,872 65	1,896,005 00
Agricultural and horticultural societies	3,076 94	4,152 78
Historical society	3,069 08	3,391 93
State boards of health, equalization, immigration, Farmers' board of trade	9,060 77	6,851 54
Training schools and institutions	2,765 00	3,235 00
Fish commissioners	3,700 00	4,600 00
Selling State lands	5,897 86	3,291 00
School text books	13,617 94	11,420 23
Redemption of State bonds of '73 and '78	100,000 00	104,000 00
Miscellaneous	80,147 13	71,429 25
	$1,421,812 79	$3,058,317 21
Balances in treasury Nov. 30	$557,774 27	$143,098 53

To the credit of the following funds:

	Nov. 30, 1881.	Nov. 30, 1882.
State institutions	$32,745 37	$20,246 91
Interest	6,230 58	6,818 17
Sinking	16,050 79	582 21
Seed grain sinking	6,291 92	800 85
Permanent school	317,091 98	104,172 54
General school	30,010 05	18,557 27
Permanent university	48,232 17	16,003 11
General university	31,701 01	12,499 95
Internal improvement	4,865 49	10,653 65
Internal improvm't land	93,539 71	65,910 32
School text book	1,217 65	1,863 82
Forestry	....	25,686 10
Swamp land	....	2,013 68
Totals	$636,086 63	$285,908 94
Deduct revenue fund, overdraft	78,342 36	142,810 36
Cash in treasury	$557,744 27	$143,098 58

This statement, in its general aspect, though indicating a healthy condition of the treasury—there being an apparent credit balance of $143,098.53 at the end of the last fiscal year—is misleading in some of its details. While there is the amount in the treasury as stated, the revenue fund, from which must be paid all legislative, executive, judicial and other general expenses, is overdrawn to the amount of $142,810.36. This overdraft is carried largely by the trust funds of the State, which otherwise would have a considerable available surplus for permanent investment. The limit to which such overdrafts is allowed by law is $150,000. It therefore appears that there is practically no money in the treasury available to pay the expenses of your body or other departments of the State government. It is true you can authorize a still further overdraft, but this manner of relieving the revenue fund is not in accord with such principles of finance as should govern the management of the treasury. As a temporary expedient to meet an exigency that could not be foreseen, it is perhaps permissible, but as a practice it is wrong. The large overdraft now existing is caused by several extraordinary expenditures, such as the extra session of 1881, the Cox impeachment trial, rebuilding the capitol, interest on the railroad adjustment bonds, etc., for which no account was taken in the tax levy the past year. While the legislature of 1881 made appropriations for all these accounts, it did not make provision to increase the revenue to meet them.

The actual receipt from taxes and other sources that provide the revenue fund, have exceeded the estimated receipts the past two years $346,650.06, but the actual expenditures, have exceeded the estimates $764,314.46, during the same time, as appears in detail in the following statement:

Estimated and actual receipts and disbursements in 1881 and 1882 for expenses of the State government and support of State institutions:

1881—RECEIPTS.

	Estimated.	Actual.
State taxes	$398,000	$411,618 61
Railroad and telegraph companies	290,000	330,626 50
Transfer from Imbecile Asylum fund	......	74 41
Miscellaneous sources	55,000	70,643 05
Balance in treasury Nov. 30, 1880	138,000	138,927 81
	$881,000	$951,788 51

DISBURSEMENTS.

	Estimated.	Actual.
Legislature	$100,000	$119,338 38
Legislature, regular session	......	73,206 03
Legislature, extra session	......	46,132 35
Executive	55,000	63,545 74
Judicial	50,000	69,796 46
Printing	25,000	33,989 79
Miscellaneous and overdrafts	58,000	143,664 38
Support of institutions	280,000	300,465 47
Buildings and repairs	100,000	174,617 26
Interest on State bonds	13,000	19,485 65
Totals	$679,000	$924,953 91
Surplus	$202,000	$26,836 60
Transfer to sinking fund		$16,201 01
Surplus available for 1882		10,364 52

1882—RECEIPTS.

	Estimated.	Actual.
State tax	$150,000	$311,205 18
Railroad companies	325,000	470,556 63
Miscellaneous	63,000	107,719 83
Surplus	202,000	10,634 59
Overdraft less balances	......	115,745 29
Totals	$740,000	$1,015,861 55

DISBURSEMENTS.

	Estimated.	Actual.
Impeachment court	......	$28,885 65
Executive	$55,000	59,980 19
Judicial	50,000	79,502 47
Printing	15,000	24,208 34
Miscellaneous	56,000	70,035 82
Support of institutions	314,000	312,413 00
Interest on State bonds	7,000	11,706 15
Interest on State bonds, railroad adjustment	......	88,066 45
Building, State	......	331,983 50
Totals	$497,000	$1,015,861 55

This statement shows the actual disbursements the past year, for which appropriations were made in 1881, to have exceeded the estimated disbursement more than 100 per cent.

The estimated receipts and disbursements for 1883 and 1884 are as follows:

REVENUE FUND.

RECEIPTS—1883.

State taxes	$315,000 00
Insurance companies' taxes and fees	47,500 00
Counties for inmates of reform school	16,000 00
Prison rent and labor	10,000 00
Interest on deposits	10,000 00
United States convicts and miscellaneous	1,500 00	$400,000 00

EXPENDITURES—1883.

Overdraft Nov. 30, 1882	$142,810 36
University buildings, grounds and furniture on books	82,000 00
Capitol repairs and furnishing on books	5,716 63
Prison wall, etc., on books	10,390 99
Executive estimate	65,000 00
Judicial estimate	84,000 00
Capitol building deficiency	120,000 00
Capitol furnishing	25,000 00
Court of impeachment deficiency	14,000 00
Legislative expenses	80,000 00
Printing	35,000 00
Printing laws in newspapers	20,000 00
Miscellaneous	85,000 00	$768,925 88
Estimated excess of expenditures		$368,925 88

RECEIPTS—1884.

State taxes	$320,000 00
Insurance companies' taxes and fees	50,000 00
Counties' inmates of reform school	17,000 00
Prison rent and labor	15,000 00
Interest on deposits	10,000 00
Miscellaneous	[illegible]	$444,000 00

EXPENDITURES—1884.

Executive	[illegible]
Judicial	[illegible]
Printing	[illegible]
Miscellaneous	[illegible]	$256,600 00
Surplus		$187,400 00

STATE INSTITUTIONS FUND.

RECEIPTS—1883.

Railroad companies' taxes	$500,000 00
Telegraph companies' taxes	5,000 00	$505,000 00

EXPENDITURES.

Support of First insane hospital	$131,625 00
Support of Second insane hospital	62,400 00
Support of deaf, dumb, blind and imbecile institute	60,000 00
Support of prison	60,000 00
Support of reform school, and deficiency	42,501 05
Support of normal schools	38,000 00
Support historical society	4,000 00
*Interest on Minnesota 4½ per cent R. R. adjustment bonds	59,760 00	$448,286 05
Surplus		$56,723 95

RECEIPTS—1884.

Railroad companies' taxes	$550,000 00
Telegraph companies' taxes	5,000 00	$555,000 00

EXPENDITURES.

Support of First insane hospital	$141,375 00
Support of Second insane hospital	72,800 00
Support of deaf, dumb, blind and imbecile institute	60,000 00
Support of prison	65,000 00
Support of reform school	35,000 00
Support of normal schools	38,000 00
Support historical society	4,000 00
*Interest on Minnesota 4½ per cent R. R. adjustment bonds	84,580 00	$500,755 00
Surplus		54,245 00

*Interest on these bonds not included in these estimates will be paid from funds provided by Chap. 71 Gen. Laws, Ex. Sess. 1881.

From the above showing there appears an estimated deficiency in the revenue fund, including the present overdraft of $368,915.99 in 1883, and an estimated surplus of $187,500 of the same fund in 1884. The present and prospective deficiency in the revenue fund should engage your early attention. A further overdraft, except for momentary relief, ought not to be considered; an increase in the tax levy would bring no relief until another year.

The only resource left is a temporary loan. An issue of bonds at a low rate of interest to such an amount within the constitutional limit as may seem to be required after a thorough examination, redeemable at the pleasure of the State after one year from their issue, could be taken by the trust funds which have carried this overdraft for so long a time. The entire issue could probably be redeemed within three years, from the surplus revenue, without increasing the tax levy to any considerable extent.

The auditor in the above estimates of receipts and disbursements has not included any part of the amounts asked for by the State institutions for additional buildings, enlargements or repairs.

The increase in the permanent trust funds of the State during the bi-ennial period just closed have been as follows:

	1881.	1882.
Permanent school fund	$406,262 54	$516,335 93
Permanent university fund	33,274 25	68,303 37
Internal improvement land fund	183,350 91	206,781 59
	$622,887 70	$791,6[illegible]

The present standing of these funds is clearly shown by the following statement:

PERMANENT SCHOOL FUND.

$299,000 United States 6 per cent currency	$335,410 05
$25,000 Minnesota 7 per cent currency, loan of 1873	25,000 00
$61,000 Minnesota 6 per cent currency, loan of 1878	61,000 00
$1,033,000 Minnesota 4½ per cent Railroad Adjustment	1,033,000 00
$868,000 Missouri 6 per cent currency	875,416 93
Land contracts bearing 7 per cent	2,898,769 49
Cash	104,172 54
Unpaid drafts	69,557 23
Total	$5,372,326 23

PERMANENT UNIVERSITY FUND.

$241,000 Minnesota 4½ per cent Railroad Adjustment	$241,000 00
Land contracts bearing 7 per cent	354,374 62
Unpaid drafts	3,937 83
Cash	16,003 11
Experimental farm	8,500 00
Fruit farm	1,309 10
Total	$625,124 66

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENT LAND FUND.

$322,000 Minnesota 4½ per cent Railroad Adjustment	$322,000 00
Land contracts bearing 7 per cent	703,518 80
Unpaid drafts	19,647 66
Cash	65,910 32
Total	$1,111,076 78

Of the 3,000,000 acres which it is estimated will eventually inure to the State for the use of schools there have been sold 700,801.23 acres. There are unsold 601,638.47 acres, appraised at $3,316,020, and about 1,600,000 not yet appraised, situated mostly in the northern part of the State. The constitution now devotes to the common school fund one-half the proceeds of the sale of swamp lands of the State. The selections approved as swamp or overflowed lands in the surveys up to 1880 amounted to 4,000,000 acres. In the unsurveyed area there should be, perhaps, 2,000,000 acres. The State land commissioner computes the total of all State land grants at 3,400,000 acres, but, according to the claim of the grantees, the amount is 5,000,000. It is believed the State will eventually realize an amount equal to $5 an acre for all the school lands yet unsold, which will swell the permanent school fund to over $16,000,000, and it is not unlikely that the swamp land reversion may raise that magnificent sum to $18,000,000, or even $20,000,000.

Of the 169,853.32 acres covered by the University and Agricultural College grants, there have been sold 97,007.32 acres, leaving 72,346 acres yet to be disposed of. These are largely agricultural lands, and are valued at an average of $6 per acre. The permanent university fund is therefore expected to finally realize from this source the sum of $1,059,200.66.

The Internal Improvement Land fund will probably reach fully $3,000,000, when the remainder of the land belonging thereto is disposed of. There have been sold 157,095.78 acres, and 311,259.46 additional acres have been appraised at $1,649,656.65, leaving 31,331.27 acres yet to be appraised.

The proposition submitted at the general election "for the application of the moneys of the internal improvement land fund to the payment of the principal and interest of the Minnesota state railroad adjustable bonds" having been approved by the people, as shown by the canvass of the votes recently made, there is now provided a sinking fund sufficient to redeem, when due, much the larger portion of the indebtedness resulting from the adjustment of the "Minnesota State railroad bonds," and the income therefrom, when the lands are all sold, will also provide for the payment of a corresponding proportion of interest accruing upon such indebtedness.

Under the terms of the act approved Nov. 4, 1881, "providing for the adjustment of certain alleged claims against the State," there have been redeemed 2,232 of the Minnesota State railroad bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each, and other claims adjusted to the amount as allowed of $53,088.66. The adjustment of these bonds and claims, according to the terms of the act, has required the issue of $4,253,000 of the 4½ per cent bonds, and there are claims to the amount of $4,250.84 yet to be provided for by a further issue to that amount.

The original issue of Minnesota State railroad bonds was $2,275,000. The State acquired possession of $15,000 of these bonds some years ago. There have been redeemed as above stated $2,232,000, which leaves but $28,000 now outstanding.

The recognized indebtedness of the State is now represented by the following obligations:

Loan of 1873 for building purposes, 7s	$25,000 00
Loan of 1878 for seed grain distribution, 6s	61,000 00
Railroad adjustment bonds, 4½s	4,253,000 00
Railroad adjustment claims	4,250 84
	$4,343,250 84

The loan of 1873 is redeemable the present year, and that of 1878 will be redeemed with receipts from counties for loans made in 1877 and 1878 for the purchase and distribution of seed grain.

The taxable property within the State has increased from $258,055,543 in 1880, to $311,200,841 in 1882.

Taxes for the past two years were levied as follows:

	1881.	1882.
State tax	$379,689 25	$741,686 94
Seed grain taxes (individual)	58,616 59	12,009 18
General school—1 mill	270,737 84	310,116 37
Special school	1,190,066 36	1,381,361 78
County revenue	875,640 32	1,009,465 48
County interest	99,881 46	100,741 83
County poor	140,116 77	153,641 07
County special purposes	91,039 78	164,101 05
City taxes	807,393 76	1,135,261 27
Township taxes	297,019 78	340,785 06
Delinquent road	146,420 64	165,266 60
Interest on town bonds	72,624 62	120,790 79
Special city and town	271,505 40	526,122 44
Total taxes for all purposes	$4,608,771 57	$5,725,359 41
Average rate for all purposes	17.3 mills	18.4 mills

A change in the fiscal year is suggested by the state auditor and other officers. A habit that has grown up in some of our institutions of receiving and disbursing money in December as of November, leads to a delay of their reports for two or three weeks, which might be avoided. But I think it desirable, now that the legislature meets biennially, that the full reports of State institutions and officers should be furnished in print for the deliberate consideration of the members elect, much earlier [illegible] existing law. [illegible] should also [illegible] amended [illegible] made and [illegible] except that [illegible] be made annual appropriations be hereafter made for fiscal, instead of calendar years, your own provision in that regard to close with the fiscal year ending in 1885.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

The various charitable, reformatory and penal institutions of the State present a satisfactory record as regards their management and the results accomplished. An unmistakable evidence of the rapid increase of our population is the fact that nearly all these institutions have already reached the limit of their capacity, and are asking at your hands appropriations for additions and enlargements.

STATE PRISON.

The inspectors of the State prison submit a voluminous report, which exhibits in much detail the affairs of this institution. The management of the prison is highly commended and the record of its inmates as to conduct and condition is represented as very satisfactory. The total population at this time is 279, an increase of twenty-five during the past two years. The current expenses for 1881 were $40,964.56, and for 1882 $54,972.65.

The earnings were $20,277.04 and $30,052.78 for 1881 and 1882 respectively, most of which was credited to apply on purchase of machinery under the award of 1881. The warden estimates the expenses for 1883 to be $60,000 and for 1884 $65,000, and the earnings $33,000 and $35,000 for the same time.

There has been expended during the past year $36,912.55 in construction of additional wall, for which an appropriation of $40,000 was made in 1881, also liabilities incurred for paving streets within the enclosure, $3,700, painting roof $560, and premium for insurance $900, for which there was no appropriation, and which is presented in the form of a deficiency. The inspectors recommend a further appropriation of $25,000 to complete the wall, and $30,000 for the construction of 100 additional cells. There are but twenty vacant cells in the prison, most of which will soon be occupied. The additional cell room should be provided, and I therefore approve the recommendation of the inspectors in this respect. The completion of the wall would add greatly to the security of the prison, which, as the population increases, becomes more of a necessity. The expenditure might be made to cover a period of two or more years, and thereby relieve the treasury to that extent. A committee of your body by personal examination can best decide as to the urgency of this matter.

The prison enclosure will afford ample room for 500 or 600 cells, about double the present capacity. It will doubtless prove economy to the State to concentrate the population of this class in one institution, where the cost of management will but slightly increase with its growth, until its full capacity is reached. According to the inspector's estimate, the prison can be made to meet all requirements for ten years to come by increasing its cell capacity to the limit allowed by the enclosure, and without any increase of shop room or machinery, the labor of the convicts can be fully employed. Some of the gravest objections to the location of the prison are now overcome, though at large cost to the State. It would seem to be the part of wisdom now to make complete as possible the present institution, when it is confidently believed it will be placed on a self-sustaining basis.

REFORM SCHOOL.

The report of the board of managers of the Reform school shows a gratifying record for the past two years. The commitments to this institution since its establishment in 1868 have been 573; of this number 225 have been in connection with it during the past two years, and 123 are inmates at the present time. I ask your careful consideration of the reasons urged by the managers for a change in the law regulating commitments, especially that feature which provides for the maintenance by each county of the youth they respectively send to the institution. The reasons that may have existed in the early history of the school for this discrimination in the maintenance of its inmates have lost much of their force by the general development of all portions of the State. Without repeating here the argument most forcibly presented by the report for the change referred to, I concur with the managers in their conclusions that the usefulness and efficiency of the school would be greatly augmented by placing it upon the same footing in this respect as the other State institutions. The engine house connected with the manufactory of the school with its contents and attachments was destroyed by fire last July. The property has been restored in a much improved form, at a cost of $5,731.79. The expenditures, current fund, were for 1881 $30,101.64, and for 1882 $31,550.81. Appropriations are asked as follows:

Current expenses, 1883	$35,000 00
Current expenses, 1884	35,000 00
Deficiency for 1882, caused principally by destruction of engine house, etc.	7,501 05
Repairs and improvements, 1883-4	4,000 00
Insurance	2,000 00

INSTITUTES FOR THE DEAF, DUMB AND THE BLIND, AND SCHOOL FOR IDIOTS AND IMBECILES.

The directors of the institute for the deaf, dumb and the blind, and the school for idiots and imbeciles, report "that the several schools under their care have, during the past two years, given exceptional satisfaction."

In May, 1881, there was organized a separate department for the education of the blind, which was placed in the charge of Prof. J. J. Dow, as superintendent, who has been connected with the institute as teacher of the blind since 1875. This change in the system of its management has proven advantageous to the institute in many repects. The deaf and dumb department continues in charge of Prof. J. L. Noyes, who has established an enduring record of great efficiency in his work, during the many years he has labored in behalf of this institution.

The Imbecile school occupied its new building last February, and has since prosecuted its proper work more successfully, under the superintendence of Dr. George H. Knight. There is ample room in the building occupied by the deaf and dumb for the requirements of this class for several years to come, but the schools for the blind and the imbecile are already overcrowded. The directors ask an appropriation of $60,000 to erect and furnish additional space for these two departments. The statement which appears in the report, that there are now in the State eighty-four blind persons under twenty-five years of age who have never attended school, and fifty-nine applicants for admission to the imbecile school now waiting who cannot be accommodated, is, of itself, an argument in favor of increasing the capacity of these schools, that does not need to be enlarged upon. I therefore recommend a sufficient appropriation for the purposes stated.

There are now 125 pupils in the deaf and dumb department; 34 in the blind, and 41 in the imbecile. There are 233 uneducated deaf mutes in the State who have not yet received the advantages offered by this school.

The disbursements of the board for current expenses were $44,278.98 in 1881, and $49,807.23 in 1882. Appropriations are asked of $50,000 for 1883, and $60,000 for 1884 for the same account.

The directors conclude their report with the significant statement that, "Adhering to what we regard as the strictest economy compatible with success, we follow the unbroken tradition of the past and report an unexpended balance in the treasury."

HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

That portion of the first hospital for the insane at St. Peter destroyed by fire in 1880 has been restored, and is now in use. The east wing of the second hospital at Rochester, the construction of which was provided for in 1881, will be ready for occupancy in part by Feb. 1 prox., and wholly completed early the present year. The capacity of the permanent buildings at St. Peter is sufficient for the proper care of 550 patients, and those at Rochester for 350, a total of 900. There are now connected with the two hospitals 873 patients—635 at St. Peter, and 238 at Rochester—a large number attached to the former institution still occupying the temporary buildings that have been in use for several years.

The problem of providing for the future wants of this class of unfortunates is one that will engage your serious attention, and any possible solution of it must involve expenditures to a large amount. For many years past there has been an annual average increase of about seventy in the insane population of the State. The increase in the future, the same conditions prevailing, must be somewhat larger. Provision already made is barely sufficient for another year, hence it is imperative that measures should be inaugurated at this session of the legislature to add to the capacity of the State to care for these people.

With a view of determining the practicability of relieving the hospitals of the care of any inmates of whose sanity there was reason to doubt, or incurables who might be cared for elsewhere, I requested the commissioners appointed under the law for inspection of hospitals to visit them last August for a thorough examination in this respect. Their report was adverse to any discharges being made. Subsequently I held a conference with the trustees and superintendents of the hospitals and the members of the commission, at which the subject of the care of these people and their future requirements was thoroughly discussed. As a result of this conference and of other investigation personally made, I am impressed with the belief that the provision the State must make for some years to come can be most economically effected by the construction of another wing to the hospital at Rochester corresponding to the one now approaching completion, and the erection of additional wards to either hospital, from time to time as more room is demanded. These wards can be added at less than one-third the cost per capita, according to capacity, that the present elaborate structures have involved; and the maintenance of the additional patients thus provided for will call for a much less proportional expenditure than would be required in another hospital established in a new location.

The trustees, in their report, give expression to this judgment by the recommendation of the addition to the hospital at St. Peter, of a ward to accommodate fifty patients, for which they ask an appropriation of $25,000, to be expended the present year, and also the erection of another wing to the institution at Rochester, to cost, with furniture, $83,000, to be commenced in 1884. These estimates of the trustees as also those for the purchase of additional land at each hospital for the purpose of providing employment for the patients, I recommend to your favorable consideration.

The officers of the two hospitals submit full information relative to their management during the bi-ennial period just closed, from which it appears that care and efficiency still characterize the conduct of the affairs of these institutions.

The trustees report expenditures for the past two years as follows:

	First hospital.	Second hospital.
Building and furnishing	$134,723 18	$123,933 28
Current expenses, 1881	105,433 24	35,834 29
Current expenses, 1882	113,160 77	46,363 61

The estimated current for the next two years are:

	First hospital.	Second hospital.
1883	$131,625 00	$62,400 00
1884	141,375 00	72,800 00

Further appropriations are asked for as follows:

	First hospital.	Second hospital.
For additional heating and repairs	$18,000 00	....
For detached ward	25,000 00	....
For purchase of land, outhouses, water supply	8,400 00	$10,000 00
For lighting and repairs	....	21,000 00
For new wing with furniture	....	83,000 00

The average weekly cost of maintenance per capita was $3.76 and $3.82 for 1881 and 1882 respectively at St. Peter, and $4 and $4.[illegible] at Rochester.

The cash value of farm products are given at $27,984.56 at St. Peter, and $9,712.50 at Rochester, for the two years.

In August last I designated a number of citizens of the State, distinguished for their acquaintance with, and interest heretofore manifested in the subject of public charities and reforms, to represent the State at the national conference of charities and corrections, held in Madison, Wis. They discharged the trust with which they were delegated with great credit to themselves and the State. I invite your attention to their report which will be submitted to you.

Among those best informed in regard to the charitable and correctional institutions of the several States, the opinion apparently prevails that there should be in every State a board of State charities by which general information and thorough inspection can be had of all charitable and correctional work. These boards have been established in nine States, the most noted for their excellent charitable and penal institutions, and others are now considering the question of adopting this system. These boards, acquainting themselves with the institutions of their several States, and their necessities, become the medium of communicating to the legislature whatever relates to their management and their possible improvement. The local boards of trustees of the various institutions are not superceded; with them rest the same responsibilities and duties as before, but in the discharge thereof they are aided by such advisory supervision. The system in various States differs in some particulars, being advisory in some and administrative in others. The weight of opinion now inclines to favor making these boards advisory rather than executive, and that their purpose should be to keep the public and the legislature fully advised of the condition and needs of the institutions subject to their supervision.

These boards are found to be most effective when they serve without compensation, their expenses simply being met by the State. [illegible] board, if selected with proper care, being non-political and composed of men of acknowledged ability and information, who would render service from their interest in public [illegible] atory and penal institutions would, [illegible] study of the charitable systems and institutions elsewhere, soon become an authority as to what is best and most necessary for their own State. They would inform themselves as to the condition and management of county almshouses, jails, reformatories, etc., and become not only fit to inspect, criticise and supervise the management of such institutions, but competent to advise [illegible] what may be necessary in securing their [illegible].

EDUCATION.

The continued development of the educational interests of the State has been commensurate with its growth in other respects. The report of the superintendent of public instruction is replete with valuable instructions looking to the perfection of our system of education which is already the pride of every citizen. Though the superintendent's criticism of some features of the management of our common schools under existing laws and practices, would indicate there is yet room for improvement in directions suggested, yet the facts established by the statistical exhibits and other information furnished by his report, are an assurance that our system is gradually but surely attaining that degree of perfection which was the hope of its founders and which will prove the crowning glory of the commonwealth.

There has been an increase in the enrollment in our public schools during the past two years of 22,638, the total being 196,238 in 1882 as against 173,600 in 1880. There have been erected 567 school buildings at a cost of $759,022. The total number of school houses now in use is given at 4,260, valued at $3,947,857. There has been secured $3,766,665.79 and expended $3,644,860.49 on account of our public schools during the past two years. The magnificent permanent school fund of the State, which it is estimated will amount to $18,000,000 when the lands are all sold, will constitute an endowment that will place our system of popular education upon a most enduring basis. The various recommendations of the superintendent will command your attention and need not be recapitulated here. I especially concur, however, in the recommendation that the position of county superintendent be no longer a political office.

The three normal schools are now demonstrating their value and efficiency as an adjunct of our educational system. The State is realizing upon its investment in these institutions in a manner that promises ample returns for their cost and care. The influence of the well-trained teachers supplied by these schools is apparent in the improved methods of instruction in our common schools and in the more elevated standard of the profession that has prevailed the past few years.

The enrollment at these schools has been as follows:

	1881.	1882.
Winona	445	439
Mankato	237	336
St. Cloud	257	254
Total	939	1,028

The current expense account show disbursements to have been:

	1881.	1882.
At Winona	$15,873 37	$17,007 98
At Mankato	14,004 29	14,051 47
At St. Cloud	15,071 43	14,442 38
Total	$45,859 60	$46,051 83

The report of the normal board accounts for $6,950 expended for permanent improvements the past year, and recommends alterations and enlargements of the buildings at Mankato and St. Cloud, the necessity for which is represented to be most urgent.

The schools have graduated 120 teachers the past two years and 879 since their establishment.

Under the act for the encouragement of higher education, aid has been extended the last year to thirty-eight schools throughout the State. The commission constituting the high school board, have sought by much effort to encourage and enlarge the work designed for these schools to accomplish, and they feel much gratification at the result already attained. It is expected that these schools in time will contribute liberally from the students they may graduate, to swell the classes of the University.

The report of the board of regents will acquaint you with the affairs of the university. The regents express satisfaction with the work the university is doing and the progress it has made during the past two years in establishing itself upon a basis of recognized rank and usefulness.

Additions have been made to the campus of the university, and the grounds greatly improved by the enlarged limits to which they have thus been extended. Plans have been adopted for the erection of the new buildings long in contemplation and for which appropriations were made in 1881. It is the design of the board that the buildings for the gymnasium, museum, library, observatory and department of engineering shall be pushed to completion as rapidly as practicable.

Under the authority of the act of 1881 the regents have made an advantageous arrangement by which the experimental farm purchased some years ago is being disposed of and the proceeds invested in another farm in a much more desirable location for the purpose. The operation will show a handsome balance after the new farm is fully paid for and equipped.

PUBLIC EXAMINER.

The report of the public examiner contains many suggestions and recommendations which should receive your consideration.

From his examination of the State institutions it has been made to appear that much carelessness and neglect has prevailed in the past, relative to the official bonds of the treasurers or disbursing officers of some of the institutions and their boards of control. This state of things, induced somewhat by defects in the law, might have resulted in much public loss but for our good fortune in having these positions filled by men of integrity and responsibility. The defects referred to should be remedied without delay, and the provisions of the statute upon the subject of official bonds be made definite and mandatory in all cases.

The exhibit the examiner presents of the banking interests of the State is interesting and suggestive. The growth of this branch of our commercial interests is indicated by the following summary:

	1881.	1882.
Capital stock	$7,990,850	$9,331,209
Surplus fund	1,191,425	1,600,977
Deposits	20,109,435	22,810,306
Loans and discounts	22,910,609	27,147,348

These totals would be largely augmented if full reports could be obtained from the private banks, of which there are 116 doing business in the State. The examiner's suggestions relative to this class of banks are worthy of your consideration. The examiner gives the receipts and disbursements of the county treasurers of the State as follows:

	1881.	1882.
Receipts	$5,830,044 72	$6,080,405 50
Disbursements	5,474,457 37	6,267,593 65

"The total absence of checks upon county treasurers" is a subject upon which the examiner dwells with much earnestness, and his exposition of the defects in the existing system of conducting the business relating to county finances makes apparent a necessity for changes in the law. The remedy he proposes "that all receipts for money whether paid for taxes or for other purposes, should originate in the auditor's office," though involving some radical changes in existing statutes, is a proposition so evidently based on business principles that it appeals to the judgment at once. I ask your candid consideration of the concise statement of facts with which he illustrates this subject.

The present system of accounting, under the law, of the state auditor and treasurer is also seriously defective in some respects. A like absence of checks as in the case of county officers is revealed in the present method of keeping the accounts. Under the existing system funds to a large amount are paid to the treasurer, of which the auditor has no knowledge, and no means of check except as furnished by the treasurer himself. It also appears that the money is paid in considerable sums to the auditor, of which the treasurer has no knowledge until it is turned in to the treasury. A remedy for this state of things will readily suggest itself in the requirement that all claims of the State, of whatever character, shall be collected by the treasurer upon the auditor's draft.

BOARD OF HEALTH.

The state board of health has done effective work the past year in checking the spread of epidemic diseases and in the enforcement of sanitary regulations throughout the State. In my judgment this board should receive larger recognition and be clothed with more positive authority. Under the statutes the State board of health is entrusted with important duties, whose discharge involves the [illegible]

Continued on seventh page.

THE HON. WM. WINDOM.

The question, one of vast importance to the people of this great commonwealth, "who shall succeed the Hon. Wm. Windom in the U. S. Senate?" is before our Legislature. Our answer is found in the heading to this article. Were the question to come before the people to-day on a direct vote the Hon. Wm. Windom would be his own successor by an overwhelming majority because the people know him to be an honest, upright, earnest man who has ever represented the interests of this great commonwealth to the very best of his ability and that that ability is of no mean order is duly attested by the many positions of great importance he has been called upon to fill during his public career. It is true that there has been some small opposition to him but what public man does not find that at every turn? And from whom comes this opposition? Search closely and you will always find a man with an axe to grind at the bottom of it. You will find grave charges preferred, sift them and you will find nothing in them. You will find some man with a very dull axe to grind industriously recommending some man as a substitute to Windom. Who do they propose to substitute, [illegible]? They do not offer us a soli[illegible] an who is smarter or better fitted [illegible] duties of the high office that Mr. Windom is and WHY they want to kill Mr. Windom off is simply because he is a bar to their private ambition. He stands in their way as a tower of strength which they must overthrow in order to [illegible] their own selfish ambitions. If [illegible] accomplish that purpose how will that benefit the people? Will the people of this State tamely submit to see a valuable and trusted public servent slaughtered simply to further the interests of a few unprincipled demagogues? A certain newspaper in this State—that should be a very influential one, has taken occassion to publish some of the very vilest and most absurd charges against Mr. Windom, but we have searched its columns in vain for one iota of PROOF to sustain those charges. It does seem incredible that with such a Judus Iscariot (as that sheet trys to make out of Mr. Windom) in the United States Senate that only one paper in our State has found it out and that one an obscure little daily in St. Paul. In order to back up its false position this paper prints a long list of papers, calls them "old and reliable" papers from all of which the said paper says it has "frequently made extracts" in opposition to Windom. In that list are to be found mushroom campaign papers that have served their purpose and died and we have even discovered one THAT WAS NEVER PRINTED in the town alleged and yet that brilliant genius who presides over the daily mud battery has "very often in the past few months made choice extracts" from a newspaper that never existed. This, then, is the nature and character of opposition to the Hon. Wm. Windom and all there is to it. Now we ask you, gentlemen of the Legislature, shall the wishes of the people be thwarted by any such disreputable means? Mr. Windom has the entire confidence of the people of this State, (as he well deserves,) they wish to return him. Will you lend yourselves to be the tools of designing men to defeat the wishes of the people? Will you endorse all this damnable treachery; all this underhanded scheming, swallow it all and make it your own work by slaughtering an honored and trusted public servant and putting in his place the servile tool of political demagogues? We do not believe you will. We have entirely too much faith in the integrity of the men whom we have selected to guard well our public interests to think for a moment that such palpable schemes as political intriguers, Windom's opponents, have hatched will be allowed to win. We know that if justice is done Wm. Windom will be his own successor.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AT THEIR ANNUAL JANUARY SESSION IN 1883.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, Jan. 2d, 1883.

At a regular session of the Board of County Commissioners at their office, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the above date, the following members being present: Knute Nelson, of the 1st district; E. A. Bradish, of the 2d district; M. R. Brown, of the 3d district; Arne A. Higdem, of the 5th district.

On motion, M. R. Brown, Esq. of the 3d district, was chosen chairman of the Board for the ensuing year by a unanimous vote of all the members present.

On motion the meeting was declared open and the following business transacted:

The bonds of the following county officers and the sureties thereon were duly approved, viz: Auditor, Sheriff, Register of Deeds, Probate Judge, Co. Attorney, Treasurer and Surveyor.

On motion the bond of T. Shapleigh was received and action deferred until Wednesday, Jan. 3d.

On motion the chairman and Auditor were authorized to purchase all books, stationery, and such other necessaries for all the county officers, and said officers are hereby requested to furnish a list of the probable needs of their offices respectively for six months.

On motion Thomas White, of Grand Forks, D. T., was authorized and empowered to exchange the county pile hammer for one of from 1,500 to 1,700 pounds in weight.

On motion the Board adjourned till Wednesday, Jan. 3d, at 9 o'clock a. m.

WEDNESDAY, January 3d.

Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members present.

On motion the bond of Clerk of District Court was approved.

The committee appointed by the Board at its session in December, to examine the repairs made on the bridge at Fisher's Landing asked until Thursday to make report, which was duly accorded them.

On motion the application of J. G. McGrew for abatement for personal property taxes, was laid on the table till Thursday.

On motion the petition of D. McLennan and others, of Angus, was rejected.

The resignation of Dr. M. Watts, Coroner, on being presented was accepted, said resignation to take effect as soon as his successor shall be appointed and qualified.

On motion Dr. Thomas was appointed Coroner.

R. J. Montigue, Probate Judge, asked permission of the Board to hold court in his present office on Main street in this city, which was granted, provided, however, that the probate office in the court house building shall be kept open during each term of the district court, and that all the books and papers of said office shall be [illegible] house during each general term of the district court in this county.

On motion Messrs. Wm. Watts and R. J. Montigue were appointed a committee to examine the books and papers of the probate office immediately and make report at this session of the Board.

On motion the following report of N. D. Carruth, supt. of schools, was accepted, viz:

To the Board of County Commissioners of Polk County.

GENTLEMEN: I beg leave to submit the following report for the year 1882:

No. of scholars entitled to apportionment at end of school year,	1,701
No. enrolled in winter schools,	1,067
summer	1,176
No. teachers employed,
Males, 10
Females, 35. Total	45
No. new schoolhouses built,	21
Value of school houses and sites,	$40,009
No. of school houses; frame 27, brick 2, log 7; total,	36
Value of school apparatus,	$1,005

I have visited all the schools in session to the end of school year and find them in good condition. Most of the new buildings that have been erected during the year have been well furnished with the modern style of school furniture, and are well supplied with globes, maps, reading charts and apparatus necessary to the successful prosecution of school work.

N. D. CARRUTH,
Jan. 2, 1883. Supt. of Schools.

On motion the Board adjourned till 2 o'clock p. m. Thursday.

Board met at 2 o'clock according to adjournment. All members present.

The committee on repairs of the Fisher bridge reported that the repairs contracted for by Mr. H. R. Nolan were completed and recommended an allowance of Mr. Nolan's claim. On motion the report was accepted and the committee discharged.

Com's Gervais, Nelson and Bradish presented a report as to the present condition of the Fisher bridge, which was duly filed.

On motion the chairman was authorized to advertise for bids for moving the said bridge to a point to be selected by the Board or a committee that may hereafter be appointed for that purpose. The Board reserving the right in all cases to reject any and all bids.

On motion the suggestion of Mr. Carl Kretzschmar (relative to furnishing sufficient protection to bridges) was received and the following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has come to our knowledge, and we have good reason to believe that certain bridges on Red Lake and Clearwater Rivers are in an unsafe condition, or at least will be in the early spring when the ice in these rivers breaks up, and

WHEREAS, We consider it a duty required by the taxpayers of this county of this Board that all needful and necessary protection be rendered to all the property of this county generally and to the various county bridges more particularly at present, therefore be it

Resolved, that the chairman of the Board shall advertise for bids for the performance and completion of such work and material as may hereafter be designated on the plans and specifications adopted by the Board, and such bids to be sealed and filed in the office of the county auditor on or before February 10th, next.

On motion H. R. Nolan was employed to draw plans for the needed protection on the bridges herein referred to.

On motion the petition of Louis Huot and others for a bridge across Red Lake River about 10 miles east of Crookston, was received and laid over till next meeting.

On motion the chair appointed Messrs. Higdem and Bradish as a committee to examine the plans and specifications furnished by Alexander Oldham, of Grand Forks, D. T., and under which a contract was awarded Thomas White for building a bridge across the Red Lake River at Sec. 2, T. 150, R. 5[illegible] and determine whether it would be necessary to adopt certain changes in the said plans and specifications, and if so, the probable cost, if any, of such changes: and also as to the advisability of changing the location of the said bridge to a more suitable point and the said committee were authorized to procure the assistance of H. R. Nolan in forming conclusions as to the proper course to pursue in the premises.

On motion the Board adjourned till Friday morning at 9 o'clock.

[The list of jurors will appear next week.]

On motion the chairman was authorized to advertise for bids for the purchase of certain pieces or parcels of prairie land not exceeding 160 acres and also for about 20 acres of good timber land to be used as a poor farm.

On motion the salary of Superintendent of schools was fixed at $1,000 per annum.

On motion the salary of the county attorney was fixed at $800 for the year 1882.

On motion the chairman was authorized to advertise for bids for county printing for the current year.

On motion the report of T. C. Shapleigh, clerk of court from Dec. 1st '82 to Dec. 31st '82 was accepted.

On motion the board adjourned till 2 o'clock p. m., at which time all members were again present and on motion the board proceeded to the county jail where they found everything in good condition, except the windows which needed some protection and the chairman was authorized to cause the necessary repairs on same forthwith.

On motion the chairman was authorized to cause the necessary repairs on the court house building as soon as practicable.

On motion the plan furnished by H. R. Nolan for repairs of Red Lake Falls county bridge was accepted and ordered filed together with accompanying specifications.

On motion the chair appointed Messrs. Gervais and Nelson a committee to examine the bridge built by C. Kretzschmar and others at Red Lake Falls.

On motion the chair appointed Messrs. Higdem, Bradish and Nelson as a committee to examine the location of a bridge across R. Cooley between Fisher and Roome two-thirds and make report at the next meeting of this board.

On motion the chair appointed Messrs. Higdem and Bradish a committee to examine a bridge formerly located at sec. 12, town 151, range 50, and present a report of same before July 12th next.

On motion the chair was instructed to advertise for bids for erecting a bridge across a morais at sec. 12, town 151, range 50.

On motion the board resolved to build a bridge across Sand Hill river at or near Aidal [illegible]

On motion the chair appointed Messrs. Gervais, Nelson and Nolan a committee to locate said bridge at Sand Hill and also to recommend to this board the most desirable style of bridge for the county to erect at that point.

On motion the chairman was authorized and directed to attend to the needs and wants of the following poor in this city [illegible] Chas Halvorson family, J. J. Azgerald, Eliza Jones and such others as may be in immediate need of relief and present report at next meeting. Said chairman was requested to inquire as to the probable number of paupers in this county and make report at the next meeting of the board.

On motion the chairman was instructed to advertis for bids from physicians for furnishing medicines and medical attendance (including surgery) for the poor of the 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th districts.

On motion the following resolution was unanimously adopted viz:

WHEREAS, we consider that it is for the best interest of the county that the floating indebtedness should be funded by an issue of bonds sufficient to redeem said orders.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we hereby request our representatives in the senate and house of representatives of this State to license legislation favorable therefor at this session of the legislature.

Resolution adopted, that in case such legislation be had, that it is the sense of this board to redeem the floating debt in bonds of $1000 denomination to be delivered to the holders of orders of a like amount provided that the holders of such orders or warrants shall present the same for redemption within a reasonable time to be hereafter designated by the board.

On motion the auditor was authorized to issue his warrants for $84.60 and $37.30 and $13 respectively in payment of freight on 1 car of coal and the last named warrant in payment of 1 ton of coal and the treasurer is authorized to redeem said warrant on presentation at his office.

On motion the annual reports of Sheriff Zarracher, and Register of Deeds Spendly were rejected on the grounds that said reports were not properly itemized.

On motion the petition of Sewall P. Norton was granted and the treasurer was instructed to destribute the town funds proportionately between Grove Park and Maple Lake townships.

On motion the petition of John Gulbrandson and others for school organization was granted and secs 19, 20, 21, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32 and 33 in township 148, range 44, was organized into a new school district to be known as district No. ——

On motion the petition of Rev. P. B. Champagne and others for poor aid towards Gregoire LeBlane was referred to commissioner Gervais.

On motion the petition of Robert Knowls and others asking that certain described territory be detached from school district No. 83 was received and a hearing set for Feb. 12th '83.

On motion the report of county treasurer was received and said treasurer ordered to use all due diligence towards collecting all delinquent personal property taxes, and present report at next meeting.

On motion the treasurer was ordered to proceed forthwith to collect delinquent personal tax of C. W. Waggoner of Fisher.

On motion the application of Thos. Jeffers for abatement of personal tax was laid over till next meeting.

On motion the board adjourned till Saturday at 9 a. m.

Board met pursuant to adjournment, all members present.

On motion the board proceeded to audit the accounts of the auditor and treasurer and found the same correct. Reporting the following as the condition of the treasury, viz:

Total cash on hand (for auditor's ledger)	$30,074.35
Itemized as follows:
In Merchants' Bank, of Crookston,	$20,411.09
In First National Bank,	9,54[illegible]
Cash in drawer	3.51
Pennies and nickles,	4.00
Wolf bounty orders,	10.00
Town and School,	105.10
	$30,074.35

On motion A. A. Higdem was authorized to superintend the erection of a county bridge in Grand Forks township contracted for by Thos. White Esq.

On motion the application of J. G. McGrew abatement of personal tax was laid over till next session.

On motion the bond of T. C. Shapleigh was approved.

On motion the claim of Howard Lancaster was laid over until next meeting.

On motion the chairman was authorized to advertise for bids for building a bridge across a creek between Fisher and Roome township.

On motion the following claims were audited and allowed as follows viz:

Names of claimant.	Descript'on of claim.	Amt of claim.	Allowed.
[illegible] L. Fuller,	witness fees jus. court	1 12	1 12
D. DeJode,	"	2 24	2 24
J. Berthiaume,	"	2 24	2 24
Frank Girard,	"	2 24
P. Longtin,	"	2 24
S. McKinney,	"	2 24
G. B. Vinory,	"	2 24
John Frazer,	"	2 24
D. Howard,	"	2 24
Chas. Human	Boarding prisoners at county jail,	115 [illegible]
Pioneer Press Co.	books and stationery for officers,	93 00
Ole M. Gmile,	wit. fees, jus. court,	1 12
McDonald & White,	building a bridge in Grand Forks Tp.,	[illegible]
[illegible] Co.,	books for Auditor's office,	[illegible]
[illegible]	med at en p'upers,	[illegible]
J. Berthiaume,	wit and constable fees,	4 40
A. Gabonry,	med at at jail,	[illegible] 60
A. Dewey,	stationery furn'd in 1882,	[illegible] 75
Louis Racine,	18 meals for jurors and Sheriff,	3 25
Oscar Olmquist,	constable fees,	8 00
Leech & McManus	wood to paup'rs,	8 00
Dr. I. Lemeiux,	at on paupers,	50 00
W. L. Sargeant,	justice fees,	13 00
Ole H. Bang,	witness fees,	4 40
Abbott & Squires,	rent of house for paupers,	15 60
A. From,	wit fees, justice court,	1 12
H. R. Nolan,	Rep's on Fisher bridge	400 00
A. Beausette,	reg. births & deaths,	[illegible]
Wm. Dunn,	stationery for Co.,	[illegible]
Cowing Bros.,	hardware	[illegible]	[illegible]
O. H. Lucken,	postage stamps,	18 74	18 74
H. B. Whipple,	canvassing election returns,	6 00
E. Knudsen,	witness fees,	3 44
G. W. Lewis,	canvassing election returns,	6 00
T. C. Shapleigh,	clk court fees,	[illegible]
J. O. Terry,	team hire,	[illegible]
G. W. Lewis,	justice fees,	4 [illegible]
[illegible]		[illegible]
J. W. Lilly,	taking testimony,	5 75
G. W. Lewis,	"	7 55
Chas. A. Davis,	dray hire,	22 50	14 50
McKinnon Bros.,	work at jail,	12 00	8 00
Jerry & Collins,	team hire,	15 [illegible]	[illegible]

On motion the claims of Sheriff Zarracher and T. A. Harris were referred back for more full and complete details and the same being returned by the claimants without change (as required by law) were referred back without further action by the Board.

On motion the bill of [illegible], ex-probate judge was laid over till next meeting.

On motion the claims of Messrs. Gabonry and Dampier for $5.00 each for examination of insane man were referred to probate court.

On motion the claim of E. S. Gibbins for drawing plans for stairs was laid over till next meeting.

On motion the claim of A. Oldham was rejected.

On motion the claim of M. M. Van Gieson was rejected.

The Board mutually agreed to hold a special meeting February 13th, next, at 2 p. m.

A motion to adjourn was carried.

C. J. McCOLLUM,
Clerk County Board.

Peterson's Magazine for February is such a beautiful number, that many persons will think it even better than the January one. The principal steel-plate, "Going to School," is especially cunning; and "Two Little Pussies," printed on tint, is only less so. Then there are four colored designs in embroidery for D'Oyleys; and double-size colored steel fashion-plates; a beautifully illustrated story; and about fifty other embellishments. The "Professional Beauty," by Frank Lee Benedict, is continued, with increasing interest. But the most striking story in the number, one of the most striking we have read for a long while, is "The Snake Charmer." This, like all the other stories in "Peterson," is original and by an American author; a fact that can be said of hardly any other of the monthlies. The price of this magazine is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs, so that every lady can afford to subscribe to it; and certainly no lady, no family, ought to be without it. Its enormous circulation, in which, we believe, it excels all the other lady's books combined, can alone explain why so splendid a magazine can be furnished at so low a price. Now, by-the-by, is the very time to subscribe for the new year. Specimens are sent gratis to those wishing to subscribe, or to get up clubs; and especially handsome premiums are given for getting up clubs. Address, Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.

Songs and Ballads.

No more pleasing melodies can be found in any collection of music, than in "Popular Songs and Ballads" just issued from the press of the PATENT PUBLISHING CO., New York. Some of the melodies have already made the fortunes of more than one Minstrel and Jubilee troupe, and others are the favorites of our most popular concert singers. Of the 100 melodies which this book contains that are now having their run in concert and parlor, we mention, "Sweet Days Gone By," "Why did the Angels take Mamma away" "Let my name be kindly spoken," "Ring a dem Charmin' Bells," "Over the Garden Wall," &c.&c., Address the Publisher, 49 Barclay Street, New York, with the price, 25c, if you want this charming collection of music.

Notice.

To contractors and bridge builders Bids will be received for two weeks from the date of this notice: for driving seventy piles: forty on the Wild Rice River at the Twin Valley Mills in the town of Wild Rice and thirty to be driven on the Wild Rice in the town of McDonaldsville, for bridge piers.

Bids for the construction of a bridge (span 80 feet) across the Wild Rice at Twin Valley Mills, will also be received for the same length of time. Bids for bridge must be accompanied by plans and specifications. Further information given, by applying at the County Auditor's office or of either of the commissioners. The board reserves the right to accept any or reject all bids.

By orders of County Board of Commissioners of Norman County, Minnesota.

Dated at Ada, Jan. 10th 1883.
A. RENNING, County Auditor.

GOLDEN STAR

WHEAT

The Best Wheat in the Market!

Yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre and weighs 64 pounds per bushel.

Price $2.50 per Bushel.

Leave orders at Juve & Bergland's or Eiken Bros., where samples may be seen.

T. O. BERGLAND.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk. } ss. District Court, 11th Judicial District.

A. C. Cowing and W. H. Cowing, copartners under the firm name of Cowing Bros., Plaintiffs, vs. James G. McDonald, Defendant. } SUMMONS.

The State of Minnesota to the above named Defendant:

You are hereby summoned and required to answer the complaint of the Plaintiffs in the above entitled action, which is filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and to serve a copy of your answer to said complaint on the subscribers, at their office, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State within twenty days after the service of this summons upon you, exclusive of the day of such service; and if you fail to answer the said complaint within the time aforesaid, the Plaintiffs in this action will take judgment against you for the sum of one hundred and eight and twenty one hundredths dollars ($108 20-100) with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the 20th day of October A. D. 1882, together with the costs and disbursements herein.

Dated December 20th A. D. 1882.

[illegible] & STEPHENSON, Plaintiffs Attorney's, Crookston, Minn.

[36-42]

C. CHURCHILL,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,

Kalsomining and Paper Hanging,

contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors east of Methodist Church, Mainstreet.

THE PIONEER

HARNESS SHOP.

[illegible] RAUENBUEHLER, Proprietor.

Corner Oak and Third Sts., Crookston Minn.

Is ready for the Spring Trade with a full supply of Work and Light Harness, Single and Double, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Blankets, [illegible]

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.

PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.

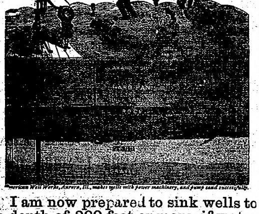
[illegible] STREET, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line [illegible]

NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spring stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respectfully,
C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.
Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!



Chapman's Patent Well.
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
GIVE US A REST!!
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
HARD PAN
QUICK SAND
ROCK

merican Well Works, Aurora, Ill., makes wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.

Address R. W. RANNEY,
Carman, Polk County, Minn.

CHICAGO

Dry Goods House

Main Street, Crookston, Minn.,

CONTAINS ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS OF

Dry Goods, Notions,

GENTS' AND LADIES'

FURNISHING GOODS,

Trunks and Valises,

Cloaks, Boots and Shoes, Clothing,

HATS AND CAPS,

Ever brought to this city. Our purpose is to sell goods as low as they can be bought in St. Paul. It will be for your interest to

CALL AND EXAMINE STOCK AND PRICES

BEFORE YOU PURCHASE.

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY

READY, FIRE!

WOOD

Is much better than kerosene and paper—cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to

LEECH & McMANUS,

OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

Wood Office and Yard on Elm Street, east of Planing Mill.

CLOSING OUT

SALE.

Our Immense Stock of

CLOTHING,
OVERCOATS,
UNDERWEAR,
CAPS,
Ladies' Cloaks,
Furs,

And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.

HACK & GALLASCHE,
Opposiet Merchants' Bank.

LIVERY, FEED,

AND

SALE STABLES

Two doors north of U. S. Land Office

Main St., Crookston, Minn.

T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.

Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.

For a stylish rig, by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

THE

RED LAKE FALLS

FLOURING

MILL

Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.

BUSE & COLBENTSON,

PROPRIETORS,

RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos

AND

Organs

W. W. KIMBALL CO.

Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. [29-17]

Crookston Nurseries.

Tree-Claim-Stock.

Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $5.00 per acre, also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.

HASELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT,

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all

CALL AND SEE ME

At my New Store on Main Street.

A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn.

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. B. KAUFER & SON

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

and are now prepared [illegible] you furnish everything in their line as cheaply [illegible] else can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere [illegible] teed in the New Northwest. Our work is guaranteed to be as good as any and our prices as reasonable. Call and see! H. KAUFER & SON.
Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Fournet & Herron,

DEALERS IN

FLOUR,
FEED,
CORN,
OATS,
POTATOES

Robert Street,
Crookston, [illegible]

DEFECTIVE PAGE

TIME TABLE

Of the Arrival and Departure of Mails at the Post Office at Crookston, Minn.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART
Grand Forks, Fisher,	10:30 a. m.	10:45 a. m.
South	7:30 a. m. 11:30 a. m.*	4:00 p. m.* 8:45 p. m.
North	7:30 a. m.	8:45 p. m.
Red Lake Falls, Gentilly,	2:30 p. m.†	9:00 a. m.‡

*Carries only mail to St. Paul, Minneapolis and beyond.
†Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
‡Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE
FOR CROOKSTON.

GOING NORTH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. Passenger,	9:55 p. m.	10:10 p. m.
" 5 "	10:30 a. m.	10:40 a. m.
" 11 freight.	4:30 p. m.	8:20 p. m.
" 13 "	7:20 p. m.	6:30 a. m.
" 17 "	5:45 p. m.

GOING SOUTH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 2 Passenger,	4:40 a. m.	4:40 p. m.
" 6 "	4:30 p. m.	11:15 a. m.
" 12 Freight,		5:55 p. m.
" 14 "	5:15 p. m.	2:05 a. m.
" 18 "	1:20 a. m.

GRAND FORKS BRANCH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 9 Mixed	10:00 a. m.	10:50 a. m.

No 1, daily except Sunday. No. 5 daily. No. 11 except Sunday. No. 13 except Monday. No. 17, daily.
No. 2 except Sunday. No. 6 daily No. 12 except Sunday. No. 14 daily. No. 18 except Sunday.
C. H. MIX, Agent.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

We call the especial attention of postmasters and subscribers to the following synopsis of the newspaper laws:

1 A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the laws) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and states the reason for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publishers for payment.

2 Any person who takes a paper from the post office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether a subscriber or not, is responsible for the pay.

3 If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and collect the whole amount, whether is be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

4 If the subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time and the publisher continues to send it, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post office. The law proceeds upon the ground that a man has to pay for what he uses.

5 The courts have decided the refusing to take a newspaper and periodical from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, as "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud. [37-40.]

We have received as many as a dozen orders for the weekly Pioneer Press during the past two weeks unaccompanied by the cash. While we should be pleased to fill those orders, we are unable to do so for the simple reason that an order to the Pioneer Press is n. g. without the almighty dollar. We do offer the weekly Press and the JOURNAL to our subscribers for the small sum of $2.50 per annum CASH IN ADVANCE. If any one poubts that let him put up his cash and see how quickly his order is honored. We also club with other papers but ONLY upon the same terms—SPOT CASH one year in advance. [36-4t]

Seventeenth Annual Convention of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association.

The Seventeenth Annual Convention of the Northwestern Dairymen's Association will be held in the city of Mankato, Minnesota, commencing Wednesday, February 14th, at 9 o'clock a. m., continuing with three sessions each day, until Friday, the 16th. The Annual Convention of this, the pioneer association of the Northwest, have always been attended by the representative dairymen and dairy writers and thinkers of the Northwest. Questions of the present, abounding in practical interest to all who desire to learn and improve in the practice of agriculture are handled and thoroughly discussed at these meetings. The citizens of Mankato have, with characteristic liberality, made ample arrangements for the comfort of all delegates and the success of the convention. The Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and the Chicago, Minneapolis & Omaha railways will return members of the convention at one-fifth fare. Topics relating to the manufacture of butter and cheese according to the latest and most improved methods, the management of cows and dairy farms, as well as the commercial side of the question will be presented and thoroughly discussed. It is the intention of the officers of the association to make this one of the most interesting meetings in the history of the organization. Dairymen are invited to bring samples of butter and cheese, and a special committee will be appointed to pass upon the same. Manufacturers of dairy implements are also invited to make an exhibition of their goods. Let there be a grand rally from the whole Northwest at this meeting. Further information may be obtained by addressing W. D. Hoard, President, [illegible] R. P. McGlincy, Secretary, Elgin, Ill.

In favor of farming it may be truly said that a greater proportion of those who begin by working on a farm rise to competence and moderate wealth, than in any other pursuit. Farm wages may [illegible] they usually [illegible] board, [illegible] dissipation [illegible]

Some lady ought to secure at once the agency for the book advertised in another column, "The care and Culture of Children." It is one of the books that no mother can afford to be without. It treats, in simple language, of the cause, symptons, and home treatment of every disease to which children are liable, and deals beside with their training up to mature manhood and womanhood. Like all books in "The Household Series," published by the same house, it is a practical and helpful boook. [87-89]

At the late fat stock show at Birmingham, England, the sweepstakes prize was won by a Hereford steer. Here is a brief descriptive item regarding the animal: "We have seen a greater mass of fat meat upon a Hereford, but never so perfect in form or with so firm a hand, considering the immense weight at the age of three years and eight months. Level, wide, wonderful in girth and rib, with a proportionate depth in flank and fullness of rounds and twist, this beast is also a fine type of Hereford, and is gay in his carriage as if he did not scale 21 cwt. 1 qr. 14 lbs. live weight."—[Farmer's Review.

See advertisement of Dr. Sozinskey's great book "Care and Culture of Children," in another column. [87-89]

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for General Debility and all nervons complaint, ofter having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands ofcases, feels it is his duty to make it knows to his fellows. The recise, with full particulars directions for prepation and use, and all neccessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be sent you by return mail, free of charge, by addressed envelope.

DR. J. C. RAYMOND,
164 Washington street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
☞ Mention this paper. [6-35, tf.]

ANXIOUS MOTHERS Who love their children and want them to grow up healthy and strong and useful men and women, all want Dr. Sozinskey's Great Book "THE CARE AND CULTURE OF DHILDREN." It is a Mother's Handbook, from the infancy to the maturity of her children, and its use will save many lives, more doctor's bills, and tens of thousands from wrecked health and wrecked morals. We do not publish or sell in any way any book that we cannot heartily recommend, and we add this to our "Household Series" of useful books with great pleasure. Sold only by subscription. We want agents in Iowa, Michigan, Nebraska, Wisconsin and Dakota. Circular giving table of Contents free. Commissions liberal. Address

A. G. WILCOX.
[87 89] Minneapolis, Minn.

AGENTS WANTED.

For our popular and fast selling publications, embracing the following standard works:

EVERY DAY CYCLOPEDIA of Useful knowledge; 100,000 Facts for 100,000 people, a perfect Dictionary of Every Day Wants. 640 pages, 500 Illustrations.

MORMONISM UNVEILED, or the Life and Confessions of John D. Lee. History of Polygamy from its rise to the present time, with a graphic account of the Mountain Meadow Massacre, in which 120 men, women and children were butchered.

THEATRICAL and CIRCUS LIFE, or Secrets of the Stage; Green Room and Saw Dust Arena Revealing the mysteries of the Theatre, Circus, Tariety Show, Concert Dive; Ballet Girls, Mashers, Matinees, &c.; Home and Private Life of Actors and Actresses. 150 berutiful engravings and elegant colored lithographs.

FINE PICTORIAL FAMILY BIBLES, 2,500 Illustrations on Steel and Wood.

Good terms to live agents on the above works. $120 per month guaranteed. Circulars free. Address

SUN PUBLISHING CO.,
[87-49] St. Louis, Mo.

Extraordinary Offers.
FOR ONE MONTH!

The Farmers' Union
AND
Minneapolis Weekly Tribune

One of the Largest, Ablest, Brightest and Best News and Family Papers in the United States.

FREE! FREE! FREE!

For one year to any subscriber to the

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

ANY SUBSCRIBER to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL who is in arrears on subscription one year or more, and who will pay his account in full to date and one year in advance, will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMERS' UNION free.

ANY PERSON who will subscribe for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and pay in advance for not less than twenty-four months will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMER'S UNION free.

THE FARMERS' UNION

Is a weekly journal of eight large pages of seven columns to the page, and in all the features of a pure, bright, able, interesting news and family paper it is not surpassed by any journal in the country.

RECOGNIZING the demand of the intelligent progressive people of the Great Northwest for a newspaper that in all its departments shall [illegible] fully up with the times, but shall keep pace with the wonderful development of the region in which it is published, the FARMERS' UNION has perfected such arrangements as will meet all the requirements of a first-class newspaper.

MOST COMPLETE.—It contains the most complete [illegible] by telegraph up to the hour of going to press, [illegible] prepared for farmers and their families [illegible] and every subject in which farmers are specially interested.

A HOUSEHOLD DEPARTMENT is devoted specially to the work of the homes of the land [illegible]

BESIDES these popular [illegible] the FARMERS' UNION contains [illegible] old and young [illegible]

[illegible]

E. M. WALSH,
DEALER IN
HEAVY AND SHELF Hardware, Tinware Of all kinds. JOB WORK a specialty.
RATHBONE, SARD & CO. ACORN STOVES & RANGES.
BAR IRON, STEEL AND Blacksmiths SUPPLIES Building Paper, Sash Etc.
ALSO AGENT
For the Celebrated Monitor Plows.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

RESERVED FOR
E. D. CHILDS & CO'S
LUMBER YARD.
CARMAN, MINN.

MONEY TO GIVE AWAY
IN BARGAINS
at MARKHAM'S,
THE LEADING GROCERY HOUSE
AND THE LARGEST BOOT AND SHOE STORE
IN CROOKSTON.
Goods Delivered to any Part of the City
FREE OF CHARGE.
THE ONLY 5 AND 10 CENT COUNTER.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM,
MAIN STREET,
HAVE ALWAYS ON HAND A WELL SELECTED STOCK OF Groceries, Dry Goods,
Notions, Boots and Shoes, Clothing, Hats and Caps,
And everything usually kept in a General Store. We also have on hand a full line of first-class
FARM MACHINERY.
Including the Osborne and Champion Twine Binders, Reapers and Mowers, John Deere and First and Bradley Walking, Sulkey and Gang Plows, The Pride of the West, and Buffalo Pitts Straw Burning and Horse Power Threshing Machines, Rockford and Fish Bros. Wagons, &c. &c.
Call and Examine Our Stock!

STEWART & LAWRENCE,
Dealers in
Pine Lumber.--Pine Lumber.
Windows, Doors, Mouldings, Building Paper, &c.
YARD ON OAK STREET.

CITY PAINT SHOP.
W. H. McCOULOUGH,
HOUSE, SIGN AND GENERAL
PAINTER.
Broadway, [illegible] Crookston, Minn.

Great Bargains
—IN—
REAL ESTATE!
RESIDENCE LOTS
Are now offered in the Choicest Portion of the City,
Sletten. & Cromb's
ADDITION,
AT PRICES
Within the Reach of All!

Those who invest now are sure to DOUBLE THEIR MONEY before Spring. Call early, for they are going off rapidly.

All persons are cautioned not to Cut or Remove Timber from Sletten & Cromb's Addition.

SLETTEN & CROMB,
Crookston, Min n.

REAL ESTATE AGENCY.
LANDS, LOTS, AND
PROPERTY OF ALL KINDS
Bought and Sold,
Property Rented and Rents Collected
LOANS NEGOTIATED, TAXES PAID FOR NON-RESIDENTS,
If you want to Buy, Sell or Rent, call or write to us and have your your wants supplied.
JAMES W. LILLY,
ATTORNEY AND R. E. AGENT, CROOKSTON, MINN.
MAIN STREET, OPPOSITE POST OFFICE.

CROOKSTON CITY BAKERY!
EARNEST MILLER, Proprietor.
(SUCCESSORS TO THE PLUMB BROTHERS.)
Takes advantage of the occasion to say that he will keep a full line of all goods that are usually found in a
FIRST-CLASS BAKERY,
And that the citizens of Polk County will find none but the best at his place of businrss. A fine line of CIGARS AND TOBACCO, NUTS, FRUITS,
CANDIES, PIES, CAKS, BREAD,
AND EVERY THING TO FILL OUT A HUNGRY MAN.

JOHNSON, STEPHENS & CO.,
—AGENTS FOR THE—
MINNESOTA CHIEF THRESHER,
CELEBRATED DEEING MARSH HARVESTER,
THE DEERING AND WARRIOR MOWERS,
Moline Plows,
Orvis Hollow Tooth Drag,
DIAMOND TOOTH DRAG, THE VAN BRUNT SEEDER.
☞ All machines purchase of us are Subject to Trial. Satisfaction guar[illegible] Warehouses at Crookston and Fisher's.

Benham & Underhill,
(Successors to John McLean,)
Attorneys at Law,
AND NOTARIES PUBLIC.
LOAN, LAND
—AND—
Insurance Agency.
(Established in 1870.)
Money Loaned to Prove Up with!
Money Loaned on Improved Farms!
Money Loaned on City Property!
U. S. LAND OFFICE BUSINESS ATTENDED TO! ENTRIES MADE AND LAND PROVED UP!
500 City Lots in Crookston for sale!
Business and Residence Lots for sale!
Improved and Unimproved Farms in Polk County for sale on easy ter ms!
A Full Line of Old Reliable
Fire nsurance Companies
REPRESENTED.
CROOKSTON, POLK CO. MINN.

Merchants' Bank,
OF CROOKSTON,
CASH CAPITAL, $32,000.00.
J. KELSO,............PRESIDENT
Bellvue, Iowa.
M. R. BROWN, ...VICE PRESIDENT,
Crookston, Minn.
H.B. MONTGOMERY...2D VICE PRES'T,
St. Paul, Minn.
W. M. ROSS..............CASHIER
Crookston, Minn.
—o—
WILL RECEIVE DEPOSITS, AND ALLOW INTEREST BY SPECIAL CONTRACT.
BUY AND SELL FOREIGN & DOMESTIC EXCHANGE.
Make Collections,
And do a strictly
Legitimate Business.
Agents for Foreign Passage Tickets
De skandinaviske Sprog tales her
W. M. ROSS, Cashier.

FOR A CHOICE
STEAK OR ROAST
GO TO THE CITY
Meat Market,
H. STEEGE, Proprietor.
THE CHOICEST
STEAKS,
ROASTS,
VENISONS,
PORK STEAKS,
FRESH PORK,
MUTTON CHOPS
In fact everything of the very choices in the line of Meats, Fresh or Salt,
MAY BE FOUND AT THE CITY MARKET.
FOR Choice Butter
GO TO THE
City Meat Market,
Robert Street. Crookston, Minn.

M. N. BERG,
Practical Watchmaker
—AND DEALER IN—WATCHES,
CLOCKS
AND JEWELRY,
ROBERT STREET
Crookston, Minn.

First National Bank,
OF CROOKSTON.
PAID IN CAPITAL ....$50,000.00.
ROBT. H. BAKER, President.
M. R. BROWN, Vice President.
ANSEL BATES, Cashier.
Receives Deposits, Buys and Sells Exchange on all parts of the United States and Europe. Careful attention to collections and prompt remittance. Negotiate loans, pay taxes for nonresident owners. Correspondence solicited.
DIRECTORS—Robt. H. Baker, Racine, Wis.
J. I. Case, Racine, Wis.
M. R. Brown, Crookston, Minn.
Wm. Anglim,
Ansel Bates,
E. D. Childs, Carman, Minn.

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.
PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.
ROBERT STREET, [illegible] CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.
Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line promptly attended to in the latest styles of the art. Give me a trial. PROF. THOMPSON.

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Proprietor. DEVOTED TO THE WELFARE OF POLK COUNTY. TERMS----$1.50 per Annum.

VOL. VI. CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1883. NO. 38

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

H. E. COOKE, Editor and Proprieor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar Fifty Cents, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum sent to any address.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

SPACE.	1 w.	2 w.	3 w.	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 year
½ Inch...	50	$1 00	$1 25	$1 50	$3 00	4 50	6 00
1 Inch.....	75	1 25	1 75	2 00	4 50	6 00	10 00
2 Inches..	1 50	2 25	3 00	3 50	6 20	9 50	15 00
3 Inches..	1 75	2 75	3 75	4 50	9 70	13 20	20 00
4 Inches.	2 50	3 50	4 50	5 50	10 00	18 00	25 00
5 Inches..	3 00	4 00	5 00	6 00	12 50	20 00	30 00
¼ Column	3 50	4 50	15 50	6 50	15 00	25 00	35 00
½ Column	6 00	7 5	10 00	12 00	15 00	35 00	50 00
1 Column	9 50	12 50	15 00	18 00	25 00	60 00	100 00

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class Matter.

THE NORTHWEST.

The Vitalizing Force of the Sub-Arctic Winds---The Last Traces of Summer's Floral Glory Picked Before the Snow Fell.

(Charles Hallock in The Brooklyn Eagle.)

HALLOCK, Kitson Co., Minn., Nov. 17.

It looks wintry this seventeenth day of October, with three inches of snow on the ground. The deposit is soft, damp and feathery, it is true, and will melt into water in a day or two to fill the cisterns, which are never too full in this country, where wood water is a rare blessing. We shall have three weeks more of mild weather. Nevertheless this wintry premonition reminds us that the autumns are short under the forty-ninth parallel, and that the farmer must scratch around lively to harvest and thresh his grain crop and complete his back-setting before the frost tightens up the ground for seven long months. ("Back-setting" is known in this section as turning back the prairie sod which was plowed in the spring and left to rot throughout the summer.) At this very time, let me tell you, there are thousands of acres of wheat and oats still in shock in the Red River Valley, and never to be stacked or threshed. The indolent, shiftless, ignorant or impecunious settlers—no matter which—have let precious seasonable days pass, dallying with time, until their crops now lie waste, fit only for poor fodder, tossed by winds and stray cattle, and mildewed by drizzling rains which have fallen almost continuously for twenty days, or half the diluvian period. Three times only in this October have we had bright, perfect, warm and sunny days to substantiate the doubtful legend of Indian summer—a mystic period of dreamy atmosphere and dolce far niente, when the farmer, with his season's work all finished and his smiling family around him, each with a spick span new frock and homely presents eked from the cash proceeds of his No. 1 hard, is supposed to have nothing to do but fold his hands and let his spirit commune with the nothings of the vacuous air. I doubt if such Edenal conditions will ever obtain in this latitude, but they sound well in story.

Oh, my Eagle! those delicious autumnal days I speak of! three of them! How the nimble, provident, prescient squirrels did make haste to busy themselves in gathering hazel nuts and acorns for winter store! How the migratory ducks and birds did bathe themselves in alternate wave and sunshine, industriously making the most of the supreme dispensation! How the crows squawked on the breakings near the woods, and great flocks of wild geese congregated on the stubble. What a delicious interregnum and respite between disagreeables and frosts! The air was so thin and rare that timber belts, twenty miles away, loomed up in the air like phantoms, and were pencilled on the sky; sounds of voices and the blacksmith's forge afar off could be heard with marvelous distinctness. Even a whispered word played upon the tympanum with delicate staccato. Distinct objects were projected out to view with every outline sharply defined. I do not know what blessings are borne on the blast and the blizzards of the north, but I do know that every atmospheric wave here seems freighted with health and vitalizing force, and that my invalid friends who were limp and played out at the east, brace up here with tonic vigor, and gather flesh, strength and avoirdupois with every step they walk and every breath they breathe. It astonishes the unsuspecting and convinces the incredulous. These phenomena are what invest these sub-Arctic regions with a mystic quality which seasons poetry.

My eyes! [illegible] while I have been busy writing upon the sheet intently [illegible] of dazzling brightness has suffused the optic nerves, and when I turn to the window, lo! the storm of snow [illegible] the sun is shining radiantly [illegible] overhead, sky [illegible] of the snow [illegible] transitions diversify our life experiences, and such, enhanced beyond conception, will glorify the final exit of the just.

Now, to-day's date reminds me that just one year ago by the calendar I was snowed in for three days on this same St. Paul Minneapolis and Manitoba railway, sixty miles south of this place, by drifts which filled the cuts to the tops of the locomotive smoke-stacks. All the gritty and gelid scourings of the level prairie were swept by a driving blizzard into the rifts and excavations, and passengers nearly starved before they were dug out. Two days afterward the storm was over, no traces of it were left except where the laborers had shovelled, and the weather remained fine until the middle of November. I mention these vicissitudes of weather because they serve better than any other material data to indicate the meteorological conditions of this Northwest country, and they are facts which visitors as well as intending settlers desire to know.

The advanced stage of occupation and possession throughout this valley is what always astonishes new comers and land lookers. People come here from the east expecting to take up claims or to buy railroad land at two dollars and a half an acre, and include the privilege of selection, whereas nothing of any account can be had anywhere along the railroad lines at less than ten dollars, while for improved lands with buildings, improvements and stock, the price is twenty dollars and upward. Dwellers have passed the pioneer period of temporary shanties and makeshifts, and are putting up substantial farm buildings which rival those of the Pennsylvania Dutch. Some attention is already being paid to the culture of vegetables and the production of small fruits. Samples would astonish the judges at agricultural fairs down east, or anywhere else. Close by here is a bonanza farmer who raises crops from selected seeds and grains. He can handicap any one who does not pursue the same plan, and take the prize for big beets every time. His grain opens out twenty per cent more bushels to the acre, with heavier weight, while his root crops are a sight to behold. I have seen potatoes fourteen inches long, Swedish turnips which weighed twenty-two pounds, beets twenty inches long and six inches in diameter, cabbages, each one big enough to fill a wheelbarrow. Wild plums, raspberries, strawberries and blueberries are indigenous to the soil. With culture they develop into marvelous products. Seedsmen from the east lift up their eyes in astonishment and tearfully depart. Our nutritious wild grasses mixed with vetches, which grow luxuriantly all over the prairie, make splendid hay. If any one wants to make money here, let me put him in the way of cutting and baling pressed hay. A month ago it could be cut and stacked for two dollars per ton. Every spring the market price is fifteen to forty dollars at St. Paul and Winnipeg, and it has sold as high as eighty in parts of Manitoba. Farmers are too busy harvesting grain to attend to the apparently less important business of making hay in the season, hence a scarcity of hay results, which is often made still more stringent by stacks being burned by the prairie fires. These result from locomotive sparks, from accidents and from intentional firing. The more frequent cause is the burning of straw stacks after the wheat has been threshed out of them. Just think of wantonly burning thousands of tons of straw when it could so easily be utilized by being manufactured into paper, products of innumerable sorts! Any who will put up a combined straw and paper mill and grain elevator here before next August will make a snug fortune. We have one elevator which has been three times enlarged.

Chickens, turkeys, geese and eggs by the thousand, with feathers for beds and bolsters, would pay supremely. A market gardener would find himself unexpectedly prosperous. All sorts of tradesmen are in request at very high wages, especially carpenters and plasterers. There is not an unoccupied dwelling or outbuilding in scarcely any one town in the Northwest. Small capitalists, who would put up snug cottages to sell or to lease, would make forty to sixty per cent on their investments, and be kept busy all the time. Many town proprietors will donate a dozen lots to those who will thus build. I will, for one. There are dozens of ways of turning money over with profit outside of grain raising. Nevertheless, grain is the specialty of the Red River Valley and the great region west of Winnipeg which is traversed by the Canadian Pacific railway. There is always a car famine in the season of harvest, as sufficient facilities cannot be had to move the crops as rapidly as can be desired. Immense trains are passing any given point all day and night long. Their average length is one-eighth of a mile for loaded cars, and one-fourth for "empties." The traffic is no less astonishing than the mileage of railroads built. If you will procure a folder of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railroad, and examine the northeast corner of Dakota, where the counties border along the Red River, you will wonder at the gridiron of tracks which score the country. They are simply highways through unlimited and uninterrupted wheat fields, constructed for the transportation of grain. It is difficult to imagine, unless one sees for himself, such vast areas of cultivated land. Take for example the twenty-six mile stretch from Crookston to Grand Forks, on the Minnesota side of The Red River. At each terminus is a town of 5,000 people; just half-way intermediate is Fisher's Landing, a busy place of 300 people, and all the intervening land is a succession of farms without a break in the cultivation. Twenty-six miles of stubble! That would have been considered a fabulous and incalculable wheat field twenty years ago. The railroad runs nearly parallel with the Red Lake River the whole distance, and seldom more than half a mile from the timber which borders its banks. There is a beautiful growth of trees the entire length, and the farmers on the river [illegible] garden and his fields running back to the elevators along the track. It is something like the Acadian theme in Longfellow's "Evangeline," and the lands are disposed in pretty much the same way, but in the west how much more prolific, if not perhaps quite so bucolic!

Yesterday, before the snow fell, a lady friend and I picked from the prairie a spire of golden rod and a purple bloom of chrysanthemum, the final rays of the floral glory which suffuses the unbroken prairie in summer. In the middle of September I picked the last wild rose that I found blooming. You should see the banks of them in July—the thickets and copses of odoriferous blushes and thorns! Nature's garniture of flowers is lavishly spread all over the landscape in the season of blooming. Their varieties are no less than their numbers. You have read all this in letters of western writers, but perhaps one who has never seen it can realize better, when I say that in a single bouquet culled from a few square yards of radiant surface I found no less than thirty-four different kinds. I suppose a full herbarium would contain some hundreds. It is wonderful, too, how they improve by cultivation, developing into most luxuriant surprises of tint and blossom. Take the common sunflower, for example, which is no bigger than a trade dollar in its wild state, and in one season it will develop into an umbrageous stalk, with flowers as large as a dinner plate. And now with my two souvenirs of the summer, purple and golden, laid away and treasured for their own and the season's sake, I look foward with complaisance to the frost and stinging cold of the long sub-Arctic winter, with all the delightful adjuncts and phenomena of sun dogs, perihelia, auroras, snow blinks, intensely blazing constellation and a gorgeous sunlight pervading all the still atmosphere in the daytime, day after day, illuminating each floating frosty particle until all glow like the incandescence of electric points. In no climate have I enjoyed the early part of winter so much as here. December and January are months which make the restive lungs expand and the muscles turn to springs of steel. Man inhales prolonged life with every breath, and pities the denizens of damp Chicago and the fickle weather of New York, with atmospheres surcharged with rheums and rheumatism, "until you can't rest." There is wind in February and March, but it is not usually high.

If I could command so much of your reading space again at intervals I could extend my running comments until they expanded into a book, so much is there to speak of, and so general is the tendency here for everything to spread out, grow, increase and multiply. Our themes are as expansive as the prairies themselves; but I am cautioned not to let them intrude too much on the space brooded over by The Eagle, lest the old bird prod me with the point of one of its own quills. So herewith I lasso my Pegasus and lead him off the range.

Notice to Owners of Real Property.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m. for furnishing the county a tract of land not exceeding 160 acres; and also for furnishing a tract of timber land not exceeding 20 acres, to be used as a poor farm.

Proposals must show the description and location of and improvements on said land.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners at January session, 1883.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Notice to Physicians.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m. from physicians, stating the amount for which he or they will agree to furnish medicines and medical attendance (including surgery) to the paupers of the 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th commissioner districts respectively.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., from the proprietors of Newspapers eligible to be designated as "The Official Paper of Polk County, Minn.," wherein the list of delinquent real estate taxes for the year 1882 shall be published, for publishing such list, and also for furnishing stationery, etc. to this county.

Every such proposal must be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000, with at least two sureties thereon in order to receive attention.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners of Polk County.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Notice.

All persons interested will take notice that I have purchased of [illegible] Stone, his undivided one-sixth interest in the Townsite of Carman (South Crookston).

The above interest will be sold as a whole or in any part to suit purchasers. For further information apply to Reynolds & Watts, Attorneys. [illegible]

1883. 1883.

THE

ST. PAUL GLOBE!

DAILY, SUNDAY AND WEEKLY.

ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

SPECIAL WIRE FROM ST. PAUL
TO THE EASTERN NEWS CENTERS.

FULL ASSOCIATED PRESS PRIVILEGERS.

ISSUED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

THE ST. PAUL GLOBE is now acknowledged to be the

LEADING PAPER IN THE NORTWEST.

THE GLOBE has recently been enlarged to an

EIGHT-PAGE PAPER.

It is cut, folded and trimmed. It has a special wire for its exclusive use, which connects its editorial room direct with Chicago, New York and Washington. It has, beside, full Associated Press privileges, which supplemented to its special telegraph wire puts it in the front rank of American newspapers.

Politically the GLOBE opposes all monopolies and stands by the interests of the people. It is not chained down, but meets issues as they arise fearlessly and vigorously.

It invites subscriptions

BECAUSE IT
FURNISHES ALL THE NEWS better than any other paper.
BECAUSE IT
Furnishes the BEST MARKET REPORTS.
BECAUSE IT
Stands by the INTEREST OF THE PEOPLE.
BECAUSE IT
Approves the right and opposes the wrong, regardless of who suffers thereby.

THE GLOBE invites those not already enrolled to make a trial subscription. You can obtain it of your newsdealer or order it direct from the publication office. Inspect it and judge for yourself. All editions postage paid.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE DAILY GLOBE.

SEVEN ISSUES PER WEEK.

DAILY and SUNDAY GLOBE, ONE DOLLAR PER MONTH.

SIX ISSUES PER WEEK—BY MAIL.

One month	$0.90
Three months	2.50
Six months	5.00
Twelve months	10.00

THE WEEKLY GLOBE.

THE WEEKLY GLOBE is an eight-page paper, the same size as the DAILY GLOBE. It is the best paper for the farmers in the State. It is send to any address, one year, postage paid, FOR ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTEEN CENTS.

For three months on trial for 25 cents.
All subscriptions payable invariably in advance.
Address,
GLOBE PRINTING COMPANY.
St. Paul, Minn.

THIS SPACE
WILL BE OCCUPIED
NEXT WEEK
—BY—
J. R. CLEMENTS
ANNOUNCING
THE SALE
OF LOTS
IN Clements' 2d Addition
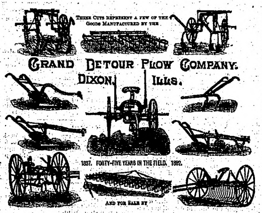
CROOKSTON
AND
NUMBER OF LOTS
GIVEN AWAY
BY HIM TO PARTIES
WISHING TO BUILD
THIS SEASON.

THIS SPACE
RESERAED FOR THE GREAT
BANKRUPT STORE,
Broadway, - - Crookkston, Minn.



THESE CUTS REPRESENT A FEW OF THE GOODS MANUFACTURED BY THE GRAND DETOUR PLOW COMPANY.
DIXON, ILLS.
1837. FORTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE FIELD. 1882.
AND FOR SALE BY

McKINNON BROS.
MANUFACTURERS OF
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, WAGONS,
CUTTERS, SLEDS, MILL CARTS, &C.
Axles, Springs, and all Repairs kept in stock.

DEALERS IN
FARM MACHINERY.

In Farm Machinery, we have a full line of Hoosier and Wolverine Seeders Dixon Diamond Tooth Harrows; Davenport, Peru City and Norwegian Walking and Sulky Plows; Chieftain Hay Rake, Iron King Mower Centre Draft; St. Paul Twine, Self-Binder. Extras for the different Machines always in stock.

MOSER & MOECKEL,
—DEALERS IN THE BEST CLASS OF—
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,
—INCLUDING THE—
FOUNTAINE CITY AND BUCKEYE SEEDERS,
Case Wagons, Cassady, Buford and Hapgood, Walking, Sulky and Gang
---PLOWS,---
Minneapolis Twine Binder, the Meadow Lark and Buckeye Mowers, the celebrated Fargo and Scotch Harrows, Nichols & Shephard Vibrators and Straw and Wood Burning Engines, the Cooper Stationery and Portable Straw and Wood Burning Engines, C. Aultman & Co's new Model Thresher and Monitor Engine. A full line of
—BUGGIES, SLEIGHS, CUTTERS—
—AND PLATFORM SPRING WAGONS.—
In fact everything usually kept in their line.

INSURANE AGENCY.—We write policies only in the best and most responsible companies, at as low rates as can be secured on the class of property insured. Our list of companies will bear inspection.

Money to Loan.
MOSER & MOECKEL.

J. ENGEL,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN
BAR GLASS,
Of all kinds, and Goods used in Bars Only. [illegible]
LAMPS AND CHANDILIERS.
The only House in this line west of Chicago. [illegible] St. Paul, Minn.

GENERAL
Merchandise.
Call at our New Store on Main Street opposite the U.S. Land Office, when you require articles in our line. We carry a full and complete stock and invite inspection.
JUVE & BERGLAND

Van Dyke & Denniston,
PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS,
COR. MAIN AND SECOND STREETS,
Will attend to all professional calls promptly.

A. A. JUST, M. D.,
Homoeopathic Physician and Surgeon.
Main Street, near U.S. Land Office,
CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINN.

A. H. DUNLAP, M. D.
GRADUATE McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.
Licensed College Physician and Surgeon, Quebec.
OFFICE OVER MERCHANTS' BANK.

AIME GABOURY,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
Graduate Doctor in Medicine Laval University Canada. Licensed Coll. Phy. Surg., Quebec Late of Michigan University, U. S.
☞ Office over the "Arcade" Clothing Store Crookston, Minn.

DR. M. WATTS,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Office on Main Street, one door north of Star Drug store. Professional calls, by day or night attended to with promptness.

DENTISTRY.
J. H. THOMAS, D. D. S.,
ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN
Artificial teeth from one to an entire set, inserted. Gold, silver or artificial filling when desired. Regulating children's teeth a specialty All work warranted.

C. W. BARNES, D. D. S.,
Graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery.
OFFICE AT RESIDENCE ON BROADWAY CROOKSTON

MIDWIFERY.
Mrs. Olena Dawley, a graduate of the mid-wife College, of Christiania, Norway, has opened an office on Fletcher Avenue. Having had an experience of 12 years in Norway and six years in America, she is fully competent to treat all cases entrusted to her. All diseases of women or children carefully and scientifically treated.

JOHN LEO. H. STEENERSON.
LEO & STEENERSON.
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
MAIN STREET,
CROOKSTON, - - MINN.

—JOHN N. IVES.— —D. E. HALTESTAD.—
IVES & HATLESTAD,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Collection and Land Office Business made a Specialty.
Money secured for final proofs on short notice.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

P. A. DUFOUR,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELOR AT LAW
—MAIN STREET,—
CROOKSTON - - MINN

REYNOLD'S & WATTS,
Attorneys at Law,
MAIN STREET. - - - - CROOKSTON, MINN

CROOKSTON HOUSE,
Main Street, Crookston, Minn.
J. E. MITTEN, - PROPRIETOR.
FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR
☞ Good Sample Room.

COMMERCIAL HOUSE.
W. H. TOPPING, Proprietor,
SECDON STREET - CROOKSTON, MINN
—o—
Having leased this new and commodious hotel we are now prepared to supply the needs of the travelling public in first-class style. Our house is entirely new and newly furnished; we have had a long experience in the hotel business and hope to be able to meet the wants of our patrons and friends. We would respectfully invite a share of the public patronage. Call and see us.

ALBION HOUSE,
ISADORE FORTIER, Prop.
Cor. Broadway and Robert Street,
CROOKSTON, POLK CO., MINNESOTA
Terms moderate. Good stabling.

European Hotel
AND
Ladies' and Gents' Restaurant.
Within two blocks of Union Depot, 160 and 162 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.
☞ OPEN DAY AND NIGHT. ☜
THEO. GOLDEN, Proprietor.

Second Street
MEAT MARKET
STANTON & CO., Proprietors.
Choice Meats of every description. Fish and game in their seasons. Everything of the very best quality and lowest price. Call and see us Stanton & Co., Dobson's Block, Second Street.

NEW HARDWARE FIRM.
DREW BROTHERS,
No. 333 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn.
Extensive stock of General Hardware and Mechanics Tools. Our goods are new and quality guaranteed. Agent for the Howe Scales and Trucks.

FAIRBANKS
Standard Scales
OF ALL KINDS.
FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO.,
66 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.

FURNITURE STORE.
OAK STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.
BATAGLIA & KNACK, PROPRIETORS.
Keeps constantly on hand a well selected stock of Wardrobes, Bureaus, Sofas, Lounges, Bedsteads, Bed Springs, Tables, Chairs, Rockers, Stands, Ornaments, Picture Mouldings and Picture Frames. Repairing done to order. [illegible]

Polk County Journal

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON THURSDAY, JAN. 18.

Alice Oates Friday and Saturday evenings.

~~Hon. H. Steenerson~~ spent the Sabbath in the city.

Mr. H. Shepard has been appointed special deputy sheriff.

Charlie Seeley greets his friends with a nice venison lunch.

Miss the Mascotte and then kick yourself to sharpen your wits next time.

A pleasant dance occurred at Lawrence Hall on Tuesday night; a success socially and financially.

Mayor A. Allen has gone on a business trip to Iowa and Illinois. He expects to return in about ten days.

Tickets for Oates' Opera at Tom Morris'.

Al Chamberlain is doing as well as could be expected under the circumstances. It is thought he will recover

Mr. K. D. Chase takes a trip to St. Paul and Minneapolis for a few days and may go further east before his return.

Alice Oates made her first appearance on the stage when sixteen years old at Crosby's Opera House, Chicago, Feb 22d, 1869.

Yesterday was one of your breezy days when the gentle zephyrs mildly wafted o'er the boundless prairies—or words to that effect.

"Tighter, dear Alice," was the exclamation of the interviewer at parting as he grasped with his horny member the small, soft hand of Alice Oates.

Prof. Dusso organized a singing class in Lawrence Hall on Monday evening. Another meeting occurs at the same place on Saturday evening next commencing at 7 o'clock.

Charlie Davis has purchased the building recently occupied by Frank Roderigue as a saloon and will move it ten feet toward the freight depot and build up the space between that and his building, when he will have a fine large building for his business.

Sheriff Zwickey will occupy the room in the Dobson block lately occupied by K. D. Chase as as office. Justice Lewis will also use the same room in which to settle all troubles of a litigious nature.

Sturges of the Oates' Opera Troupe as Lorenzo in the Mascotte is simply great. "Jim" is a daisy in full bloom.

Ed Shreader is adding largely to his stable room by putting up a large addition to his stables, 30x140 feet. That looks like Ed means to be ready to accommodate every team that comes along.

Secure your seats early for the Mascotte or buy standing room at a premium later.

Mr. Angus Kennedy, accompanied by his wife is visiting in the family of D. F. McDonald. Mr. Kennedy is an old settler in this Northwest, coming to Glyndon early in 1872. He has a fine farm on the Turtle River in Dakota and is prepared to enjoy life immensely.

Isaiah Gervais and wife left for Winnipeg on Saturday whither they go to place their son Horace E. in college. Mr. Gervais says that he has not threshed his wheat yet and that there is still much wheat in his neighborhood unthreshed.

John Cromb has a seed of the tea plant that was given him by a traveling man as an evidence that tea can be grown in this country. It is a queer looking bird, resembling a filbert, somewhat, but it is not labelled "black" or "green" so it is a matter of doubt what kind of a plant it would produce.

Miss Lizzie Rochelle one of the handsome young ladies with the Alice Oates Troupe is of the Langtry type of beauty.

Mr. Wm. Cunningham has returned from Canada, whither he was summoned by the illness of his mother, an old lady 82 years of age. He found her alive but she died a few days after his arrival. Mr C. reports times somewhat better in Canada than when he left for this country several years since

Mr. J. B. Merrill, an old-time Fisherite, but more recently in business at Portland D. T., has sold out his business in Portland and has gone below to visit awhile this winter. He intends to return in the spring and will go to the Devil's Lake country and engage in the lumber business at some point there. His faith in this country is shown in the fact that he has recently refused a cash offer of $3,500 for his claim.

Sheriff Zwickey served a writ of ejectment (we think that's what they call it) upon the Wickersham family, in the case of Anderson vs Wickersham. The Sheriff with Anderson went to the house in the afternoon but Wickersham was not there. The Sheriff invited the ladies to pack up their valuables and be ready to march at a moments notice. When Wickersham appeared upon the scene it was dark but he was as happy as a lord. Zwickey did not wish to turn the family out of doors under such circumstances so he abode there that night and next morning the whole business went out in the cold.

The M. E. Lyceum met Tuesday Jan 15th according to announcement. Rev. A. W. Edwards was appointed chairman and Wm. Watts secretary of the evening. The society was organized with a membership of thirty. The constitution and by-laws were adopted and following officers elected for the ensuing term:

President ....Rev. A. W. Edwards
Vice President ....T. S. Smith
Secretary ....Miss Carrie Weaver
Treasurer............Mrs. A. W. Edwards
Critic ....Wm Watts
Sergeant at Arms............W. J. Hurst
Reporter for JOURNAL...Miss Edith Webb
Reporter for Chronicle....J. J. McLennan

It was decided to have a debate at the next meeting Tuesday, Jan. 22d; subject, "Resolved, that the right of suffrage should be extended to women," the leaders of the debate to be J. J. McLennan and G. J. McManus who are [illegible]

Wheat, No. 1 Hard, 86, No. 2 81, and on the rise.

The Oates Company play a new Mascotte. It is the version of the Paris theatres.

W. O. Wilson brought his family down to the city to stay while he builds his new hotel addition.

Wm. Kistenmacher intends to go to St Paul the latter part of this week or first of next on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Whoever missed seeing the Mascotte of the Alice Oates Opera Troupe failed to take in one of the richest treats of the season.—[Steubenville Gazette.

John Doyle, representing Bowlin & McGeehan, of St. Paul was around to see the boys this week. He is a pleasant, driving individual whom it is refreshing to meet.

John B. Le Brae, of Black River is reported to be on the point of death, owing, we are told, to exposure. Le Brae used to live in this city and was at one time city marshal.

The Carver Company have made application for Ericsson's Hall for the 29th and 30th, we believe, but as yet Max has not heard from them, whether they will accept his terms or not.

Ed Bowes, the man who attempted suicide has been removed to a private house and is doing well and rapidly recovering. It is confidently expected that he will be all right in a few days.

Charlie Seely's robins are a novelty. They have been raised near a canary and instead of pouring forth their native melody they are trying to learn the canary's notes and their efforts are truly wonderful. They succeed admirably.

John Moser left for a visit to friends in Wisconsin, on Saturday evening John has worked hard and successfully since in business here and well deserves a brief holiday and we trust he will get all the enjoyment out of it that he deserves.

The Misses. Robinson and Hale who perfectly delighted the audience in their recitations on the night of the last entertainment given by the Baptist society will make their appearance again at Ericsson's Hall Saturday Jan 27th assisted by Prof. Dusso and Geo Ashelman and Crookston's best musical talent.

A singing school has been organized under the direction of Prof. Dusso that will meet at Lawrence Hall Saturday and Monday nights, at 7:30 o'clock. The tuition is light and a large number is expected to attend. Especial attention will be given to beginners and a good class of music will be used for chorus drill. Those who expect to attend should not miss the first lessons.

Charlie Johnson, of Rockstad, was in the city last week and reports business good at that point. Charlie has formed a partnership in real estate business with Mr G H. Palmer a gentleman of long experience in that line and together they make a strong team for what Charlie don't know about the lands in this county it would take a stranger years to find out. Charlie is an old settler has been all over the county and knows every foot of Polk County soil He is an honest, upright man with whom it is a pleasure to deal.

A question of vast importance to our citizens will be up for discussion at the next meeting of the city council. There is a proposition to build a bridge across the river at the foot of Robert Street and the council seem to be undecided what to do and would like a little light from the taxpayers on the subject. To this end we invite a full and free discussion of the subject, pro and con in the columns of the JOURNAL. A bridge at that point would be of great advantage to the city and would doubtless more than pay its cost if it should be built and we understand that the city is not asked to be at the whole expense of building it if it is decided to build now. The question to be decided is whether, in the present condition of our finance the city can afford to assume the added expenses. Without at this time entering into a discussion of the matter for or against the JOURNAL simply presents the subject to the taxpayers and would urge their earnest attention.

LOST.

Gold Locket with monogram W. A. The finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at Fontaine & Anglim's.

The following is a list of patents remaining at the U. S. Land Office January 12th, 1883:

Attix, Henry S	Herring, John
Bottiaes, Daniel	Kimberley, Amos E
Beanewitz, Theodore L	Penlston, Jos Allard
Boutain, Perrie	Sankey, Fletcher
Boutaine, Jacob	Stone, Nathan P
Boutine, Damase	Stone, Henry A
eloune, Joseph	Tollefson, Tobias

Lost.

On Thursday morning, a Gauntlet Beaver Glove. The finder can return the same to Geo. Crocker's store and receive a dollar, or leave a dollar and take the other glove.

Bobsleds, Cutters.

The McKinnon Brothers have 250 pairs of bobsleds, 45 swell box cutters and also a good supply of cutters suitable for grocers, which they will sell cheap for cash. These sleighs are all their own make which is a good and sufficient guarantee. Call and examine their stock if you intend to purchase.

[29-tf]

Lost.

A young female greyhound. I will give $5.00 reward to anybody returning same to me in Crookston.

J. R. CASSIQUY.

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,701,379.
German American, N. Y	3,094,030.
German, Freeport, Ill,	1,028,407.
Niagara,	1,557,487.
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,589.
Fireman's Fund, California,	1,100,017.
National, of Hartford,	1,704,803.
N. Y. Alliance,	1,827,249.
Phoenix, of Hartford	2,024,033
Union, California,	1,20,038.
British America,	1,343,909.
North British	1,058,080.

We also represent the Travelers Life and Accident Insurance Co. of Hartford.

BENHAM & UNDERHILL
Insurance Agency.

[17-46]

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

COUNCIL CHAMBERS,
Crookston, Jan. 8th, 1883.

Pursuant to adjournment, Council met at 8 p. m. Full Board present. Petition for aid in building bridge across river at foot of Robert street was taken from the table, discussed and laid over for further consideration. Petition for further power for electric light purposes was again read and also a written proposition from K D. Chase, to-wit: That he would furnish the city of Crookston 25 horse power additional to the 40 horse power already purchased for the sum of $10,000 in city orders bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, to be issued in such denominations and at such times as the work on the dam may seem to justify On motion the proposition was accepted. Adjourned till January 13.

JAN. 13, 1883

Council met pursuant to adjournment at 8 p. m.; all present. On motion the liquor license of Frank Rodrigue was transferred to Tobias Vellar. Application for liquor license by Dumas LeDuc, granted. The Robert street bridge petition was again taken up, and views of the citizens and taxpayers divided. After discussion and upon request the matter was laid over for further discussion and examination. A communication from K. D Chase was read, asking that orders be issued and placed to his credit in the First National Bank of Crookston to enable him to proceed with the work on the dam. The City Recorder was thereupon instructed to issue orders in favor of K. D. Chase to the amount of $5,000. Bill of D. Berthiaume, $2.50, allowed. Adjourned till January 27th, 1883, at 8 o'clock p. m.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston, Minn. [31-44]

For sale.

On Eighth Street, between Ash and Broadway, two lots with good house and good barn, also house and lot on Ash Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, also lots 3 and 4, block 12 on Main Street. Terms easy.

CALVIN B. PALMER,
[28-tf] Crookston, Minn.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Money to Loan.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to loan on improved farms from THREE to FIVE years time at very reasonable rates. Apply at my office on Main street, opposite U. S. Land Office.

[14-tf] H. STEENERSON.

Special offer in Story & Camp's Pianos and Organs, to Feb. 1st at Lambert & Mathews' new Furniture store, Second Street. Tuning and repairing reasonably done. [35-38]

For Sale. To Rent,

Four thousand acres of cultivated and timber lands at the mouth of the Sand Hill on the Red River, for sale. Also farms to rent. Address,

STEENERSON BROS.,
[30-tf] Crookston or Fisher.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

School Desks.

Districts wanting the best desk manufactured, and warranted to be so will do well to call on W. H. Jennings, Sherman House, Crookston, He represents the Racine School Furniture Co., and warrants from five to ten years. [4-tf]

Hair Dressing.

For particulars call at Mrs. I. U. Jennings Millinery Rooms, on Main St., Crookston, Minn.

[30-tf]

Notice,

All parties indebted to us are requested to call and settle by note or cash at our place, do not ask for further credit till settlement is made.

[34-tf] FONTAINE & ANGLIM.

For Sale Cheap.

A second hand cook stove. Call at JOURNAL office. [34-tf]

$100,000 to Loan.

Prove up you claim. Cash paid for School Bonds and County Orders. Call on or address,

BROWER & McLEAN,
[24-tf] Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

A fine farm of 183 acres only a short distance from the city. Twenty-three acres timber, 129 acres under cultivation; good house and barn. Apply at JOURNAL office. 21-tf.

Farmers and others desiring a genteel, lucrative agency business, by which $5 to 20 a day can be earned, send address at once, on postal, to H. C. WILKINSON & Co., 195 and 195 Fulton Street, New York. [34-38]

Sealed Proposals.

Sealed proposals will be received by the clerk of the board of education of the city of Crookston, until Saturday Jan. 27th, for furnishing sixty cords of sound oak cord wood. Fifty cords to be delivered at the high school building and ten cords at the school house on the hill. Parties can bid for the whole or lots of ten cords.

J. G. McGREW,
[36-39] Clerk of Board of Education.

Wanted.

An energetic agent for Polk county. Address Singer Manufacturing company, Fargo, D. T.

BORN.

McDONALD.—In this city, on Wednesday, January 10th, 1883, to the wife of Dan McDonald a son.

CHAMBERLAIN.—In this city, on Wednesday, January 10th, 1883, to the wife of Al. Chamberlain, a son.

MARRIED.

STEWART—BROWN.—At Fairview, Wabasha County, Minn., on Thursday, Jan 4th, 1883, Mr. A. M. STEWART, of Crookston, to Miss NELLIE A. BROWN, of Fairview.

The JOURNAL extends congratulations to the young couple, both of whom have many friends in this city.

THE BEST WAGON —ON WHEELS—

IS MANUFACTURED BY

FISH BROS. & CO., RACINE, WIS.,

WE MAKE EVERY VARIETY OF

Farm, Freight and Spring Wagons,

And by confining ourselves strictly to one class of work; by employing none but the Best of WORKMEN, using nothing but FIRST-CLASS IMPROVED MACHINERY and the VERY BEST of SELECTED TIMBER, and by a THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE of the business, we have justly earned the reputation of making

"THE BEST WAGON ON WHEELS."

Manufacturers have abolished the warranty, but Agents may, on their own responsibility, give the following warranty with each wagon, if so agreed:

We Hereby Warrant the FISH BROS. WAGON No.........to be well made in every particular and of good material, and that the strength of the same is sufficient for all work with fair usage. Should any breakage occur within one year from this date by reason of defective material or workmanship, repairs for the same will be furnished at place of sale, free of charge, or the price of said repairs, as per agent's price list, will be paid in cash by the purchaser producing a sample of the broken or defective parts as evidence.

Knowing we can suit you, we solicit patronage from every section of the United States. Send for Prices and Terms, and for a copy of THE RACINE AGRICULTURIST, to

FISH BROS. & CO., Racine, Wis.

Mortgage Sale.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty-three dollars, ($253 00-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Frank Peasley to Samuel H. Ver Plank, bearing date the 3d day of January, A. D. 1880, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 24th day of January A. D. 1880, at one o'clock p. m., in book "B" of Mortgages, on page 203, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-six (26) Township numbered one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range numbered forty-six (46,) containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the government survey thereof and situated in Polk County and State of Minnesota with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 2d day of March A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and thirty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated January 15th, A. D. 1883

SAMUEL H. VERPLANK,
Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [38-44]

$250.00

In Gold Given Away.

$2.00 PER YEAR POSTPAID.

1841. FORTY-SECOND YEAR. 1883.

The Prairie Farmer.

The oldest, most reliable and leading Agricultural Weekly of America.

Advocates the interests of the Farmer, the Breeder and the Dairyman.

It aims to educate and elevate, and to give its patrons the latest, best and freshest news pertaining to every line of industry.

The publishers aim to make THE PRAIRIE FARMER the Standard Agricultural Paper of the country. Its columns are devoted to the growing wants of farmers, treating upon all subjects relative to the farm, garden and household. Breeders of live stock will find their interests carefully and fully treated in a spirit of perfect fairness. As a family paper it is designed to place it in the front rank, and keep from its columns all that is objectionable.

The Prairie Farmer offers a novel list of cash prizes for the largest list of words that can be formed from the letters composing the name of "THE PRAIRIE FARMER." Every competitor however, must become a subscriber for one year. For full rules and regulations see The Prairie Farmer. Sample copies sent to any address on the receipt of six cents in postage stamps. Address

PRAIRIE FARMER PUBLISHING CO.
[38-35] 150 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

NEW DRUG STORE IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh

DRUGS, MEDICINES,
PAINTS, OILS,
and YANKEE NOTIONS

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 60 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave orders at my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn.

DR. A. NELSON.

C. CHURCHILL,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,

Kalsomining and Paper Hanging.

Contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors north of Methodist Church. Main street.

THE PIONEER

HARNESS SHOP.

M. RAUENBUEHLER, Proprietor,

CORNER OAK AND THIRD STS., CROOKSTON MINN.

Is ready for the Spring Trade with a full supply of Work and Light Harness, Single and Double, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Blankets, etc., etc. Give me a call before you purchase.

MUNN & Co
PATENTS
ESTABLISHED 1846
NEW YORK

We continue to act as solicitors for patents, caveats, trade-marks, copyrights, etc., for the United States, and to obtain patents in Canada, England, France, Germany, and all other countries. Thirty-six years' practice. No charge for examination of models or drawings. Advice by mail free.

Patents obtained through us are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which has the largest circulation, and is the most influential newspaper of its kind published in the world. The advantages of such a notice every patentee understands.

This large and splendidly illustrated newspaper is published WEEKLY at $3.20 a year, and is admitted to be the best paper devoted to science, mechanics, inventions, engineering works, and other departments of industrial progress, published in any country. Single copies by mail, 10 cents. Sold by all newsdealers.

Address, Munn & Co., publishers of Scientific American, 261 Broadway, New York. Handbook about patents mailed free.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 11th, 1883.

Complaint having been entered at this office by William Schumaker against Oscar Bernard for abandoning his Homestead Entry, No. 7,487, dated June 12th, 1883, upon the se¼ Sec. 18, T. 153, R. 46, in Polk County, Minnesota, with a view to the cancellation of said entry; the said parties are hereby summoned to appear at this office on the 1st day of March, 1883, at 10 o'clock a. m., to respond and furnish testimony concerning said alleged abandonment.

JOHN CROMB, Register
[33 41] P. C. SLETTEN, Receiver.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan 4th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Feb 10th, 1883, viz: FRANK PELKEY, Hd. No. 989, for the sw¼ Sec. 12, T 150, R. 46. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Felix Fournet, Hippolyte Parie, Bastime Kerison, Benjamin Dalbeck, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn. [37-41]

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 29th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office, at Crookston, on Feb. 7th, 1883, viz: CHARLES N. SANFORD, Pre. D. S., No. 6363, for the se¼ S. 19, T. 148, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Frank Michie, William Marin, C. C. Dillon and Ed Stone, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[35-43] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 26th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 26th, 1883, viz: GEORGE CHARBONEAU, H'd No. 6679, for the northwest frac. quarter of S. 30, T. 152, R. 47. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Fred Sutter, Frand Sutter of Euclid, Polk Co., Minn. David Brandl, Fred Zyarek, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[33-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 21st, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 29th, 1883, viz: FRANK BENOIT, Pre. D. S. No. 4,783, for the sw¼ Sec. 10, T. 151, R. 43. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Louis Haus, Joe Wassel, David Beladine, Joe Sturgeon, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn.

[34-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 18th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 26th, 1883, viz: PETER DEROSIER, Pre D. S., No. 7183, for the ne¼ S. 10, T. 149, R. 41. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Antoine Labombard, Alie Rivoid, of Gentilly, Isac Gervais, of Red Lake Falls, Paul Genereux, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[34-38] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 19th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 24th, 1883, viz: EVEN BRYNDSEN, Pre. D. S., No. 6984, for the se¼ sw¼ S. 20 and n½ nw¼ sw¼, nw¼ S. 29, T. 148, R. 41. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: John Gudmundson, Andrew C. Anderson, Albert Anderson and John Anderson, all of Aldal, Polk Co., Minn.

[34-38] JOHN CROMB, Register.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk. } ss. District Court, 11th Judicial District.

A. C. Cowing and W. H. Cowing, copartners under the firm name of Cowing Bros. Plaintiffs, } SUMMONS.
vs.
James G. McDonald, Defendant.

The State of Minnesota to the above named Defendant:

You are hereby summoned and required to answer the complaint of the Plaintiffs in the above entitled action, which is filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, and to serve a copy of your answer to said complaint on the subscribers, at their office, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State within twenty days after the service of this summons upon you, exclusive of the day of such service; and if you fail to answer the said complaint within the time aforesaid, the Plaintiffs in this action will take judgment against you for the sum of one hundred and eight and twenty one hundredths dollars ($108 20-100) with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the 29th day of October A. D. 1882, together with the costs and disbursements herein.

Dated December 20th A. D. 1882.

LEO & STEENERSON, Plaintiff Attorney's,
[36-42] Crookston, Minn.

H. F. PLATO & CO.,

(SUCCESSORS TO POWERS BROS.)

131 EAST THIRD STREET, ST. PAUL. 131

Fall and Winter

—OF—

1882.

FINE GOODS AND LOW PRICES.

We are in a position to offer to the trade visiting St. Paul one of the most complete and attractive stocks of

DRY GOODS

Ever shown in this city.

BLACK AND COLORED SILKS IN GREAT VARIETY,
FINE DRESS GOODS, VELVETS,
PLUSHES AND TRIMMINGS

Of all kinds and quality. An immense stock of

CLOAKS IN ALL THE NEW STYLES
IN CLOTH, PLUSH AND SILK.

☞ Order business a specialty. The same careful attention given to orders as during the past ten years and satisfaction guaranteed. Agents for Butterick's Celebrated Patterns. Catalogues and samples sent to any address upon receipt of stamp.

H. F. PLATO & CO.

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.

PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.

ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA

Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line promptly attended to in the latest styles of the art. Give me a trial. PROF. THOMPSON.

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAVING BEEN made in the payment of the sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars, ($3500,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, executed and delivered by James G. McDonald to Ansel Bates bearing date the Third day of April A. D. 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the Third day of April A. D. 1882, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in Book I of Mortgages, on pages 2, 3 and 4, and which Mortgage was given to secure the payment of Thirty-five hundred dollars, and interest according to the conditions of a certain promissory note in said Mortgage described and executed and delivered by said Mortgagor to the said Mortgagee, in said sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars payable on the first day of November 1882, with interest until paid, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and bearing even date with said Mortgage, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: All of Lot six (6) in Section thirty (30) in Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) excepting from said lot six. The following described piece or parcel of land, viz: Beginning at the southwest corner, of the southeast quarter, of section thirty (30) Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet (560) to a corner, thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river, thence south 35° west one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 24° west, one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 15° west, one hundred and eight feet to a corner, on the south line of said Section thirty (30,) thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30,) one hundred and fifty eight feet (158) to the place of beginning, containing three acres and nine-tenths, which has been conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, in deed book "B" page 504, and also excepting from said lot six (6) the following described lot of land, viz: All that strip of land thirty-three feet wide (33) off of the north end of said lot six (6) Section thirty (30) Town one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) the said strip being eighty rods long. The land Mortgaged in the above mentioned Mortgage and which will be foreclosed by a sale thereof embraces all the balance of said lot six not included in the above mentioned exceptions and contains twenty-two acres and eight-tenths, which was Mortgaged as and will be foreclosed and sold as one tract of land, situated in the City of Crookston, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the eighth day of February A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 19th, A. D. 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Mortgagee

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [34-40]

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage, duly executed by S. R. Norris and Allie A. Norris, his wife, mortgagors, to Andrew C. Johnson, of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 23d day of October, 1879, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on the 29th day of December, 1879, whereby said mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate, situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: All of lot six (6) in Section number thirty (30) Township number one hundred and fifty (150), Range forty-six (46) containing twenty-seven and 70-100 acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, to secure the payment of twenty-six hundred and thirteen dollars, and interest thereon from date, at the rate of ten per cent until fully paid, according to the terms of five certain promissory notes in said mortgage described, executed and delivered by said mortgagors to said mortgagee, each in the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, three of which notes have been paid, and one of which notes for the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the 23d day of October, 1879, became due and payable on the 23d day of October, 1882, and has not been paid; and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, on the first day of April, 1880, at three o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., in book "B" of Mortgages, on page 231.

And, whereas, the following described pieces or parcels of land was released from the lien of said mortgage, to-wit: A piece or parcel of land beginning at the south-west corner of the south-east quarter of Section 30, Township number 150, Range 46, thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet, to a corner; thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river; thence south thirty-five degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south twenty-four degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south fifteen degrees west one hundred and eight feet to a corner on the south line of said Section 30; thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30) one hundred and fifty-eight feet to the place of beginning which said piece or parcel of land contains three acres and nine-tenths, and was conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, in Deed Book "B", page 504, and which described piece or parcel of land is excepted from said lot six, Section 30.

Also excepting from said lot six, Section 30, aforesaid, all that strip of land thirty-three feet wide off of the north end of said lot six, Section thirty (30), the said strip being eighty rods long.

And, whereas, said mortgage was heretofore duly assigned by said Andrew C. Johnson, mortgagee, to Ansel Bates, of Crookston, Polk County, Minnesota, by deed of assignment duly executed and delivered, bearing date the [illegible] day of December, 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, on the [illegible] day of December, 1882, at five o'clock p. m., in book "I" of mortgages, on page 150.

And, whereas, there is claimed to be due the sum of ten hundred and [illegible] dollars and twenty cents, with interest thereon from October 23d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, on this one note or [illegible] and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, with interest thereon at ten per cent. [illegible] six hundred and [illegible] five cents interest to the date of this notice, and [illegible] dollars which is allowed as an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, by the terms of said mortgage. And no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the amount of said note or debt or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the said mortgaged premises, not including the parcels hereinbefore mentioned as having been released from the lien of said mortgage, which sale of the said mortgaged property will be made at public auction by the Sheriff of said Polk County, Minnesota, to the highest bidder for cash, at the front door of the Court House in the city of Crookston, in said County and State, on the eighth day of February, 1883, at ten o'clock a. m., to pay said amount due and interest thereon, together with the taxes, if any, on said premises and the [illegible] dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the costs and expenses [illegible] subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated this 19th day of December, 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Assignee. [34-40]

GOLDEN STAR WHEAT

The Best Wheat in the Market!

Yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre and weighs 64 pounds per bushel.

Price $2.50 per Bushel.

☞ Leave orders at Juve & Bergland's or Eiken Bros. where samples may be seen.

T. G. BERGLAND.

HARDWARE.

EIKEN BROS.,

ARE JUST RECEIVING THEIR LARGE STOCK OF

Hardware,
Tinware,
Stoves
and Shelfware

WE SHALL KEEP A

FULL and COMPLETE STOCK OF GOODS.

In our line and Invite the Patronage of all.

COME AND EXAMINE OUR STYLES AND PRICES.

One door south of U. S. Land Office Crookston, Minn, (Overland's old stand.) EIKEN BROS.

E. D. SCHRAER

LIVERY,

Feed and Sale Stable.

Best Turnouts in the city. Single or Double Rigs, with or without drivers or Saddle horses always ready at a moments notice by day or night. If you want a

NOBBY TURNOUT

—CALL AT THE—

RED BARN

E. D. SCHRADER,
Cor. Main and Third Streets, Crookston

MERCHANTS'

BILLIARD HALL!

M. L. FRETTS, Proprietor,

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

The Choicest Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand.

Jas. G. McDonald,

MANUFACTURER OF

BRICK AND TILE

ALSO

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

We are prepared to fill orders for brick in any quantity at the kiln or delivered, and to furnish estimates, plans and specifications, and to complete buildings of every description. Mason work of all kinds done promptly. Plans and specifications of all building under architects charge furnished free, executed by the best architects in the Northwest.

NEW RESTAURANT!

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

JACK CONFAIR, Proprietor.

Warm meals at all hours. First-class in every particular. Try THE NEW RESTAURANT at Losey's Old Stand, Main street, Crookston, Minn.

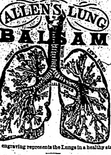
A. Allen,

AGENT

—FOR THE—

HOWE SCALE COMPANY.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM



This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
Harmless to the Most Delicate.

By its faithful use Consumption has been Cured when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

WM. C. DIGGES, Merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes April 4, 1881, that he wants us to know that the LUNG BALSAM has cured his mother of consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says, others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

WM. A. GRAHAM & Co., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of MATHIAS FREEMAN, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The LUNG BALSAM cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

As an Expectorant it has No Equal!

FOR SALE by all MEDICINE DEALERS.

KIDNEY-WORT
THE GREAT CURE
FOR RHEUMATISM
As it is for all the painful diseases of the KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BOWELS.
It cleanses the system of the acrid poison that causes the dreadful suffering which only the victims of Rheumatism can realize.
THOUSANDS OF CASES
of the worst forms of this terrible disease have been quickly relieved, and in short time
PERFECTLY CURED.
PRICE, $1. LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.
Dry can be sent by mail.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington Vt.
Acts at the Same Time on
Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.
KIDNEY-WORT

"THIS TERRIBLE
NEURALGIA
WILL KILL ME."

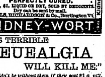
"I wouldn't be without them if they cost $1 a pill. They cured me of neuralgia, of 9 years' standing."—Joseph Snyder, Paxtons, Pa., 30, aah. '80.

DR. C. W. BENSON'S
CELERY & CHAMOMILE PILLS.
ARE PREPARED EXPRESSLY TO CURE
AND WILL CURE HEADACHE OF ALL KINDS
NEURALGIA, NERVOUSNESS
AND DYSPEPSIA.
Dr. C. W. Benson
FAC-SIMILE SIGNATURE ON EVERY BOX.

They contain no opium, quinine, or other harmful drug, and are highly recommended.

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.

[From the Boston Globe.]



Messrs. Editors:—

The above is a good likeness of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., who above all other human beings may be truthfully called the "Dear Friend of Woman," as some of her correspondents love to call her. She is zealously devoted to her work, which is the outcome of a life-study, and is obliged to keep six lady assistants, to help her answer the large correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its special burden of suffering, or joy at release from it. Her Vegetable Compound is a medicine for good and not evil purposes. I have personally investigated it and am satisfied of the truth of this.

On account of its proven merits, it is recommended and prescribed by the best physicians in the country. One says: "It works like a charm and saves much pain. It will cure entirely the worst form of falling of the uterus, Leucorrhœa, irregular and painful Menstruation, all Ovarian Troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Floodings, all Displacements and the consequent spinal weakness, and is especially adapted to the Change of Life."

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the law that governs the female system.

It costs only $1. per bottle or six for $5., and is sold by druggists. Any advice required as to special cases, and the names of many who have been restored to perfect health by the use of the Vegetable Compound, can be obtained by addressing Mrs. P., with stamp for reply, at her home in Lynn, Mass.

For Kidney Complaint of either sex this compound is unsurpassed as abundant testimonials show.

"Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills," says one writer, "are the best in the world for the cure of Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the liver. Her Blood Purifier works wonders in its special line and bids fair to equal the Compound in its popularity.

All must respect her as an Angel of Mercy whose sole ambition is to do good to others.

Philadelphia, Pa. (3) Mrs. A. M. D.

TUTT'S
EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family.

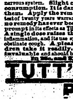
In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

TUTT'S
PILLS

ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.

Cures Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Bilious Colic, Constipation, Rheumatism, Piles, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Torpid Liver, and Female Irregularities. If you do not "feel very well," a single pill at bed-time stimulates the stomach, restores the appetite, imparts vigor to the system. Price, 25c. 35 Murray St., N.Y.

WRITE FOR TUTT'S MANUAL FREE.



Hostetter's Stomach Bitters gives steadiness to the nerves, induces a healthy, natural flow of bile, prevents constipation without unduly purging the bowels, gently stimulates the circulation, and by promoting a vigorous condition of the physical system, promotes, also, that cheerfulness which is the truest indication of a well-balanced condition of all the animal powers.

For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

THE DEAR LITTLE TYRANT.

Let every sound be dead!
Baby sleeps.
The Emperor softly tread!
Baby sleeps.
Let Mozart's music stop!
Let Phydias' chisel drop!
Baby sleeps.
Demosthenes be dumb!
Our tyrant's hour has come!
Baby sleeps.

A VIRGINIA ROMANCE.

The Search for a Murderer in the Woods of Kanawha.

Charleston (W. Va.) Letter to Chicago Tribune.

For many years Mrs. A. D. Bruen, of New York city, has owned large tracts of land in Putnam, and Jackson counties West Virginia. Squatters and other claimants had from time to time settled in numbers upon this land. Before the war litigation was begun to eject these settlers, many of whom had been born and raised on the land, which had been handed down from father to son. The Bruens claimed under an older grant, and the possessors under a later, contending that the older patent had lapsed or been forfeited. The civil war came on, however, and its legal proceedings were stayed.

Soon after the close of hostilities between the states, hostilities all the more bitter from political and sectional differences were resumed between the parties in this great suit, and the animosity felt by the settlers throughout wide and thickly inhabited neighborhoods was intensely bitter toward the wealthy and aristocratic claimants. Hundreds of people saw their homes assailed which had come down to them from their fathers; humble homes they were, but there they had been born and reared, and there their dead were buried, and out of the rough but generous soil they drew support for their wives and children, and over the woods and mountains they had roamed and hunted all their lives. This attempt to dispossess them was, in the eyes of these simple and unlearned mountaineers, nothing less than premeditated robbery on the part of the "grasping, unscrupulous Yorkers," already rolling in wealth, and they determined to resist by any and all means to the bitter end.

It became necessary now for the Bruens to secure some one in that country to hunt up testimony and aid in locating the corners and boundaries of their grant. Money will accomplish anything and in the face of this bitter opposition and personal danger Nathan Cunningham, an intelligent and respectable resident of the land, undertook the perilous work and entered upon it in 1877. But, notwithstanding his caution and prudence, his part in the controversy was soon detected and fully understood, and the hate heretofore directed toward the distant landlords was concentrated upon Cunningham, who was regarded not only as the representative of their persecutors, but as a traitor to his own people. Scowling faces, bitter taunts and threats of personal violence met him at every turn. All his movements were watched and every step was dogged. Notwithstanding all this Nathan Cunningham went on bravely and persistently in the prosecution of his part of the undertaking, which soon came to a sudden and tragic termination. The winter of 1878 he was waylaid on a lonely mountain road and foully murdered. His body was found the next day shot and cut, and the marks of a bloody and fierce death struggle were seen on the spot. Great excitement followed, the whole community and surrounding counties being divided between sympathy for the murdered man and his family and for the people whom it was thought he was so unjustly persecuting, and there were some who even pronounced his fate a just retribution. The officers of the law, however, were thoroughly alive to their duty in the case, and made every effort to detect the guilty parties. Suspicion pointed her uncertain finger at many, many arrests were made, and discharges had. The guilt of no one seemed evidenced in the slightest degree. After weeks and months of investigation it remained an unfathomable secret.

Finally the Bruens feeling their interests and that of this section required it, employed the celebrated Pinkerton detective agency to ferret out the guilty parties and their plans were adroitly laid. Two skillful Chicago detectives in their employ were sent in disguise and under assumed names to Jackson county, to a settlement known as "New Kentuck," located in the heart of the Bruen estate. Here an accident threw in the way of the shrewd officers an opportunity they were not slow to avail themselves of. The proprietor of a country store failed in business, and his creditors being about to sell him out, the strangers bought the stock and opened store there among the people, some of whom, it was thought, were the murderers of Nathan Cunningham. They commenced selling goods in August, 1878 and remained until the spring of 1879, when some one of the neighbors accused one of the firm, who went by the name of Crawford, of being a detective and engaged in the hunt after Cunningham's murderers. A stout denial followed, but this from one and that from another were put together, and gossip made out a strong case, in which both of the firm were implicated and the charge reiterated. The rumor flew like wildfire all through the settlement and spread over the two counties. Indignation against the "spies" became intense, the county became two hot for the detectives and, with the fate of poor Cunningham before their minds, they thought discretion the greater part of valor, and hastily left the country. Pinkerton soon abandoned the pursuit and the store was closed out.

And now this strange story takes a turn romantic. One of the "New Kentucky" merchants did not return to Chicago as he came. The one who assumed the name of Crawford had played his part well. He had attended all the apple butter boilings, dances, "been bullings," etc., in the winter. He had become "one of the boys," and, by his familiar manners, wormed himself into the confidence of the young and old, and the scent was becoming hot, when, as stated, the discovery was made of his real business. At one of these country gatherings he fell a victim to the bright eyes and sweet charms of a pretty girl. Whatever disguise he made of his business and however well he masked his purpose, there among these people, love's shafts penetrated the armor he fancied secure. Their courtship grew apace, and while on a secret errand to deal with foul murder and to track the perpetrators he stopped by the wayside to gather this "wild rose to wear upon his heart," and to transplant it from the wilds of New Kentuck to Chicago, where she now is his model little wife.

But the history of this murder sentiment, and detective life, all so curiously blended, did not end here. Pinkerton claimed his reward. The Bruens refused, claiming Pinkerton's men had "given the thing away." It was retaliated that some of the many agents of the Bruens had first dropped the fatal intimation. Pinkerton's reputation in general, and that of the two detectives specially, were involved. "The old man," as Pinkerton's boys called him, had his mettle up. He sued the Bruens in New York. The Bruens are wealthy, and had "millions for defense," but not one cent for tribute." Each party have taken hundreds of pages of depositions to sustain their respective sides of the case. Some 40 witnesses have been examined in Charleston, which is about 35 miles from the scene of this singular history. Nearly all the neighbors in and around New Kentuck have been examined, pro or con, and it is likely that thousands of pages more will be taken. Most of the ejectment suits between the Bruens and the people have meanwhile been compromised; the people who have been litigating about their homes for a generations are dying off, and they are marrying and giving in marriage. But the whole neighborhood for miles around is wrought up once more concerning the detectives and their errand, and still the murder of Nathan Cunningham remain s a secret and mystery.

FOUND IN A WRETCHED HUT.

The Pitiful Tale of an Old Blind Artist and His Brave Young Wife.

N. Y. Sun.

An old blind artist, his young wife, and their eight-year-old son, were discovered a few years ago on the verge of starvation living on the deck of a half-sunken canal boat in the Erie Basin in a shanty that had been made of old planks, and old pieces of tin and oil-cloth. The man, when the police found him, spoke with the accent of an intelligent and educated person. The handsome young person dressed in men's clothing who was with him seemed to be a gently bred young man. The old man, however, voluntarily acknowledged that this was his wife. He said that his name was William G. Yorke, that his wife's name was Mary, and his boys name was William L.

"I am," he said, "or was, because I am blind now, a marine painter, and I came from Maine. I am an old man now—past sixty, but for many years each summer I have lived upon the water in my own yacht, with my family, painting marine views. My first wife died ten years ago, and my present wife was then my pupil, and she was but fifteen years old. A year later she consented to be my wife, and we continued the career that I had led. I earned enough in the summer to keep us through the winter, but I was not able to save any money. For several years I have sailed about this harbor in the summer filling orders. Everything we had in the world we kept on the yacht, and we had nowhere else to live. One year after we were married our boy Willie was born and we kept him with us but intended to place him at school this winter. On the 9th of last August, while we were sailing off Bay Ridge, our yacht was run down and sunk by the D. R. Martin, one of John H. Starin's steamboats. We were fortunately on deck at the time, and, although pitched overboard, were rescued by the steamboat's hands. A flying piece of wood struck me in the eye, and destroyed its sight, and my other eye was so badly injured that it too has since ceased to be of use. My wife's leg was broken, and as I didn't have the means to have her cared for she has become a cripple for life. All of her clothing was destroyed and all of my property, my books, painting material, $50 in money, and everything that I had in the world, went down with the yacht. We were kept aboard the D. R. Martin several days, and a collection of about $30 was taken up for us. I was then asked to sign a paper releasing the owners of the steamer from all responsibility for the accident, and I did so.

"We heard of this old canal boat, and we came here. My wife had no clothes, and we were too poor to buy any. So she dressed up in a suit that was given to me. She has since been known as my son Joe. She cut her hair short, and her disguise has not been detected. We haven't had much to eat, because we wouldn't beg, but we have managed to keep alive. We built this shanty ourselves and got an old stove."

Police Captain Reilly found that the brave little woman in spite of being a cripple, had cared for the whole family, although she had scarcely left the house. Her face was bronzed by exposure, and she passed readily for a boy. She said smiling that she didn't have much cooking to do, as they didn't have much to cook. They had had no fresh meat since they came there, and all there was in the place to eat could have been put into a goblet. They had just fifty cents left. They had obtained an old broken down stove, about the size of a coal scuttle, and had picked up fuel in the vicinity. Those who had learned of their distress had offered food and aid, but they were too proud to be paupers. Captain Reilly saw that their rude home was made a little more comfortable by satisfactory supplies, and he sent to the society for the prevention of cruelty to children to care for them. Superintendent Wilkins found the case not in his jurisdiction, but wrote a full account of the fact to Mr. John H. Stairn. Mr. Stairn promptly sent for the family and lodged them on one of his boats now in winter quarters at Staten Island. Mrs. Yorke has resumed the attire of her sex with clothing furnished by Mr. Wilkins, and much has been done to make them comfortable. Mr. Stairn intends to find them a permanent home.

Convalescent Persons.

When one has been sick for a long time with some low fever such as typhoid or malarial, it is with a gladsome feeling he leaves his bed and finds himself growing better. But oh, how very weak he feels! In such cases a good strengtening tonic like Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla will help matters greatly.

Farming Notes.

The profits in Tennessee and Virginia on raising peanuts are from $50 to $300 per acre, according to the season.

There are sixty-five members of the Michigan State Breeders' Association of Shorthorn Cattle. They recently held a spirited meeting in Lansing.

Germany utilizes all her land; even the highways are bordered with fruit trees pruned and cared for by the "road makers," and watched day and night for several weeks before the crop matures. The value of this resource is said to have aggregated one year $3,000,000 in the province of Wurtemburg alone.

Secretary Crane, of the Elizabeth (N. J.) club, does not think it amazing that the boys leave the farm. "They are, as a rule, made to work hard, early and late, almost every day in the year, and about the only compensation they get is frequent scolding because they cannot do as much as men, the meanest kind of clothing and little or no prospect for the future."

In President J. M. Smith's Wisconsin market garden peas and strawberries were twenty days late, but the season nevertheless fulfilled, as usual, the sure promise about seed time and harvest. "On the 1st of August," he says in the Western Farmer, "it did not seem possible that we could have even a moderate yield of corn; and yet that month and September were so very favorable that the crop generally was a good one; I believe fully up to the average."

Prof. Stalker, of the Iowa Agricultural college, gives to the Homestead the following cure for rot in sheep: All loose flakes of horn should be carefully pared off, and the hoofs trimmed to a proper shape. The foot should be thoroughly cleaned and carefully done up in a tar bandage. We simply put on tar and bandage with a bit of strong cloth. If there is much ulceration, a chronic sore having been formed, touch the surface with a solution, one part sulphuric or hydrochloric acid and three parts water. Dress as above. The animal should be kept where as little wet and filth as possible will reach the foot.

Jerry Cokey is in jail in Miles City, charged with killing Patrick Dwyer, at Billings, Christmaseve.

Humanity's great hope for the future is alone to be realized in improved conditions of matrimony. What a profound obligation does this fact involve. Those who realize the responsibility can hardly do better than take advice from Mrs. E. Pinkham whose wonderful remedies for the cure of all diseases peculiar to women are so justly celebrated. Send for pamphlet.

Last year nearly $95,000,000 was coined at the mint.

Dr. C. W. Benson of Baltimore, Md., prepares a skin cure that is the best thing for skin diseases ever known. It cures eczema, tetter, ring-worm and all rough and scaly skin diseases in the shortest time. Sold by all druggists at $1. per package.

The bark Star of the West from New York to Bremen, is lost with all on board 15 in all.

"Buchupaiba."

Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Diseases. $1. Druggists.

An almost precedented winter drouth prevails in Maine. Water power is failing and wells becoming exhausted.

"Keep to your place and your place will keep to you." But you cannot expect to keep your place without health, the foundation of all success. For instance, a railroad engineer in the employ of the C. M. & St. Paul R. R., had been grievously effected with diabetes for six years. He took four boxes of Kidney-Wort and now writes that he is entirely cured and working regularly.

The prospect for a favorable balance in our foreign trade this year is not very good.

Feathers, ribbons, velvet can all be colored to match that new hat by using the Diamond Dyes. 10 cents for any color.

The homicides in Chicago during the year 1882 are counted up at fifty-four, and only one of all the slayers was found deserving of the gallows.

"Rough on Rats."

Clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, ants, bed-bugs, skunks, chipmunks, gophers. 15c Druggists.

The Montreal firm of M. Fisher & Sons' which failed in 1875, has paid every cent of the former indebtedness though there was no legal claim on it.

Profitable Patients.

The most wonderful and marvelous success in cases where persons are sick or wasting away from a condition of miserableness, that no one knows what ails them, (profitable patients for doctors,) is obtained by the use of Hop Bitters. They begin to cure from the first dose and keep it up until perfect health and strength is restored. Whoever is afflicted in this way need not suffer, when they can get Hop Bitters—Cincinnati Star.

Rev. Dr. William R. Work, a well-known Presbyterian divine, who revised Wheeler's Analysis of the Bible, died on Wednesday in Philadelphia.

Consumption is a disease we all dread. It often carries its victim to an untimely grave. How important, then, for those who cherish life and health, to prevent that disease in its early stages. Every Cold or Cough should be treated with Allen's Lung Balsam. There is no better remedy.

Georgia will have an anniversary of its own on the twelfth of next February, a century and a half then expiring from its settlement by Gen. Oglethorpe.

Skinny Men.

"Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Debility. $1.

A bull-fight in Tuckson, Arizona, on a recent Sabbath was attended by a band of the United States Sixth cavalry. Rather a queer place for an army band.

From China to Peru and back again a thousand times in a night, will the mind of the nervous sufferer travel, while blessed sleep forsakes his eyes. He can enjoy sweet rest by the use of Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills. Sold by all druggists.

Create a healthy appetite, prevent malarial diseases, by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Try the new brand Spring Tobacco.

Not a Beverage.

They are not a beverage, but a medicine, with curative properties of the highest degree, containing no poor whisky or poisonous drugs. They do not tear down an already debilitated system, but build it up. One bottle contains more hops, that is, real hop strength, than a barrel of ordinary beer. Every druggist in Rochester sells them, and the physicians prescribe them."—Evening Express on Hop Bitters.

Personal—Men Only.

The Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich., will send Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts and Electric Appliances on trial for thirty days to men (young or old) who are afflicted with nervous debility, lost vitality and kindred troubles, guaranteeing speedy and complete restoration of health and manly vigor. Address as above. N. B.—No risk is incurred, as thirty days' trial is allowed.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are excellent for the relief of Hoarseness or Sore Throat.

Discomforts of African Travel

Not the least among the trials incident to traveling in Africa is the sultry, humid atmosphere which makes it an effort to breathe. Guns, knives, and every instrument of iron are covered with rust, and the traveler himself becomes the victim of permanent dysentery. Often the discoverer is obliged to hew his way through the thick undergrowth with hatchet and sickle. Hours will be passed in cutting out a mile of road. Tempests catch him unawares. The rain falls in sheets, and the clouds are so dense as to bring darkness at midday. The native chiefs levy toll on him for the privilege of passing through their country. His guides strike for higher wages and, if refused, leave him in an unknown land. If he appeals for protection to some powerful chief, the rascal may give it, but he will demand a large present. Two Portuguese explorers tell how they were dealt with by the avaricious chief, to whom they had applied for deliverance from a mob of savages.

The savages had demanded a large amount of cotton-cloth, the principal currency of Africa, and, being refused, they followed the travelers for days, threatening an attack. One day the explorers camped near a hamlet, and their foes surrounded them. Suddenly an old noble issued from one of the huts, saying,—

"I am chief. Who are you? Whence do you come? Who are these people surrounding you?"

The travelers explained and told him that these negroes had followed them for days, demanding twenty pieces of cloth.

"Fear nothing," said the chief. "I will decide everything."

He called upon the mob to come up, berating them as "thieves, rogues and villains." He listened to their demands and the travellers explanations. At last he forced them to modify their demand to ten pieces.

"Ten be it," said the explorers, thanking the chief in their hearts for his valuable service. A bale was opened, and the ten pieces counted out to the mob, who at once walked off.

"Now hand over the other ten pieces to me," said the impartial judge holding out his hand—and they had to do it.

Witticisms.

A dry goods house advertises among its things for Christmas gifts, "elegant chemisettes." We don't know what chemisettes are, but are sure that we never saw anything called by that queer name on a Christmas tree.

The shortest courtship on record is here given: A California miner fell in love with a girl at first sight. She was equally smitten with him, and the entire courtship was: "My pet?" "You bet."

Jokes about the poverty of newspaper men have been laid on the shelf. They are not funny any more, because people have found out that they are not true. Look at James Gordon Bennett and Jay Gould and Robert Benner and—and the rest of us.

"Why do women so often wander aimlessly in the murky solitudes of the dead past, brooding over days forever gone?" asks a correspondent, and we give it up, unless it be that she hopes by ransacking the dead past to find that in the wardrobe of the aforesaid dead past she may find something to work up into a rag carpet.

Insurance Losses Last Year.

The New York Bulletin's fire record in 1882 mentions that 1,705 fires occurred in which the loss was $10,000 and upward. There were 1,309 fires whose destructiveness ranged between $10,000 and $50,000 each; 244 between $10,000 and $100,000; 101 between $100,000 and $200,000; thirty-five between $200,000 and $500,000, and sixteen where the loss was between $500,000 and $200,000,000. By 152 fires, property of the estimated total value of $34,250,000 was wiped out. By the smaller fires the loss is placed at $56,000.000, making the total destruction in the United States and Canada, $90,250,000. The Bulletin adds: "No wonder the year 1882 was a hard one for the insurance companies and for the unburned policy holders, who might have had their insurance cheaper if others' carelessness and recklessness had not made insurance so costly to all concerned. Perhaps, but we have our doubts—the time may come when our people will discover (without having it burned in to them) that low rates of insurance are only consistent with careful construction of buildings and reasonable safe guards and precautions against ore."

Ladies & children's boots & shoes cannot run over if Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners are used.

Would not be without Redding's Russia Salve, is the verdict of all who use it. Price 25c.

In fevers, malaria, billousness, heartburn etc., nothing is so beneficial as Brown's Iron Bitters.

Exceeding Great Joy.

Alcicbiades lisped; Alexander carried his head askant; Caesar and Pompey scratched theirs with one finger, like men full of troublesome thoughts, but Cicero when he caught a snuff of Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters, winked up his nose to keep from showing his exceeding great joy.—Prepared by J. P. Allen, St. Paul, Minn.

An Awful Responsibility.

We all deplore the terrible ravages, of consumption but only a few of us seem to have common sense enough to take the proper means of preventing it. Hale's Honey of Horehound and tar, taken as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Difficult Breathing or Hoarseness, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Sold by druggists.

Pike's Toothache Drops cure in one minute.

The Flesh Speedily Reunites when obstinate sores are cleansed with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Of Druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, 50 cents.

Eminent Dr. J. J. Caldwell, Baltimore, Md. states: I have used Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic largely in Debility, Febrile, and Nervous Diseases, and I have found it one of the most reliable of nutrient tonics now in use or to be found in pharmacy." (Take no other.) Of Druggists.

Indorsed by the Clergy.

We take the pleasure in recommending Dr. Warner's White Wine of Tar Syrup to the public, and especially to any public speaker that may be troubled with throat or lung disease. REV. M. L. BOOHER, Reading, Mich.

Sold by all Druggists.

REV. J. T. IDDINGS, Albion, Mich.

REV. V. L. LOCKWOOD, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Petrolia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1879

Messrs. Kennedy & Co.:—My hair is growing out so fast that I can almost see it grow myself, through the use of your Carboline.

D. Nixon.

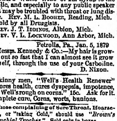
Skinny men, "Well's Health Renewer" restores health, cures dyspepsia, impotence, $1 "Well's rough on corns." 15c. Ask for it. Complete cure, Corns, worts, bunions.

Those complaining of Sore Throat, Hoarseness, or "taking Cold," should use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes.

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in their various forms; also as a preventive against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from Fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

BALL'S



CORSETS

Every Corset is Warranted satisfactory to its wearer in every way, or the money will be refunded by the person from whom it was bought.

The only Corset pronounced by our leading physicians not injurious to the wearer, and endorsed by ladies as the "most comfortable and perfect fitting Corset ever made."

PRICES, by Mail, Postage Paid:
Health Preserving, $1.50. Self-Adjusting, $1.50
Abdominal (extra heavy) $2.00. Nursing, $1.50
Health Preserving (fine coutil) $2.00. Paragon Skirt-Supporting, $1.50.
For sale by leading Retail Dealers everywhere.
CHICAGO CORSET CO., Chicago, Ill.

KIDNEY-WORT
HAS BEEN PROVED
The SUREST CURE for
KIDNEY DISEASES.
Does a lame back or disordered urine indicate that you are a victim? THEN DO NOT HESITATE; use Kidney-Wort at once, (druggists recommend it) and it will speedily overcome the disease and restore healthy action.
Ladies. For complaints peculiar to your sex, such as pain and weaknesses, Kidney-Wort is unsurpassed, as it will act promptly and safely.
Either Sex. Incontinence, retention of urine, brick dust or ropy deposits, and dull dragging pains, all speedily yield to its curative power.
43. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. Price $1.
Acts at the Same Time on
Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.
KIDNEY-WORT

YOUNG MEN learn TELEGRAPHY here and we will give you a situation. Circulars free. VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

ROYAL

FULL WEIGHT
ROYAL BRAND
ABSOLUTELY PURE
ROYAL BAKING POWDER

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

BROWN'S
IRON
BITTERS

will cure dyspepsia, heartburn, malaria, kidney disease, liver complaint and other wasting diseases.

BROWN'S
IRON
BITTERS

enriches the blood and purifies the system; cures weakness, lack of energy, etc. Try a bottle.

BROWN'S
IRON
BITTERS

is the only Iron preparation that does not color the teeth, and will not cause headache or constipation, as other Iron preparations will.

BROWN'S
IRON
BITTERS

Ladies and all sufferers from neuralgia, hysteria, and kindred complaints, will find it without an equal.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again, I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you.

Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

ADD TO YOUR INCOME

Club 13 of the Mutual Investment Clubs offers the surest means of making regular monthly profits from investments of $10 to $1000 or more dealing in

GRAIN, PROVISIONS & STOCKS

Each member gets the benefit of combined capital of the Club. Reports sent weekly. Dividends paid monthly. Club 13 paid shareholders back their money in profits in past three months, still leaving original amount making money in Club, or returned on demand. Shares, $10 each. Explanatory circulars sent free. Reliable correspondents wanted everywhere. Address R. E. KENDALL & Co., Com'n Mchts., 177 & 179 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

PENSIONS For Soldiers on any disease, wound or injury. Parents, widows and children are entitled. Millions Appropriated. Fee $10. Increase pensions, bounty, back pay and honorable discharges procured. New laws. Send stamp for instructions and bounty table. N. W. FITZGERALD & Co., Attorneys, Box 588, Washington, D. C.

This N.Y. Singer, $20

With $3 set of Attachments Free. Warranted perfect. Light running, quiet, handsome and durable. Sent on test trial-plan when desired. Happy Home Organs: 4 sets Reeds, 13 stops; Mechanical Sub Bass, octave coupler, 2 knee swells, with Stool and $1 Book, only $75. Also sent on test trial-plan if desired. Elegant case, magnificent tone, durable inside and out. Circular, with testimonials, free. Ask G. Payne & Co., 47 Third av., Chicago.

MAGNETIC INSOLES!! Warm the feet, perfect the circulation, and prevent colds, rheumatism and disease. MAGNETON APPLIANCE CO., Sole Manufacturers, 218 State St., Chicago, Ill. For sale by all leading Druggists and Shoe Dealers, or sent to any address on receipt of $1 per pair. Send for illustrated paper giving cuts of Magnetic Appliances; have no equal in the world.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

PATENTS NO PATENT, NO PAY. R. S. & A. P. LACEY, Patent Attorneys, Washington, D. C. Full instructions and handbook on PATENTS SENT FREE.

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good.
Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION.

HAIR Send postal for Ill'st'd Catalog. HULL'S Hair Store, 23 & 40 Monroe, Chicago

THE OLDEST MEDICINE IN THE WORLD, IS probably Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed, it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.

JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

FREE For Information & Maps of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, write to E. H. SMITH, 48 Clark Street, Chicago.

WHEAT New Wheat. Yield 30 to 45 bushels per acre, New Potatoes—enormous crops. White Russian Oats, Nothing like it! All kinds Farm & Garden SEEDS. Send for catalogue, John A. Salzer, La Crosse, Wis.

WHEAT GROWERS!

Why will it pay you to get some of the Saskatchewan Fife Wheat

For next spring's seeding? Because it is the PURE SCOTCH FIFE. Because it is nearly twice as prolific as the Wheat now grown here. Because it is a week earlier. Because it is healthy. Because leading millers and wheat men have pronounced it the best milling wheat today in the Northwest.

Write to ABERNETHY & WELLMAN, of Minneapolis, for Circulars giving full description.

THE
PACIFIC NORTHWEST!
Oregon, Washington & Idaho.

Offers the best field for Emigrants—viz.: a mild, equitable, and healthy climate; cheap lands of great fertility, producing all varieties of Grain, Fruit, and Grasses, in wonderful abundance; an inexhaustible supply of Timber; vast Coal Fields, and other mineral deposits; cheap and quick transportation by railroads and river navigation; direct commerce with all parts of the world, owing to its proximity to the Pacific Ocean.

NO DROUTHS, NO INSECT PESTS, NO HURRICANES, WHIRLWINDS, or OTHER DESTRUCTIVE PHENOMENA.

The Lands of the Pacific Northwest show an average yield of wheat per acre largely in excess of that of any other section of the United States.

No failure of crops has ever occurred.

Oregon Wheat commands a higher price than that of any other country in the Liverpool market.

An immense area of very fertile Railroad and Government Lands, within easy reach of the trunk lines of the Northern Pacific R. R., the Oregon Railway & Navigation, and the Oregon & California R. R. Co.'s and their numerous branches in the great Valleys of the Columbia and its tributaries, are now offered for sale at Low Prices, and on Easy Terms, or open to pre-emption and Homestead Entry.

The great movement of population to the Columbia region now in progress will be enormously increased by the completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Co.'s systems. This renders certain a rapid increase in the value of Lands now open to purchase or to entry under the United States Land Laws.

For Pamphlets and Maps, descriptive of the country, its resources, climate, routes of travel, rates and full information, address

A. L. STOKES,
General Eastern Agent,
53 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

AUTOMATIC
BOBBIN WINDER
FREE WITH EACH
FREE WITH EACH
WHITE
WHITE
EVERY BOBBIN SMOOTH AS A SPOOL OF SILK
A THIRD MORE THREAD ON EVERY BOBBIN
SEWING MACHINE
ADDRESS
WHITE SEWING MACHINE CO.
CLEVELAND, O.

SAMARITAN
CURES AND
NEVER FAILS.
NERVINE

Is unfailing and infallible in curing Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Alcoholism, Opium Eating, Spermatorrhœa, Seminal Weakness, Impotency, Syphilis, Scrofula and all Nervous and Blood Diseases. To Clergymen, Lawyers, Literary Men, Merchants, Bankers, Ladies and all whose sedentary employment causes Nervous Prostration, Irregularities of the blood, stomach, bowels or Kidneys, or who require a nerve tonic, appetizer or stimulant, SAMARITAN NERVINE is invaluable. Thousands proclaim it the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system. For sale by all Druggists.

THE DR. S. A. RICHMOND MEDICAL CO., Sole Proprietors, St. Joseph, Mo.

SAVE MONEY

By buying at dealers' prices. We will sell you any article for family or personal use, in any quantity at Wholesale Price. Whatever you want, send for our catalogue (free) and you will find it there. We carry in stock the largest variety of goods in the United States.

MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
227 & 229 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

1883 NORTH STAR ★ SEED FARMS 1883
GO TO HEADQUARTERS FOR
EARLY MINNESOTA SWEET CORN

Educated and practical growers now assent to our motto "That the further North Seeds are grown the earlier their product will be." We offer this year a full line of Standard Potatoes, true to name, grown on dry upland; Scotch Fyfe and Blue Stem Wheat; White Russian Oats; Etampes Cabbage, said to be one week earlier than Early York; our North Star Yellow Dent Corn still takes the lead, and for fodder is equal to any; of onion seed, tomatoes, carrots, peas, &c., &c., a full line and large crop, all 1882 growth on our own farms. Wild Rice for duck ponds always on hand for Spring or Fall sowing. 5th Annual Catalogue. Free. T. M. METCALF, Grower, Importer & Jobber, St. Paul, Minn.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT: a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued by LAMBIE & CO., Druggists, Third street, corner Wabasha, St. Paul, Minn. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention.

THE NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad differing from all others, is cup shape, with Self-Adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the Ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person would with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

SURE CURE for Epilepsy or Fits in 24 hours. Free to poor. Dr. Kruse, 2844 Arsenal st., St. Louis, Mo.

When writing to advertisers please say you saw their advertisement in this paper.

The Boston Advertiser complains of a new school of teachers and "enlightened educators," which proposes to make the public schools a seperate establishment and to arrange for a little kingdom of pedagogues and teachers. The same tendency has been observed in other parts of the country.

The year 1883 will end the centennial period of the nation's history. All the principal military events of the Revolutionary War have been duly celebrated, beginning with Lexington and Concord, April 19, 1875, and ending with Yorktown, October 19, 1881. Some of these are celebrated every year, most of them, however, only occasionally, and some will probably not receive notice until another hundred years shall have elapsed.

In New York city there are thirty-seven marriages to one divorce, which is a better showing than in many other sections of the country. The ratio of 37 to 1, is a method which can be applied by healthy optimists to a great many other social phases, though the smaller figure does not represent by any means the marital misery of the great business metropolis of the country. The large membership of the Catholic church in that city probably accounts in some measure for the small number of divorces.

English capitalists are investing largely in cattle ranches in the West. Mr. Pell M. P., now in this country, is at the head of a company that has recently purchased a ranch of 10,000 acres in southeastern Colorado, stocked with 11,000 head of cattle. It is the intention of the company to purchase several large tracts of land in Colorado and place upon them 200,000 head of cattle, or perhaps double that number. The idea is to raise cattle for the European market. Mr. Pell says the prejudice that existed in England against American beef has entirely disappeard.

The post office department, has contracted for a very large quantity of the new style of postal cards, or combined letter and envelope, as it is sometimes called. Fears have been expressed by some postal experts that it would interfere greatly with the revenue of the department, especially if a reduction in to postage 2 cents were adopted, but those in favor of the new cards reply that the same was claimed when the postal cards were first proposed, and then, as now, letter postage was 3 cents. Should a reduction be made a larger sheet and envelope combined with a 2-cent stamp upon it would be among the things to follow.

Alabama is a warlike state, if we may judge from the report of the state auditor, which says that the total valuation of mechanical tools in that state foots up to $228,537; of farming implements to $77,036, while the valuation of guns, pistols, revolvers, dirks and other weapons amounts to $354,247,25, over $48,000 more than the combined investments in tools and farming implements. Alabama may therefore be called an exceedingly warlike state. There are one or two firearms within her borders for every citizen, but as many people are not provided with a superfluity of weapons it is likely that some of her citizens have more than their share.

The will of the late Congressman Godlove S. Orth, of Indiana, leaves his entire property to his wife, and appoints her executrix, with power to associate one or more with her. There are three children, but he bequeathed them nothing, saying: "I desire my dear children to know and feel that this disposition of my estate, in my judgment, the best under all the circumstances surrounding it, knowing they will find my said wife as much disposed to love and care for them, and deal justly by them as I have always felt and acted toward them myself." Mr. Orth was twice married—one son by his first wife and a son and daughter by his present widow surviving him.

Mr. Vennor, the Canadian weather guesser, has written a letter in reference to the prediction of Mr. Wiggin, of Ottawa, that in March there will be a storm of unprecedented fury and destructiveness. Vennor says that the storm period of the 8th to the 11th of March is likely to be a cold and wintry blast, but nothing very much out of the way, while on the 27th and 28th days of January, a severe period of stormy weather is likely to be experienced at and around New York and Boston, and generally throughout New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, and adjacent states. This storm is likely to be repeated about the same dates in February, but probably with less severity.

The sudden growth of the deposits in French savings banks is noted as a symptom of the depressed and distrustful frame of mind into which French investors have fallen owing to apprehensions of political perils. In the first ten months of last year these deposits increased by nearly 500,0000,000 francs, almost doubling in amount. A decrease in the deposits is predicted as soon as the feeling of misgiving gives way to one of confidence. This feeling of the French in regard to political complications has a counterpart in the United States once in a while, though not from the same cause. Here, it is distrust of business prosperity. After a period of great activity in business and lavish expenditures on all sides, there comes, often from slight causes, an impression that hard times are coming. Vast numbers begin to retrench expenses and save for a rainy day, which serves to bring on the very stagnation against which they are providing. After awhile, confidence is again restored, and things go on as usual.

The year 1882 has made its record and passed away. Taking a general review of its short line of twelve months, it can be said, that 1882 conducted itself very orderly and peacefully. It excited no wars, produced no great convulsions. Instead of writing its history in blood, or famine, or human suffering, the year 1882 brought much more of good than evil upon the world. It was a year of general prosperity. Crops yielded abundantly, and industry, [illegible] was no better, no worse, than many of its predecessors. The death of an old [illegible] every day life the only change is that which is made in the last figure indicating the year. The large number of virtuous resolutions count but little in the change, for they are not apt to be of but little binding force after the first week of the new year, though annually repeated.

"LUCKNOW" KAVANAGH.

The Death of the Brave Irishman Who Won the Victoria Cross by Saving Lucknow.

From the New York World.

One of the bravest of the brave men to whom has been awarded the precious little piece of gun-metal known as the Victoria Cross, has just died, receiving scarcely a word of notice from the English press. Thomas Henry Kavanagh's name is proceded by the fatal asterisk in O'Byrne's chronicle of the Victoria Cross, published nearly three years ago, and a still more accomplished contemporary historian records that "Lucknow" Kananagh "lost his life shortly after his heroic exploit, in battle with the enemy," yet he only passed away a few days ago. The official record of his is brief: "Mr. Thomas Henry Kavanagh, Assistant Commissioner in Oudh," we read, "on the 8th of November, 1857, then serving under the orders of Lieutenant-General Sir James Outram, in Lucknow, volunteered on the dangerous duty of proceding through the city to the camp of the commander-in-chief, for the purpose of guiding the relieving force to the beleagured garrison in the Residency, a task which he performed with chivalrous gallantry and devotion." In 1857 Mr. Kavanagh was a subordinate in one of the government departments at Lucknow. Already two attempts had been made to relieve the garrison of the Residency and to raise the seige. Havelock and his devoted little army had succeeded in entering the place, but the mutineers closed around it all the more closely and the garrison found its numbers increased, but with a daily diminishing supply of food. "On one side," we read, "were only a small prickly pear hedge and a narrow ditch, on another a low fence like that which ordinarily environs the common Indian compound, but the men who were behind these trifling obstacles never thought for a moment of flinching. They were half starved, many were suffering from dysentary, more were wounded, the hail of bullets under which they stood was unceasing, they had nothing to cheer them except their own grand spirits, relief could not come for some time, and every day made the foe more numerous and stronger but their courage never once gave out." Sir Collin Campbell was advancing, and it was one of the greatest importance that the exact position of the rebels and the best line of approach to their works should be communicated to him. But with the mutineers swarming around the residency there was a hundred chances to one that any messenger undertaking the desperate journey would be discovered, and discovery meant a brutal—probably a lingering death. Kavanagh, who had been fighting in the trenches among the civilians and had been wounded several times, volunteered to carry dispatches to Collin's camp, trusting to his knowledge of the native language and customs and to his disguise as a Badmash, or swashbuckler, who had come from Oudh or Delhi to join the champions of the good cause. Outram endeavored to persuade him from his mission by frankly pointing out its dangers, but Kavanagh persisted in tendering his service, and they were finally accepted. His features did not lend themselves readily to his disguise, but he succeeded so well with his burnt cork and other limited materials at his command that when towards sunset he presented himself at the general's quarters no one recognized him till he revealed himself, giving his costume and complexion a final touch, and hiding a note of introduction to Sir Collin Campbell in his turban, Kavanagh set off at nightfall, accompanied by a native spy, Kanaoji Lal, bidding good-by to Captain Hardinge at the river's edge. The messengers forded the stream and passed the insurgent sentries on the opposite bank. "It is a cold night," said the sentinel, as at last, satisfied that they were friends, he allowed them to march on.

"Yes; but it will be colder by and by," was Kavanagh's answer. They passed the ordeal of the picket further on as successfully after a rigid questioning, and passed on, at times marching shoulder to shoulder in the ranks with their enemies. Once again a guard was turned out and they were questioned narrowly; then they blundered into the enemy's lines at Dilkoo-shah Park, and improved the opportunity to count the guns and estimate the force; then they waded through a swamp for two hours and crossed the canal, the Irishman's feet being badly cut during the passage, and after other mishaps and labors, at 4 a. m. they passed through the last two rebel pickets and soon were overjoyed by being challenged by an English sentry. After receiving a glass of brandy from the officer of the picket, Kavanagh was directed to the commander-in chief's tent, where he met an elderly gentleman just leaving it of whom he asked the whereabouts of Sir Collin Campbell. "I am Sir Collin Campbell," said the astonished officer, eyeing the Sepoy uniform from head to foot; "who are you, sir?" Kavanagh handed to him Sir James Outram's note. "Is this true?" asked Sir Colin, with some distrust kindling in his keen eyes. "Do you doubt me, sir?" asked Kavanagh. "No, no," replied Sir Collin, "but it seems very strange." Kavanagh, who was worn out with anxiety and fatigue, asked that he might be allowed some sleep before recounting his adventure—a request willingly complied with. In a tent darkened for the purpose he first thanked God for his safety, and then slept, while the flags sent back a "yes" to the signal from the anxious garrison, "Is Kavanah safe?" Not until then was his wife, who had been wounded, informed of his deed and its success. During the advance and the severe fighting which followed until on the 17th the Residency was relieved, Kavanagh was with Campbell, advising and fighting, and was the first of the rescuing force to reach his former comrades. The rewards of his heroism were the first Victoria Cross given to a person not holding military rank and the appointment of Assistant-Commissioner in Oudh, where a few weeks later in company with Captain Dawson, he stormed, with a handful of native police and civilians, the fort of Sandela, in which a large force of rebels defeated at Lucknow had taken up its position.

Mr. Kavanagh was later appointed Registrar of Lucknow, and held that office at the time of his death. He went home on leave last spring, but in such ill health that he spent nearly the whole of his visit in the hospital. He was on the way to India when he died at Gibraltar, and was buried with military honors. Of an Irish family, "Lucknow" Kavanagh was born in the county of Cork. He doubtless has relatives in this [illegible] to fly to America after the [illegible] rebellion, in which he had taken an active part.

MARRIAGE.

A Georgia Editor's Lecture to Callow Lovers.

From the Rising Dawn (Ga.,) Gazette.

The sparkers are looked upon by parents generally as a nuisance, and often they are right. Nine-tenths of the sparking is done by boys who have not got their growth, and they look so green that it is laughable for the old fo'ks to look at them. They haven't generally a second shirt, and they are no more qualified to marry than a steer is to preach. And yet marrying is about the first thing they think of. A green boy without a dollar, present or prospective, sparking a girl regularly, and talking about marrying, is a spectacle for gods and men. He should be reasoned with, and if he will not quit it till he is able to support a wife, and to know whom he loves, and the difference between love and passion, he should be quarantined or put in a convent erected on purpose for such cases. Nine-tenths of the unhappy marriages are the result of green human calves being allowed to run at large in the society pastures without any yokes on them. They marry and have children before they do mustaches; they are fathers of twins before they are proprietors of two pair of trousers, and the little girls they marry are old women before they are twenty years old. Occasionally one of these gosling marriages turns out all right, but it is a clear case of luck. If there was a law against young galoots sparking and marrying before they have all cut their teeth, we suppose the little cusses would evade it in someway, but there ought to be a sentiment against it. I think it is time enough for these bantams to think of finding a pullet when they have raised money enough to buy a bundle of laths to build a hen house. But they see a girl that looks cunning, and they are afraid there is not going to be girls enough to go around, and then they begin to get in their work real spry; and before they are aware of the sanctity of the marriage relations they are hitched for life, and before they own a cook stove or a bedstead they have to get up in the night and go after the doctor, so frightened that they run themselves out of breath and abuse the doctor because he doesn't run too. It is about this time that a young man learns that he is a colossal fool, and as he flies around to heat water and bring in the bath-tub, and goes whooping after his mother or her mother, he turns pale around the gills; his hair turns red in a single night, and he calls heaven to witness that if he lives till morning which he has doubts he will turn over a new leaf and never marry again till he is older. And in the morning the green-looking "father" is around before a drug store is open, with no collar on, his hair sticking out all over, his eyes bloodshot, and his frame nervous, waiting for the clerk to open the door so that he can get some saffron to make tea. Less than a year ago he thought he was the greatest man that there ever was anywhere, but as he sits there in the house that morning with his wedding coat rusty and shiny, and his trousers frayed at the bottom, and his coat patched at the elbow, and the nurse puts in his arm a roll of flannel with a baby hid in it, he holds it as he would a banana, and as he looks at his girl wife he thinks there is not provisions enough in the house to feed a canary, a lump comes into his throat, and he says to himself that if he had it to do over he would leave that little girl at home to grow up with her mother and he would wait till he had $6 to buy flannel and $10 to pay a doctor.

Married Life in Turkey.

The Turk is commonly believed to be a sort of Bluebeard, but a writer in London Society says that it is not so, and that polygamy is the exception rather than the rule, as it is restricted to the wealthy classes. Members of the latter, however, often have four wives and a large number of conhubines. In points of etiquette, at least, the husband is the subject of many small tyrannies.

He must have no acquaintance with women other than those of his own harem, and should he observe slippers outside the harem door, he knows that ladies are visiting, and he therefore cannot enter. Then again, if perchance he strolls through the bazar, there must be no recoguition of his own women, though they may be throwing away his money right and left on silks and jewels.

European ladies are the objects of much attention and curiosity on the part of the women of the harem. A young English lady, seventeen years old of great personal attractions, some time since visited a harem accompanied by her mother and friends. The women questioned her, and would not believe that she had no childrdn or even a husband. One of the wives, who took a great fancy to her, threw her arms around her neck and entreated her to stay with them forever. She could have any husband she liked, and was even so kind as to specially recommend her own adding at the same time that she was sure that he would soon want another wife, and that she, the real wife, would much rather it was this nice English girl, then there would always be the pleasure of having her as a friend and companion. Here was a most decided offer. A firm refusal, however, of these honors caused much disappointment.

Will of a Parisian Journalist.

The will of the late William Galignani, the Paris journalist, is worthy of the private virtues which, since his death, have been generally ascribed to him. He left a considerable fortune, and 120,000f of it he bequeathed to the hospital and a like sum to the Orphanage of Corbier. He formerly declared that having made his fortune in a library and printing office, he gave 70,000 metres of land in Boulevard Bineau, together with rents to the amount of 70,000f. and two houses in Paris, of which the rents exceeded 100,000f. annually, for the establishment of a home for men of letters and retired librarians and printers over sixty years of age. This building, he directs, shall be constructed to accommodate 100 persons, 50 of whom will pay an annual fee of 500f., while the remaining 50 will be maintained free of cost.

The Latest Abduction Rascality.

A bold case of abduction is reported from St. Louis. Miss Zerelda Garrison, one of the belles of the city, was chloroformed by carondolet ruffians while going from her home to the Convent of the Sacred Heart. The brigands carried her away and communicated with her friends, demanding a reward for her return to her home. Detectives were employed, and the excitement was so great that her captors relented, and made haste to restore her to her family, who were frantic about her abduction. Two of the parties have been arrested, and ought to have some special punishment which would be a warning to others. The young lady is not yet able to [illegible]

Mr. Wm. W. Astor, the minister of the United States in Rome, is becoming [illegible] Italian [illegible] $400 [illegible] the victims of the late inundations.

MECCA.

The Holy City of the Mahommedans

None but Mahommedans are ever allowed to enter the Holy City of Mecca, containing the "Kaaba" or Shrine of the Prophet. Even Mahommedan women are excluded, and with the exception of the Saracene Princess, "Pearl Tree," who forced her way into Mecca, supported by thirty thousand lances, no woman has ever been known to enter the city. Many attempts have, however, been made by over-zealous Turkish women who, under various disguises, have effected an entrance, but none ever returned to give an account of their pilgrimage, as they were put to death immediately upon being discovered. At the present time no woman could ever pass the gates, as steps are taken which render such a profanation quite impossible. Whenever Christians or Jews have been caught inside the walls they have invariably paid for their curiosity with their lives, the most noted cases being those of Mr. Herbert Glenny, an English Orential scholar, who was stoned to death, and Abram Arensen, a Jew who was crucified. Within the last few years, however, three Christians have contrived successfully to visit the Holy City, and to note the proceedings of the Courban Baisane, or festivity of sacrifices, at which time hundreds of thousand of Moslem pilgrims flock there from every Mohammedan country under the sun. The first of these was the famous Hungarian Professor Vambery, who was followed by the well-known traveler, Capt. Burton, the latest visitor being Lieut. Ivan Milutine, a young Russian officer of great promise, and the following account is compiled from a most interesting letter, sent by the latter to a friend in this country:

Lieut. Milutine having heard that no Christian had ever succeeded in entering and leaving Mecca, determined to go there, and for this reason commenced studying Turkish several years ago. When he had learned to read and write, he went to Constantinople, where associating with the Turks, he became master of the language, and in order to test his strength, obtained apartments in a Turkish house, telling the inmates he was a Turk named Hassan-Ali; and finding that during the three months he lived there, he was never suspected of not being what he had represented himself to be, he commenced visiting the various mosques, and mixing with the Imams, or priests, thus learning the form of prayer and many other religious things, which no Turkish professor would care to impart to an infidel pupil.

Having made all the necessary preparations, he started from Scutari, opposite Constantinople, with the grand caravan, composed of fifteen thousand camels and between nine thousand and ten thousand pilgrims. He was accompanied by an old Turk, who wished to visit the Shrine of the Prophet, but who could not afford the expense, and in consideration of the fictitious Hassan Ali paying his share, he agreed to attend to the camels, look after the tent, cook and do all other work for his master. They had provided themselves with four camels, two of which carried the water skins, one the tent and equipment, while the remaining one carried the food. The pilgrims, in orthodox Koran style, voyaged all the way on foot. The journey lasted sixty-three days, during which time the number, both of men and beasts, was reduced by at least one third, on account of fatigue, privations and other hardships to which the caravan was subjected. The heat, while going through the Syrian and Arabian deserts, was so severe that the traveler's body became dangerously blistered, while the water in the skins so hot that it was impossible to drink it until far in the night, when it had cooled a little. Fever and dysentery decimated the travelers, and hundreds of camels and men were left to die in the desert on accout of the insufficiency of water and food. This, however, was not the worst, as during the journey the caravan was attacked by marauding Bedouins, no less than twenty-two times, who used to sweep down on detached bodies of pilgrims, killing them and decamping with their property. Many of the pilgrims are worth pillaging, as they carry large sums of money with them to defray the expenses of going and returning, besides which they generally carry abundant offerings for the shrine on their own account, as well as being intrusted with money and jewels by their friends, who, not being able to undertake the journey themselves, send presents to the Holy City by deputies. Seven times during each twenty-four hours a general halt was made for prayers, this being a Koran regulation not to be overlooked on any account.

Lieut. Milutine discovered that there were many systematic pilgrims who went and returned with the Great Caravan every year, not for the sake of devotion, but for robbery, the amount of property which was reported to the Sheik, or chief of the expedition, as missing at each halt, being of enormous value; and seldom, if ever, were the perpetrators discovered. The lieutenant lost nearly every portable article of which he was possessed, and when once he found a camp-stool, which had been stolen from him in another pilgrim's possession, he could not recover it as the holder declared having bought it from a man who the Bedouns "had sent to El-Wady," or Paradise, on the previous day. The most coveted article, however, was water; no amount of money could buy it in the desert, and should the water of the richest man give out he would have to lay down in the sand and die, as nobody would give him one drop, the idea of self-preservation being uppermost. The pilgrims resorted to all knds of subterfuge, villainy and even crime to possess themselves of their fellow-travelers' beverage, and Lieut. Milutine and his assistant kept guard over their stock in turns, ready to kill the first man that attempted to trifle with their liquid property.

When the journey was half completed a halt of one day was made for special devotion, during which the travelers changed their clothes for the "Ihram" or pilgrim costume of two large towels, and swore not to tie knots in their dress nor to oil their bodies, nor to cut their nails, hair or beard, nor to color the latter with henna, which is a favorite Arabian and Persian habit. During the whole of this day the voices of the pilgrims could be heard for miles in the desert shouting, "Here I am, O God, here I am! Here I am, O Unassociated One, here I am, for unto Thee belong prase, grace and empire, O Unassociated One."

This verse is one of the most beautiful in the Koran, the language being exceedingly rich, commencing "Labbaik Allah, humma labbaik." This prayer was repeated so often, people not unfrequently rushing up to their friends and [illegible] it at the ears [illegible] became a signal for merriment.

Long before they were even near the Holy City, they were met by the "Muttawaf," taking some hundred pilgrims under his charge. Having passed the barriers which marked the outermost limits of the city, where each pilgrim undergoes a minute examination, for reasons explained at the commencement of this article, they ascended some giant steps leading to a plateau, surrounded by rocks, some of which mask the view of the birthplace of the Prophet. This was at midnight, it was raining, and lightning played around the wearied visitors. Day after day they had watched its brightness from the dreary desert, and many a faithful Hadji had pointed out to his companions these fires, which were Heaven's witness to the sanctity of the spot. "Al Hamdu L'illah!" "Thanks to God! they had arrived at the Kaaba," to which every Moslem turns his face while in prayer since the days of Mahommed. The caravan camped on the plateau and soon after dawn arose the shout of "Labbaik! Labbaik!" upon which the disguised pilgrim, passing between the rocks, found himself in the chief street of Mecca, and approached the "Gateway of Salvation," one of the thirty-nine portals of the Temple of Al-Haram.

On crossing the threshold he entered a vast unroofed quadrangle, having on each side a broad colonnade, divided into three aisles by a multitude of slender columns, and rising to the height of about sixty feet. Surmounting each arch of the colonnade is a small dome—in all there are 120—and at different points arise seven familiar minarets, dating from various epochs, and varying both in altitude and architecture. The numerous pigeons which have their home within the Temple have been believed never to alight upon any portion of its roof, thus miraculously testifying to the holiness of the edifice.

In the center of the square area rises the far-famed "Kaaba," the funereal shade which contrasts vividly with the sunlit walls and precipices of the town. It is a cubical structure of massive stone, the upper portion of which is mantled by black velvet embroidered with silver and gold, the lower portion being hung with snow-white silk. At a distance of several yards it is surrounded by a balustrade provided with lamps, which are always lighted, and the space thus inclosed in the circuit-ground along which, day and night, crowds of faithful, performing the circular ceremony of Tawarf, realize the idea of perpetual motion, after which they advance to the black stone embedded in an angle of the Kaaba and kiss it, exclaiming, "Bismillah with Allahu Akbar"—"In God's name, and God is greatest." Then they commenced the usual seven rounds—three at a walking pace and four at a brisk trot—which was followed by two prayer-reflections at the tomb of Abraham, after which they drank the water of Zamzam, said to be the same which quenched the thirst of Hagar's exhausted son.

Besides the Kaaba, eight minor structures adorn the quadrangle; the well of of Zomzam, the library, the clock room, wherein hundreds of clocks are kept with the greatest regularity, it being considered a deadly sin to be a few seconds lateor early for certain prayers; the triangular staircase, and four ornamental resting-places for the orthordox sects of Hanafy, Shafy, Maliky and Honbaly. The morning duties terminated by the pilgrims walking and running seven times along the streets of Safah and Marwah, so named from the flight of seven steps at each of their extremities.

This course of devotion was continued during several days, on the third of which rumor went round that an infidel had contrived to enter the city, which made Lieutenant Milutine very uncomfortable, fearing that this might refer to himself. It subsequently became known that a German, who, it afterwards transpired, was a Beyrout merchant named Karl Kolb, had been recognized by a water-carrier from the same town, and immediately, upon the news being communicated to the Grand Shereef, the pseudo-pilgrim was arrested and brought before the Council of Priests, and on his refusing to be converted then and there to the Mahommedan faith, was taken out and stoned to death.

After a few days spent in visiting the slave market, the forts, the houses of the prophet and the Caliphs Ali and Abubakir, and minor places of interest, the pilgrims started on their six hours' journey to the mountain of Arifat, an hour's sojourn upon which, even in a state of unconsciousness, confers the rank of Hadji, which all pilgrims prefix to their name. It is a mountain spur of some two hundred and fifty feet in height, presenting an artificial appearance from the wall encircling it and the terrace on its slope, from which the high priest delivered a sermon before the pilgrims returned to Mecca. His auditors were indeed numerous, their tents being scattered over many miles of the country.

The festivity of sacrifices, called Kourban Bairam, was celebrated with great pomp, one sheep being killed for each adult within the holy walls, three days after which the return commenced. The caravan halted at the village of Musdalija, where each traveler gathered and washed seven pebbles, which were flung at three piles of whitewashed masonry known as the Sheitans (devils) of Muran. The following days the Great, the Middle and the Little Satans were again pelted, after which thousands of sheep were again sacrificed, and bequeathing to the unfortunate inhabitants of Munah the unburied and odorous remains of some five thousand sheep, the pilgrims, now fully made Hadgis, proceeded on their dreary and perilous journey.

Lieut. Milutine finishes his interesting letter by saying that the pilgrims are so poor on their return journey that not even the hungry Bedouins think it worth their while to attack them, a common saying amongst these robbers being that a charge of powder and a bullet are worth more than a returning pilgrim.

The Russian officer, instead of continuing his journey by land, made a present of all his equipment to his old servant, and bargained with a tribe of Bedouins, who for twenty golden Napoleons conducted him to Beyrout, whence he took steamer to Egypt.

Death of Ex-Senator Morrill of Maine.

Hon. Lot M. Morrill died the 10th. He suffered very little, and the last moments were without pain or a struggle. The members of his family and attending physicians were present at the last moments. The dying man recognized his family, and with his last breath attempted to bid them farewell, but with the word on his lips his spirit passed away. Lot M. Morrill was born in Belgrade, Kennebec county, Me., in 1815. He entered Waterville college 1834, but soon after studied law, and in 1839 was admitted to the bar. He was elected a member of the legislature in 1854, and of the senate in 1856, when he was chosen its president. In 1858 he was elected governor of Maine, and was re-elected in 1859 and 1860. In 1861 he was elected United States senator for the unexpired term of Hannibal Hamlin, who had been elected vice president.

Chief of Police Shipley, of Faribault, who was shot by Louis M. Sage, is exhibiting bad symptoms and his case is passing through a crisis which may result in serious consequences. His assailant, waived preliminary [illegible] of the condition of his victim.

A man registered as W. S. Muller was found dead in a Bowery hotel, New York. Among his effects were 366 shares of $100 each in the Chicago, Brazil & Ohio company.

FIELD AND FARM.

Recipes for Cooking.

Pickled Chicken—Boil chickens till tender enough for meat to fall from bones; put meat in a stone jar, and pour it over three pints of cold, good cider vinegar and a pint and a half of the water in which the chickens were boiled; add spices, if preferred, and it will be ready for use in two days.

New Way of Serving Oat Meal—Take a dessert teaspoonful of oat meal, place it in the morning in a tumbler, and fill up with new milk. Let it stand all day, and take it for supper or for a night cap. The grains will have been softened by their long soaking in the milk, and it can be eaten with a spoon. This is said by its advocates to be a specific against neuralgia, and is also soundly recommended for sedentary folks.

Scollaped potatoes make a nice dish for tea. Prepare in this proportion: Two cups of mashed potatoes, two tablespoonfuls of cream or milk, and one of melted butter; salt and pepper to taste. Stir the potatoes, butter and cream together, adding one raw egg. If the potatoes seem too moist, beat in a few fine bread crumbs. Bake in a hot oven for ten minutes, taking care to have the top a rich brown.

Rice Fritters—Boil some rice until it is soft, then roll it in your hands in cakes; dip them in beaten eggs, and then in Indian meal; see that they are covered with the meal. Then fry them in a little very hot lard. If to be served with meat, lay them around the edge of the platter; if for dessert, make a sauce with butter, sugar, and flour, and flavor it with Maderia wine and a very little grated nutmeg. Serve warm.

Oyster Fricassee—Wash and parboil twenty-five oysters in their own liquor. Drain them and strain the liquor. Melt a large tablespoonful of butter in a granite saucepan, and add one tablespoonful of flour; when well mixed, pour on slowly one cup of the strained oyster liquor, add one saltspoon of salt, a speck of cayenne, and one teaspoonful of lemon juice. Beat the yolks of two eggs light, pour the oyster sauce over them, stirring well. Add the oysters, and beat again, but do not boil. Serve on toast, if for breakfast or tea; in papers or patties, if for lunch or dinner.

Agriculture in Michigan.

There is no State of the Union where agriculture is more systematically pursued than in Michigan. The motto of the Michigan Farmer, "Practice with theory and science," is that of a large number of her farmers. There are, probably, more good sheep farmers in that State than can be found in any other—New York may be excepted. Thoroughbred cattle, also, abound. Michigan is the best wheat State in the country for its superficial extent. And less than forty-five years ago Michigan was a Territory, contesting with Ohio for the settlement of a boundary line, while the boats on the Erie canal were conveying toward her the Swiss and other settlers who have since caused her to bloom with prosperity. Many States which enjoy a superior climate have not prospered so rapidly as Michigan. Doubtless the best agricultural college in the country is that of Michigan.

Novelties in Cooking.

Macaroons—One pound and a quarter of almonds, blanched and pounded, with a little rose water added to moisten and flavor them. The whites of three eggs beaten very light, and the sugar stirred in gradually. Mix all thoroughly together, and drop on clean writing paper. Bake for about three minutes in a quick oven.

Raised Waffles—One quart of flour, one quart of sweet milk, five tablespoonfuls or about half a medium sized cup of yeast, at least one teaspoonful of salt. Mix well, and let it stand all night. In the morning stir in one tablespoonful of melted butter and two well beaten eggs. Bake in waffle irons, and eat without fear of pain or distress.

Mock Duck—Take the round of beefsteak, salt and pepper each side; prepare a dressing with either bread or crackers, with or without oysters. Lay it on the meat, sew up, and roast about an hour. If you do not see the wings and legs you will think you have roast duck.

Molasses Pound Cake—Take one cup of sugar and one cup of butter and beat to a cream; add three-quarters cup of molasses, two eggs, well beaten, one cup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of best soda, dissolved in the milk; into four cups of flour, well sifted, mix two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar. Stir altogether, then add a teacupful of raisins, well dredged with flour, a teacupful of currants, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one of cloves. This will make two round loaves.

Since the great outburst of sun spots in November, and the accompanying magnetic storms and auroras, the sun has shown very little disturbance, and on the day of the transit of Venus Old Sol's face shown free from any blemish except a few slight specks, although it was near the height of the spot period. Soon after the transit some disturbance of the solar surface was again visible, but the spots were very few until New Year's day. Then several groups appeared, and now the sun is evidently storm-driven once more. In one place the solar surface, over an area of hundreds of thousands of square miles, is pitted with chasms and ridged with fiery elevations. More auroral displays are likely to follow.

The English are at last beginning to appreciate some of our traveling conveniences, and to say that "it is curious that in England, the original home of steam-engines and railways, traveling should be more uncomfortable and less provided with not merely the necessities but even the primary comforts of existence than in any other civilized country." On the ground of originality in the arts and inventions, according to Wendell Phillips, probably Egypt may claim pre-eminence over most countries, but Egypt, like our transatlantic neighbor, seems to have neglected some opportunities.

Medical men have always differed as to whether the best medical treatment of frozen persons was by a gradual or a rapid application of heat. "To settle the matter," says Knowledge, "Laptchinski has made a series of very careful experiments upon dogs, with the following results: Of twenty animals treated by the method of gradual resuscitation in a cold room, fourteen perished: of twenty placed at once in a warm apartment, eight died; while of twenty immediately put into a hot bath, all recovered." These experiments will probably influence the practice of medical men in Russia and Northern Europe, where the question of the best means of restoring animation in persons suffering from excessive cold is of frequent occurrence every winter.

A gentleman now residing in Regina, the capital of Assiniboine, gives some interesting details regarding that new and rapidly developing section of British America. Regina is 300 miles west of Winnipeg, and during the last three months its population has increased from a mere handful to 1,500 persons. The hotel at Regina is kept by two young Englishmen, nephews of the Duke of Rutland, who wait on the guests themselves.

The sales of wheat in New York in 1882 exceeded 650,000,000 bushels, for the reported sales in the produce exchange alone were over 647,000,000 bushels. As the actual receipts were but 45,000,000 bushels, the balance represents gambling. The figures further show that the sales of corn amounted to nearly 450,000,000 bushels, which is nearly three times the quantity received. The sales of oats exceeded 150,000,000 bushels, though less than 16,000,000 bushels were received. Over 30,000,000 bales of cotton were sold, and the entire quantity delivered, both on future contracts and on spot sales, was less than 500,000 bales, so that the gambling transactions were to those that may possibly have been wholly for legitimate purposes as 60 to 1. In the oil market, however, the case was even worse.

Hauling Out Manure.

Farmers who delight in avoiding work, and especially hard work, usually advocate hauling out manure in winter, and either spreading it on the snow and frozen ground, or placing it in heaps in the field, where it will be wanted in spring when plowing time comes. It certainly does not require much experience or knowledge of chemistry to discover that either of the above practices is wasteful, and that the loss of the fertilizing properties of the manure so treated must be considerable. The liquid portions are likely to be carried away by rains before the ground thaws in spring, and when put in small heaps and spread over the surface of the ground, decomposition almost entirely ceases. If the roots of plants could masticate their food like an ox, then some strong manure might answer almost as well as the finely disintegrated and decomposed. But, unfortunately for the [illegible] farmer, rootlets cannot absorb or assimilate nutriment except as a liquid or gaseous form; consequently the sooner the manure approaches [illegible] the more readily and rapidly does it stimulate the growth of plants.

A Connecticut man worth $1,000,000 didn't leave a shilling to any of his relatives. He explained that but for them he would have been worth $5,000,000.

THINGS IN GENERAL.

The growth of the anthracite coal trade has been something marvelous. In 1842 only 1,000,000 tons were mined. Ten years ago an effort was made to reach what was considered the highest point that could possibly be attained—namely: the shipment of 20,000,000 tons. This was considered as much as the market could take at any time. The product fell short of that quantity, however, as the output for 1872 was 19,669,778 tons. Now it is nearly 30,000,000 tons. The year has been a busy one, with prospects of a busier one next year.

According to the revised penal code of New York, it is a misdemeanor, subjecting the offender to a year's imprisonment, or a fine of $500, or both, "to get on any car or train while in motion, for the purpose of obtaining transportation thereon as a passenger." It would not take long to raise enough money to pay off the national debt with the fines collected for offenses against this statute in the city of New York alone—if they could collect them.

The statistics of crime for the year just closed are not very cheerful, but to do that much criticised section, the South, full credit, it ought to be said that of the 730 murders of the year only 212 were committed in the South, while of the 101 executions 53 were in the Southern States. Both as to the proportion of crimes and the execution of the laws upon murderers, this is a better showing than could have been anticipated.

The annual statistics of Rhode Island savings banks show that the working people are quite prosperous. The deposits have increased $1,548,968 in the past year, the total amount being $48,320,661. The number of depositors has increased 9,481, making the total number of depositors 112,471.

The first shoe ever pegged by a machine has come into the possession of the Essex Institute of Salem, Mass. It is accompanied by a letter from the late Samuel Preston, the inventor and patentee of the machine, detailing its history and the story of its manufacture, and also the original letters patent. The latter is inscribed on parchment, and has the signatures of Andrew Jackson, president; Edward Livingston, secretary of state, and Roger B. Taney, attorney general, and bears date March, 1833.

Of the 40,000 envelopes sent out by the managers of the Baltimore Home for the Friendless, for Christmas offerings, but 1,016 were returned. In those returned were three $5 bills, seven $2 bills, and forty-seven $1 bills; thirty-five 50-cent pieces, 177 25-cent pieces, 433 10-cent pieces, 350 5-cent pieces, thirty-nine 3-cent pieces, 742 cents—in all $207.45.

Some new ideas of Siberia were developed in a lecture by Mr. George Kennan, in New York, the other evening. He said that if the United States and every other country in Europe except Russia were put into Siberia there would still remain 1,000,000 square miles uncovered, and that a broad belt of land extending from the southern part of Siberia to what was known as the Central Forest was one of the most fertile and genial places in the Russian empire. The life of the exiles is by no means so bad as imagined. Good homes and farming utensils are provided, and there are no exiles in the very cold parts of the country. The only ones who work in mines are such as would either be hung or imprisoned in other countries. Most of the political prisoners are sent to Tomsk and Omsk, the former a rich town of 20,000 inhabitants, with a public library, a boy's military school and a ladies' seminary. The exiles acquire property and live handsomely.

Surprising a Burglar.

When a burglar is surprised it is not usually in the way of kindness. Ordinarily the man whose house he enters feels more revengeful against him than the petty criminal, and takes extreme measures to punish him. And reasonably, too, the burglary is one of the most serious offences; and the person committing it is nearly always a desperate criminal, who will not shrink from murder if doing it will secure him from arrest.

The sensation of waking up in the middle of the night and seeing a ruffian of this sort in one's room would unnerve most people, and few would have the courage to do what Miss Linda Gilbert did recently in New York.

Miss Gilbert is widely known for her efforts to improve the condition of criminals and to help released prisoners. It seems not quite in harmony with our ideas of even the hardened nature of criminals, that she should wake at one o'clock one morning and see one of the very class which she has most befriended busily rifling the drawers in her bedroom. She did not scream from fear as most women would have done, however, and she did not have any vindictive feelings because she was being wronged. What she did she has thus told to a reporter of the New York Herald:

I slid noiselessly out of my bed, and just as the man's hand fell upon the watch my own hand fell upon his shoulder. He drew back in surprise and dropped the watch.

"Hallo!" I said, "don't you know that you are robbing one of your friends?"

"N—no," he stammered. "I don't know who you are."

"Well, I'm Linda Gilbert."

"Are you?" he asked, looking me then straight in the face. "I have heard of you, but you never saw me in prison. I have never been in prison."

The reporter asked, "Weren't you afraid of him, Miss Gilbert?"

"No; why should I be?"

"Not a little bit?"

"No; I am not afraid of the worst man in the world. He said to me, 'I must go; I haven't taken anything.'"

"No you must not go," I replied. "You must sit down a little while, I want to talk with you."

"He sat down as a child might have done, and I declare he looked as pleased as a child when I offered to talk with him. I turned up the light and took a good look at him. He was a tall thin man, with sandy hair. His clothes were scanty, and his hands looked like those of a working man. He seemed sickly, and said he was threatened with hemorrhage of the lungs. When he coughed I pushed the cuspidor toward him, and the next morning the chambermaid told me there was blood in it."

"I asked the man many questions, and he answered them all without seeming evasion. He said his name was Robert White, that he lived at such a number Mulberry Street, that he had a wife and three children. His wife suffered with ague, and his children were sickly."

"He had been on a strike, he said, and after that could get no work. His family were starving, and one day he had an opportunity to steal a watch. He did so, and had stolen two others since."

"He began to think it was the only way he had of living. It had been his intention, he said, to steal enough to take his family somewhere in the country. He could not support them in New York."

"My father occupied the room underneath this, and a brother of Mr. Theodore Thomas was in the house. I was afraid of awakening them, because my father is extremely nervous, and Mr. Thomas hates burglars and would either have shot this one, or have had him arrested."

"My secretary, a lady slept up stairs, and I called her. We went to the kitchen and filled a market basket with things to eat—two ducks that I had ordered for Sunday's dinner, some vegetables, bread and so on. This basket I gave to the man, together with a five-dollar bill and some advice, and he went out by the front door with as glad a face as one could wish to see."

Many persons, though they may appreciate Miss Gilbert's goodness of heart, will condemn her method of dealing with a burglar, for poverty does not excuse crime; but kindness is always worth a trial, and even if it does not reform a man, it opens a bad heart to better thoughts and impulses. It is to be hoped that in this instance it will lead to one man's reformation.

The Czar is again having himself hedged about with guards armed to the teeth. This man could not be more uncomfortable if he were to be president of the United States.

IN A GARDEN.

Pale in the pallid moonlight,
White as the rose on her breast,
She stood in the fair rose garden,
With her shy, young love confest.

The roses climbed to kiss her,
The violets purple and sweet,
Breathed their despair in the fragrance
That bathed her beautiful feet.

She stood there, stately and slender,
Gold hair on her shoulders shed,
Clothed all in white, like the visions
When the living behold the dead.

There, with her lover beside her,
With life and with love she thrilled,
What mattered the world's wide sorrow
To her with her joy fulfilled?

Next year in the fair rose garden
He waited alone and dumb,
If perchance from the silent country
The soul of the dead would come,

To comfort the living and loving,
With the ghost of a lost delight,
And thrill into a quivering welcome
The desolate, brooding night.

Till softly a wind in the distance
Began to blow and blow;
The moon bent nearer and nearer,
And solemn, and sweet, and slow,

Came a wonderful rapture of music,
That turned to her voice at last;
Then a cold, soft touch on his forehead
Like the breath of the wind that passed.

Like the breath of the wind she touched him,
Thin was her voice and cold,
And something that seemed like a shadow
Slipped through his feverish hold.

But the voice had said, "I love you
With my first love and my last,"
Then again that wonderful music
And he knew that her soul had passed.

—Louise Chandler Moulton.

MY FIRST FEE.

CHAPTER I.

I fear that I am not saying anything very original when I mention that my father was a poor clergyman. There are hundreds of poor clergymen; naturally their sons can be reckoned by thousands. I know there were thirteen of us, and how we all managed to find standing room in our small North Country vicarage seems a marvel to me when I look back upon that time of growing up. And then the struggle to settle the professions of eight sons! Mine was, however, soon fixed upon. My aunt's husband, a Scotchman, and an M. D. in a country town, said he would bring me up to his own profession, provided I eventually became his partner, and in this manner repaid him the cost of my education.

The proposal sounded well; anyhow, it was accepted. But ah! the realization was different. He never praised me when I worked myself almost to death in order to pass brilliant examinations, and only grunted when at last I came to settle down with him in a desperately dull town, after having come out first on the list at Edinburgh.

My uncle cared naught for my being Arthur Merrifield, M. D. I was to be his white slave, and repay with hard labor, what he had spent on me. I honestly tried my best to please him. The practice increased considerably, but time went on, and still my uncle never spoke a word about money affairs. I was more than a partner as to work, but no partner at all as to pay.

And yet I felt that I could make a name, also a fortune, if only I could get a fair chance. And the five girls at home were expecting grand things of me which looked as if they might never be realized; for even if I persevered till my uncle died and left me his practice, I might by that time have become gray with age and unable to begin to make my way.

At last I could bear it no longer and one day I determined to come to an understanding with him. I am sorry to say this ended in a regular quarrel, and I declared I would seek my fortune in London. My uncle called me all sorts of names, which, as they were the reverse of complimentary, I will not repeat, and I respectfully disagreed with him. His last words were:

"I should like to know, sir, how you are going to find a patient in London?" I did not answer him, for I was perfectly unable to do so, but I had courage and perseverance. "Where there's a will there a way," I thought; and thus I left my uncle's house, knowing well enough that I never should see a penny of his money.

I will pass over the many difficulties I next encountered; the applause of the other twelve as to my conduct, and the regrets of my father, who had fancied that I, at least, was off his mind, and lastly, the difficulty of finding any one to lend me some money wherewith to make a start. I meant to begin at once in good style; nothing venture nothing have, and I was determined to have one of the best practices in town.

At last a part of my dream was realized. But yet it was all very well to be the occupant of a respectable looking house in a quiet London square; to have gone to the expense of a brass plate on which was neatly engraved "Dr. Arthur Merrifield;" further to have engaged a worthy, middle aged female to answer the door, if the door bell had ever been rung and the master inquired for. Alas! I was beginning to feel depressed in mind because no patient appeared, and no fees filled my pockets.

I had told the five girls at home that my house would soon be besieged at all hours of the day and night. I had even a night bell attached, which rung in a deafening manner close to my ears as I lay in bed; and, best of all, I had contrived a peep hole through my window shutter, in order to distinguish the rank of the visitor who disturbed my slumbers. But up till now I had slept peacefully night after night, and I might have slept all day if I had so wished it, for no patients had come to ask me to cure them.

"And yet," I thought, as I paced the floor of my consulting room, where no consultation had ever taken place, "and yet that rich young Jones promised that he would recommend me to the first of his relations who fell ill. The constitution of the Jones family must be terribly good, for I am sure the fellow meant what he said; he is good nature itself. Perhaps I have been a fool after all, and I had better have stayed with my uncle, where, at least, my food cost nothing!"

You must understand that my spirits had reached far below zero to be able, even in my most private thoughts, to wonder anything of the kind. And, curiously enough, it was at this very moment that my front door bell was suddenly rung, in a furious manner. I very nearly rushed out to open the door myself, only I was met by Mrs. Davis, who had run up from below, almost as much excited as I was at this unprecedented event.

"Show the visitor into the consulting room, Mrs. Davis," I whispered, "and say you'll see if I am disengaged."

I retired into a small study next to the consulting room, and separated from it by folding doors. It was here I had my meals, and besides my bedroom, it was at present the only furnished room in the house. But hardly had I closed the door when I recognized the loud, jovial tones of "young Jones," who rather unceremoniously entered my den.

Tom Jones was the son of a rich brewer, and knowing very well that he would come in for heaps of money, had considered it would really be waste of time to settle to any profession. He was, however, a good natured, generous youth, delighted to do a kindness, and with no greater vice than a love of doing nothing useful.

"Hello, Merrifield!" he exclaimed, "how are you? Worked to death, I expect, since you set up on your own hook? I've only come to town this very day, but I made a point of hunting you up, as I promised. I came at lunch time for fear otherwise of finding you closeted with some rich hypochondriac."

"I am not very busy just now," I answered, "but I am delighted to see you at anytime."

"Well, how many fees have you taken?" asked the irrepressible Jones. "Of course London is already ringing with your praises." I wished he would talk on some other subject, but truth compelled me to answer, carelessly:

"No, no, not yet; these are early days. The truth is I have very few patients. To be quite open with you, my dear fellow, you are my first."

Jones jumped up, pulled a face, and then gave his chest a mighty slap, intimating he was perfectly sound in that direction.

"My dear doctor, I wish I could think there was anything the matter with me, but, upon my word, I never felt better in my life. I haven't a pain or an ache about me. However, if the case is as you say, you won't quite despise my news; I fear it is not worth more than a guinea fee, but it may lead to more. My rich old uncle, Jonathan Dillon, is coming to consult you this very afternoon, because I told him you were the very man he wanted, but I just looked in to tell you that he is very crotchety, and you must just manage him properly. As to his ailments, I don't believe they are of much consequence, because he has been just the same ever since I was in arms. Never looks a day older."

"I'll do my best professionally," I said, secretly not much believing this rich man would turn up. "As to managing him, I am afraid that is not in my line."

"Well, that's a pity, because if he were to take a fancy to you, you would want no other recommendation. He'll recommend you right and left, and the whole Dillon class are disgustingly rich. And all inherit asthma or bronchitis. Fact."

I began to express my thanks, for, in spite of his off-hand manner, I felt sure Jones had taken some trouble about me, but he only laughed at my gratitude.

"Don't mention it. Besides, old Dillon may take a dislike to you. However, he mustn't find me here; perhaps he wouldn't believe I had come to consult you, though I did tell him you were the cleverest fellow in London. And so you are, in my opinion; I wouldn't mind telling the queen as much if I had the chance." And then he was gone. But no, once more he turned back.

"I say, Merrifield, old Dillon's daughter is sure to come with him; he never goes out without her; a perfect slave he makes of that girl."

It was toward 4 o'clock on a winter's afternoon that a carriage and pair dashed up to my door; then a grand footman jumped down from the box and gave the correct announcement of my first patient; I had just time to escape to my den before the front door was opened. I heard voices, then a loud cough, then doors being closed. Yes—my first patient had come. In another moment his card was handed to me, and on it was written:

"Mr. Jonathan Dillon."

CHAPTER II.

I entered the room in my most professional manner, and looking straight before me at once saw what was unmistakably "old Dillon," but so much wrapped up that very little more than a quarter of his face was visible. I can honestly say I never noticed Miss Dillon till her father himself waved a small, fat hand in her direction, saying:

"My daughter, Dr. Merrifield; she always comes with me wherever I go, for I am so infirm I don't think it safe to be left alone—but she enjoys excellent health." This last remark was said in a most deplorable tone, and as I turned I almost started with surprise, for old Dillon's daughter was a small, delicately made girl, who could not be much more than seventeen years old. Her forehead was encircled by the most golden hair I had ever seen and her face, though not what could be called extremely beautiful, was yet one of the sweetest I had ever gazed at. The expression was so simple, the large blue eyes were so innocent and shy, that for a moment I was so completely lost in wondering how such a man as the one before me had any right to possess such a daughter. Miss Dillon was evidently very retiring, and at this moment also feeling de trop.

"I dare say, Dr. Merrifield," she said, hurriedly, blushing up to the roots of her hair, "that there is a room I might sit in while you hold your consultation. Papa never likes me to leave him alone a minute, for fear anything should happen. Anywhere will do." I bowed and rang the bell, saying in as calm a tone as possible:

"Show Miss Dillon into the study." The vision of fair hair having disappeared, I gave myself up to the examination of my patient. After a careful inquiry, I came to a conclusion which made me certain that this was the last time I should see Mr. Dillon. The truth being there was nothing much the matter with him, that the old man was a regular hypochondriac—in fact, that all his ailments were imaginary. But yet, come what might, I must speak the truth; even for the sake of further fees I must not give a dishonest opinion. I would not be the first of the thirteen to act a lie.

Mr. Dillon now began to give me a minute account of his ailments, and to repeat the advice of various doctors.

"And now Dr. Merrifield, I feel sure you will agree with me in thinking it absolutely imperative that I should leave England at once, to cure this troublesome cough."

If only I could have agreed with him; but no.

"Quite the contrary," I said calmly, "I think you should stay in England, the finest and most healthy climate for a constitution like yours."

"Bless me! bless me!" ejaculated Mr. Dillon, looking distressed. "Do you really think so?"

"Without a shadow of doubt, sir."

"But about exercise? I ought to take very little, of course?"

"Not at all; the more you walk the better it will be for you."

"You are quite unique, sir, in your opinion—remarkable! But about a prescription, doctor? I suppose you will write one for me, to allay this cough, for instance?"

"No," I answered, "any ordinary lozenge will suffice." I know now I had signed my death-warrant—or rather I thought I knew, for what was my surprise when Mr. Dillon exclaimed:

"My dear sir, you are the first physician who has given me no prescription! I believe you understand my case. I hope I may come and consult you as often as I feel the need of it, which need, I grieve to say, occurs frequently."

I was amazed. Curiously enough, for once the truth had pleased the old man, but now I was obliged to answer:

"I am sure you will find it quite unnecessary to come again, unless some unforeseen—"

"Tut, tut, Dr. Merrifield, not one of my many medical advisers ever told me not to come again. I assure you I shall come again, whatever you may say, and many times, too; and I hope to send others of the family here. We all have wretched constitutions; all except Lucia; I've often wanted her to see a doctor, but it's no good; the girl never complains, even of headache."

This time I really smiled. "I am sure we doctors are only too glad to see a lady in perfect health. The present excited life which many of them lead—" but Mr. Dillon was not listening to me, for he suddenly turned round (for he had risen to leave), coughed violently, and then, after a nervous fumbling among the pockets of his great coat, he said:

"Bless me! I had nearly forgotten an important little matter. Believe me, sir, I never gave a fee with greater pleasure or more gratitude." He pressed his fat hand into mine, and I felt a small round thing slipped dexterously into my palm. I then went to release the vision of fair hair from my den, and at once hoped that if Mr. Dillon did come again Miss Lucia would always accompany him. I escorted the pair to the front door, and just as Mr. Dillon had entered the carriage his daughter made a pretense to run back for a glove.

"Please forgive me, Dr. Merrifield," she said, looking right up into my face with a most anxious expression on her sweet countenance. "Please forgive me, but what do you really think of papa?"

"In excellent health, Miss Dillon; pray don't be anxious." But before she could say any more her father called her impatiently, and she was gone with just one sweet smile and a "Thank you so much," for all the world as if I had just cured her father of some obstinate disease.

And now, clasping my first fee, I returned to my room. There I unclasped my hand, and in the middle of my palm lay a bright, hard, yellow, ginger lozenge!

The expectation had been great, and the realization was so small that I burst out laughing at my own hard luck and my discomfiture. Yet not for a moment did it enter my head to acquaint my patient with his mistake. I felt sure if I did so the vision of golden hair would blush with confusion, even though I did not see her and the blue, truthful eyes would look troubled.

No, my first fee was not worth a guinea, but such as it was, I did not hate it, because—ah, well, I might well call myself a fool for even fancying that I, Arthur Merrifield, penniless and unknown, should for a moment dream that I had fallen in love at first sight with my rich patient's only daughter.

I put the lozenge away in a box, and that night I again slept the sleep of a feeless physician.

CHAPTER III.

The next day I found myself thinking of a vision of fair hair, instead of taking in the sense of a clever treatise on the anatomy of the hand which certainly could in no way be connected with the events of the day before. Curiously enough, however, about 11 o'clock a cab drove up to the door, and what was my astonishment—I need hardly say pleasure—when Miss Dillon, followed by an elderly maid, made her appearance. There she stood, as fair and soft and beautiful as the day before, but, if possible, more shy and embarrassed. The little hand she held out to me trembled visibly as she said:

"Oh, Dr. Merrifield, can you forgive me for disturbing you this morning? I don't know how I made up my mind to come, but I felt I must, even if, if—" She paused, and tears almost came into her blue eyes, while I could think of no words suitable enough to set her mind at rest, being ignorant of what she wanted to say.

"Indeed, Miss Dillon, if there is anything I can do for you I shall be delighted; so I beg you will not apologize for troubling me."

"It isn't that exactly," she answered, once more looking at me in a most distressed manner.

"Perhaps you require further particulars as to your father's health. I must repeat what I said yesterday—"

"Oh, thank you, it was so kind of you; he was much better last night; I know you will do him good; but that was not what I wanted to ask you—oh, dear! you will think me so rude, or else an impostor, or—or—"

"Impossible!" I said more vehemently than the case required.

"I don't know how to begin; I mean, perhaps you don't know the peculiar way papa keeps his accounts!"

I was startled at this question. Remembering the yellow lozenge in a box, I thought I could say that I did not know one of Mr. Dillon's peculiar ways of paying fees, but not for the world would I tell this blushing, shy bewitching girl before me the truth.

"I don't presume—" I began.

"Oh, no, I am sure you don't—I was going to tell you about it. Papa always makes his confidential man, Baker, put the same change every morning into his pockets, and in the evening, when Baker turns out the pockets, he just puts down in a book what is missing, and makes up the number of the coins the next morning. He does it just the same every morning."

I was getting rather puzzled myself now, and could think of nothing more original to say than—

"Indeed!"

"Yes, it's quite true, or you see I shouldn't have known about it." Here the fair vision blushed still more. "Baker puts in a sovereign, a half sovereign, a crown piece—he finds these rather difficult to get sometimes—half a crown, a shilling, a sixpence, a fourpenny piece, a threepenny piece, a penny, a halfpenny and a farthing."

"A very complicated way of keeping one's money, isn't it? or, perhaps, complicated for Baker," I said, feeling it perfectly impossible to repress a smile, though Miss Dillon's sweet, earnest mouth kept so grave.

"No, it is quite simple when one understands, because Baker knows exactly what a sovereign, a half-sovereign—and all the rest comes to—I forgot what it is—but oh, Mr. Merrifield! Baker knew yesterday we had been to consult a new physician, and in the evening there was only a threepenny bit and a farthing missing, and so—and so I knew—I mean Baker knew—and he told me that papa had given you something by mistake. It wasn't the farthing, I can account for that, and—but was it the threepenny piece, or—?"

"Pray, dear Miss Dillon, don't distress yourself about such a little matter," I said hastily. "Any time will—"

"Oh, no, but papa thinks he paid you, because he said to me he never gave a fee with so much pleasure, so now I begin to think he must have—given you—" Miss Dillon quite gasped, so that I hastened to fill in her pause, this time feeling quite distressed at her trouble.

"Your father gave me a very good ginger lozenge, Miss Dillon; one of those little mistakes which will occur now and then. Pray don't make yourself the least uneasy about it."

"How very kind you are," she said, again holding out her hand, which I took, and forgot to let go till she had done speaking. "I felt sure it must be that, and then I thought perhaps you would think us impostors, and I knew you would be too much of a gentleman to mention it, and so—do you think I was wrong? I came off with Mrs. Brown this morning and made up my mind I would explain the mistake, only it was so dreadful. But I don't mind, now that you look so kind about it. And then, would you do me a great favor, Dr. Merrifield? Would you mind not appearing to know anything about it, or that I came, or anything, because papa doesn't know I am out; he is not down yet; and he would be so distressed, he might never come again, and I should be so sorry, as you suit him exactly."

"Pray, don't call this a favor," I said, as gravely as I could. "I think you will believe me when I say that, without even knowing your wishes on the subject, I should never have mentioned the—the lozenge."

"I don't know how to thank you! Now I must go." And then Miss Dillon put that small gloved hand into her muff and drew it out again, holding it out toward me once more, and this time I felt a little square bit of paper in my hand. Somehow our eyes met, and in spite of the gravity of the occasion we both laughed, feeling, I am sure, we should never again be afraid of each other, as she said:

"Please, Dr. Merrifield, don't laugh at me. Is this the right way to give a fee, because I must tell you this is the first time in my life I have ever had to give a fee. I suppose some day I shall be ill and want a doctor, but I never, never have wanted to go to one before. And it wasn't for myself this time, was it? You will bear witness—I mean, I hope you won't mention it; good by. Now, Brown, I am ready."

And just as a ray of sunshine sometimes comes into one's room, glimmers, dances and illuminates the place for a time, and then suddenly disappears, so Lucia Dillon had come and gone, and that noisy four-wheeler took off my vision of fair hair, leaving me with a golden sovereign and a new shilling wrapped in a small half sheet of paper, on the top of which was stamped the address of their London house. I folded that piece of paper and put it away in a pocket book among my treasures, such as my dear mother's first letter to me at school, and the flower that a little girl of seven years old had dropped when I, a nine-year-old urchin, had fallen desperately in love with her. There was nothing there unworthy to lie next to the paper which Lucia Dillon's fingers had touched.

Later in the day I received a note from Mr. Dillon, begging me, if I were not too much engaged, to come and see him, as he felt very unwell. And if I would do him the great favor of dining and spending the evening with them he would be very grateful, for he saw so few people on account of his wretched constitution.

Well, I went, and spent a very happy evening. It was only the first of many more, at least during this first season. But Mr. Dillon was as good as his word; from the day of his first visit my practice slowly but surely increased, and though there were years of up hill work, yet it is perfectly true that "ce n'est que le premier pas qui coute," I had at last got a chance, and I seized it. I worked with double energy, because at the bottom of my soul I had another object besides the one of making the five girls at home proud of me: I wanted a small, fair, blue-eyed Lucia to be proud of me, and I wanted to be able to lay at her feet all that is best and grandest in this life. But she was a rich man's daughter, and I was a struggling physician.

It was not till I had freed myself of all debt—and though still a poor man I was comparatively rich, for I had a good and increasing practice—that at last I made up my mind to ask Lucia to be my wife. I should not have had the face to do it even then, only a young, good-for-nothing aristocrat was perpetually coming to the house, and I knew that if Lucia, so young, simple and innocent, became the wife of that man, her life would be miserable. The fear of this, and some amount of jealousy, perhaps, made me speak out one day. I shall never forget Lucia's face when I had said some strong, earnest, passionate words. She put her little hand once more into mine, and looked up with her beautiful and truthful eyes, and half sobbed:

"Oh—do you really mean it? Because, somehow, I think I have—loved you ever since"—

"Ever since you gave me my first fee, my darling," I said, as I drew her beautiful head on my shoulder and—well never mind the rest. "Well, Lucia," I added, "I loved you the first moment I saw you. So you see I loved you long before you cared for me." But Lucia, who is just a little matter of fact, shook her head decidedly, and said that that was all nonsense.

There was still the question as to what Mr. Dillon would say about it, but our true love, which had had to wait so long, this time ran smoothly. Mr. Dillon, who still suffered from his wretched constitution, was delighted at Lucia's choice, and said all kinds of complimentary things about my rising fame and my other qualities. And so we were married, and the five girls from home were bridesmaids, though they soon afterward married from our house under Lucia's care. And though I often tell Lucia that the last person she should have married was a popular physician, considering she is never ill, yet she always shakes her pretty golden head and says gravely:

"But, perhaps, Arthur, some of the children might inherit papa's wretched constitution."

As to the story of the ginger lozenge, Lucia and I kept that a secret until Mr. Dillon died. He left Lucia all his money—and so ends this true story of my first fee.

Where He Took His Cue.

Special Telegram to the Pioneer Press.

WAUPACA, Wis., Jan. 12.—A match game of billiards at Frank Stout's billiard parlors drew out a large number of amusement-loving people. The contestants were E. M. Pavey of Stevens Point and Eugene Morley of this city. The game was for 500 points, which resulted in favor of Pavey, Morley making 453. The highest run was by Pavey, he making forty-six billiards. A cue, with silver ornaments and handsomely engraved, was presented to the winner by Mr. Stout.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE.
The Best and Cheapest Hair Dressing.
It kills dandruff, allays irritation, and promotes a vigorous growth of the hair.
Burnett's Flavoring Extracts are invariably acknowled the purest and best.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

The farmer came in from the field one day,
His languid step and his weary way,
His bended brow, and his sinewy hand,
All showing his work for the good of the land;
For he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
All for the good of the land.

By the kitchen fire stood his patient wife,
Light of his home and joy of his life,
With face all aglow and busy hand,
Preparing the meal for her husband's band;
For she must boil,
And she must broil,
And she must toil,
All for the sake of the home.

Sun shines bright when the farmer goes out,
Birds sing sweet songs, lambs frisk about,
The brook babbles softly in the glen,
While he works bravely for the good of men;
For he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
All for the good of the land.

How briskly the wife steps about within—
The dishes to wash, and the milk to skim,
The fires go out, flies buzz about—
For dear ones at home her heart is kept stout;
There are pies to make,
There is bread to bake,
And steps to take,
All for the sake of the home.

When the day is o'er and the evening has come,
The creatures are fed and the milking is done,
He takes his rest 'neath the old shade tree,
From the labor of the land his thoughts are free;
Though he sows,
And he hoes,
And he mows,
He rests from the work of the land.

But the faithful wife, from sun to sun,
Takes the burden up that's never done;
There is no rest, there is no pay,
For the household good she must work away;
For to mend the frock,
And to knit the sock,
And the cradle to rock,
All for the good of the home.

When autumn is here, with chilling blast,
The farmer gathers his crop at last,
His barns are full, his fields are bare,
For the good of the land he ne'er hath care,
While it blows,
And it snows,
Till the winter goes,
He rests from the work of the land.

But the willing wife, till life's closing day,
Is the children's, the husband's stay,
From day to day she has done her best,
Until death alone can give her rest;
For after the test
Comes the rest,
With the blest,
In the farmer's heavenly home.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Home Amusements.

The old adage that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is a true one. A little harmless fun interspersed with the daily routine and study in the family circle, with now and then a few invited friends added to its number, helps much to make home attractive. As the children grow up and leave their father's house, memories of such pleasant hours spent in social enjoyment, when father and mother and all had a good time together, will always abide with them.

There are numerous games and simple tricks which are very entertaining and produce no end of merriment for both old and young on a long winter evening. This or That, is a simple, easy game, which can be played by even quite young children. It requires two who understand the secret of the game and can play it together, one to act the part of manager, and one as his accomplice. The accomplice leaves the room and the manager requests some member of the company to touch an article; it may be a picture, table, or anything he chooses. The party who is out then returns, and the manager, using a pointer or cane, touches different objects about the room, and asks: "Is it this book?" to which his friend answers, "No." "Is it this table?" "No." "Is it that picture?" "Yes." It having been arranged between them to use the word "that" before the name of the article which was chosen. The word indicating the name of the object chosen may be changed each time the accomplice leaves the room, thus puzzling the company.

Magic music is a pleasant and enjoyable entertainment for little folks. One of the company goes out and some small article such as a thimble, ring, handerchief, or the like, is hidden. A lady or gentleman who can play, takes the seat at the piano, and the one who went outside is called. He is expected to seek and find the hidden object by means of the music. As he approaches the part of the room where the object of the search is, the strains grow louder and louder, or gradually die away when he turns in opposite direction. The nearer he draws to the desired spot the louder and more brilliant the music becomes, until he finally lays his hand upon the prize, guided by the swelling tones of the piano. For a change, instead of hiding an article, the company may decide upon some task which the player must perform. This will create more fun, and prove more difficult to accomplish. When one has succeeded, others should leave the room in turn, giving each a chance to act the part of the player.

Magnetizing a cane is a trick which any bright boy can easily perform, and which will create no little astonishment among his audience. A piece of black thread about two feet long has a pin attached at each end. These the young magician, unobserved, fastens to the back part of his pantaloon legs, just below the knees. Having selected a slender, dark-colored cane, sitting down, he places it inside of the thread and balances it, passing his hands over it, pretending to mesmerize it. He then moves them from one side to the other and the cane follows, guided, in reality, by his slightly changing the position of his legs, which is unnoticeable, as the whole attention of all is attracted to the hands and cane. Skillfully managed, this trick will cause a good deal of wonder to those who do not understand how it is performed.

Blowing out a candle is a seemingly easy task, but when it is tried under certain circumstances it may not be so readily accomplished, and will produce any amount of fun. A lighted candle is placed on a table. One of the company is blindfolded and stands at the opposite end of the room with his face toward the candle. He is told to turn around three times, walk to the candle and blow it out. In turning he loses all idea of position, and it is very laughable to see him march in an entirely different direction, prepare for a vigorous puff, and more likely than not give one of the company the benefit of it.

A Handsome Lace Spread.

With forethought and some money one can easily make a beautiful set of pillow shams and spread without any great expense. From time to time buy, as you see those which please you and are cheap, squares of antique lace; they come in all kinds of pretty designs. Choose those of uniform size and of the same quality. When you have enough set them together with a stripe of satin. Remnants of satin can be purchased sometimes at very low figures. For a border catch the squares together diagonally and fit it in half squares of the satin. Put the edge of the lace squares over the satin, having first taken the precaution to overcast very delicately the edges of the satin. The spread may be lined or not, as you please. The pillow covers should be made to match. With proper care a set of this kind will last a long time, and when one considers the comfort of always having a handsome covering for the bed at hand to dress it up for great occasions, the outlay of time and money does not appear to have been wasted.

Quilt Lining.

A handsome lining for a fancy silk quilt is made of plain surah silk, or, if that is too expensive, plain soft cashmere of a pretty color serves very nicely. It is often a question how the lining shall be tacked to the outside without marring its beauty. A very pretty way is to first baste the outside carefully on the lining—then divide the lining into squares, marking the corners of each square with a thread. A pretty star may then be embroidered at every point catching the two sides together, but taking care that the stitches do not show on the right side. A cardinal lining with the stars embroidered in yellow silk is quite showy. A darker or lighter shade of the same color as the lining used for the stars makes a tasteful combination.

Kitchen Keramics.

Now, when oranges are so plenty and so cheap, is a good time to experiment with them. Here are two recipes for orange wine—one for a small quantity, and one for a larger; the recipes differ in a few particulars: Take the juice of four dozen oranges, and the fresh peel of the oranges; for this number of oranges use ten pounds of sugar, five gallons of water, and one pint of the best brandy; heat the water and pour it over the peel; let this stand for three hours, then add the strained juice of the oranges, then the sugar, and lastly the brandy; bottle it, and in a few weeks it will be an agreeable beverage. No. 2 calls for 200 oranges, twenty-three pounds of sugar, ten gallons of water. Boil the sugar in the water, and clarify the syrup with the whites of six eggs. Pour the hot liquor upon the parings of the oranges, and add the juice of the oranges and six ounces of yeast. Let it ferment for four days, then strain it in a barrel. In three weeks add four quarts of brandy, and in three months the wine will be ready for use. I cannot speak from my own experience of the value of the latter recipe, but it is said by an authority I have never disputed to be an excellent rule to follow.

When invention fails, and you cannot think what to have for supper, and yet feel an indescribable longing for something good, and a little out of the ordinary way try some stuffed potatoes; they cannot fail to please each member of the family. Choose enough medium-sized potatoes for the needs of your household; see that the skins are smooth and firm; wash them and bake them. When done cut a slice off from the top, and with a silver spoon take the tender potato out; rub it perfectly smooth with cream and butter; if you have any one to help you, while you are doing this have your assistant beat the whites of two or three eggs to a stiff froth; salt the potatoes, then beat in the white of the eggs. Put the potato back in the skin; rub the slice of potato that you cut off with the white of the egg (there will usually be enough left on the dish where the eggs were beaten), and put on like a cover; set the potatoes in a baking tin, and put back in the oven for from ten to fifteen minutes. It is not much trouble to do this, and for a lunch or a home supper nothing could be more pleasing.

To make wonderfully appetizing sandwiches proceed in this way: Take equal quantities of the breast of a cold boiled chicken and of cold boiled tongue. Chop them very fine; so fine in fact, that you cannot distinguish the separate particles. Add a good large half-teaspoonful of celery salt, a pinch of cayenne pepper, and four tablespoonfuls of Mayonnaise dressing. This quantity of condiments will be enough to season the breast of one large chicken, and an equal quantity of tongue. When this is perfectly cold, spread some thin slices with butter, and then with this mixture. Do not prepare them till you are about ready to serve them. If you wish to take sandwiches for a lunch when traveling, be careful not to make the dressing quite so moist as you would if they are to be eaten at home. The better way, if do not object to the trouble, is to put the salad filling in a small glass jar, and spread the sandwiches as you need them.

Lady fingers made after this receipe are very nice for tea; they should be eaten while fresh: Rub half a pound of butter into a pound of flour; to this add half a pound of sugar, the juice and grated rind of one large lemon, and lastly, three eggs, the whites and yolks beaten separately, and the whites stirred in after all the other ingredients are well mixed together. This dough, if properly made, will be stiff enough to make rolls about the size of a lady's finger; it will spread when in the oven so that it will be of the right size and shape. If you wish them to be especially inviting, dip them in chocolate icing after they are baked. Take pains to see that the icing is so hard that it will not run, and set the cakes on a platter in a cool room until the icing is firm.

I saw an old-fashioned high-backed, cane-seated chair, covered in serviceable fashion, the other day. A sort of bag was made which exactly fitted over the chair. It was securely fastened at the bottom, the edges being turned in and sewed "over and over." The covering was of Canton flannel of old gold color, and inserted in it were two stripes of cretonne. The cretonne had a black ground-work, with gay birds and flowers on it. For anything so simple and so easily made, this chair covering was very effective, redeeming as it did an old and much used chair from positive ugliness.

A reliable and satisfactory recipe for Mayonnaise sauce, or salad dressing, is here given: Rub the yolks of two raw eggs to a smooth paste, with a half a teaspoonful of table salt, half a saltspoon of cayenne pepper, a saltspoonful of dry mustard, and a teaspoonful of oil, or a teaspoonful and a half of melted butter. To this, when ready to serve the salad on which it is to be used, add vinegar and a little more oil, or in place of vinegar use strained lemon juice; for ordinary purposes good vinegar is just as satisfactory, and is, of course, much more economical.

When "doctors disagree"—and as the opinions of no two nurses agree as to whether it is safe or not to quiet the baby's colic with peppermint or with the mild and fragrant anise—it is cheering to be told that a little warm water, with nothing in it, will do the work as effectively, and with no danger of injury to the stomach of the smallest child. A small bag containing some hops will, if heated and applied to the stomach, give relief. Do not wet the hops, for the dry heat is just as efficacious and much less inconvenient.

Delicious peach ice-cream is made by rubbing through a sieve one dozen whole canned peaches, or what is equal to that number, and six ounces of white sugar; and one pint and a half of sweet cream should then be mixed with the pulp. After a thorough beating, freeze it as you do common ice-cream. If you wish to make the fancy complete and have the cream a peach color, a few drops of cochineal can be used; or if you object to that, the cream may be colored with the juice of the red raspberry.

If the arnica with which bruised limbs are bathed is heated, its good effects are perceptible much earlier than if it is applied while cold. If arnica is to be taken as a remedy, as so many physicians recommend in cases of severe sprains, it should be prepared with water in this proportion—a teaspoonful of arnica in a goblet two-thirds full of water, and of this a teaspoonful is to be taken once an hour or once in two hours, as the severity of the case determines.

One good way to utilize bits of cold venison is to chop them fine, then heat with some of the gravy left from dinner, or, if you have none, with a little water, in which you put a generous lump of butter; season with pepper and salt; then fill some patty-pans with the venison, and cover the top with crust. Bake until the crust is "done brown."

Cream cookies are made of one cup of butter, one cup of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of sweet cream, half a teaspoonful of cream tartar and half a teaspoonful of soda; flavor with cinnamon or nutmeg, or if you wish to have them very delicate, flavor with extract of lemon or rose water.

Lemon juice is preferred to vinegar by many eaters and lovers of raw oysters.

Foreign Commerce of the United States.

The annual report of the chief of the bureau of statistics upon our foreign commerce, recently made public, is, says a Washington dispatch to the New York Times, a peculiarly interesting paper. In the last fiscal year our exports of merchandise fell off $151,000,000, while our imports increased nearly $82,000,000. The excess of exports over imports for the last fiscal year was a little less than $20,000,000, or almost exactly one-tenth of the excess exports for the previous year. The total value of imports and exports of merchandise and specie fell off $107,000,000. The decrease of more than $150,000,000 in the value of exports of domestic merchandise was due, says the report, almost entirely to the falling off in the exports of cottons and of breadstuffs and provisions, a result attributable to the drought and other unfavorable meteorological influences which prevailed during the crop season of 1881. In that year the corn crop fell off 30 per cent, the wheat crop 23 per cent, and the cotton crop 18 per cent, as compared with the crops of the preceding year. It is shown that the decrease in the value of the exports of cotton and of breadstuffs and provisions was $160,000,000, or more than the total decrease in the value of the exports of domestic merchandise. There was, however, a considerable increase in the exports of petroleum, of manufactured articles, and of certain other commodities. The value of exports of raw and manufactured cotton was more than $213,000,000, or 29 per cent of the whole, while the value of the exports of bread, breadstuffs and provisions was $303,000,000, or 41 per cent of the whole.

Our imports were greater in value for the last year than ever before, and the value exceeded the value for the preceding year by $81,000,000, the increase being due chiefly to higher values of some of the leading commodities. The imports of sugar and molasses lead the list, amounting to more than $100,000,000, or almost one-seventh of the whole. Nearly 41 per cent of our foreign commerce was with England, Scotland and Ireland, the exports amounting to nearly 54½ per cent and the imports to 27 per cent. If the colonial possessions of Great Britain be included, the percentage of exports is 63½, and that of imports 39. Of the merchandise exported from the United States, 45.9 per cent went out of the port of New York city, and of the imports 68 per cent came in at that port. Of our total foreign commerce nearly 57 per cent was carried on at that point. Of the duties on imports nearly 69 per cent was collected at New York. The duties collected at all ports were 42¾ per cent of the value of the dutiable goods. In 1879 the duties were nearly 45 per cent of the value. Tables are given which will be useful in the work of tariff revision, showing the value of merchandise imported free of duty, and the average ad valorem rates upon dutiable goods.

THINGS REQUISITE.

Have a tear for the wretched, a smile for the glad;
For the weary, applause; an excuse for the bad;
Some help for the needy; some pity for those
Who stray from the path where true happiness flows.

Have a laugh for the child in her play at thy feet;
Have respect for the aged; and pleasantly greet
The stranger that seeketh shelter from thee—
Have a covering to spare if he naked should be.

Have a hope in thy sorrow, a calm in thy joy;
Have a work that is worthy thy life to employ;
And, Oh! above all things on this side the goal
Have peace with thy conscience and peace with thy God.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

The Church and the Masses.

New York Tribune: A distinguished Episcopal bishop, in a speech in this city last week, spoke of the difficulty which the church sometimes experiences in "getting down from her stilts and walking on the firm ground." Perhaps the English bishop who best illustrates how this is to be done is Dr. Fraser of Manchester, who probably is better known to the world at large as a man than as a church dignitary. Bishop Fraser's remarks upon secular subjects are always those of a shrewd observer who has a comprehensive mind, and is never reluctant to take the public into his confidence. He is especially happy in talking to plain artisans and workingmen. He never patronizes them, but in teaching them to respect his manhood, he leads them to respect themselves. In a recent address to workingmen he told them that tears had been drawn from them by the performance of a "homely, natural drama" like Black-eyed Susan. It is possibly an advantage to be under restraint with regard to attendance at the theater, since one's emotions are then the less under control and are aroused more readily when they are appealed to. It is a greater advantage to be young, as we suppose the bishop was when his tears were drawn at the first sight of the healthy drama which he tells us he still well remembers. And there is a moral in what he said, from his own experience with regard to stage plays as well as in reference to historical art. He was addressing an audience largely composed of the working classes, and was congratulating them on the possession of a more wholesome and long-lived taste in both hemispheres, if the word may be used, of art production. The workingman gets a bad character often; it is well that it should be noted when he receives a good testimonial from a bishop of Dr. Fraser's standing. The plays which the episcopal eye looks back on from a distance—those in which the bishop discerned "the best and most natural sentiments," are those which he thinks the working classes support the most. As with dramas, so with pictures. Within the compass of his brief visits to London he had found from his visits to the public exhibitions that "a manly and pure taste in art prevailed among the masses of the people in England." When the church thus comes down to the workingman and honestly tries to enter into his life, the problem of how to reach the masses will solve itself without the help of any tomes of theology.

The fact of the matter is that the Christian church has been criminally apathetic in reaching the moral and religious life of the people. To-day in England, which claims to represent the highest power of Christian civilization, girls of tender age may be seen, crawling on their hands and knees, literally harnessed to trucks, and dragging them through the long, low, narrow galleries of the mines. Of clothing they hardly wear a rag, and of humanity they scarcely present the appearance. They live for years without seeing the sun, or hearing the tuneful song of the birds; and their minds are conscious of naught but the dull aching of a cursed existence. Before such a one recently the sacred name of the Savior was mentioned, when she exclaimed, "Who's him? Be he a hoodman or a pitman?" Thousands of females work at the forges in the same way as men, and frequently for seventeen hours a day, making nuts and bolts. They blow the bellows, they ply the hammer, they rake the furnace. Years ago Mrs. Browning roused latent pity and sluggish Christianity of the world by her Cry of the Children. Now let the reverend Lavender Kids of the English establishment, and the reverend Windbags of the American churches make way for the man of apostolic zeal and Christlike sympathy, who shall verily and indeed preach good tidings of joy to all mankind.

A Sensation Created in London.

The Boston Pilot says that the recent publication of the Notes of a Visit to the Russian Church, by the late William Palmer, selected and arranged by his eminence Cardinal Newman, with the assistance of Father Eaglesim of the Birmingham Oratory, and with a preface by the cardinal, has created a sensation in the London literary world. Mr. Palmer, who died in Rome over three years ago, was brother of the present lord chancellor of England, and, many years ago, furnished with a letter from Dr. Routh, the superior of Magdalen college, Oxford, started for Russia to study the doctrine and practices of the Russo-Greek church. He considered, as many earnest men then did, "the visible church at present to exist, as Cardinal Newman writes, in "three main branches, or rather in a triple presence, the Latin, the Greek and the Anglican," and "since, on a given territory, there could not be more than one of the three, it followed that Christians generally, wherever they were, were bound to recognize, and had a claim to be recognized by that one; ceasing to belong to the Anglican church, as Anglican, when they were at Rome, and ignoring Rome, as Rome, when they found themselves at Moscow." The incidents and results of this visit are told in the "Notes," which were bequeathed to the cardinal by their learned author.

The Millennium.

The Rev. J. Hemphill of San Francisco said recently that the millennium is rapidly approaching. During the millennium, he thought, the physical conditions of the world would be improved. Sin being removed, pain and travail would be done away with. The physical condition of man would be vastly improved, and there would exist no pain, sorrow or tears, such as are ours now. When that time comes men will live as long as the old patriarchs before the flood. Healthy bodies will make healthy minds, and for a thousand years the two will be yokefellows. The moral and spiritual conditions will be vastly improved, and holiness will abound. And during those thousand years he thought one language would prevail throughout the world, for through the tower of Babel, or sin, numerous tongues came, and by the casting out of sin they will go. But what language is liable to be adopted? The signs of the times are that the honest old Anglo-Saxon of England and America will be the one, for it is now being introduced over not only the civilized but the uncivilized world.

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

Above the whirl of traffic,
Above the stir of life,
Amid the songs of pleasure,
And o'er the din of strife,
May never cease within us
Thy whispers soft and clear,
Nor ready hearts replying,
"Speak, Lord, Thy servants hear."

The corner stone of a new building of the University of New Mexico has been laid at Santa Fe, and is the first incorporated Christian school in that Territory. The charter requires a majority of its trustees to be members of Congregational churches, and by the deed of trust the land and property of the university are secured to evangelical Christian education. It already has sixty students.

Senator Edmunds has endowed a room in the Mary Fletcher hospital at Burlington, in the name of his daughter, Julia M., who died last summer. The room is luxuriantly furnished, and on the wall hangs a superb engraving of Millett's L'Angelus. The endowment, $5,000, provides for the support and care of one free patient, and its first beneficiary has just been received.

The whole amount contributed by the churches of this country annually for benevolent and congregational purposes is $100,962,000. Of this large sum the amount collected for purely benevolent purposes is $31,339,140. The amount contributed for church purposes, that is, the maintenance of the church, sustaining the ministry, etc., $75,352,866.

The indefatigable Chaplain McCabe, of the Methodist Episcopal church, has succeeded in accomplishing the project in which he entered some years ago, of raising a fund of $500,000 for church extension. Both he and those who have contributed to the fund are worthy of all praise.

Five hundred and thirty-five new members have joined the Brooklyn, N. Y., Young Men's Christian association in the last six weeks. The penmanship and bookkeeping classes are full of studious young men. A course of lectures have been arranged for the winter months.

At the seventy-eighth session of the Old Testament revisers, held in the Jerusalem chamber, Westminster, the company finished the second revision of Job and proceeded with that of Proverbs to chapter xvi.:18.

The rector and congregation of the Protestant Episcopal church at Petaluma, Cal., have united with the Reformed Episcopal church, and have come under the jurisdiction of Bishop Fallows.

At the next general assembly of the Free church in Scotland, there are expected to be 200,000 signatures to a protest against the introduction of instrumental music.

The clergymen of Marquette county, Mich., irrespective of denomination, have organized a ministerial association for mutual help in literary and other ways.

The United Presbyterian church of Scotland is engaged in raising $40,000 for the repair of the church building in Jamaica.

It is intended to light Canterbury cathedral for three months with the electric light.

TALES FOR TODDLERS.

The Story of a Cent.

It bought a stick of candy,
It bought a postage stamp,
It helped to buy an orange,
'Twas given to a tramp.

It bought a baker's biscuit,
It bought a china doll,
It bought a paper windmill,
It bought a pretty ball.

It bought a rosy apple,
It bought a yellow pear,
It tried to buy a whistle,
But whistles were too dear.

'Twas dropped in Willie's "nest-egg,"
With more than fifty more,
And when the egg was broken,
They came to sixty-four.

There sat upon the door-step
A thinker, thinking hard,
While counting o'er his riches—
A cow came in the yard.

He started up in terror,
That cent rolled far away,
And fell into the cistern,
And there it lies to-day.

The Bells of Cologne.

The day was very dark. Little Meta was lonely, for her mamma was out. She was wondering what to do when who should come in but Miss Louise.

Miss Louise was a young German lady, so pleasant and kind that everyone loved her. She had traveled in many countries, and she always had something new or bright to tell children.

"Oh, dear Miss Louise!" cried Meta, running to her," please amuse me!"

The young lady thought for a moment and then she said, "Did you ever hear of the bells of Cologne?"

"Why, of course no'," replied the little girl. "But I have seen a picture of the Cologne Cathedral in my papa's Rhine album. My mamma has some Cologne water in a big bottle."

Miss Louise laughed. "Wait two minutes," she said. "Be very patient, and when I come back you shall hear the bells of Cologne."

She left the room and soon returned with a large silver tablespoon. Then she took a piece of cord about a yard long and tied it in the middle, in a hard knot, around the slim part of the handle. She turned up the cloth so that the edge of the table was exposed. She next asked the wondering Meta to hold out her two forefingers. Around these she wound the ends of the cord.

"Now put those two fingers in your ears," she said, "and swing the spoon so that the bowl will strike the edge of the table."

Meta obeyed. "Oh, bells!" she cried, "beautiful, deep-sounding church bells! How wonderful and how sweet! Oh, Miss Louise!"

Meta liked it so well that she would have gone on swinging the spoon for an hour, but her friend stopped her after a few moments. Meta ran off to get the Rhine album to show the picture of the Cologne cathedral. Miss Louise related many curious and interesting things about it, so that the afternoon passed off very quickly. When the young lady went away it was time to get dressed for tea.

"I fear my little girl has had a dull time of it," said her mamma, when she came in from her long drive. "It has been such a gloomy day."

"Oh, no, mamma! Miss Louise came. She's as good—or 'most as good—as sunlight. After tea, if you'll let me, I'll show you and papa what she showed me—how to hear the bells of Cologne. May I?"

"Certainly, my pet."

But Meta couldn't wait until after tea. When they sat down to the table the sight of the spoons made her so impatient that her papa and mama thought she had better get it off her mind. So she showed them then, and they were both delighted with the bells of Cologne.

Dottie's Dream.

The high-school vacation had just begun, and Dottie was to spend hers at West Point with her mother and little brother. She was wild with delight at the thought of going, for her Uncle George had told her that on the crest of a high hill which was called Crow's Nest was a fairy ring, and that on every midsummer night the fairies held a grand ball. As Dottie was a firm believer in fairies, you can imagine her delight in finding that she was to spend the summer there.

The first night of her arrival she was very tired, and as soon as she had had her supper she went to bed. She went to sleep almost immediately, but was awakened some hours afterward by a low, soft strain of music which filled the room. Starting up, she saw just entering the window, which had been left open, a band of fairies with their beautiful queen at the head. A magnificent necklace of many colored stones encircled her white and slender throat with a blaze of light; her wings were fringed with small diamond dewdrops; her robe was fashioned out of the royal purple velvet of the pansy, and crown and sceptre flashed with precious gems.

Giving her followers to understand that she would enter alone, she floated slowly toward the bed and gently touched the wondering child with her wand.

"Dear Dottie," said she, "we have often heard your wish that you might see some fairies, and we have long known and loved you. To-night your wish shall be granted, and you shall behold the happiest scenes in fairy life, for to-night is our great midsummer festival, and even now my subjects are hastening to the beautiful hollow where the fairy revels are kept."

"Oh!" exclaimed the enraptured child, "how I should like to see the beautiful fairies. May I, sweet lady?"

With a loving smile the queen bent over and lightly tapped her thrice upon each shoulder. Immediately a pair of gauzy wings started from her back, and involuntary waving them back and forth she felt herself gently rising, rising, until she had floated out of the window into the moonlight. Up, up they mounted, and now they are winging their way toward the fairy ring. There they are, floating slowly downward with a graceful, gliding motion; and Dottie looked on a most enchanting sight.

Crowds of fairies were assembled within an immense circle of sparkling dewdrops, and more were coming on every side. In the center of the hollow there was a mossy throne surmounted by a magnificent canopy of scarlet geraniums, looped up at the sides with splendid clasps formed of shells. The canopy was heavily fringed with fuchsias, and at the foot of the throne was a low seat of rose leaves, and in a circle around it a double row of glow worms shed a soft, clear light. Small mushroom tables filled with buttercups of May dew were already laid out, and the fairies only waited for the presence of their beautiful queen to open the ball. Suddenly, the music quickened, the fireflies sparkled and danced, and all rose respectfully as the queen touched the green, velvety floor.

Bowing and smiling she gracefully seated herself on her throne, and placing the spell-bound Dottie on the rose-leaf couch, gave the sign for the ball to begin. Dottie looked on in an ecstacy of delight, and the flush deepened and brightened on her cheek. Some were dancing the fairy lancers, some eating and laughing at little tables, some having a childish game of "cat's cradle" with the tendrils of the grape vine, and all were full of gayety and mirth. Around the queen were gathered several of the favorites, who were entertaining Dottie by blowing magic soap bubbles which were more beautiful than Dottie had ever imagined anything could be. At first they were of a dark grey color, but out of this dark, bright golden and ruby tints began to appear. They grew in size and splendor, till at last the fairy gently waved the pipe and the bubble gracefully floated up and out of sight.

While Dottie was gazing at these the queen lightly touched her shoulder and asked her if she would like to hear a story. Dottie was about to reply that she would, when a bugle call sounded from the sentry at the top of Crow's Nest, and the faint twitter of a bird was heard in a tree just below the hollow. The dawn was coming as the queen, gathering up her shining band, with Dottie in their midst, flitted away to the cottage window. Softly they laid her down, and just as the day was dawning the fairy train vanished into the sweet, hazy mist of the midsummer morn.

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Publisher.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

NEWS CONDENSED.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

Mr. Carpenter of Iowa, from the committee on agriculture, has submitted a joint resolution appropriating $30,000 for an exhibit of domestic animals at the Hamburg international exposition in July, 1883. The commissioner of agriculture is to represent the United States at said exhibition, and provide transportation for all animals from the United States. He is also expected to present a report containing such facts and comparisons as will be valuable to the breeders of the domestic animals in the United States.

Senator McDill's bill, entitled "An act to extend certain provisions of a clause of congress relating to swamp lands in the state of Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado," is said to have been drafted in the interest of a great land ring organized to capture valuable lands in the states named. It has been discovered that very valuable lands have been classed as swamp lands; hence this attempt to capture them. McDill introduced the bill by request.

The commissioner of the general land office has issued a circular letter to registers and receivers, asking that all parties guilty of fraudulent attempts to enter the public lands may be reported to the department that they may be criminally prosecuted. He warns purchasers of relinquisements of fraudulent filings that they buy at their own risk, and must seek their own remedies under the local law.

Out of respect to the late Mr. Morrill, of Maine, nothing has yet been done about the Portland collectorship. It is probable that the Maine delegation will in a few days give the matter consideration. Meanwhile the names of General Dow, secretary of the Republican State Central committee, Gen. Chamberlain and Col. Marble have been suggested in connection with the office.

A member of the cabinet says that the removal of Robertson, Graham, Burt, and Woodford at New York had been irrevocably determined upon. The reasons for these removals was that it was the right of the president to have the principal officers under him to be his personal friends.

A report of a board of engineers, transmitted to congress, shows that the cost of the Sturgeon Bay canal, up to Oct. 10 last, amounted to $342,762. The engineers strongly recommend that the goverment should assume control of the canal and harbor of refuge.

The house river and harbor committee, it is said, has agreed to report a bill making an appropriation of $5,000,000 for river and harbor purposes. It has not yet been decided whether any of the streams objected to in Secretary Lincoln's letter shall be incorporated.

The court of claims decided that retired army officers are not exempt from the provisions of that section of the revised statutes prohibiting an officer of the government from prosecuting claims against the United States.

Mr. Everhart presented a bill prohibiting the insurance of passes by railroad corporations except to officers and employes. It provides a penalty of $100 for a violation of the act.

RAILROAD RUMBLINGS.

Articles of incorporation of the Winona railway, Dock & Transportation company have been filed with the secretary of state. The capital stock is $300,000 and the business which the company purposes doing, consists of the constitution of railways, branches, side-tracks, etc., in and near Winona, the operation of docks, elevators, etc., the transferring of freights and passengers and the operation of street railway lines in the city. The incorporators and first board of directors are Andrew Hamilton, Verrazano Simpson, W. A. Scott, Charles F. Schroth and O. B. Gould all of Winona.

Gov. Stoneman, of California, urges that railroad corporations be compelled to bear their share of taxation and submit to the regulation of fares and freight.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

Fifty men, mostly masons, returning from a meeting, were badly injured by a ditched train at Olmstead, Ill., north of Cairo. The following is the list: A. P. Halloway, of Eddyville, grand master, hurt internally; William Elwell, of Shawneetown, grand master, seriously hurt on head; Joseph Blackburn, of Stonefort, shoulder blade and arm broken; Dr. C. A. Cummings of Tunnell Hill, collar-bone broken; J. Land and W. L. Moberly of Samoth, C. S. Williams of New Columbia, J. F. Smith of Samoth, S. J. Parker of McLeansboro, W. Bartleson of Grand Chain, William Clover and W. J. Cabbett of Tunnel Hill, slightly hurt.

Calvin H. Gilbert, a prominent citizen of Syracuse, N. Y., was found by his wife lying upon a red hot stove. His clothing was nearly burned off and his flesh was so thoroughly baked that it stuck to the stove when Mrs. Gilbert removed him to a chair. A doctor was called, but life was extinct. It is the opinion of the physicians that Mr. Gilbert fell upon the stove in a fit, and was actually burned to death.

The carriage of Mrs. James G. Blaine and son, in Washington, came violently into collision with a coupe at Sixth Street and Pennsylvania avenue. The occupants of both vehicles were thrown to the pavement. All were uninjured.

The camp of Fred Pennington at Frog creek was burnt last Tuesday, the fire spreading so rapidly that the men barely escaped with their lives. Loss $1,000.

The plucky Clarence Whistler was defeated in a wrestling match with John Graham at Louisville, in which he sustained a broken shoulder.

The Anchor line steamer City of Greenville, plying between St. Louis and New Orleans, sank with her cargo, all valued at $100,000.

Two horses, harness and sleigh were stolen from Archy Kennedy of Broadway.

E. C. Washburne, was seriously injured by a fall from his horse in Texas.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

Last session Representative Deuster of Wisconsin offered a resolution in the house requesting the president to notify the government of the German empire that the country is desirous to terminate the Bancroft treaty of 1868. The resolution was referred to a sub-committee of the committee on foreign affairs and they have agreed upon a substitute which requests the president "to take the necessary steps toward negotiating a treaty with the German empire, securing more liberal laws and provisions in reference to the respective rights of the citizens, native born or neutralized of the United States and the German empire."

At Cable, Mont., it is alleged that a fabulously rich pocket of gold ore of unknown dimensions has been uncovered in an upraise from the face of the tunnel, and at a depth of 300 feet from the surface. One piece of ore taken out late last week, and weighing about 100 pounds, is estimated to be worth $6,000. Nuggets of the yellow metal stick out in all directions, and small particles of gold can be seen all over the surface of the block.

The objection of the Illinois diocese to the installation of Dr. Hugh Miller Thompson as bishop, is said, by a prominent churchman to be based on the ground that "he is a violent man, not well balanced, wonderfully impressed with his own importance, conceited, unreliable, coarse man. I am satisfied he is not the man for the episcopate. He has power as a preacher, but he lacks a balance wheel."

The litigation between Engineer Melville and wife for the custody of their children, witnesses for the engineer mainly neighbors at Sharon Hill, (Pa.) testified to show that Mrs. Melville's alleged intemperate habits on account of which it is claimed she is not a suitable person to control her children. Mrs. Melville will produce a large number of witnesses to rebut this testimony.

Dr. Samuel A. Mudd, who set John Wilkes Booth's broken leg and was sentenced to the Dry Tortugas for life, and was subsequently pardoned by President Johnson, died on Wednesday at his home in Charles county, Maryland. At the time of his death he had a claim pending against the government for services alleged to have been rendered in treating yellow fever patients.

The New National bank of Chicago, of which C. T. Wheeler is to be president, will have a capital stock of $20,000,000 and some of the largest capitalists in the country back of it.

The widow of postal clerk Seybolt, of Middletown, N. Y., killed in a railroad disaster at Tignola, has recovered $15,000 from the railroad company.

Some excitment was caused in St. Paul by the disppearance of Wm. Fink, receiving teller of the German American Bank, and a brother of Adam Fink.

The Montana council is in the throes of a deadlock, although the Republicans have secured the temporary organization.

The auction sale of pews in Beecher's church netted $37,000.

RECORD OF CRIME.

President Boice of the wrecked Jersey City bank was locked in a cell, being unable to secure bail. John Boyd of the board of education was hailed by some friends to day with the words: "How are you director?" Three men immediately behind Boyd at once attacked him. They were promptly secured. The chief assailant explained in court that he regarded Boyd, from the salutation, a director of the wrecked bank. The feeling is bitter against all connected with the bank.

E. A. Ferrin, assistant principal of the high school at Savannah, Carroll county, Ill., and an active worker in the Methodist Episcopal Sunday school of that city is charged with and has confessed to the forgery of the names of several well known citizens of Ottawa, Ill., to notes drawn in his favor for amounts aggregating a large sum.

George W. Cushman of St. Louis was a member of the Concord school of philosophy long enough to receive the endorsement of a forged note and the money there on. His philosophy was too practical to please the fraternity, and he will be held to answer. The philosophers have a theory that Cushman is a fraud.

At Pikeville, Ky., James Maynard being drunk and boisterous on the streets, resisted an attempt by Deputy Sheriff Ratliff and Town Marshal Hamilton to arrest him. During the struggle a shot was fired which killed Maynard. Ratliff was arrested.

PERSONAL NEWS NOTES.

Hon. Henry M. Rice, of St. Paul, received not long ago from Capt. Charles A. Beaulieu, of White Earths large prehistoric stone hammer, or pick ax, found in that locality. It differs from the stone hammers usually seen in the museums in shape, and it is thought it may have been used as a pick or hoe to break up the ground for the purpose of planting. The hammer was sent by Capt. Bearlieu as a gift to the historical society.

Dr. Carver, the champion wing-shot of the world, has sent Capt. Bogardus a challenge to shoot 100 pigeons for from $1,000 to $10,000 a side, the match to take place at Louisville, under the English rules. The challenge will doubtless be accepted, and the match fixed for an early day.

Edwin Booth opened his engagement in Berlin Thursday night, appearing as Hamlet. The house was crowded and the performnce was a perfect success, Booth being repeatedly called before the curtain and fairly stormed with applause. Prince Frederick William was present.

Intelligence has been received at Elgin Ill., of the death at Trindad, Col., of Harvey Hubbard, aged seventy-one. The deceased went west last spring to visit a daughter. He had been a prominent business man at Winona, Minn., but latterly lived in Elgin.

The Princess Louise asks Gen. Sherman if he thines it safe to spend the winter in South Carolina without a military escort. The general assures her through Gen. Tourtelotte that royalty would be in no peril in the Palmetto state.

Nelson Ludington, for many years president of the Fifth National bank of Chicago, has been stricken with paralysis, and his physicians entertain little hope of his recovery.

St. Clair McKelway, editor of the Albany (N. Y.) Argus, has been elected regent of the university by an almost unanimous vote.

Henry M. Stanley has reached Congo with 3,000 tons of goods.

FOREIGN NEWS GOSSIP.

Gambetta's father has telegraphed to President Grevy, requesting him to send Gambetta's body to Nice. A delegation has gone to Nice to endeavor to induce the father to alter his decision. The Republican Union opens a subscription for a monument to Gambetta. In the chamber of deputies Guichard, acting as president, feelingly alluded to the death of Gambetta, whose loss, he said, was a great misfortune to the republic. He appealed to the republicans of France to preserve their concord.

In the Spanish senate recently, Camacho, late minister of finance, said that when he entered the ministry the debit account of the budget was 346,000,000 pesetes, the credit account 245,000,000, and the debt 194,000,000. On quitting the office he left a budget surplus of 6,000,000 pesetas. The payment of the interest on the public debt, he said, was secured, for future budgets would balance if his successor, Cuesta, would display good vigor in the collection of taxes.

Emperor William, of Germany, has increased the contribution from the imperial fund toward relief of the distress by floods. The emperor said, in making the increase, that it was intolerable to him to think of hundreds shivering from cold and hunger while he was sitting in a warm room. Twelve German square miles of territory are submerged at Raab, Hungary.

John O'Brien, convicted of using intimidating language to landlords while establishing the Irish National league at Bantley, Ireland, has been sentenced to prison for two months. Ex-Suspects Hodnett and Gilhooly were convicted of the same offense. The former was sentenced to two and the latter to three months' imprisonment.

London cable: The timber on Parnell's estate is valued at $75,000, and the entire 5,000 acres, at a rental of from 10 shillings to £2 per acre, ought to be worth $50,000. He has property in Dublin, and unless his embarrassments are much more serious than has been stated, he is very comfortably off.

Veterinary surgeons of Manitoba have sent a committee to the Dominion government recommending that an inspection of animals for frontier points of Manitoba be made to prevent the importation of diseased animals, owing to the prevalence of pink eye and glanders in the United States.

The Duchess of Connaught has been safely delivered of a son at Windsor Castle.

THE CONGRESS.

Tuesday, January 9.

SENATE.—Mr. Van Wyck's resolution resolution requesting the postmaster general to suspend contracts for daily mail service on the Niobrara-Deadwood and Chamberlain-Rapid City post routes was adopted.

After a long debate the resolution terminated the treaty with Hawaii was referred to the finance committee.

The presidential succession bill came up, and the senate—20 to 30—rejected a motion by Mr. Edwards to recommit. The bill finally passed by a vote of 40 to 13, and reads as follows:

In case of the removal by death, resignation or inability both of the president and vice president of the United States, the secretary of state, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation or inability, then another member of the cabinet in this order of precedence—the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, attorney general, postmaster general, secretary of the navy, secretary of the interior—shall act as president until the disability is removed or until the vacancy is otherwise lawfully filled, such officer being eligible to the office of president under the constitution, and not under articles of impeachment by the house of representatives at the time of the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon him, provided, that whether the powers and duties of the president of the United States shall devolve upon any of the persons named, if congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet regularly within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the person upon whom the said powers and duties devolve to issue proclamation convening congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty day's notice of the time of meeting.

HOUSE.—Beyond a very extended debate on the shipping bill, nothing of note was done. During the debate, while Mr. Springer was speaking, a colored man in the gallery orose and began speaking in a loud voice. He was immediately ejected by a door keeper.

Wednesday, January 10.

SENATE.—A resolution was introduced terminating the fishery clauses of the treaty with Great Britain, of 1871. The tariff bill was considered, and Mr. Morrill of the finance committee made a lengthy speech, followed by Mr. Beck, who attacked the report of the tariff commission.

Morril placed the reduction of the revenues, under both portions of it, at $80,000,000, $38,000,000 of internal taxes, and $42,000,000 of customs. Senator Beck responded for his side by assailing the report of the tariff commission as a fraud, reiterating the charges heretofore.

It was then voted to first take up that part of the bill relating to the tariff and pass over that portion which dealt with internal revenues for the present. Only the preliminary sections relating to the customs laws were considered.

HOUSE.—After routine business the shipping bill was discussed at considerable length, but no final action taken. On the granting of subsidies Sparks declared that the defeat of the party, six years ago was due to asserting that as soon as it regained its power subsidy quickly raised its head, fathered by Mr. Robinson, who was connected with every job organized.

When Robeson rose to reply he was purple with rage. He denounced the assertion made by Sparks and claimed that all his efforts has been in the interest of the people.

Mr. Holman lost his temper in a conflict with Speaker Keifer, but was taken off the floor by the speaker's recognition of Reed.

The speaker announced as the select committee to investigate the connection of Chief Clerk Bailey with the Washington Gas Light company, Crowley of New York, Aldrich of Illinois, Bisbee of Florida, Martin of Delaware and Cox of North Carolina.

Thursday, January 11.

SENATE.—The bill for the relief of Gen. Porter came up, according to agreement. An amendment that Porter be allowed no back pay or emoluments was adopted. After some debate a motion by Mr. Conger to postpone the bill indefinitely was lost—24 to 31. The bill finally passed by a vote of 33 to 27, three Republican—Messrs. Cameron of Pennsylvania, Sewell and Hoar—voting in the affirmative.

The bill authorizes the president to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the senate, to appoint Fitz John Porter, late major general of United States volunteers and brevet brigadier general and colonel of the army, to the position of colonel in the army of the United States of the same grade and rank held by him at the time of his dismissal, and, in his discretion, to place him on the retired list of the army as of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent, provided that the said Fitz John Porter shall receive no compensation or allowance whatsoever prior to his appointment under this act. John Sherman and Gen. Mahone did not vote.

HOUSE—The day was principally devoted to the consideration of the shipping bill. Mr. Candler's free ship amendment was adopted by a vote of 165 to 104.

Friday, January 12.

SENATE.—Mr. Ingalls introduced a bill to determine presidential disability.

A fruitless attempt was made to proceed with the tariff bill.

The bill extending the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in Montana, Idaho and Washington Territories passed.

The senate held a long executive session, considering a treaty with Mexico.

HOUSE.—A resolution was adopted calling on the secretary of the interior for information as to whether land-grant railroads have complied with the law respecting construction and maintenance of telegraph lines for the use of the government and public.

The shipping bill was debated at length and finally passed, with the sections providing for free ships and free material stricken out.

The vote on striking out these sections was 159 to 54.

Saturday, January 13.

SENATE.—A bill was introduced by Mr. Ingals for the investigation of the question of railway transportation by a commission to report to congress in December next. The bill for the relief of Ben Halliday coming up, Mr. Plumb moved to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute a bill to enlarge the powers and duties of the department of agriculture. The senate adjourned without taking action.

HOUSE.—The pension and fortification appropriation bills, calling for $85,000,000 and $325,000, respectively, passed, as did also a special pension bill increasing the pension for those made wholly or partially blind or deaf while in the military or naval service.

The most important item passed was one in relation to the increase of pensions in the case of blindness or deafness.

Under its provisions such pensioners as lost the sight of one eye shall receive $12 a month, and in cases where the injury to the one eye manifestly affects injuriously the other, the pension is increased to $25.

All who, under like circumstances, have lost the sight of one eye, the other having been previously lost, shall be entitled to a pension of $50.

The pension for loss of hearing in both ears is fixed at $25, and for any loss of hearing less than total deafness in one or both ears an equitable portion of the full pension.

Another bill which excited a good deal of discussion was one to extend the time for the completion of applications of militia men or non-enlisted men to two years after the passage of the act.

This bill was opposed very earnestly by Mr. Bragg, of Wisconsin, and Mr. Dunn, of Arkansas, on the ground that it would open the door wide for thousands of improper claims. Gen. Rosecrans advocated the bill.

[illegible] cholera, for the past fortnight has been epidemic at Salina Cruz, North America. It is nearly deserted. Three or four deaths occur daily. In Tehuantepec the epidemic is ravaging, averaging twenty-five deaths daily.

AN APPALING DISASTER.

Burning of the Newhall House, Milwaukee, and Nearly a Hundred People.

Many Jump from Fifth and Sixth Story Windows to Death on the Pavement Below.

The large, six-story, Newhall hotel took fire at 4 o'clock this morning and burned to the ground, and it is estimated that not less than fifty persons—guests and employes—lost their lives. James Antisdel, one of the proprietors of the hotel, said the fire started in the elevator shaft and spread so very rapidly that it was impossible to give the alarm. Regarding the origin of the fire Mr. Antisdel said:

"The night watchman saw the fire first, but before he could do anything it was up the elevator and was burning on every floor. I am confident that it started in the elevator, but how it originated I can't say." B. K. Tice, the day clerk, as soon as awakened rushed through the halls calling up the guests to get out, and remained in the building till he was terribly burned.

The scene fifteen minutes after the fire started was horrible beyond description. In a hundred windows were men and women in their night clothes, crying pitteously for help—occasionally one making an attempt to escape by jumping, only to be dashed to pieces. In the building a scene of the utmost terror prevailed. The corridors were filled with dense smoke and half stupefied persons were lying across the hallways, while the shrieks of women and the groans of men filled the air.

On the south side of the building and in the alley on the west side the scenes were dreadful to behold. One after another the unfortunate jumped from the fifth and sixth stories, and fell upon the stone pavement below, dead in most instances. The patrol wagon was called for, and seven bodies were taken out of the alley, dead or dying.

It is utterly impossible to even attempt a description of the terrible scenes. Upon the icy flagstones the body of an unknown man was lying covered only with a shirt, with both legs broken and the skull cleft in twain. Another poor fellow had crawled up the chamber of commerce steps. His back was broken, and he moaned piteously. Still another attempted to jump from a sixth-story window on Broadway, upon the canvass held by willing hands; but he jumped too short, fell with his back upon the bannister, doubled up and crashed lifeless upon the pavement. In the alley not less than seven bodies were picked up, most of them being waiter girls. Just how many were in the hotel at the time of the fire is not known, and probably never will be. The Tom Thumb troupe and part of the Minnie Palmer troupe were there. Of the latter John Gilbert and his bride of a day perished. Tom Thumb's servant perished. Allen Johnson, a leading member of the chamber of commerce, and wife perished. They had rooms on the third floor, and like the rest were driven to the windows. The men below who held the canvas at the southwest corner of the building shouted to jump. Mr. Johnson kissed his wife then leaped into the air and shot downward into the canvas; but his weight was such that the canvas was pulled out of the men's hands and he alighted on the ground with fearful force. His wife followed and struck the veranda. Both were carried into the American express office. Mrs. Allen was dead, and Mr. Allen died in the express office soon after.

Many columns might be filled with details but the greatest interest centers in the list of those known to have perished. There are many missing who are possibly safe. The following are the dead as far as known:

Allen Johnson, commission man, Milwaukee.

Mrs. Allen Johnson, Milwaukee.

D. G. Powers, inventor, Milwaukee.

J. H. Hough, traveling man, Peoria, Ill.

Mrs. John Gilbert, wife of an actor, Chicago.

Miss Libbie Challis, dressmaker, Milwaukee.

Mr. Huff, insurance agent, Iowa.

Mrs. Kelley, servant.

Miss O'Neil, servant.

Bessie Brown, chambermaid.

Thomas E. Van Leon, capitalist, formerly of Albany, N. Y.

Maggie Owens, Lizzie Kelley, Annie Brown, Kate Lenihan, Maggie Sullivan, Augusta Gess, Mary McDade, Mitchell Bullan, servants, all of Milwaukee.

C. Hawry, conductor, Wisconsin Central railroad, Milwaukee.

Mary McMann, Milwaukee.

Judge George H. Reed, formerly of Manitowoc.

Julia Curtin, servant, Madison.

Walter Scott, employe Wisconsin Central railroad.

Mary Anderson, laundry girl, of Doylestown.

Walter Gilleland of Milwaukee, bell-boy.

William Gilleland of Milwaukee, elevator boy.

Making forty-five dead and missing.

The idea is gaining ground that there are many more bodies in the ruins than was first estimated. The flames spread so rapidly that it must have been impossible for many even to reach the windows.

Orange Williams, of Jonesville, who escaped from the burning building with serious injuries, says that while groping his way out through the hallway he stumbled over at least eight bodies, and heard the death-cry of several other poor creatures beyond his reach.

The chief of the fire department estimates the number of lost at sixty. W. S. Scott, a clerk in A. H. Carpenter's office, is no doubt among the victims. He was boarding at the Newhall house, and was last seen there. His mother lives in Dubuque, Iowa, and a brother is in the pay-car service of the St. Paul road.

Two firemen, after endeavoring to raise the fire escape, carried a ladder through the alley to the building occupied by Simons & Brooks, and with the assistance of several citizens raised the ladder to the top of the building and placed one end in a window occupied by the servant girls in the Newhall house, and five of the girls crawled unassisted across the ladder and were taken to a place of safety. Some of them were nearly naked. One of the firemen then entered the burning building and attempted to save a girl that was apparently half crazy. She resisted the fireman, but finally, after a hard fight, he succeeded in carrying her across to the opposite building. The brave fireman then returned to the burning building and brought out three dead bodies. Fireman Strauss, who made the first attempt at rescue, carried over a very stout woman, but at one time it was feared she would throw him from the ladder to the alley. At one time she held him midway of the ladder for almost a minute by clutching around and to which she clinched in absolute frenzy. After this the rescued had their arms pinioned and were taken across the ladder without further difficulty.

The Newhall house has been a notorious death trap for years, and thoughtful people have slept uneasily under its roof. Old, rotten, and ill-constructed, with long, dark corridors, and a central staircase to serve as a flue for flame, the danger of the building has been increased by the neglect of the proprietor to provide suitable fire escapes. If any means of escape from the upper rooms of the house were supplied, they proved worthless in the emergency. Not one person is reported as saved by means provided in advance for that purpose.

One of the first bodies recognized was that of Mrs. John Gilbert wife of Mr. Gilbert, of the Minnie Palmer company. They were married recently in Chicago, and the bride of a night lay upon the cold marble, charred, and bruised almost beyond recognition. Among the bodies were several chambermaids, who jumped from the upper story into the alley. It is said, by those who held the canvas at that spot that the scene was perfectly sickening. The bodies fell around them on every side, and lay with broken heads and bruised bodies, only half covered with clothing.

Martin Webber, of La Porte, Ind., says he arrived at the hotel yesterday, and was assigned to room 155, on the fourth floor. He was accompanied by a friend named G. W. Hall, who occupied a room off from and opening into his. Webber was awakened by the noise of the roaring flames. He sprang from his bed and called to his friend, who also arose and came in and the two men dressed themselves. Hall said: "My God! do you think they will ever get to us?" The next moment he made a run for the window and cleared it with a bound. Mr. Webber has not yet been able to find him either dead or alive, although he has made diligent search. Webber was driven from his room by the smoke, and climbed outside and hung from the window sill for ten minutes, he thinks, when he was rescued by a ladder being placed at the window.

The Newhall house was built in 1859 by Dan Newhall, one of the heaviest wheat speculators on Lake Michigan. The original cost of the building was $250,000. It stood on the corner of Broadway and Michigan streets, one block from Wisconsin street, the principal thoroughfare on the east side. Opposite, the south side of Michigan street, stood the magnificent building recently erected by Alexanber Mitchell of the Milwaukee chamber of commerce.

The Newhall was popular as a boarding place, with the single reservation of a never-ending dread of fire on the part of all who remained beneath its roof. It was the home for a long time of Gov. Smith, Postmaster Payne, Horace Rublee, William F. Cramer, Col. Elisha Starr, James Ludington, the late Mrs. John L. Mitchell, Charles H. Haskins, C. D. Nash, many railway men and young business men of the city. It was also a favorite place for board of trade men to dine.

A FATAL PANIC.

Terrible Panic in the Planter's Hotel, St. Louis, Caused by a Fire—Three Servants Suffocated.

The Planter's House at St. Louis, on Sunday morning, between 4 and 5 o'clock, was the scene of a terrible panic. A fire had been discovered in a store room adjoining the kitchen. The firemen could not readily extinguish it, and gave an alarm, and in three minutes the hotel was a bedlam. Nearly 300 people, filled with the horrible recollection of the Milwaukee holocaust, were dashing hither and thither through the main corridors and down the several stairways into the office and street. The hotel employes acted with good sense and promptness, rapping long and loud on every door in the house, and five minutes later making a second trip to insure that everybody was up and advised of the danger. Very few waited to dress, as smoke from the rear building, where the fire was located, had already invaded the corridors and was making its way slowly into the rooms. Stopping only to grab a few articles of clothing, men, women and children fled in dismay and would not halt even in the commodious main office, where there was light, comfort and little smoke. As the engines, the first of which arrived within fifty seconds of the sounding of the alarm, dashed up to the hotel, the stream of fugitives began to pour from its doors. There were men in naught but their underclothes, and women with but a night dress, and possibly a shawl or cloak over their shoulders, and little children hastily bundled in blankets or other wrappers. Few wore shoes, and a great many were in their bare feet.

Some of the scenes incident to this night were quite thrilling, their effect being intensified by the rattle, clang and shriek of engines and shout of firemen. Soon the main body of the hotel was cleared of guests, and the building was in possession of the firemen, who within twenty minutes, as the result of a second alarm, had thirteen engines at work. Meantime, events in the rear building were of a far more ugly character. There are known to be three lives lost. One of the these was Carlo Reball, a dishwasher. He slept on the third story, and when awakened started down the rear stairs. He managed to get to the first floor, and there must have become confused, as he was found just within the kitchen door with only his night shirt on, dead from suffocation. Dennis Rapontl and Henry Blaney, the carver and a waiter, slept together in a room on the third floor. When they were aroused Blaney threw a rope fire escape out of the window, and it was first reported that he descended in safety but his body was found in the alley. The damage to the hotel was only about $16,000.

Nearly a Week on a Burning Deck.

"For nearly a week we were on a floating furnace," said Capt. Charles Nicholls to-day. "For nearly a week, with the deck timbers scorching under our feet, and never a chance of getting below without suffocation. He sat in the cabin of the steamship Neckar, just arrived from Bremen, with one of the men who had suffered with him. These two, with five other men, had been taken on board in mid-ocean from a burning vessel, which was not expected to hold together for two hours after she was abandoned.

My craft was the bankertine Mary Lizzie, of St. John's, N. F., the captain continued. She sailed from St. Johns on the third instant, and two days afterward the ship caught fire. The whole of the vessel below deck was ablaze; the flames were rushing up through the forecastle and the smoke was creeping up through the timbers. We covered the fore-hatch and ventilating holes with canvas to keep the draft off. We could hear the roar of the fire underneath. For a week we were fighting the fire, keeping the decks continually wet. The vessel was little more than a hulk without anchor, with little timbers, standing at the mercy of the wind, and with a blazing fireshut up in her. It is no wonder some of us began to sink under excitement and suffering, and we came near losing our senses. Our little provisions were given out now. We had been able to bring up only what we could readily look after in the first instance. The men looked like ghosts, and were barely able to keep the decks wet. On the morning of Wednesday last the smoke was coming through the timbers from stem to stern. The water began to steam where it fell upon the deck. It was hot under foot, and we could feel that the fire had traversed the vessel, burning up all the inside, and, would soon break out. It was just then in our worst extremity that we sighted the Neckar. The steamer saw our signal of distress and we launched our boat and went out to her. As we left the smoke was rolling up from the Mary Lizzie, and the fire was beginning to break out. Our rescue had been timely.

Destructive Fires in Wisconsin.

A destructive fire occurred at Neenah at 4 o'clock last Sunday morning, totally destroying the Russel house, Pettibone block, the postoffice, and several other smaller buildings. The fire broke out in the rear of the dry goods store of Phil Gaffney, in the Pettibone block, and inside of twenty minutes the block was in ruins. The principal losses are as follows: The Russel house, $34,000; insurance $8,000; Pettibone block, $12,000; insurance $8,000; Gaffney, $22,000; insurance $15,000; Kimberly & Elwers, $12,000; insurance, $8,000; Clausen & Gram, $5,000; insurance $3,000; Seaver & Co., $3,000; insurance unknown. The First National bank vault looms up in the ruins, and the contents are probably safe. The warehouse of Alex Billstrum also took fire and was partially lost. Loss probably $200,000; insurance $100,000.

At Stoughton, eighteen miles east of Madison, the extensive wagon works of T. G. Mandt caught fire on Saturday evening, and before the flames were extinguished about one-half of the great manufactory was in ruins. The fire originated in a wing of the main building and was caused, it is supposed, by overheating of the furnace, which was there located, together with a monster trip hammer. The loss is as follows: Manufacturing department containing a vast amount of machinery, 44x180 feet in dimensions and three stories high, with a wing 46x90 feet, two stories high; the carriage department and office, one 20x60 and the other 38x60, two stories; the agricultural manufactory, 40x60 feet, two stories; the machine shop, 24x60, and the foundry, 40x60. As stated before, the entire wagon manufactory was about one half destroyed, the pecuniary damage reaching fully $100,000. The insurance is about $58,000.

John Welles Hollenbeck, of Wilkesbarre, presented Lafayette college a second $60,000 to endow the chair of the president.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Tuesday, January 9.

Bills were introduced defining procedure in levy upon homestead property; to protect property of immigrants into state from cattle mortgage proceedings; to punish murder in the first degree by hanging or imprisonment for life, judge or jury to fix penalty; to protect innocent purchasers of grain from loss by cattle mortgages on same; for a constitutional amendment forbidding granting of aid by cities or towns to railways or private corporations.

Bills fixing the fire limits of Winona, and allowing Austin to issue $8,000 in bonds for a bridge, were passed under suspension of the rules.

Resolutions calling for a settlement by congress of the question of indemnity lands for railways, not open to settlement; to authorize the appointment of a committee on grain and warehouse inspection, and to omit the special committee on hospital for the insane, were read and filed.

House, Tuesday, January 9.

Mr. Rahilly introduced a long bill specifying charges for transporting on railroads of any kind of grain, flax-seed, potatoes, flour, meal, beef, pork, or any other kind of meat, live stock, sugar, in barrels or casks, tea, coffee, and all other descriptions of merchandise now described as fourth class rates, in the schedules of charges for carrying freights on the railroads of this state, and for transporting timber, lumber, shingles, lath, salt, coal and wood. Other bills were introduced for the taxation of dogs; making it a misdemeanor to appear in any street in a state of intoxication; proposing to amend the act relating to commitments to reform school; providing for the general taxation of railroad bonds; amending the charter of the Duluth & Iron Range railway; making chattel mortgages a lien on growing corps; and amending the laws in relation to counter-claims and offsets.

Provision was made for the purchase of 1,000 copies of the statutes, and the loan made for the extraordinary expenses of the state were legalized.

Senate, Wednesday, January 10.

Judge Wilson introduced his old bill for the taxation of transferred railway lands. Senator Clark's Bill allows two-fifths of the voters of a country to secure an election on the question of change of county seat. The house bill authorizing the issue of $250,000 in 4½ per cent bonds, for present deficiencies, was passed and the governor will sign it as soon as engrossed.

THE SENATE COMMITTEES.

President Gilman made the following announcement of standing committees:

Judiciary—Gilfillan, J. B., Castle, Comstock, Wilson, Billson, Goodrich, Hickman, Steenerson, O'Brien, Peck.

Finance—Pillsbury, Clement, Rice, Sergeant, Griggs.

Elections—Morrison, Langdon, Castle, Christiansen, Compton.

Claims—Shalleen, Johnson, Compton, Houlton, Welch.

Education—Wait, Morrison, Billson, Peck, O'Brien.

Public Lands—Comstock, Rice, Hollister, Morrison, Greenleaf, Vollmer, Fletcher.

Internal Improvement—O'Brien, Lawrence, Wait, Knudson, Peck.

Federal Relations—Chandler, Lawrence, McLaughlin, Washburn, Doran.

Agriculture—Lawrence, Shalleen, Peterson, Wheat, Welch.

Military Affairs—Crosby, Pillsbury, Griggs, Hollister, Blake.

Insurance—Clement, Gilfillan, J. B., Johnson, Van Hoeson, Knudson, Chandler, Welch.

Banks—Compton, Clement, McLaughlin, Doran, Greenleaf.

Enrollment—Clark, Wheat, Morrison, Buckman, Sackett.

Retrenchment and Reform—Doran, Johnson, Houlton, Compton, Langdon.

Tree Culture and Fuel—Peterson, McLaughlin, Ward, Crosby, Craig.

Roads and Bridges—Blake, Shalleen, Fletcher, Knudson, Ackerman, Christianson.

Normal Schools—Fletcher, Shalleen, Wilson, Wait, Washburn.

Geological and Natural History Survey—Hickman, Pillsbury, Castle, Van Hoesen, Washburn, Ackerman.

Corporations—Goodrich, Truax, Sergeant, Griggs, Ackerman.

Railroads—Gilfillan, C. D., Castle, Langdon, Lawrence, Peterson, Clarke, Waite, Comstock, Buckman, O'Brien, Doran, Crosby, Hollister.

State Reform School—Billson, McLaughlin, Goodrich, Griggs, Welch.

Hospitals for Insane—Wheat, Clement, Sackett, Steenerson, Ward.

Deaf, Dumb and Blind—Langdon, Clement, Greenfield, Compton, Peck.

Towns and Counties—Van Hoesen, Pillsbury, Peterson, Craig, Sackett.

Indian Affairs—Sargent, Peterson, Pillsbury, Steenerson, Vollmer.

Public Buildings—Johnson, Griggs, Fletcher, Clarke, Blake.

State Prison—Castle, Rice, Sergeant, Hickman, Welch, Steenerson, Buckman.

Library—Houlton, Wilson, Truax, Christianson, Gilfillan, C. D.

Printing—Greenleaf, Doran, Knudson, Wheat, Craig.

Engrossment—Hollister, Crosby, Ackerman, Truax, Craig.

Immigration—McLaughlin, Morrison, Shalleen, Johnson, Vollmer.

Grain and Warehouse Inspection—Buckman, Van Hoesen, Greenleaf, Blake, Ward, Chandler, Vollmer, Wilson, Houlton.

Joint Committee on Taxes and Tax Laws—Rice, Gilfillan, C. D., Chandler, Billson, Peck.

University and University Lands—Washburn, Gilfillan, J. B., Morrison, Fletcher, Steenerson, Christianson, Wilson.

House, Wednesday, January 10.

Mr. Barker introduced a bill relating to the laying out of roads lying in counties in separate judicial districts; Mr. Rahilly a bill fixing the legal rate of interest at 7 per cent.; Mr. Cole presented a petition for the protection of fish in Lake Roberts, Rice county; the bill providing for the borrowing of $25,000 for extraordinary expenditures was passed. Mr. Hicks introduced a bill fixing the time for holding district courts.

THE HOUSE COMMITTEES.

Speaker Fletcher announced the house standing committees as follows:

Finance—Collins, Merriam, Crawford, Ende, Bean, Hill, Gray.

Judiciary—Hicks, Cole, Collins, Smith, Jr., Barker, Boardman, Childs, J. E., Cornish, McKusick, Thayer, Thompson, Brown, Gregory.

Railroads—Sabin, Cole, Smith, Jr., Boardman, Nelson, Johnson, M., Anderson, H., Sadley, Dyar, Spaulding, Moore, Potter, Buck, Child, E. A., Emery.

Public Accounts and Expenditures—Merriam, Turrel, Halgren, Dyar, Wells, Rahilly, Stigeman.

Public Lands—Groetsch, Linnell, Torgerson, Finch, Seymour, Baarnass, Blackman, Paulson, T., Bell, Burmeister, Child, E. A., Doyle, White, Lenz, Farrar.

Federal Relations—Nelson, Thompson, Seymour, Sidener, Lenz, Stigeman, Chisholm.

Education—Cole, Lydlard, Carson, Baker, Peterson, O., Hill, Stahlmann.

Towns and Counties—Parkers, Sadley, Lydlard, Finch, Bell, Snow, Cook.

Military Affairs—Bobleter, Peterson, J., Snow, Baarnass, Farrar, Patterson, Jacklin.

Incorporations—Smith, J., Jr., Anderson, H., Sabin, Nelson, Strong, Potter, Frank.

Agricultural and Manufacture—Linnell, Baker, Torgerson, Peterson, J., Batchelder, McNamara, Doyle.

State Prison—Moore, Parker, Johnson, M., Thayer, Batchelder, Rahilly, Gregory.

Claims—Turrell, Grimshaw, VanDyke, Way, Paulson, H., Blackman, Stahlmann.

Insurance—Halgren, Daniels, Hicks, Bean, Sidener, Cullen, Emery.

Immigration—Holsbach, Peterson, J. A., Groetsch, Borck, Becker, White, Frank.

State Normal School—Spaulding, Miller, Swenson, Hartley, Richardson, Cullen, Gasper.

Hospital for Insane—Childs, J. E., Plummer Daniels, Smith, L., Strong, Bobleter, Randall.

Deaf, Dumb and Blind—Buck, Plummer, Frahm, Bohland, Anderson, W., Mortenson.

State Reform School—Gotzian, Linnell, Carson, Sampson, Dilley.

Roads, Bridges and Navigable Streams—Peterson, O., Hartley, Anderson, W., Greer, Patterson.

Banks—Daniels, Merriam, Wells, Paulson, H., Randall.

Printing—Peterson, J. A., Bobletter, Parker, Morse, McNamara.

Elections—Frahme, Ende, Swenson, Sabin, Borak.

Commerce—Smith, J., Hulsback, Hicks, Demsules, Chisholm.

Rules and Joint Rules—Boardman, Dyar, Paulson, T., Jacklin, Becker.

State Library—Bohland, Barker, Holstrom, Brown, Mortenson.

Mines and Minerals—Potter, Sampson, Burmeister, Dilley, Gasper.

Engrossment—Hartley, Holstrom, Johnson, W. H., Morris, Baumgartner.

Enrollment—Geer, Miller, Morse, Richardson, Demsules.

Grain Inspection and Warehouse—Way, Smith, J., Peterson, Ole, Johnson, M., Rahilly, Cook.

Temperance Legislation—Collins, Child, J. E., Miller, Bean, Smith, J., Jr., Childs, E. A., Hill.

JOINT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Taxes and Tax Laws—Cornish, Barker, Crawford, McKusick, Morris.

University and University Lands—Grimshaw, Cornish, Way, Porter, Johnson, W. H.

Forestry—Gray, Peterson, O., Morse, Baker, Jacklin, Emery, Chisholm.

Senate, Thursday, January 11.

Among the bills introduced was one by Senator McLaughlin to make hotel keepers provide means of escape in case of fire; by Senator Castle, reducing rate of interest on money due from state land from 7 to 5; and by Senator Knudson, amending the laws governing administration.

Much time was taken up in discussing the request of Judge Wilson to be relieved from service on the grain and warehouse inspection committee. The request was refused.

House, Thursday, January, 11

An afternoon session was held, and bills introduced to amend the act relating to the drawing of juries by county commissioners; regulating the ability of railroad corporations in certain cases; prohibiting the obstruction of highways by railroads, and providing for the assignment of the estates of deceased persons, and on sundry local topics.

A couple of local acts were passed, and a petition for the exemption of church parsonages from taxation received.

Senate, Friday, January 12.

Noon of Tuesday was fixed upon as the time for balloting for United States senator; under suspension of the rules, a bill was passed appropriating $75,000 on account for the completion and furnishing of the State capitol.

Senator Traux introduced a bill amending the game law, and Senator Welch another, providing for the delegation of power to district judges to incorporate villages. Adjourned until 11 a. m. Tuesday.

House, Friday, January 12.

The regular hour of meeting was made 2:30 p. m.

Judge Brown offered a resolution asking that the federal officeholders return to their duties; which was sent to the committee on federal relations.

Bills were introduced to allow the state treasurer to draw $200,000 to meet extraordinary expenses (passed under suspension); to prevent unjust discrimination in railroad rates and on local subjects.

Adjourned until 11 a. m. on Tuesday.

Republican Senatorial Caucus.

The caucus of republican members of the senate and house was held in the state capitol on the evening of the 11th. The meeting was called to order by Senator J. B. Gilfillan, and upon motion of Senator Bilson, Hon. H. B. Hicks was chosen chairman. Senator Comstock nominated Senator A. E. Rice for secretary, and this was unanimously agreed to.

The chair appointed Senators Langdon and Chandler and Representative Bobleter as tellers. The roll was called showing the following republican members present: Senators. Billson, Chandler, Compton, Comstock, Fletcher, Gilfillan C. D., Gilfillan J. B., Goodrich, Greenleaf, Johnson, Langdon, Lawrence, Pillsbury, Rice, Shalleen, Steenerson, Traux, Waite, Washburn, Wheat. Total 20.

REPRESENTATIVES:

Anderson, W., Baarnass, Gotzian, Groetsch, Peterson Ole, Plummer, Barker, Barker, Batchelder, Been, Boardman, Bobleter, Bohland, Collins, Cornish, Dyer, Ende, Halgren, Hicks, Holstrom, Johnston, M., Linnel, Lydlard, Merriam, Miller, Nelson, Paulson, H., Peterson, J. A., Porter, Sabin, Sidener, Smith, J., Snow, Spaulding, Thayer, Thompson, Torgerson, Turrell, Speaker, Fletcher.

Total, 39 Grand total, 59.

Representative Danels entered immediately after the roll had been called and answered to his name when repeated.

J. E. Child was excused from voting. Mr. Strong sent a proxy.

The total number present who had answered to their names, not including J. E. Child, was found to be sixty, making, with Strong's proxy, sixty-one.

Senator Gilfillan nominated Wm. Windom for Senator. The ballot was taken and the tellers announced the result of the ballot as sixty votes for William Windom.

There was one vote for Gordon E. Cole, and one for C. K. Davis, making sixty-two in all, of one more than should have been cast. The actual vote for Mr. Windom is as follows:

Members present voting..........60
Representative Strong, by proxy..........1
Representative J. E. Child..........1

Total..........62

As explained later, Mr. Child gave in his adherence after the result had been announced and Windom was declared nominated.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION.

The democratic number of the legislature met on the same evening and complimented Judge T. S. Wilson of Winona by nominating him for U. S. Senator.

Masonic Grand Lodge.

The annual convocation of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota was held in St. Paul last week. The following officers were elected and installed:

C. H. Benton, Minneapolis, G. M.
H. R. Denny, Carver, D. G. M.
R. H. Gove, Rochester, G. S. W.
A. P. Fitch, Glencoe, G. J. W.
J. H. Thompson, Minneapolis, G. Tres.
A. T. C. Pierson, St. Paul, G. Sec.

The appointed officers were:

W. D. Cornish, St. Paul, G. O.
R. Forbes, Minneapolis, G. C.
A. Marden, New Ulm, G. S. D.
J. E. Gettman, Carson, G. J. D.
C. M. Foote, Minneapolis, G. M.
J. Bathrick, Winnebago City, G. St. P.
J. R. Carey, Duluth, G. Sd. B.
A. O. Adams, St. Charles, G. S. S.
J. C. Hill, ——, G. J. S.
W. A. Miller, Minneapolis, G. P.

With last Saturday evening's issue the Moorhead Enterprise made the announcement that it ceased to exist.

Charles P. P. Preston and Della M. Morrow, and Thomas A. Clarke and Sadie A. Morrow were married at Graceville.

The young Swede who was thrown from a car last summer, near Dodge Center, died in that village, from the effects of his injuries, last Wednesday, death coming as a welcome relief after his long months of suffering.

Duluth furnished another defaulter and embezzler, this time in a small way. About two months ago J. O. Hurll, a printer, came to the city and began work in the Daily Tribune office. A short time after his arrival the Duluth printers formed the Franklin club, of which Hurll was made secretary. Dues and other moneys were collected by him, and on Monday he had in his possession $40 of the club's money. He disappeared and it is now certain has walked off with this amount, leaving the club in the lurch.

A. A. Mann, an attorney and collection agent at Lanesboro, was arraigned before Justice Rockwell of Rushford, charged with embezzling a large sum of money sent by the board of home missions of New York to him, as agent, to relieve the Presbyterian church of that place.

Superintendent Watkins, of the State fish commission, assisted by Hon. G. C. Burt, has just finished placing 50,000 young whitefish in the Minnesota river near Mankato, at the mouth of the Blue Earth. The commission received 5,000,000 young whitefish Wednesday, and expects 2,000,000 more in a few days.

William Miller, a prominent citizen of Blue Earth City was a large dealer and shipper of stock under the firm name of Miller & Temple, died suddenly at Colorado Springs, Colo., where he went a few weeks since, with his family, on account of ill-health. His remains will be brought here.

Lincoln Bros.' flour mill, elevator and dwelling house, at Bird Island, with their contents, were burned last Friday night. Loss, on buildings about $15,000. The contents of the mill and elevator were insured for $8,000, the St. Paul Fire & Marine having $4,500 and the Springfield, Mass., $1,500. The mill was fully insured in the Millers' Mutual of Chicago.

THE SENATORIAL VOTE.

On Tuesday the ballot was taken for U. S. Senator. Windom received 23 votes in the Senate and 47 in the House. On Wednesday on the first joint ballot Windom received 65; on the second 61. No further balloting on Wednesday. We have not yet heard from the vote to-day, but our impression is that if Windom gets defeated the Windom men will name the man.

Said to Have Died of the Jim-Jams.

A well-known Norwegian, named Stephenson, living with his family near Grafton, climbed the golden stair on Monday. Stephenson was considerable of a politician, and as such had formed a wide acquaintance in Minnesota and this part of Dakota. Last election he came to this city and put in some time working for the election of a legislative candidate who was his choice for the office. On the announcement of his favorite's defeat, Stephenson strived to keep his spirits up by pouring spirits down, and kept on an almost continuous spree from that time until his over-indulgence cut short his career.—[Herald, Grand Forks.

We imagine that article must refer to L. G. Stevenson, an old time Becker County politician, who went to Grafton not long ago in company with Walter Drew, Esq. County Attorney of Becker Co., with whom he formed a partnership in law and real estate. If this is the man he was not long ago badly frozen owing to a too close application to things spirituous. L. G. was naturally a smart man and this, we believe, was his only weakness.

COUNTY NEWS.

Carman Courier.

Ira Gallagher has purchased Mr. A. M. Child's claim near St. Hilaire and intends removing there with his family in the spring.

J. B. McLaren departs to-day for Ada to repair an elevator at that place belonging to E. D. Childs & Co., which has become damaged.

Z. Daoust contemplates the addition of a forty foot front and two stories in height to his hotel here soon. The present building Mr. Daoust finds inadequate for his patronage, therefore an addition is found to be necessary.

Mr. Sharon has carpenters at work on his new hotel purchased last week and will hurry the building to completion as rapidly as possible. This hotel is still another evidence of the boom that is expected to lift Carman far up in the scales of future greatness.

Hon. James Hill, of Warren, Wis., from the present indication stands a favorable chance of being elected President pro tem of the Senate. His many friends in this section will be pleased to hear of this worthy gentleman's advance to the front ranks of her present legislators.

John Patterson has bought out Mr. E. M. Walsh's furniture and hardware store in Carman and will hereafter conduct the same in his own name. For some months Mr. Patterson has been in charge of this department and has conducted it with credit to himself and employer. He has had considerable experience in this branch of business and feels confident he can render his customers satisfaction.

Mrs. Sophia Bush, a lady residing fifteen miles east of here towards Maple Lake, was in town Tuesday and on account of the blizzard had to remain here until this morning. She related rather a sorrowful tale, one that only shows what pluck the true western women has. Last summer she plowed and cultivated thirty-three acres of ground herself, besides taking care of an invalid husband and several small children. During the winter months she cut her own wood, takes care of the stock and looks after the interests of her family generally. Her husband had the misfortune to loose himself on the prairie recently and when shelter was reached it was discovered that he had frozen one foot and leg severely.

Fishers Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

Postmaster Steenerson will move the outfit to his store in a few days, having secured the services of Miss Anna Steenerson as clerk in charge.

Recently, the Red Lake Flouring Mill Company, put in a new and improved Corliss engine for moving their complicated flour making machinery. Although done at a cost of several thousand dollars, they now find it inadequate to the demand, and it will become necessary to have more power to run the numerous contrivances lately added for making fine flour.

The well known firm of Bataglia & Knack, engaged in the furniture business at both Crookston and Fisher have dissolved partnership by mutual consent. Owing to the growing business at both points it required the personal supervision and individual attention of one man, and Mr. Bataglia continues the Crookston store and Mr. Knack the Fisher establishment, which he will greatly enlarge soon.

A Norwegian farmer named A. Sallslad, living 20 miles north of Grand Forks, on Monday observed smoke issuing from the top of a large straw stack. He immediately procured a ladder, and with a pail of water climbed to the top of the stack with the intention of of fighting the fire, but it seemed that the flames had undermined the stack, and on his going in the opening it caved in letting him fall into the crater. He was burned to death before help could be procured. Sallslad leaves a wife and family in easy circumstances. The origin of the fire has not been ascertained.

Monday, Marshall Hilda received a telegram from Geo. Kirkpatrick, of Grand Forks, for the arrest of one Julius M. Johnson, whom Kirkpatrick accused of carrying off a coat belonging to him. The man is at work here and claims that he borrowed the coat, and expects to return it as promised. That his clothes are at the Forks, where he will return as soon as he earns enough to pay his indebtedness there. As the Grand Forks parties did not respond to the marshall's telegram he was released. The man seems to be an honest one, short of money.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Mr. Harris has the skins of three large timber wolves, which he shot a short time ago, in the vicinity of the St. Hilaire hotel.

Dan. McDonald, the dandy cop of the Crookston police force, was in town last week, having just returned from a visit to his claim on the Thief River. Dan has got a good claim, and is watching it pretty close. [Which claim do you refer to? He has two; one near St. Hilaire and one he has just taken in this city.]

During the storm last evening the large glass front of Palmer & Johnson's real estate office had a narrow escape from going "where the woodbine twineth." One of the lights was blown in, and the rest were only saved by the timely aid of P. L. Borup, who put braces across them.

Among those who are getting ready for the boom is Mr. Brannum. He has purchased a couple of lots on Crocker Cundy & Nelson's addition and intends erecting thereon a hotel for the accommodation of the new arivals. The building will be commenced just as the weather will pemit.

Marting Hansing has completed the work of getting out the timbers for Robbecke's bakery and restaurant. A farmer in the vicinity of Crookston has the contract of hauling the lumber, and will commence at once. The building will be 20×50, two and a half stories high, and will be ready for occupancy by the first of March.

Mr. John Tyrell has the contract from the railway company, for hauling one hundred cords of wood. The wood is to be delivered and piled up in the company's yard here, and is to be used on the engines. The company has also let the contract for hauling lumber, which we expect is to be used for the new depop. This looks like business.

Our local reporter paid a visit to Sorsoliel & Campbell's saw mill last week, and as we predicted some time ago, found the firm over ears in business. Parties wanting lumber sawed have been bringing in logs at such an enormous rate that the firm has been unable to saw out enough lumber to build a covering over their saw. The saw works like a charm, and they are able to turn out a large quanity of lumber daily.

East Grand Forks.

From the Courier.

We have the healthiest town in the Northwest.

Carpenters have continued steadily at work regardless of cold weather.

Wheat is again coming in in large quantities since the recent advance in price, and the farmers are once more made happy.

Miss Annie Ross, of Crookston, is visiting the family of J. W. Howes, and as a consequence the "manager" is happy and comes up smiling.

The shanty of Mr. Fisher, located in what is known as Struggle town, on the point of the rivers, caught fire and burned to the ground Sunday morning.

Some time ago one of the valuable horses owned by J. W. Howes met with a severe accident in crossing the bridge over the railroad at Washington avenue and for a time it was thought he would have to be shot, but is all right again.

Barney Haggerty one of the oldest settlers in the Red River Valley, and who owns one of the finest farms on the Red Lake River, about eleven miles east of this place, was taking in our city one day last week and expressed great surprise at the rapid advancement made in the short space of time

E. F. Masterson, who has been confined to his room from severe illness the past week is now rapidly convalescing and it is to be hoped will soon be able to resume his duties. His attending physician says his indisposition is the result of too close application to business, and also says a vacation is necessary,

No, this is not such a terrible cold country after all. It is true we are occasionally visited by a "blizzard," which is a luxury by no means to be hankered after, but they do not come every week, and of course we can afford to put up with them and be lenient, when we consider the fact that the poor things can't help themselves and would't come this way if they didn't have to. Poor blizzardy blizzard we forgive you!

Arrangements are being made to have a brick yard here next summer With the opening of spring there will be a large demand for a good quality of brick and it is absolutely necessary to the properity of our town for some one to take hold of this matter and see that the demand is supplied at home instead of compelling builders to import their brick at great expense.

Chas. and Isaac Hollinger, of Rochelle, Ill., the gentlemen who are to commence the erection of a carriage factory and wagon shop, arrived in East Grand Forks Wednesday with their household effects and several carloads of lumber preparrtory to commence building right away. This will be quite a boom for our town as it will employ a large number of workmen.

Grand Forks Herald: East Grand Forks, though possessing manifold advantages as a commercial point and also being a desirable place to live, owing to the social advantages it enjoys, is also the congenial home for the town sportsmen, where wind and weather court his good feelings, and everything conspires to afford him sport. During the spring the Red Lake rivers, whose shores are skirted with heavy timber is the home of migratory water fowls and during the autumn, plover, quail and partridges abound. In the winter, eight miles away, abundance of deer and elk may be seen cropping the tender shoots from trees, but owing to the depth of the snow at present, they are not hunted and are becoming very bold, being frequently seen close to the confines of cultivation. On Sunday afternoon, Mr. F. Duffy, of the new real estate firm of Masterson & Duffy, went to Struggletown, the settlement on the point formed by the junction of the Red and Red Lake rivers, to call on a friend, and thinking he might see something worth shooting he took along his fowling piece. Seeing something running towards him that he at first supposed was a large dog, he instantly dropped on his knee and fired both barrels, which placed the animal on its beam ends. On investigation Mr. Duffy found it was a large gaunt gray wolf and from the manner it was sent to Crookston to claim the bounty of $5. and Mr. Duffy intends to make a mat of the skin. He is proud of his trophy and the manner of its capture, considering that it scores one more for the booming city he represents.

Ada Alert: Several parties who went out to Sweden and Norway last fall to spend the winter in the interest of emigration to the Red river valley, write to friends that the prospects for a large emigration next spring are very encouraging, and there is large inquiry for detailed information about the land in the Northwest.

Argyle Banner. H. F. Elfrink, Esq., of the town of Bloomer, was in this week looking up the necessary blanks, etc., for the organization of a school district in his town. The territory to be embraced in the district is the south half of the town of Bloomer. The move is a very proper one. No neighborhood with children to educate should hesitate a moment to organize a school district and build a comfortable school house. Never mind about the country being new and the people more or less cramped, financially. A school is an absolute necessity. Children that are old enough to be educated now, must be educated now. Five or ten years hence won't do.

Larimorians Laid Out.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: Two Larimore young men wanted to telephone from the central office to the Selkirk house last night, and being charged the regular tariff of ten cents, proceeded to abuse Manager Holmes for charging the amount. Mr. Holmes paid little attention to the abusive gas which originated from over indulgence in jig syrup. Finally they told him to come out from behind the counter and they would take the ten cents worth out of his hide; an invitation which Mr. Holmes quickly accepted. The matinee begun at once and the impertinent strangers soon found that a genuine Dakota blizzard had set in, and it did not let up until the fast young men from Larimore were out in the street in bad shape, They had been knocked out of time and seemed to know it. One of them returned afterward and bought some liniment to rub on the sore places, and said he was sorry the affair occurred.

The following names were drawn at the recent meeting of the County Board to serve as grand and petit jurors during the present year:

PETIT JURORS.

- E K Overland
- Knud A Bolstad
- Calvin La Due
- J H Aldal
- O P Renne
- M W Jensen
- Isaac Holm
- S P Norton
- Jack Hall
- Adam Nephew
- T J Lee
- P C Bertils
- A L Middleton
- D Dodge
- Hans Anderson
- Theodore Helgeson
- L C McKnight
- John Peterson
- James Baine
- Richard White
- J A Bryson
- J M McDonald
- John Chilback
- Peter Larson
- Ole O Knudson
- Hilye Thoreson
- Henry Spencer
- S J Sprague
- Michael Quirk
- W D Bailey
- Watson Draper
- Wm Hommelsbeck
- Ole Hoyen
- Christopher Hanson
- Phil Porger
- John Wizand Foot
- Henry Qonsant
- Tlua Tredt
- Chas Harrengton
- M E Kirsch
- W. Lemmon
- David Haugard
- O G Bergland
- Adolph Reichel
- William Dammon
- John T Besanry
- Joseph Bellair
- Eli Lasha
- John Quesnell
- H Ducharme
- Ed Columbus
- John Perrault
- Ephraim Simper
- Adolph Zalser
- George Maxfield
- S Q Cundy
- Ole A Thoreson
- C Madson
- O H Erickson
- Donald G Green
- Ryald Hutchins
- Bernt Johnson Hagen
- James Kenn
- Iver M Johnson
- Ole B Dahl
- Thomas Patterson
- M E Hillard
- Erick Nilson
- A C Alnehart
- John Carlson

GRAND JURORS.

- O C Christianson
- John J Grandvold
- Manus K Tyssen
- Paul Johnson
- Eved A P Rene
- Henry Witty
- Martin G Peterson
- O W Kemberley
- Michael Horton
- John Hanson
- Knut H Berg
- Joseph Murphy
- Zacob Stambauch
- Miles Standish
- George Ellis
- Askin Brainard
- Thomas Erwin
- M Q Waite
- T G Olson
- Francis Higgins
- John Gilbert
- John Gordon
- James Miller.
- L H Judson
- Frank Smith
- A H Gunderson
- Chas Peterson
- P O Petersen
- L S Meyers
- W G Lytle
- Frank Bevins
- James Burt
- J R Barb
- M C Melone
- Peter Cornelius
- Walter Katts
- Gomer Evans
- Wm Campson
- S L Dobson
- P H Bjoin
- John Mason
- A J Hareson
- Philip Beaupre
- W P Darrigan
- Teddy Richard
- Albert Beaudette
- L H Gervais
- W W Wilson
- Joseph Beaudre
- Rock Lizee
- Prosper Grandbais
- Louis Huat
- Moses Allard
- Bazilla Amard
- Henry Gervais
- Robert Anderson
- James Ryan
- A J Hilden
- Christian H Gran
- John Hurphy
- R Barrett
- Robert Coulter
- Rory McRae
- Thomas Nesbit
- W C Parker
- Edward O'Brien
- Timothy Sullivan
- C B Rockwood
- John Coulter

Pioneer Press: E. L. Wakeman, the Chicago correspondent of the Courier-Journal, contributes a sketch of Knute Nelson, describing him of good grain and firm stuff. He executes this pen sketch of his subject: "In personal appearance Nelson is of medium height slightly built, but of wonderful physical power and endurance; has the light hair and full, fine beard of the typical Scandinavian, a handsome complexion, large, full and glowing blue eyes, and the square, firm-set jaw, and mouth where the lips come together in a way that tells of courage and resolution. He is a good lawyer, a ready debater, and, while not a brilliant orator, is a fluent and ready speaker, possessing bright, clean and always available wit, and has his splendid powers always in thorough readiness and command. Retiring and modest in his demeanor, he still possesses a frankness and honesty of expression, and wins you irresistibly to him by his manly and even noble presence." Mr. Wakeman pays Mr. Nelson a high tribute for his triumph over corruption in his district, and gives the fighting Fifth credit for being honest by a large majority. The district, he says, is the most important in Minnesota, and he would congratulate the sovereigns of that section—because they have a representative who will be heard from hereafter.

The Chicago Herald denounces in vigorous language the passage by the Senate of the bill to restore Fitz-John Porter to his rank in the army. It says: "He tried to effect the defeat of the Union army under Gen. Pope by disobeying his orders, and succeeded. Yet the United Sates Senate, by a vote of 33 to 27, has now voted to restore him to his rank and pay. The solid South profited by Porter's disobedience, and the solid South voted for his restoration. Twenty-six Republicans and David Davis, representing northern sentiment and the solid Union army, voted against the restoration of an officer who, Lincoln said, should have been shot. Their votes on this case will yet return to plague the Southern Democrats."—[Minneapolis Tribune.

The old reliable Prairie Farmer fully maintains the prestige and prominence it has achieved during forty-one years of faithful service in the cause of agriculture, and is a prime favorite with the farming classes. It is able, fearless, candid and fair, and keeps abreast with the progress made in all that relates to the rural industries. In its present form, and with an efficient force of editors and eminent special contributors, it is, if possible, more attractive and valuable than it has ever been. Price $2.00, in advance. Address Prairie Farmer Publishing Co., 150 Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.

The Elzevir Library.

A unique little semi-weekly magazine under this title has begun publication in New York. Each number is to contain a complete literary gem, a characteristic specimen of the best production of the brain of the author who is represented. The numbers taken together will form a beautiful little cyclopedia of the world's choicest literature. Price only two cents a number, or $2 a year. Number one contains Washington Irving's delightful story of Rip Van Winkle, Number two, Canon Farrar's graphic story of The Burning of Rome, and the persecution of the early christians under Nero. Other numbers following are "The Sea-Serpents of Science, by Dr. Wilson; Tennyson's "Enoch Arden;" Goldsmith's, "Deserted Village," "The Traveler," etc. Specimen copy sent free on request. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

Choice Literature.

This is the title of a monthly magazine of a character somewhat similiar to the well-known Eclectic and Littel's Living Age, only at a reduction of cost so startling as to make one marvel—only 25 cents a year, though each number contains nearly one-half as much as one of the four-dollar magazines. The January number contains articles by Prof. Proctor, Samuel Smiles, Count De Falbe, the Bishop of Carlisle and Vernon Lee. Specimen copy sent free on request. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher, 18 Vesey Street, New York.

Washington Irving's "Crayon Papers."

This very Prince in the realm of letters is at last able to enter the homes of ordinary mortals. Until lately his inimitable productions have been practically inaccessible on account of their high cost. The recent expiration of copyright has freed them from the short-sighted monopoly which has preferred to harvest the dollars of the thousands rather than the dimes of the millions of his countrymen who take delight in his memory. The very beautiful Elzevir edition of his "Crayon Papers," with a brilliant sketch of the Life of Irving by the poet R. H. Stoddard, making a volume of over 350 pages, is just issued and the publisher with a view to securing promptly the immense sale that is necessary to make the low price possible, offers to send, if ordered at once, a specimen copy, in neat cloth binding to any address, for the nominal price of 35 cents, or in half Russia binding for 45 cents. Irving's complete Works are offered for prices ranging from less than $6.00, upwards. The cheapest edition until recently cost over $30.00. The publisher will send specimen pages free to any one upon request. JOHN B. ALDEN, Publisher 18 Vesey Street, New York.

Choice Songs and Ballads.

The musical success of the season, is the publication of "Popular Songs and Ballads," a collection containing the words and music of over one hundred of those world famous plantation and other melodies, some of which have made the fortune of more than one Minstrel and Jubilee Troupe. It has more than pleasing melodies than any collection we know of for the price. We name a few of the titles: "Dar's one mo' Ribber for to Cross," "Dar de ol' Sarpint is a Crawlin'," "Brighter am de hebenly glories" or among the more sentimental will be found "Bring Pretty Blossoms to Strew on Mother's Grave," "In the Golden Eventide," "Robin they tell me you are going." "Heart that is Beating for Thee," &c. The PATTEN PUBLISHING CO. 49 Barclay Street, New York will forward this book to anyone who sends them the price, 25 cents.

TAKE IT! READ IT!

The Weekly Pioneer Press.

FACTS for the FARMER!
MARKETS for the MERCHANT!
MISCELLANY for the MECHANIC!
WISDOM for their WIVES!
CHATS for their CHILDREN!

Only $1.15 Per Annum.

Send for Sample Copy. Address
PIONEER PRESS CO.,
St. Paul, Minn.

NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spr ng stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respectfully,
C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.
Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!

Chapman's Patent Well.
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
American Well Works, Aurora, Ill., makes wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.
Address R. W. RANNEY,
Carman, Polk County, Minn.

CHICAGO
Dry Goods House
Main Street, Crookston, Minn.,
—CONTAINS ONE OF THE LARGEST STOCKS OF—
Dry Goods, Notions,
GENTS' AND LADIES'
FURNISHING GOODS,
----Trunks and Valises,---
Cloaks, Boots and Shoes, Clothing,
HATS AND CAPS,
Ever brought to this city. Our purpose is to sell goods as low as they can be bought in St. Paul. It will be for your interest to
CALL AND EXAMINE STOCK AND PRICES
☞ BEFORE YOU PURCHASE.
C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY

READY, FIRE!
WOOD
Is much better than kerosene and paper--cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to
LEECH & McMANUS,
OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
Wood Office and Yard on Elm Street, east of Planing Mill.

CLOSING OUT
SALE.
Our Immense Stock of
CLOTHING,
OVERCOATS,
UNDERWEAR,
CAPS,
Ladies' Cloaks,
Furs,
And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.
HACK & GALLASCHE,
Opposiet Merchants' Bank.n

LIVERY, FEED.
—AND—
SALE STABLES
Two doors north of U. S. Land Office
Main St., Crokston, Minn.
T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.
Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.
For a stylish rig, by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

THE
RED LAKE FALLS
FLOURING
MILL
Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.
BUSE & COLBENTSON,
PROPRIETORS,
RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos
—AND—
Organs
W. W. KIMBALL CO.
Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. 36 tf

CrookstonNurseries.
Tree-Claim-Stock.
Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $5.00 per acre, also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.
HASELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!
Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by W. T. Dickey,
I HAVE MOVED MY Entire Stock
INTO IT,
And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
To which I invite the attention of all
CALL AND SEE ME
At my New Store on Main Street.
A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn

NEW HARNESS SHOP
H. B. KAUFER & SON
Would respectfully inform the citizens of
Red Lake Falls
and vicinity that they have opened a
Harness Shop at the Falls, and are now prepared to furnish everything in their line as cheaply as one can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere in the New Northwest. Our work is guaranteed to be as good as any and our prices as reasonable. Call and see! H. KAUFER & SON.
Red Lake Falls, Minn

Fournet & Herron,
DEALERS IN FLOUR,
FEED,
CORN,
OATS,
POTATOES
Robert Street,
Crookston, Minnesota.

TIME TABLE

Of the Arrival and Departure of Mails at the Post Office at Crookston, Minn.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART
Grand Forks, Fisher,	10:30 a. m.	10:45 a. m.
South	7:30 a. m. 11:30 a. m.*	4:00 p. m.* 8:45 p. m.
North	7:30 a. m.	8:45 p. m.
Red Lake Falls, Gentilly,	3:30 p. m.†	9:00 a. m.‡

*Carries only mail to St. Paul, Minneapolis and beyond.
†Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
‡Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE
FOR CROOKSTON.

GOING NORTH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. Passenger,	9:55 p. m.	10:10 p. m.
" 5 "	10:30 a. m.	10:40 a. m.
" 11 freight	4:30 p. m.	8:00 p. m.
" 13 "	7:20 p. m.	6:30 a. m.
" 17 "	5:45 p. m.

GOING SOUTH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 2 Passenger,	4:40 a. m.	4:40 p. m.
" 6 "	4:30 p. m.	11:15 a. m.
" 12 Freight,		6:55 p. m.
" 14 "	5:15 p. m.	2:05 a. m.
" 18 "	1:20 a. m.

GRAND FORKS BRANCH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 9 Mixed	10:00 a. m.	10:30 a. m.

No 1, daily except Sunday. No. 5 daily. No. 11 except Sunday. No. 13 except Monday. No. 17, daily

No. 2 except Sunday. No. 6 daily No. 12 except Sunday. No. 14 daily. No. 18 except Sunday.

C. H. MIX, Agent.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

We call the especial attention of postmasters and subscribers to the following synopsis of the newspaper laws:

1 A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the laws) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and states the reason for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publishers for payment.

2 Any person who takes a paper from the post office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether a subscriber or not, is responsible for the pay.

3 If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and collect the whole amount, whether is be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

4 If the subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time and the publisher continues to send it, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post office. The law proceeds upon the ground that a man has to pay for what he uses.

5 The courts have decided the refusing to take a newspaper and periodical from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, as "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud. [37-40.]

BUSINESS FARMING.

Some Sensible Words of Advice to the Tiller of the Soil From The Western Plowman.

It is a mournful fact, to which we give utterance with a sorrowful heart, that too many farmers conduct their affairs without business principles, which would bring upon them certain ruin if they engaged in commercial pursuits. They are careless in buying and in selling are governed by the necessity for money instead of the laws of supply and demand. They allow their notes to run long past due, and pay high rates of interest, and often costs, as a penalty for conditions which were wholly unnecessary. They do not understand the meaning of commercial honor, and cannot understand that it is wrong to promise to pay money on a certain day, and then, without explaination or pretext, wait three months before doing it. Credit is as useful to the farmer as it is to the merchant. If a farmer can get an improved farming implement which will enable him to do better work on his farm, and raise better and larger crops, and pay for it out of his harvest, he can well afford to pay a fair amount of interest for the accomidation? It is a fallacious notion that farmers should never get into debt and consequently do not need the advantages of good credit. When the privilege is abused, credit will ruin any business, but when used with discretion and judgment, it is the twin brother of capital. Farming, as a means of eking out a living, may be done in a slip-shod manner, but farming as a money-making business, must be done on business principles.

We have received as many as a dozen orders for the weekly Pioneer Press during the past two weeks unaccompanied by the cash. While we should be pleased to fill those orders, we are unable to do so for the simple reason that an order to the Pioneer Press is n. g. without the almighty dollar. We do offer the weekly Press and the JOURNAL to our subscribers for the small sum of $2.50 per annum CASH IN ADVANCE. If any one doubts that let him put up his cash and see how quickly his order is honored. We also club with other papers but ONLY upon the same terms—SPOT CASH one year in advance. [36-41]

Some lady ought to secure at once the agency for the book advertised in another column, "The Care and Culture of Children." It is one of the books that no mother can afford to be without. It treats, in simple language, of the cause, symptoms, and home treatment of every disease to which children are liable, and deals beside with their training up to mature manhood and womanhood. Like all books in "The Household Series," published by the same house, [illegible]

Notice to Contractors.

Co. COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Polk County, Minn.,
Crookston, Jan. 10, 1883.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m., for performing the following work and providing all the materirls therefor, according to the plans and specifications for same now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said county, to-wit:

For putting Ice Breakers at the County bridge across Red Lake River adjacent Red Lake Falls. (as shown in plan.)

For moving the county bridge at Fisher to a point to be designated by the Board.

For building a bridge across a creek on the town line between Fisher and Roame Townships at a point where the Crookston and Frog Point county road is intercepted by said creek. (See plan.)

For building a bridge across the Morais at Sec. 12, Town 151, R. 50.

For building piers (ice-breakers) at a county bridge across Red Lake River about six miles east of Crookston. (See plan.)

Bids will be received for each separately and not as a whole.

The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

See advertisement of Dr. Sozinskey's great book "Care and Culture of Children," in another column. [37-39]

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for General Debility and all nervous complaint, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it is his duty to make it known to his fellows. The recise, with full particulars directions for prepation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be sent you by return mail, free of charge, by addressed envelope.

DR. J. C. RAYMOND,
164 Washington street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
☞ Mention this paper. [6-35, tf.]

ANXIOUS MOTHERS Who love their children and want them to grow up healthy and strong and useful men and women, all want Dr. Sozinskey's Great Book "THE CARE AND CULTURE OF CHILDREN." It is a Mother's Handbook, from the infancy to the maturity of her children, and its use will save many lives, more doctor's bills, and tens of thousands from wrecked health and wrecked morals. We do not publish or sell in any way any book that we cannot heartily recommend, and we add this to our "Household Series" of useful books with great pleasure. Sold only by subscription. We want agents in Iowa, Michigan, Nebraska, Wisconsin and Dakota. Circular giving table of Contents free. Commissions liberal. Address

A. G. WILCOX
Minneapolis, Minn.
[37 39]

AGENTS WANTED.

For our popular and fast selling publications, embracing the following standard works:

EVERY DAY CYCLOPEDIA, of Useful knowledge; 100,000 Facts for 100,000 people, a perfect Dictionary of Every Day Wants. 640 pages, 500 illustrations.

MORMONISM UNVEILED, or the Life and Confessions of John D. Lee. History of Polygamy from its rise to the present time, with a graphic account of the Mountain Meadow Massacre, in which 120 men, women and children were butchered.

THEATRICAL and CIRCUS LIFE, or Secrets of the Stage, Green Room and Saw Dust Arena Revealing the mysteries of the Theatre, Circus, Variety Show, Concert Dive; Ballet Girls, Mashers, Matinees, &c.; Home and Private Life of Actors and Actresses. 150 beautiful engravings and elegant colored lithographs.

FINE PICTORIAL FAMILY BIBLES, 2,500 Illustrations on Steel and Wood.

Good terms to live agents on the above works. $120 per month guaranteed. Circulars free.

Address
SUN PUBLISHING CO.,
[37-49] St. Louis, Mo.

Extraordinary Offers.
FOR ONE MONTH!

The Farmers' Union
AND
Minneapolis Weekly Tribune

One of the Largest, Ablest, Brightest and Best News and Family Papers in the United States.

FREE! FREE! FREE!

For one year to any subscriber to the

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

ANY SUBSCRIBER to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL who is in arrears on subscription one year or more, and who will pay his account in full to date and one year in advance, will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMERS' UNION free.

ANY PERSON who will subscribe for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and pay in advance for not less than twenty-four months will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMER'S UNION free.

THE FARMERS' UNION

Is a weekly journal of eight large pages of seven columns to the page, and in all the features of a pure, bright, able, interesting news and family paper it is not surpassed by any journal in the country.

RECOGNIZING the demand of the intelligent progressive people of the Great Northwest for a newspaper that in all its departments shall not only fully up with the times, but shall keep pace with the wonderful development of the region in which it is published, the FARMERS' UNION has perfected such arrangements as will meet all the requirements of a first class newspaper.

MOST COMPLETE.—It contains the most complete commercial and market reports received by telegraph up to the hour of going to press, a large amount of matter specially prepared for farmers and their families on the very best methods of tillage of crops of all kinds, stock growing, fruit culture, and every subject in which farmers are specially interested.

A HOUSEHOLD DEPARTMENT is devoted specially to the work of the homes of the land brighter and happier, and of lightening the labor of women in making them so. [illegible]

BESIDES these popular and valuable features the FARMERS' UNION contains choice stories and sketches, interesting and instructive to old and young, poetry, choice miscellany, the news of the week from all parts of the world, and in brief, the constant aim is to make it as nearly as possible a perfect news and home paper.

WE HAVE great pleasure in offering such a paper as this FREE to our subscribers on the terms named above. Orders should be sent in promptly, as the offer will remain open only for a limited time. Address,

[illegible] COOKE,
Ed. and prop. POLK COUNTY JOURNAL,
Crookston, Minn.

E. M. WALSH,

DEALER IN

HEAVY
AND SHELF
Hardware,
Tinware
Of all kinds. JOB WORK a specialty.

RATHBONE, SARD & CO.
ACORN
STOVES & RANGES.

BAR IRON, STEEL,
AND Blacksmiths
SUPPLIES
Building Paper,
Sash Etc.

ALSO AGENT
For the Celebrated Monitor Plows.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

RESERVED FOR

E. D. CHILDS & CO'S
LUMBER YARD.

CARMAN, MINN.

MONEY TO GIVE AWAY
IN BARGAINS
at MARKHAM'S,
THE LEADING GROCERY HOUSE
AND THE LARGEST BOOT AND SHOE STORE
IN CROOKSTON.

Goods Delivered to any Part of the City
FREE OF CHARGE.

THE ONLY 5 AND 10 CENT COUNTER.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM,
MAIN STREET,
HAVE ALWAYS ON HAND A WELL SELECTED STOCK OF Groceries, Dry Goods,
Notions, Boots and Shoes, Clothing, Hats and Caps,
And everything usually kept in a General Store. We also have on hand a full line of first-class
FARM MACHINERY.

Including the Osborne and Champion Twine Binders, Reapers and Mowers. John Deere and First and Bradley Walking, Sulkey and Gang Plows, The Pride of the West, and Buffalo Pitts Straw Burning and Horse Power Threshing Machines. Rockford and Fish Bros. Wagons, &c., &c.

Call and Examine Our Stock!

STEWART & LAWRENCE,
—Dealers in—
Pine Lumber.--Pine Lumber.
Windows, Doors, Mouldings, Building Paper, &c.
YARD ON OAK STREET, NORTH OF BROWN'S LIVERY STABLE.

CITY PAINT SHOP.
W. H. McCULOUGH,
HOUSE, SIGN
AND GENERAL
PAINTER.
Broadway, Crookston, Minn.

Great Bargains
—IN—
REAL ESTATE!
RESIDENCE LOTS
Are now offered in the Choicest Portion of the City,

Sletten & Cromb's
ADDITION,
AT PRICES
Within the Reach of All!

Those who invest now are sure to DOUBLE THEIR MONEY before Spring. Call early, for they are going off rapidly.

All persons are cautioned not to Cut or Remove Timber from Sletten & Cromb's Addition.

SLETTEN & CROMB,
Crookston, Minn.

REAL ESTATE AGENCY.

LANDS, LOTS, AND
PROPERTY OF ALL KINDS
Bought and Sold,
Property Rented and Rents Collected
LOANS NEGOTIATED, TAXES PAID FOR NON-RESIDENTS,

If you want to Buy, Sell or Rent, call or write to us and have your your wants supplied.

JAMES W. LILLY,
ATTORNEY AND R. E. AGENT, CROOKSTON, MINN.
MAIN STREET, OPPOSITE POST OFFICE.

CROOKSTON CITY BAKERY!
EARNEST MILLER, Proprietor,
(SUCCESSORS TO THE PLUMB BROTHERS.)

Takes advantage of the occasion to say that he will keep a full line of all goods that are usually found in a

FIRST-CLASS BAKERY,

And that the citizens of Polk County will find none but the best at his place of business. A fine line of

CIGARS AND TOBACCO, NUTS, FRUITS, CANDIES, PIES, CAKS, BREAD,

AND EVERY THING TO FILL OUT A HUNGRY MAN.

JOHNSON, STEPHENS & CO.,
—AGENTS FOR THE—
MINNESOTA CHIEF THRESHER,
CELEBRATED DEEING MARSH HARVESTER,
THE DEERING AND WARRIOR MOWERS,
Moline Plows,
Orvis Hollow Tooth Drag,
DIAMOND TOOTH DRAG, THE VAN BRUNT SEEDER.

☞ All machines purchase of us are Subject to Trial. Satisfaction guaranteed. Warehouses at Crookston and Fisher's.

Benham & Underhill,
(Successors to John McLean,)
Attorneys at Law,
AND NOTARIES PUBLIC.
LOAN, LAND
—AND—
Insurance Agency.
(Established in 1879.)

Money Loaned to Prove Up with!
Money Loaned on Improved Farms!
Money Loaned on City Property!

U. S. LAND OFFICE BUSINESS ATTENDED TO! ENTRIES MADE AND LAND PROVED UP!

500 City Lots in Crookston for sale! Business and Residence Lots for sale!

Improved and Unimproved Farms in Polk County for sale on easy terms!

A Full Line of Old Reliable
Fire Insurance Companies
REPRESENTED.
CROOKSTON, POLK CO. MINN.

Merchants' Bank,
OF CROOKSTON,
CASH CAPITAL, $32,000.00.

J. KELSO, ... PRESIDENT
Bellvue, Iowa.
M. R. BROWN, ... VICE PRESIDENT.
Crookston, Minn.
H. B. MONTGOMERY, .. 2D VICE PRES'T,
St. Paul, Minn.
W. M. ROSS .... CASHIER
Crookston, Minn.

WILL RECEIVE DEPOSITS, AND ALLOW INTEREST BY SPECIAL CONTRACT.

BUY AND SELL FOREIGN & DOMESTIC EXCHANGE.

Make Collections,
And do a strictly
Legitimate Business.

Agents for Foreign Passage Tickets
De skandinavjske Sprog tales her
W. M. ROSS, Cashier.

FOR A CHOICE
STEAK OR ROAST
GO TO THE CITY
Meat Market,
H. STEEGE, Proprietor.

THE CHOICEST
STEAKS,
ROASTS,
VENISONS,
PORK STEAKS,
FRESH PORK,
MUTTON CHOPS.

In fact everything of the very choices in the line of
Meats, Fresh or Salt,
MAY BE FOUND AT THE CITY MARKET.
FOR Choice Butter
GO TO THE
City Meat Market,
Robert Street. Crookston, Minn.

M. N. BERG,
Practical Watchmaker
—AND DEALER IN—WATCHES,
CLOCKS
AND JEWELRY,
ROBERT STREET
Crookston, Minn.

First National Bank,
OF CROOKSTON.

PAID IN CAPITAL $50,000.00.

ROBT. H. BAKER, President.
M. R. BROWN, Vice President.
ANSEL BATES, Cashier.

Receives Deposits, Buys and Sells Exchange on all parts of the United States and Europe. Careful attention to collections and prompt remittance. Negotiate loans, pay taxes for nonresident owners. Correspondence solicited.

DIRECTORS—Robt. H. Baker, Racine, Wis.
J. I. Case, Racine, Wis.
M. R. Brown, Crookston, Minn.
Wm. Anglim, " "
Ansel Bates, " "
E. D. Childs, Carman, Minn.

HOUSES MOVED.

Do you want to move your house to another lot? If so, call on or address

[illegible] T. A. HARRIS, Crookston.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Proprietor. DEVOTED TO THE WELFARE OF POLK COUNTY. TERMS----$1.50 per Annum.

VOL. VI. CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1883. NO. 39

Polk County Journal

Official Paper of City and County.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

H. E. COOKE, Editor and Proprieor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar Fifty Cents, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum sent to any address.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

SPACE.	1 w.	2 w.	3 w.	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 year
¼ Inch...	50	$1 00	$1 25	$1 50	$3 00	4 50	6 00
1 inch.....	75	1 25	1 75	2 00	4 50	6 00	10 00
2 Inches..	1 50	2 25	3 00	3 50	6 00	9 00	15 00
3 Inches..	1 75	2 75	3 75	4 50	9 50	12 00	20 00
4 Inches..	2 50	3 50	4 50	5 50	10 00	15 00	25 00
5 Inches..	3 00	4 00	5 00	6 00	12 50	[illegible]	[illegible]
¼ Column	5 50	4 50	5 50	6 50	15 00	25 00	35 00
½ Column	6 00	7 50	10 00	12 00	18 00	25 00	50 00
1 Column	9 50	12 50	15 00	18 00	25 00	60 00	100 00

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class Matter.

RED RIVER VALLEY.

A Clear Cool and Candid Statement of the Natural Advantage of this Famous Region.

Its Rich, Mellow and Inexhaustible Soil; Its Delightful Summers and Bright and Wholesome Winters.

Some of the Reasons Why It is To-day Attracting the Brains, Energy and Capital of this Continent.

THE RED RIVER VALLEY.

From the Grand Forks Plaindealer.

The Valley of the Red River is about 400 miles long by 125 wide, and lies very near the center of the North American continent. The Red River of the North is the dividing line between Northwestern Minnesota and Northeastern Dakota, and, taking its rise from several of the small lakes of Otter Tail County in Minnesota, flows westward a short distance and then northward to Lake Winnipeg in British America, traversing nearly 1,400 miles in its tortuous course. Its headwaters in Otter Tail County, Minnesota, mark the summit of the ridge which divides the waters flowing south to the Gulf of Mexico, in the great Mississippi River system, from those flowing north into Hudson's Bay.

Tributary to the Red River of the North are numerous streams on both the Dakota and Minnesota sides. The Bois de Sioux, flowing in from Lake Traverse on the south, joins the Red River at Breckenridge, and between that point and Winnipeg it is joined on the Dakota side by the Wild Rice, Sheyenne, Elm, Goose, Turtle, Forest, Park, Pembina and Tongue Rivers, and from the Minnesota side by the Buffalo, Wild Rice, Snake, Red Lake, Tamarac and Two Rivers

The Red River is remarkable for its narrowness, crookedness and depth. It presents the appearance of a deep, narrow cut, from thirty to fifty feet below the surface of the level prairie. Steamboatmen pronounce the Red River one of the best on the continent especially between the cities of Grand Forks and Winnipeg Being fed mainly from the Otter Tail and Great Red Lakes, the channel maintains a uniform depth sufficient for steamboat navigation throughout the dryest summers. The Red River country is not the dead level country often described. It has sufficient elevations and depressions to divide it into grain and meadow lands; water courses carry off the spring floods, slowly now for want of ditching, but in time rapidly, as the water-ways shall be opened to the streams which run in deep cut channels.

FOR NAVIGATION PURPOSES,

THE SOIL OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY

Has already become renowned as the most fertile and productive in the world. There are in two or three places narrow streaks of sub soil containing a small precentage of sand and gravel, with here and there a few stones, but, as a whole, the soil of the valley may be described from two to three feet in depth, and underlaid by a bed of marl remarkably rich in phosphates and other fertilizing elements. The soil of the valley appears to be the sedimental deposit resulting from the wash of a vast lake, which ages ago submerged the region. The Red River Valley is now recognized as the

AS A RICH VEGETABLE LOAM

CHOSEN HOME OF THE FARMER—

a region unsurpassed by any on the face of the earth for the natural fertility of the soil and the wonderful crops. Possessing a soil at once deep, rich, mellow, easy to subdue and cultivate, and especially adopted to raising wheat. The farmers of the Red River Valley have succeeded in producing a quality of spring wheat which

HAS NOT ITS EQUAL IN THE WORLD

for milling purposes. From this wheat the famous No. 1 hard Fife is made, the celebrated patent process or roller [illegible]

[illegible] Liverpool, Parris and Vienna, and commands the highest prices in all the marts of commerce. The deposit of mellow loam which produces year after year unfailing crops of this king of the cereals, may be regarded as

PRACTICALLY INEXHAUSTIBLE.

That part of this wonderful valley lying on the American side of the International line has only recently been brought under cultivation. But two of the oldest settlers, in this part of the valley, Capt. Alex. Griggs and Mayor McCormick, of Grand Forks, testify that after raising wheat for seven successive years on the same ground the last crop is as good as the first; and it is well known that the Scotch farmers of the Selkirk settlement, located in Kildona township, near the present city of Winnipeg, have grown wheat yearly on the same soil, without manure, for past fifty years.

MEADOWS AND GRAIN FIELDS.

While the Red River Valley is par excellence the home of the wheat-farmer, it is also a superb grass region Here the famous "blue joint" attains its greatest development of stalk and leaflet. The surface of the Valley presents a level, open plain, indented by numerous small streams and coulees which carry off the super-abundance of rainfall during the wet season, and the upland prairie is covered by highly nutritious grasses which afford excellent pastorage during the greater part of the year, while from the low-lying portions can be cut abundant crops of the best quality of hay. These natural meadows abound in all parts of the Valley, and from them the settlers are able to cut and put up all the hay they need at a cost not exceeding

$1 75 OR $2.00 PER TON.

The soil is composed of a rich, deep loam, principally an accumulation of decayed vegetable matter, rendering the surface warm and dry in the early spring. In winter the ground freezes to the depth of six or seven feet, and this fact appears to render the region of the Red River Valley peculiarly favorable for the production of spring wheat. Unlike eastern farmers, the wheat-growers of this Valley are not compelled to wait till the frost is out of the ground before commencing seeding As soon as the snow is gone the ground is dry and hard, and where two inches of the surface is free from frost the seeder is put onto the land prepared in the previous fall. Wheat is six or eight inches high and growing luxuriently before the frost in the ground beneath disappears.

THE CLIMATE OF THE RED RIVER VALLEY.

The climate is one of the most healthful in the world. Malarial diseases like fever and ague are unknown in the Red River Valley, and the bracing and tonic properties of the air are good for weak lungs and for consumptives. The winters are longer, but far more pleasant and agreeable than the same seasons in the eastern and middle states; they they are colder also, as measured by the thermometer, but they are not so severe to the sense of feeling. The dry atmosphere peculiar to this region renders winter apparently milder than in more southern latitudes, where the cold is painfully piercing because the air is more humid.

THE SUMMERS ARE SIMPLY DELIGHTFUL,

the heat being tempered by the cool winds from the north. As a rule the winters are steadily cold, and a thaw is scarcely known after winter sets in until spring. The alternate freezing and thawing, and the slushy snow, rain and mud of more southern latitudes do not occur in the Red River Valley. As a rule the snow-fall is much lighter than in the States further south, and, while there are generally one or two blizzards during the season (last winter there was but one, and that very moderate.) the winters will compare favorably with the same season in Wisconsin, Illnois, northern Ohio, New York and New England; and railroad travel is never blockaded here as it is hundreds of miles further south. During the summer vegetation grows with wonderful rapidity, and the season is especially delightful. The nights are and the hottest days do not bring that debility and nervous prostration which in the east drives thousands to the mountains and the seashore. September and October are counted the pleasantest months of the year, the weather gradually becoming colder until the latter part of November, when navigation closes on the Red River and the frost king asserts his prerogative for a period of about three months.

DELICIOUSLY COOL AND REFRESHING,

NO FAILURE OF CROPS

The Red River Valley has gained a reputation for its No. 1 hard wheat which is world-wide. For eight consecutive years wheat has been produced in this Valley without a season's failure, with the magnificent yield of 25 to 40 bushels to the acre. The yield of oats to the acre is from 60 to 100 bushels, [illegible] of potatoes [illegible] from 200 to 400. The difference between maximum and the minimum crops simply indicates the difference between good farming and poor farming. Thousands of merchants and laborers have been attracted whose previous knowledge of agriculture was of the most limited character; they succeed remarkably well in their new calling, but they almost invariably attempt more than they can handle, and as a consequence the average yield of their fields affords no indication of the real capacity of the soil.

THE LAND AND THE MEN.

The Red River Valley contains as fine wheat fields as ever laid out of doors. The prairie country is the place for the farmer to get rich in a comparatively short time, and no finer soil or more beautiful expanse of country can be found beneath the sun than the famous Red River Valley. In this respect it is simply perfect.

Another important fact is this: There is a chance here for the poor man to make money. He can get a home cheap—good markets, abundance of pure water, good schools and live, wide-awake neighbors. Within a very few years this will be as thickly settled as the older portions of Illinois and Iowa. There is energy among the people, a spirit of independence and self-reliance, a business capacity, a hospitality, a vigor and enterprise that electrifies with enthusiasm all with whom they come in contact. The controlling element in our cities and towns is composed of shrewd men from the eastern States and Canada, men who have

"GARDEN OF THE NORTHWEST"

MONEY AND BRAINS AND TIRELESS ENERGY.

The men who are settling in the Red River Valley are those which would make any nation rich and prosperous and develop any country they might drop into—enterprising, intelligent and progressive men, with modern ideas, modern methods and modern machinery. While one hears no twaddle about scientific farming, he will soon discover by making an inspection of the agricultural machinery depots that poor stuff doesn't sell, and the best and latest improved implements find the readiest market and the highest prices.

THE LAND OF PROSPERITY.

It is a fact that in this great Red River Valley more wheat can be raised to the acre—and better wheat—than anywhere else; that the teeming acres of this grand Valley will produce more profitable crops with less labor than any area of equal extent on the footstool. It is a knowledge of these facts that is today attracting the BEST CLASS OF AMERICAN FARMERS.

The truth has gone abroad and is causing the vast army of settlers to pour into this golden garden. Intelligent farming in the Red River Valley is today a certain road to wealth. Failure of crops through mildew, blight or drouth are unknown, and the farmer has nothing to fear from the chinch-bug weevel or grasshoppers.

Sheep Raising in Dakota.

Howard Advance.

Last fall J. I. Longley, who resides one and a half miles west of here, and who was one of the earliest settlers in this section of Miner county imported eighty head of sheep from Wisconsin, the flock being a cross between the Leicester and Southdown breeds. They cost four dollars per head delivered here. This year Mr. Longley has raised eighty-two lambs from this flock, which at present are worth three dollars per head, and sheared five hundred and sixty pounds of wool from the old sheep besides, which will net twenty-eight cents per pound. Mr. Longley has at this date twenty-nine lambs, which, at three dollars per head, are worth two hundred and thirty-seven dollars, and five hundred and sixty pounds of wool at twenty-eight cents per pound will bring him one hundred and fifty-five dollars and eighty cents, or as proceeds all told from this flock of sheep of three hundred and three dollars and eighty cents in one year. At this estimate, Mr. Longley gets the first cost of his sheep back the first year and seventy-two dollars besides, or in other words his investment pays him four hundred per cent. It would seem by the above statement that there was money in keeping sheep in Dakota, and that more of our farmers should make the experiment.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 16, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., from the proprietors of Newspapers eligible to be designated as "The Official Paper of Polk County, Minn.," wherein the list of delinquent real estate taxes for the year 1884 shall be published, for publishing such list, and also for furnishing stationery, etc. to this county.

Every such proposal must be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 with at least two sureties thereon in order to receive attention.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners of Polk County.

[illegible] M. E. BROWN, [illegible]

1883. 1883.

THE

ST. PAUL GLOBE!

DAILY, SUNDAY AND WEEKLY.

ENLARGED AND IMPROVED.

SPECIAL WIRE FROM ST. PAUL TO THE EASTERN NEWS CENTERS.

FULL ASSOCIATED PRESS PRIVILEGES.

ISSUED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

THE ST. PAUL GLOBE is now acknowledged to be the LEADING PAPER IN THE NORTHWEST.

THE GLOBE has recently been enlarged to an

EIGHT-PAGE PAPER,

It is cut, folded and trimmed. It has a special wire for its exclusive use, which connects its editorial room direct with Chicago, New York and Washington. It has, besides, full Associated Press privileges, which [illegible] special [illegible] supplemented [illegible] wire puts it in the front rank of American newspapers.

Politically the GLOBE opposes all monopolies and stands by the interests of the people. It is not chained down, but meets issues as they arise fearlessly and vigorously.

It invites subscriptions

BECAUSE IT
FURNISHES ALL THE NEWS better than any other paper.
BECAUSE IT
Furnishes the BEST MARKET REPORTS.
BECAUSE IT
Stands by the INTEREST OF THE PEOPLE.
BECAUSE IT
Approves the right and opposes the wrong, regardless of who suffers thereby.

THE GLOBE invites those not already enrolled to make a trial subscription. You can obtain it of your newsdealer or order it direct from the publication office. Inspect it and judge for yourself. All editions postage paid.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE DAILY GLOBE.

SEVEN ISSUES PER WEEK.

DAILY and SUNDAY GLOBE, ONE DOLLAR PER MONTH.

SIX ISSUES PER WEEK—BY MAIL.

One month	$0.90
Three months	2.50
Six months	5 00
Twelve months	10 00

THE WEEKLY GLOBE.

THE WEEKLY GLOBE is an eight-page paper, the same size as the DAILY GLOBE. It is the best paper for the farmers in the State. It is send to any address, one year, postage paid, FOR ONE DOLLAR AND FIFTEEN CENTS.

For three months on trial for 25 cents.

All subscriptions payable invariably in advance.

Address,

GLOBE PRINTING COMPANY.
St. Paul, Minn.

THIS SPACE

WILL BE OCCUPIED

NEXT WEEK

—BY—

J. R. CLEMENTS

ANNOUNCING

THE SALE

OF LOTS

—IN—

Clements' 2d Addition

TO

CROOKSTON,

AND

NUMBER OF LOTS

TO BE

GIVEN AWAY

BY HIM TO PARTIES

WSHING TO BUID

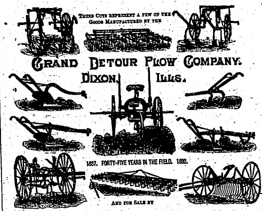
THIS SEASON.

$20,000

Worth of failure stock, consisting of
CLOTHING,
DRY GOODS,
GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,
CLOAKS AND DOLMANS

Of the late Chicago failure will be offered for sale at Crookston at 50 cts. on the dollar. Sale commencing on Wednesday, January 24th, and will continue until the entire stock is sold Everybody invited. Remember the place, opposite Cowing's hardware store, Main Street, Sign of the Red Flag. Yours,

CHEAP JOHN.



THESE CUTS REPRESENT A FEW OF THE GOODS MANUFACTURED BY THE GRAND DETOUR PLOW COMPANY.
DIXON, ILLS.
1837. FORTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE FIELD. 1882.

AND FOR SALE BY

McKINNON BROS.

MANUFACTURERS OF

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, WAGONS, CUTTERS, SLEDS, MILL CARTS, &C.

Axles, Springs, and all Repairs kept in stock.

DEALERS IN

FARM MACHINERY.

In Farm Machinery, we have a full line of Hoosier and Wolverine Seeders Dixon Diamond Tooth Harrows; Davenport, Peru City and Norwegian Walking and Sulky Plows; Chieftain Hay Rake, Iron King Mower Centre Draft; St. Paul Twine, Self-Binder. Extras for the different Machines always in stock.

MOSER & MOECKEL,

—DEALERS IN THE BEST CLASS OF—

ACRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,

—INCLUDING THE—

FOUNTAINE CITY AND BUCKEYE SEEDERS,

Case Wagons, Cassady, Buford and Hapgood Walking, Sulky and Gang

---PLOWS,----

Minneapolis Twine Binder, the Meadow Lark and Buckeye Mowers, the celebrated Fargo and Scotch Harrows, Nichols & Shephard Vibrators and Straw and Wood Burning Engines, the Cooper Stationery and Portable Straw and Wood Burning Engines, C. Aultman & Co's new Model Thresher and Monitor Engine, A full line of

—BUGGIES, SLEIGHS, CUTTERS—

—AND PLATFORM SPRING WAGONS.—

In fact everything usually kept in their line.

INSURANE AGENCY.—We write policies only in the best and most responsible companies, at as low rates as can be secured on the class of property insured. Our list of companies will bear inspection.

Money to Loan.

MOSER & MOECKEL.

J. ENGEL,

WHOLESALE DEALER IN

BAR GLASS,

Of all kinds and Goods used at Bars Only. A full line of

LAMPS AND CHANDILIERS.

The only House in the Northwest of Chicago.

No. 23 East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.

GENERAL

Merchandise.

Call at our New Store on Main street, opposite the U. S. Land Office, when you require articles in our line. We carry a full and complete stock and invite invite inspection.

[illegible]

Van Dyke & Denniston,

PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.

COR. MAIN AND SECOND STREETS,

Will attend to all professional calls promptly.

A. A. JUST, M. D.,

Homoeopathic Physician and Surgeon.

Main Street, near U. S. Land Office,

CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINN.

A. H. DUNLAP, M. D.

GRADUATE McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.

Licensed College Physician and Surgeon, Quebec.

OFFICE OVER MERCHANTS' BANK.

AIME GABOURY,

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.

Graduate Doctor in Medicine Laval University Canada. Licensed Coll. Phy. Surg., Quebec Late of Michigan University, U. S.

Office over the "Arcade" Clothing Store Crookston, Minn.

DR. M. WATTS,

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.

Office on Main Street, one door north of Star Drug store. Professional calls, by day or night attended to with promptness.

DENTISTRY.

J. H. THOMAS, D. D. S.,

ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

Artificial teeth from one to an entire set inserted. Gold, silver or artificial filling used as desired. Regulating children's teeth a specialty. All work warranted.

C. W. BARNES, D. D. S.,

Graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery.

OFFICE AT RESIDENCE ON

BROADWAY CROOKSTON

MIDWIFERY.

Mrs. Olena Dawley, a graduate of the mid-wife college, of Christiania, Norway, has opened an office on Fletcher Avenue. Having had an experience of 12 years in Norway and six years in America, she is fully competent to treat all cases intrusted to her. All diseases of women or children carefully and scientifically treated.

JOHN LEO. H. STEENERSON.

LEO & STEENERSON

ATTORNEYS AT LAW

MAIN STREET,

CROOKSTON, - - MINN

—JOHN N. IVES.— —D. E. HALTESTAD.—

IVES & HATLESTAD,

ATTORNEYS AT LAW,

Collection and Land Office Business made a Specialty.

Money secured for final proofs on short notice.

CROOKSTON, MINN.

P. A. DUFOUR,

ATTORNEY & COUNSELOR AT LAW

—MAIN STREET,—

CROOKSTON - - MINN.

REYNOLDS & WATTS,

Attorneys at Law,

MAIN STREET. CROOKSTON, MINN

CROOKSTON HOUSE,

Main Street, Crookston, Minn.

J. E. MITTEN, - PROPRIETOR.

FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR

Good Sample Room.

COMMERCIAL HOUSE.

W. H. TOPPING, Proprietor.

SECOND STREET CROOKSTON, MINN

[illegible]

ALBION HOUSE,

ISADORE FORTIER, Prop.

Cor. Broadway and Robert Street, CROOKSTON, POLK CO., MINNESOTA.

Terms moderate. Good stabling.

European Hotel

and Ladies' and Gents' Restaurant.

[illegible] East Third Street, St. Paul, Minn.

OPEN DAY AND NIGHT.

THEO. GOLDEN, Proprietor.

Second Street

MEAT MARKET.

STANTON & CO., Proprietors.

[illegible]

NEW HARDWARE FIRM.

DREW BROTHERS,

[illegible]

FAIRBANKS

Standard Scales

OF ALL KINDS.

FAIRBANKS, MORSE & CO.

[illegible]

Polk County Journal

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON THURSDAY, JAN. 25.

Hay is selling at $6 per ton.

Wheat, No. 1 Hard. 87, No. 2 82.

Mr. A. Harris, of Minneapolis is visiting with Mr. and Mrs. L. Brin.

Dr. J. J. Welsh, of Warren, has been in the city for a few days. Rumor says doc is headed for the west.

Fll Steenerson was in the city over Sunday and sampled the Oat(e)s at a dollar on Saturday evening.

Miss R. Brin, of Minneapolis, is visiting her brothers in the city, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. I. Brin.

Mrs A. Burton, of Fergus Falls, sister of L and H. Brin, spent a week in the city returning to Fergus on Tuesday.

Paul Bataglia has returned from St. Paul and informs us that he has a large stock of furniture on the way. Look out for it.

Only one train a day for awhile. The night train has been taken off and our mail and express will now arrive and leave on the day train.

The Misses Hale and Robinson party will give a fine entertainment at Ericsson's Hall, Saturday evening, Jan. 27th. Tickets for reserved seats at Tom Morris' jewelry store.

H. Brin has rented the building on Main Street, lately occupied by Justice Lewis, has put in a stock of goods which he claims he can sell at less than the same goods cost below.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston, Minn. [31-44]

Ole Omlie left for his old home at Decorah, Iowa, on Monday night. He will probably be back again with the little birds of spring when the wild flowers are blooming o'er the plain—or thereabouts.

The passenger train north was thrown from the track, near Kennedy station. The wrecking train was sent to the scene of the disaster and found both engines and every car off. Save a few bruises, no one was hurt.

The Alice Oates Opera Company disappointed a great many at the Hall last Saturday evening, who expected to hear something grand and stunning and—didn't. Oat(e)s at a dollar, are too dear for common folks.

Thor Haatvedt has been heard from. He is foreman in a lumber camp in Chippewa Co, Wis., at a salary of $60 per month. He says he is enjoying himself hugely and that he will be back again about the first of April.

Martin Bang has been laid upon the shelf for a week back. It is not a weak back that ails him but a severe cold which Dr. Just has been faithfully endeavoring to check ere it runs into a fever. He is improving slowly.

Dr. Van Dyke was called on Thursday morning of last week to attend the little son of Tom Harris, who fell from a chair, breaking his right arm. The doctor patched the urchin up in good shape and he will get along all right if he is careful.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Ed. Streeter is out again after a severe sickness. His family have all been sick and his wife and one little girl are yet very sick. What with his own severe illness and his constant anxiety on account of his family Ed. has had a severe time of it.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

P. A. Gatchell, (the huckleberry of the Pembina Pioneer) and Willoughby Clark, an attorney of Pembina, gave us a pleasant call on Tuesday, en route to Grand Forks to attend a railroad meeting at that place. They are figuring for a railroad from Pembina to Fargo on the west side.

The Misses Hale and Robinson will give an elocutionery entertainment at Ericsson's Hall, on Saturday evening next. These ladies will be welcomed by our citizens who remember the entertainment given by them a short time since. Don't fail to hear them if you enjoy a rare treat.

Mr. Angus Kennedy and wife left for their home on Tuesday after having had a good visit with friends here and at Ada. Mr. Kennedy's farm is near Minto, on the Forest River (instead of the Turtle as was stated last week.) Mr. K. says he thinks Crookston the boss city of the Northwest.

On Wednesday a team belonging to Mr. Fortier, of Red Lake Falls, became frightened at the cars and took a lively turn up Robert Street leaving the sleigh in front of the Sherman house; turning on Broadway they took a bee line for Mrs. Brin's Millinery shop and went crashing through the window, wrecking the window and some millinery goods that were displayed therein. The damage, however, will be comparatively slight.

A man named Carlson who is at work for Harry Wyand came into [illegible] saloon on Monday with both of [illegible] hands frozen solid. Mr. Bang [illegible]

All interested in the bridge question should be at the council meeting on Saturday evening [illegible]

John O. Juve returned from St. Paul on Wednesday, having been delayed a while on the road. [illegible]

The Pilarde case was called before justice Lewis on Tuesday and adjourned until this (Thursday) morning.

Messrs. McGraw & Jennings have moved into their new office opposite the Land Office and are now ready to receive their friends at the new stand.

See the offer we make in another column to club with the Minneapolis Weekly Tribune, and call round and see about it.

The Folke-Tidende office is now located in Steenerson Brothers new building on Main street, and Mr. Hassel expects soon to have things in ship-shape and strike his regular gait.

A 1,000 pound bell arrived on Wednesday for the use of the city as a fire alarm bell. It will be placed in the tower as soon as that structure is ready for it. With the addition of the new hose cart, recently received the fire company is pretty well equipped.

We are having some brilliant weather and some that is not so brilliant. While it is pretty cold at times we have this consolation that other parts of the habitable globe have as serious drawbacks as we do, and in some cases far more so.

We overlooked the fact that Andrew Steenerson has taken possession of his new office on Main street. He has, however, and not only so, but he has formed a partnership with A. P. Bond in the real estate business and invites the patronage of all interested in buying or selling real estate.

Mr. P. J. LaChapelle informed the JOURNAL that a man named Beaudry was burned to death on Sunday morning. His house took fire and he was working hard to save his furniture, after having taken his family safely out, and was overcome by the heat and smoke and perished ere help could arrive.

The Carver Comedy Company will open at Ericsson's Hall on Monday evening Dec. 29th in "A Big Bonanza." They have been playing in Winnipeg to crowded houses for six months and have the reputation of being one of the best Comedy Companies on the road. Tickets for sale at Tom Morris'. Don't fail to hear them.

See the new ad of E. D. Childs & Co. in this issue, and if you contemplate purchasing seed wheat, do it now. Wheat is on the rise and every day's delay will make your seed wheat cost more than it would if purchased now. Childs & Co. have a fine lot of clean, No. 1 Hard, Scotch Fife, hard to beat in this market.

Attention is called to the notice of Assignee's sale elsewhere in these columns. This sale is bona-fide. The goods must be sold and great bargains are to be had. Now is the time to get good goods at far less than cost, as the stock is one of the largest and best selected in the city and must be sold soon at a sacrifice. Call early for bargains.

T. H. Bjoin has just received a carload of a new patent bob-sled, made by T. G. Mandt, called the Oscillating Bob-Sled. These sleds are said to be the best sled on runners, and Tom says he can sell them at prices to scare the natives if cash is offered. He will sell for cash or on time. Call and look them over if you want to see something nobby and stout.

The Ojata Optic, published at Ojata, D. T., by F. D. Pierce, has put in its appearance. Frank was for some time in charge of the Warren Sheaf and knows how to get out a good sheet. If the people of Ojata will give him a good patronage he will get up a creditable paper for them, but no living man can make a live paper on faith and dumplings with no money to grease the wheels.

We have received from Dyer & Howard, two pieces of sheet music, the latest out. Dyer & Howard are the leading music dealers of the State and keep everything in the line of a musical instrument from a jewsharp to a full brass band. If you want any piece of music, a piano or organ or anything in their line send to Dyer & Howard 148 and 150 East Third Street, St. Paul, for illustrated catalogue.

A large number of the friends of Miss Birdie Jennings were right royally entertained at the Sherman House on Thursday evening last the occasion being Miss Birdie's 16th birthday. After a fine repast the guests adjourned to the K. of H. Hall where all so disposed tripped the light fantastic until the wee sma' hours. Miss Birdie received many presents attesting the kindly feelings of many friends and the affair was pronounced a perfect success in every particular.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found the new ad of the T. L. Miller stock Co. of Beecher, Ill. The company make a specialty of the celebrated Hereford cattle and all interested in improving their stock should correspond with this company. Better yet send one dollar to the T. L. Miller Co., Beecher, Ill., and receive the Live Stock Journal one year which will tell you all about the Herefords and other stock. Every subscriber gets also a beautiful chromo representing a group of seven Herefords. [illegible]

On Tuesday evening [illegible] Zackey was exhibiting two elegant watches worth fully 50 cents [illegible] taken from one [illegible] said Kelley having [illegible] said time by the [illegible]

The Robert Street Bridge.

The council will doubtless act upon the bridge question next Saturday evening and if the last meeting is an index will probably vote the money asked. We have taken occasion to talk with many and we find a disposition to growl at the Council (before they have taken the final action) and yet no steps have been taken to prevent the issue. The council are but the people's servants and are bound to do as the people wish and the people (many of them) have signed and sent in a petition to the council asking that $4,000 be applied to aid in building the bridge. As yet no remonstrance has been made to the petition and the council will undoubtedly act unless a remonstrance is sent in. We are told that the proprietors of the proposed addition offer eight acres to the city for a park, providing the city aid in building the bridge. The direct tax would be only seven per cent per annum on $4,000 and if the benefits to be derived are proportionate it would seem to be cheap enough. While we are considering the question of city improvements, however, we should not forget any of them, the fact that the water-mains must be extended to be of any avail, and many others of great importance. We should also look into our present indebtedness, consider all questions fairly and candidly and then, if the bridge is a sufficient benefit one that we need and can afford, go for it; if it is not then by a good stiff remonstrance veto it.

Congregational Church.

Services at Lawrence Hall, 11 a. m. and 7 p. m., Sunday School 12 m. Preaching next Sabbath by Rev. C. E. Page pastor. Morning subject. "The influence of the unseen world." Evening subject. "I am not going to be here (in Crookston) a great while." A sermon especially to strangers and temporary residents.

THE M. E. CHURCH LYCEUM.

Special Correspondence.

This society met on Tuesday last at 7:30 p. m. The preliminary exercises being over, some discussion arose as to certain defects in the constitution; by vote of the society it was decided to reconsider the vote by which the constitution had been adopted. A committee, consisting of Hon. J. W. Lilly, G. J. McManus and Mr. Bond, was appointed to present at our next meeting a revised constitution and additional by-laws.

The society was increased by the addition of several members. All business having been disposed of the discussion of the question, Resolved, "That the right of suffrage should be extended to women," was next in order. Three judges were appointed to decide the question, which decision was to be rendered according to the merits of the arguments. The debate was opened by the leader of the affirmative who, in telling arguments proceeded to present womens' rights. The leader of the negative in terms of earnest eloquence pleaded that woman's sacred home duties should not be infringed upon by the addition of public responsibilities, but, as regards all political questions, she should remain the willing echo of the so-called Lords of Creation. The discussions were lively and spirited throughout, and reflected much credit upon the speakers. The decision of the worthy judges then followed, which was found to stand two to one in favor of the negative.

It was decided to have a mixed programme at the next meeting. A committee of five was appointed by the chair to prepare a programme, which resulted as follows:

Music	Choir.
Reading	G. J. McManus.
Recitation	W. F. Bode.
Music	Prof. C. Lindberg.
Essay	J. J. McLennan.
Reading	Miss Edith Webb.
Song	E. A. Ranson.
Speech	Hon. J. W. Lilly.
Reading	Miss Carrie Weaver.
Music	Choir.

The society promises to become a great incentive toward the development of the talent of our young city. We extend a hearty welcome to all interested in our work, to be present at our next meeting.

Let No Guilty Man Escape.

A telegram received at this office about noon on Monday stated that a printer, named McClure, was wanted in Emerson for stealing a buffalo coat from the editor of the Daily International. We immediately put the police on track of two individuals who had appeared at our office early in the morning and who had tried to sell an overcoat and a watch that they had put in pawn for their breakfast with Charley Robbecke. Evidently the parties had skipped the town as they could not be found. On Tuesday morning we received a letter from Douglas who said that the coat was a very old one and not very good looking but that we must get it for him at all hazards. He cautioned us to look out sharp for the rascals as they were keen ones and would doubtless give us fictitious names to mislead us. One, he said was a Longfellow and tother a Shortfellow. Soon after we received the letter, the door opened and in walked a Longfellow with an old buffalo coat on (the oldest coat we ever saw, so we knew at once it must be Charlies, and a Shortfellow without an old buffalo coat on. The Shortfellow said that he was a Huckleberry all the way from Pembina, a printer called Gatchell for short, and the Longfellow (with the horrid buffalo coat on) was a lawyer from Pembina, named Willoughby Clark that they were going over to Grand Forks to build a railroad somewhere to skip the country. Remembering what our friend Douglas had told us of the breeze the rogues would try to give us we laid the stern arm of the law onto them to once and telegraphed Douglas to come down as soon as he could if possible and sooner anyhow. Meanwhile as there was a shadow of a doubt as to their identity we allowed alias Clark and alias Gatchell to follow us about town to see the boys instead of locking them up in the bastile. Unfortunately we had business at [illegible] Grand Forks [illegible] the [illegible] advantage of [illegible] and skipped for Grand [illegible]

THE BEST WAGON —ON WHEELS—

IS MANUFACTURED BY

FISH BROS. & CO.,

RACINE, WIS.,

WE MAKE EVERY VARIETY OF

Farm, Freight and Spring Wagons,

And by confining ourselves strictly to one class of work; by employing none but the Best of WORKMEN, using nothing but FIRST-CLASS IMPROVED MACHINERY and the VERY BEST of SELECTED TIMBER, and by a THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE of the business, we have justly earned the reputation of making

"THE BEST WAGON ON WHEELS."

Manufacturers have abolished the warranty, but Agents may, on their own responsibility, give the following warranty with each wagon, if so agreed:

We Hereby Warrant the FISH BROS. WAGON No.........to be well made in every particular and of good material, and that the strength of the same is sufficient for all work with fair usage. Should any breakage occur within one year from this date by reason of defective material or workmanship, repairs for the same will be furnished at place of sale, free of charge, or the price of said repairs, as per agent's price list, will be paid in cash by the purchaser producing a sample of the broken or defective parts an evidence.

Knowing we can suit you, we solicit patronage from every section of the United States. Send for Prices and Terms, and for a copy of THE RACINE AGRICULTURIST, to

FISH BROS. & CO., Racine, Wis.

Weather record for the week ending January 25th, 1883:

Date	Time
Jan. 19—	8:00 a. m.	22	below.
"	11:30 a. m.	21	"
"	4:00 p. m.	23	"
"	8:00 p. m.	28	"
" 20—	8:00 a. m.	45	"
"	1:00 p. m.	23	"
"	8:00 p. m.	27	"
" 21—	7:30 a. m.	42	"
"	11:00 a. m.	28	"
"	4:30 p. m.	27	"
" 22—	8:00 a. m.	43	"
"	11:00 a. m.	24	"
"	5:30 p. m.	20	"
" 23—	8:00 a. m.	31	"
"	11:00 a. m.	11	"
"	7:00 p. m.	12	"
" 24—	8:00 a. m.	25	"
"	11:00 a. m.	22	"
"	5:00 p. m.	22	"
" 25—	8:00 a. m.	42	"

The Torch of Hymen.

Pianos and Organs.

At bottom prices and warranted satisfactory, at the American Express Office, Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

On Eighth Street, between Ash and Broadway, two lots with good house and good barn, also house and lot on Ash Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, also lots 3 and 4, block 12 on Main Street. Terms easy.

CALVIN B. PALMER,
[28-tf] Crookston, Minn.

Money to Loan.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to loan on improved farms from THREE to FIVE years time at very reasonable rates. Apply at my office on Main street, opposite U. S. Land Office.

[14-tf] H. STEENERSON.

For Sale. To Rent.

Four thousand acres of cultivated and timber lands at the mouth of the Sand Hill on the Red River, for sale. Also farms to rent. Address,

STEENERSON BROS.
[30-tf] Crookston or Fisher.

School Desks.

Districts wanting the best desk manufactured, and warranted to be so will do well to call on W. H. Jennings, Sherman House, Crookston. He represents the Racine School Furniture Co., and warrants from five to ten years. [4-tf]

Hair Dressing.

For particulars call at Mrs. I. U. Jennings Millinery Rooms, on Main St., Crookston, Minn.

[30-tf]

Notice.

All parties indebted to us are requested to call and settle by note or cash at our place, do not ask for further credit till settlement is made.

[34-tf] FONTAINE & ANGLIM.

For Sale Cheap.

A second hand cook stove. Call at JOURNAL office. [34-tf]

$100,000 to Loan.

Prove up you claim. Cash paid for School Bonds and County Orders. Call on or address,

BROWER & McLEAN,
[24-tf] Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

A fine farm of 183 acres only a short distance from the city. Twenty-three acres timber, 129 acres under cultivation; good house and barn. Apply at JOURNAL office. 21-tf.

Sealed Proposals.

Sealed proposals will be received by the clerk of the board of education of the city of Crookston, until Saturday Jan. 27th, for furnishing sixty cords of sound oak cord wood. Fifty cords to be delivered at the high school building and ten cords at the school house on the hill. Parties can bid for the whole or lots of ten cords.

J. G. McGREW,
[38-39] Clerk of Board of Education.

Wanted,

An energetic agent for Polk county. Address Singer Manufacturing company, Fargo, D. T.

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,761,379
German American, N. Y.	3,094,080
German, Freeport, Ill.	1,028,407
Niagara	1,557,487
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,580
Fireman's Fund, California	1,180,017
National of Hartford	1,701,803
N. Y. Alliance	1,027,349
Phoenix of Hartford	[illegible]
Union, California	1,20,038
British America	1,848,000
North British	[illegible]

We also represent the [illegible]

Notice.

To contractors and bridge builders Bids will be received for two weeks from the date of this notice: for driving seventy piles: forty on the Wild Rice River at the Twin Valley Mills in the town of Wild Rice and thirty to be driven on the Wild Rice in the town of McDonaldsville, for bridge piers.

Bids for the construction of a bridge (span 80 feet) across the Wild Rice at Twin Valley Mills, will also be received for the same length of time. Bids for bridge must be accompanied by plans and specifications. Further information given, by applying at the County Auditor's office or of either of the commissioners. The board reserves the right to accept any or reject all bids.

By orders of County Board of Commissioners of Norman County, Minnesota.

Dated at Ada, Jan. 10th 1883. A. RENNING, County Auditor

Notice,

All persons in interest will take notice that I have purchased of N. P. Stone, his undivided one-sixth interest in the Town site of Carman, South Crookston.

The above interest will be sold as a whole or in any part to suit purchasers. For particulars apply to owner, or Reynolds & Watts, Attorneys.

[19-tf] J. H. KLING.

Bobsleds, Cutters.

The McKinnon Brothers have 250 pairs of bobsleds, 45 swell box cutters and also a good supply of cutters suitable for grocers, which they will sell cheap for cash. These sleighs are all their own make which is a good and sufficient guarantee. Call and examine their stock if you intend to purchase.

[29-tf]

MARRIED.

REUSLESES—REINHARDT.—In this city, on Saturday, Jan. 20th, 1883, by G. W. Lewis, Esq., Mr. Carl Reusleses to Miss Margaret Reinhardt, all of Polk County, Minn.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., Jan. 22d, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land office, at Crookston, Minn., on March 2d, 1883, for the ne¼ Sec. 20, T. 147, R. 48, viz: OTTO P. ENGLESTAD, Hd. No. 4,401. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Peder Johnson, Martin Paulson, Hans P. Englestad, Ole P. Englestad, all of Caledonia P. O., D.

[36-43] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., Jan. 11th, 1883.

Complaint having been entered at this office by William Schumaker against Oscar Bernard for abandoning his Homestead Entry, No. 7,487, dated June 12th, 1882, upon the se¼ Sec. 18, T. 153, R. 46, in Polk County, Minnesota, with a view to the cancellation of said entry; the said parties are hereby summoned to appear at this office on the 1st day of March, 1883, at 10 o'clock a. m., to respond and furnish testimony concerning said alleged abandonment.

[33-41] JOHN CROMB, Register
P. C. SLETTEN, Receiver.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., Jan. 4th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Feb. 10th, 1883, viz: FRANK PELKEY, Hd. No. 989, for the sw¼ Sec. 12, T. 150, R. 46. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Felix Fournet, Hippolyte Paris, Bartine Kertson, Benjamin Dolbeck, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn. [37-41]

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., Dec. 22th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, on Feb. 7th, 1883, viz: CHARLES N. SANFORD, Pre. D. S., No. 6363, for the se¼ S. 18, T. 148, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of said land, viz: Frank Michie, William Marin, C. C. Dillon and Ed Stone, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[36-40] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., Dec. 26th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 26th, 1883, viz: GEORGE CHARBONEAU, H'd No. 5079, for the northwest frac. quarter of S. 30, T. 154, R. 47. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Fred Sutter, Frand Sutter of Euclid, Polk Co., Minn., David Brandt, Fred Zwarek, of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[35-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, Crookston, Minn., Dec. 21st, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on January 29th, 1883, viz: FRANK BENOIT, Pre. D. S. No. 4,768, for the sw¼ Sec. 10, T. 151, R. 48. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Louis Haas, Joe Wassel, David Beladine, Joe Sturgeon, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn.

[35-39] JOHN CROMB, Register.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, County of Polk. } ss. District Court, 11th Judicial District.

G. Cowing and W. H. Cowing, copartners under the firm name of Cowing Bros., Plaintiffs, vs. James G. McDonald, Defendant. SUMMONS.

The State of Minnesota to the above named Defendant: You are hereby summoned and required to answer the complaint of the Plaintiffs in the above entitled action, which is filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the Eleventh Judicial District in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota [illegible]

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAVING BEEN made in the payment of the sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars, ($3500,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, executed and delivered by James G. McDonald, to Ansel Bates bearing date the third day of April A. D. 1882, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the Third day of April A. D. 1882, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in Book 1 of Mortgages, on pages 2, 3 and 4, and which Mortgage was given to secure the payment of Thirty-five hundred dollars, and interest according to the conditions of a certain promissory note in said Mortgage described and executed and delivered by said Mortgagor to the said Mortgagee, in said sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars payable on the first day of November 1882, with interest until paid, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and bearing even date with said Mortgage, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: All of lot six (6) in Section thirty (30) in Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) excepting from said lot six. The following described piece or parcel of land, viz: Beginning at the southwest corner, of the southeast quarter, of Section thirty (30) Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty six (46,) thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet (560) to a corner, thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river, thence south 35° west one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 24° west, one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 15° west, one hundred and eight feet to a corner, on the south line of said Section thirty (30,) thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30,) one hundred and fifty eight feet (158) to the place of beginning, containing three acres and nine-tenths, which has been conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, in deed book "B" page 504, and also excepting from said lot six (6) the following described lot of land, viz: All that strip of land thirty-three feet wide (33) off of the north end of said lot six (6) Section thirty (30) Town one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) the said strip being eighty rods long. The land Mortgaged in the above mentioned Mortgage and which will be foreclosed by a sale thereof embraces all the balance of said lot six not included in the above mentioned exceptions and contains twenty-two acres and eight-tenths, which was Mortgaged as and will be foreclosed and sold as one tract of land, situated in the City of Crookston, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the eighth day of February A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and one hundred dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 19th, A. D. 1882.

ANSEL BATES, Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN, Attorneys for Mortgagee. [34-40]

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage duly executed by S. R. Norris and Allie A. Norris his wife, mortgagors, to Andrew C. Johnson, of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 23d day of October, 1879, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on the 29th day of December, 1879, whereby said mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate, situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: All of lot six (6) in Section number thirty (30) Township number one hundred and fifty (150), Range forty-six (46) containing twenty-seven and 70-100 acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, to secure the payment of twenty-six hundred and thirteen dollars, and interest thereon from date, at the rate of ten per cent until fully paid, according to the terms of five certain promissory notes in said mortgage described, executed and delivered by said mortgagors to said mortgagee, each in the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, three of which notes have been paid, and one of which notes for the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the 23d day of October, 1879, became due and payable on the 23d day of October, 1882, and has not been paid; and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, on the first day of April, 1880, at three o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., in book "B" of mortgages, on page 231.

And, whereas, the following described pieces or parcels of land was released from the lein of said mortgage, to-wit: a piece or parcel of land beginning at the south-west corner of the south-east quarter of Section 30, Township number 150, Range 46, thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet, to a corner; thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river; thence south thirty-five degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south twenty-four degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south fifteen degrees west one hundred and eight feet to a corner on the south line of said Section 30; thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30) one hundred and fifty-eight feet to the place of beginning which said piece or parcel of land contains three acres and nine-tenths, and was conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, in Deed Book "B," page 504, and which described piece or parcel of land is excepted from the said described lot six, Section 30.

Also excepting from said lot six, Section 30, aforesaid, all that strip of land thirty-three feet wide off of the north end of said lot six; Section thirty (30); the said strip of land being eighty rods long.

And, whereas, said mortgage was heretofore duly assigned by said Andrew C. Johnson, mortgagee, to Ansel Bates, of Crookston, Polk County, Minnesota, by deed of assignment duly executed and delivered, and bearing date the 30th day of December, 1881, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, on the 30th day of December, 1881, at five o'clock p. m. in book "F" of mortgages, on page 130.

And, whereas, there is unpaid on said mortgage the sum of ten hundred and forty-five dollars and twenty cents, with interest thereon from October 23d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum; that one note or installment, viz; five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, with interest thereon from October 23d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent., is now due and unpaid, amounting to the sum, including the interest thereon, of six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and thirty-five cents ($688.35-100) which is due at the date of this notice, and the further sum of seventy-five dollars which is allowed as an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, by the terms of said mortgage. And no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the amount of said note and the interest thereon, or any part of the debt secured by said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the said mortgaged property, not including the parcels of land hereinbefore mentioned as having been released from the lien of said mortgage, and the balance of said mortgaged property will be sold in one tract by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the said County and state, on the eighth day of February, 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, to satisfy and pay said debt and interest thereon and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the seventy-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the expenses and disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated this 19th day of December, 1882.

ANSEL BATES, Assignee of Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN, Attorneys for Assignee. [34-40]

GOLDEN STAR

WHEAT

The Best Wheat in the Market!

Yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre and weighs 64 pounds per bushel.

Price $2.50 per Bushel.

☞ Leave orders at Juve & Bergland's or Eiken Bros., where samples may be seen.

T. O. BERGLAND.

HARDWARE

EIKEN BROS.,

ARE JUST RECEIVING THEIR LARGE STOCK OF

Hardware, Tinware, Stoves and Shelfware

WE SHALL KEEP A

FULL and COMPLETE STOCK OF GOODS.

In our line and Invite the Patronage of all.

COME AND EXAMINE OUR STYLES AND PRICES.

One door south of U. S. Land Office Crookston, Minn., (Overland's old stand.)

EIKEN BROS.

E. D. SCHRAER

LIVERY.

Feed and Sale Stable.

Best Turnouts in the city. Single or Double Rigs, with or without drivers or Saddle horses always ready at a moments notice by day or night. If you want a

NOBBY TURNOUT

—CALL AT THE—

RED BARN

E. D. SCHRADER,
Cor. Main and Third Streets, Crookston

MERCHANTS' BILLIARD HALL!

M. L. FRETTS, Proprietor,

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

The Choicest Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand.

Jas. G. McDonald,

MANUFACTURER OF

BRICK AND TILE

ALSO

CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

We are prepared to fill orders for brick in any quantity at the kiln or delivered, and to furnish estimates, plans and specifications, and to complete buildings of every description. Mason work of all kinds done promptly.

Plans and specifications of all building under my charge furnished free, executed by the best architects in the Northwest.

NEW RESTAURANT!

MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

JACK CONFAIR, Proprietor.

Warm meals at all hours. First-class in every particular. TRY THE NEW RESTAURANT at Losey's Old Stand, Main street, Crookston, Minn.

A. Allen,

AGENT

—FOR THE—

HOWE SCALE COMPANY.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

FARMERS' COLUMN.

Fancy Work and Home Decorations.

SERVICEABLE RUG.—Take pieces of ingrain carpeting, the brighter the colors the better, and cut them in strips about three inches wide. Ravel out both edges, leaving a center of an inch with fringe each side. Then sew these strips upon a foundation of strong cloth. Put them near enough together to make the fringe lie up thick, and if the colors are pretty you have a most luxurious-looking rug.

LAMP SHADES.—Subdued light in sitting-rooms is now effected, and pink or red silk shades are in fashion. They are made on wire frames, to be purchased from lamp-makers. Persian silk is generally used, and is put sometimes tight over them, with a full crossway frill, which, with a pair of scissors, can be pulled into a fringe at the edge, headed by ruche, or the frill is kilted. Another form is a parasol-shaped frame, with close set ruche covering the whole, made of Persian silk ruched at the edge. Fern shades also are fashionable, and are made by placing ferns in a tasteful arrangement on tissue paper, and pasting muslin over them. The effect when the lamp is lighted is most pleasing. Japanese parasols half-open, the top cut off, are used, and so are the new owl shades.

PRETTY WAY TO MAKE BRACKETS.—Take pasteboard or a paper box and cut it the shape you wish your bracket. Cut a shelf, and brace for the shelf to rest on; sew these on to the back tightly. Put a narrow strip of pasteboard around the front of the shelf, and down the front of the brace. Now take gum or elm twigs, and sew or glue on to the frame. I fix them on so that the top looks like two oak leaves coming together. Get burnt umber (which is very cheap) and paint it. It may be mixed with turpentine; water will do. After it is dry give it a couple of coats of varnish. Comb cases, card receivers and other nice little ornaments may be made the same way.

MANTEL LAMBREQUIN.—This is made of dark green velvet and is without decoration except across the edge at the bottom; crescents of thin brass are attached to cords, and a small tassel is fastened to each; this has the effect of a rich fringe. A great addition to the mantel is to have a piece of the velvet of the width and depth of the lambrequin fastened to the wall above the shelf. It may be tacked with brass-headed nails or fastened to a regular curtain pole with brass rings. This makes a good background to bring into relief any handsome article of mantel furniture. Brasses and paintings of any kind are shown to good advantage; china also.—Exchange.

LADY'S HOOD.—First row—Make a chain of 12 stitches, then work three shells, leaving three stitches between the shells. Second row—make 7 more rows exactly like the first from the mark. Ninth row—Increase one in this row by making two shells in the top of the middle shell, thus making 4 shells in the 9th row; work 11 rows plain, that is, without increasing any. Twenty-third row—Increase by making an extra one between the two middle shells, work 23 rows plain. Forty-fifth row—Increase work, 11 rows plain. Fifty-seventh row—Increase work, 14 rows plain. Seventy-second row—Increase work, 10 rows plain. Eighty-third row—increase work, 7 rows plain. Ninety-first row—Increase work, 7 rows plain. Ninety-ninth row—Increase work, 8 rows plain. One hundredth and eighth row—Increase work, 8 rows plain. This forms half of the hood; repeat these directions for the other half, and crochet them together at the top. For the outside make a chain of 15 stitches, join into first treble of the shell, and then make 15 chain stitches and join to the next shell, and so on. The work is turned always at the end of each row. Work a fringe of 40 chains at the ends. With a needle and thread draw the top of the hood for the crown, then cross the strings at the back and sew them fast. To wear, put it on, then bring the strings forward and cross them under the chin, then bring them up over the ears and cross them on the top of the back of the head. It takes three skeins of midnight yarn, 1½ ozs., of split zephyr, and 2 yds. of ribbon. Put a bow on the front of the hood, one over the gathers, one at the center of the back of neck, and one on the string where they cross on top of the head.

A HEAVY QUILT.—The following is useful if not pretty: Take old clothes after the men and boys are done wearing them, rip to pieces and wash. Take the best parts and sew them together in strips or blocks, or any way that is handy. When large enough lay it on an old quilt and tack. If you want it very heavy lay some old tow sacks or strips or carpet in the middle. I use all my heavy dark rags up in this way, and they make splendid quilts for winter.

Foot Rot in Sheep.

Foot rot is of two kinds, common softening and decay of the hoof, caused by wet pastures and yards and by excessive growth of the horn, which curls under the sole and gathers sand and filth, which rot the foot; and malignant foot rot, which affects the interior of the foot and destroys the bones and tissues of it; and also discharges a contagious virus by which sound sheep become diseased. The first kind is easily removed by paring away the decayed horn, cleansing the foot thoroughly and dressing it with tar; the cause of it must be removed if a cure is expected, and the sheep's feet kept dry. The more serious disorder may be treated as follows: Pare off all the decayed horn and clean out the offensive matter down to the bottom of it. Then inject into the openings of the sole, a strong solution of sulphate of copper, with a syringe or by means of a feather; apply a poultice of linseed meal and wrap up the foot. Dress the foot daily until all foul discharge is stopped, and then use tincture of benzoin, and wrap the foot in tow steeped in the tincture, covering it with stout canvas for protection.

Softening the Hands.

"How can I whiten and soften my hands?" is a question that is asked by a correspondent. Doubtless one way to do this is to avoid doing the work which has made your hands rough and dark, but often this work may be done with such care that the hands will not be injured. If one is obliged to sweep her house, to empty the ashes from grate or stove, and to wash dishes, she can not expect to keep her hands as white as idle hands are, but if she takes the precaution to put a pair of old gloves or mittens, when she sweeps and is doing dusty work, one cause of rough skin will be removed. Then there are preparations which one may use; powdered borax is excellent to soften the skin. A mixture which is said to be a sure cure for undue prespiration of the hands is made of a quarter of an ounce of powdered alum, the white of one egg, and enough bran to make a thick paste; after washing your hands apply this; let it remain on your hands for two or three minutes and then wipe off with a soft, dry towel. Luke-warm water is better than hot or cold if the skin is inclined to be tender or to chap.

Effects of Woman's Beauty.

All women, even the ugliest, says the Spectator, feel that beauty is a weapon on their side in the battle of life; like to see it exert a force, and when it is great and, so to speak, beyond criticism, admire it with genuine heartiness—heartiness as real as that which men in their admiration for strength manifested in any conspicuous way. It is usual to say women decry beauty, but that is a blunder, caused by stretching instances into a law. Of all decorations, the one least grudged by men is the "V. C.," and that whether the admirers be in themselves brave or timid; and of all sources of success, women grudge beauty the least.

A WALTZ QUADRILLE.

The band was playing a waltz quadrille,
I felt as light as a wind-blown feather,
As we floated away at the caller's will
Through the intricate mazy dance together.
Like a mimic army our lines were meeting,
Slowly advancing, and then retreating,
All decked in their bright array;
And back and forth to the music's rhyme
We moved together, and all the time
I knew you were going away.

The fold of your strong arm sent a thrill
From heart to brain as we gently glided
Like leaves on the waves of that waltz quadrille;
Parted, met, and again divided,
You drifted one way and I another,
Then suddenly turning and facing each other
Then off in the blithe chasse,
Then airily back to our places swaying,
While every beat of the music seemed saying,
That you were going away.

I said to my heart, "Let us take our fill
Of mirth and pleasure, and love and laughter,
For it all must end with this waltz quadrille,
And life will be never the same life after.
O! that the caller might go on calling—
O! that the music might go on falling
Like a shower of silver spray—
While we whirled on to the vast forever,
Where no hearts break and no ties sever,
And no one goes away."

A clamor, a crash, and the band was still,
'Twas the end of the dream and the end of the measure;
The last low notes of that waltz quadrille
Seemed like a dirge o'er the death of pleasure,
You said good-night, and the spell was over—
Too warm for a friend and too cold for a lover—
There was nothing more to say;
But the lights looked dim, and the dancers weary,
And the music was sad, and the hall was dreary
After you went away.
—Ella Wheeler.

A VALUABLE PACKAGE.

A Station Agent's Story.

I was telegraph operator and station agent on one of the western lines of railroad, when this adventure of which I am going to tell you happened to me.

It was a wild and stormy night, and as the depot was nearly half a mile out of town, the set of loafers which usually collected about the stove in the waiting room had evidently concluded to seek some place nearer home to spend the evening in, and, for a wonder, I was alone. The express train from the west was due at 9:50. After that I should be at liberty, and I began to wish the evening was over long before the train came along, or else that I had some one to talk to, for the depot was in one of the lonesomest spots that could have been selected; and the wind kept up a dismal moaning in the pines close by, and every now and then seemed to be positively howling in the wires of the telegraph. I began to feel nervous and fidgety.

At last the train came. I was also express agent, and the expressman on the train handed me a heavy sealed envelope remarking, as he did so, "Be careful of that, Branthwaite. There's a big bonanza in that package, if it were yours or mine."

"Money?" I asked, noticing that there were but two passengers getting off—two men in shaggy overcoats and slouchy looking hats, whom I concluded without thinking much about them or paying but little attention to them, to be hunters returned from some up-country trip.

"Yes; a trifle of twenty thousand, I believe," answered Phillips. "Old Powers is sending it down to his son, who is putting up a mill somewhere near here, isn't he?"

"Yes; on the other side of the river," I replied. "It's lucky to have a rich father, Phillips."

"You are right there," answered Phillips.

And then the train started off, and I turned and walked towards the office.

As I neared the door with the package in my hand one of the men who had been watching me, made a spring toward me. I don't know how I happened to be on the lookout for them, but I must have been for I jumped back almost the same instant that he made his move, and before either one of them comprehended what I was about I had made a dive between them and succeeded in getting into the office, and had the door bolted almost before I knew what I was doing.

I heard a volley of curses hurled after me, and then I knew by the sounds and creaking of the door that both of the men were trying to break in. But I had no fears of their doing that. It was of hard wood, well-seasoned, and would resist all their efforts in that direction.

I put the package in the safe and and locked it securely, I stopped to think what was to be done. Then I sat down to think, while I could hear the men talking outside; I knew they were holding a council over the means to be used to effect an entrance and obtain possession of the money I had received.

It was anything but a pleasant situation to be in. Here I was alone, half a mile away from any assistance, at ten o'clock at night—and a stormy night at that—and the probabilities are that nearly everybody was already in bed. If they were not, no one would think of coming to the depot at that time of night. Outside were two desperate men who knew I had a large sum of money in my possession, and they knew that if they could effect an entrance I would amount to but little in the way of preventing an accomplishment of their villainous purpose.

Suddenly a thought occurred to me.—The clerk at the hotel where I boarded had taken a fancy to telegraphy, and he had put up a wire between the hotel and the depot. Why couldn't I advise him of my danger, and have him send help?

I heard a new sound at the door just then, which sent the blood in great, frightened waves all over me. The men had begun to cut their way in with pocket knives!

I rushed to the instrument and "called" George. What if he had gone to bed, or should be out! I turned pale at the thought.

But pretty soon a response came back. He was there. Go ahead.

I began and wrote:

"I am in danger. Two men are trying to gain admittance for the purpose of robbing the express-safe. Send help immediately, for God's sake! Not a minute to lose!"

"Slower," telegraphed George, who had not been practicing long enough to be able to read very well.

I went over with the message again. But I suppose excitement made my writing "blurred," for again he sent back word:

"Slower, and more distinct! Can't make it out!"

Good God! Before I succeeded in making him understand me they would be through the door, I thought, with a cold sweat breaking out all over me. But I went over the message again, and this time he caught it, and sent back a hurried "All right! Hold on for ten minutes!"

The men were digging away like beavers. I could see the points of their knives once in a while, as they splintered away fragments of the panels. But I knew that it would take them some time to cut away enough for them to make an entrance through. How I wished I had a pistol!

I waited in feverish impatience. Suddenly there was a crash, and one panel was stove in by the foot of one of the men.

"Aha!" he grinned, with his leering face at the aperture. "You see we mean business, don't you? What are you going to do, when we get in, eh?"

I didn't know. Die, I supposed, if they took an idea to put an end to me into their heads. Why didn't George and the help he had promised come? It seemed to me that they had had time enough to make a ten-mile tramp.

"We've got the second panel almost ready to stave in," said the other man, chuckling horribly over the cheerful information. "Then, I guess, Tom can crawl through. You might as well be opening that box o' your'n an' git out that bundle we're after. It'll save all on us considerable trouble an' time."

Crash came his foot against the panel, and it burst into splinters; and my heart fairly stopped beating when I saw one of them thrust his head and shoulders through the opening. I seized the poker, and struck him over the head with all the force I could muster. He rolled out a volley of terrible curses, but I was master of the situation at that particular moment.

Suddenly there was a sound of voices, and then the man outside cried out that they were "nabbed," and tried to make his escape. But I knew by the sound that he was caught, and was struggling with his captors. There were several pistol-shots fired, and eager cries, during which the poor wretch in the door made no effort to escape, but lay there limp and motionless. I began to fear I had killed him. I drew back the bolts, and got the door open just in time to see the other one overpowered, a prisoner in the hands of a half a dozen of the boys from town. Then we got the man out of the door. He wasn't dead, but he was insensible; my blows with the poker had been too much for him.

I bought me a pistol the first thing next morning, and was on the lookout for robbers and adventures after that; but that was the only adventure of any account that happened to me while I stayed there. If it hadn't been for that telegraph which George and I had put into operation, I rather think I should have finished up all my earthly adventures that night.

Pithy Paragraphs.

"The Tennessee House yesterday," says the Memphis Avalanche of Friday, "voted to pay interest on Mrs. Polk's bonds, but refused to pay the interest on the bonds held by the blind girl of Lawrence County. If the ghost of Andrew Jackson could handle a club there would be cracked crowns at the Capitol."

A Parkersburg (Pa.) gentleman is building a house wholly of iron, on a solid rock. The walls are hollow and will be used as chimneys. The hot smoke and air from the fires passing between the walls is expected to aid materially in keeping the house warm in winter. It will be a nice place in a thunder storm, with the lightning playing hide and seek through it.

A man with a complete suit of tanned deer-skin recently drove an ox-cart loaded with venison into Omaha, Neb. The cart contained thirty large deer, all of which the hunter killed between daylight on Monday and sundown on the Friday of the same week. He has been a farmer, but proposes to make his living hereafter as a hunter.

According to report, the Mexicans must be among the politest people on the globe. Even the robbers are gentlemen, and when they are obliged to rob, really put one under obligation for their attention. An incident is given of a pretty speech made by a Mexican Beau Brommel in appropriating a pair of earrings: "Possessing such bright eyes, Senora, what need have you of these dull stones?"

New Orleans is in active preparation for the festival of the Mardi Gras, which occurs in February. His majesty, the king of the carnival has issued an order commanding all the loyal organized soldiery through the Union to proceed to New Orleans during the week preceding the festival.

The Local Option law in one of the Maryland counties has a provision requiring a physician to write in ink his prescriptions for liquor and to number, date and record them for the inspection of the state's attorney. A physician is now under six indictments for neglecting these forms; and the proper execution of the law will tend to discourage its evasion by means of easily-procured physicians' prescriptions.

During the past year sixteen railroads in the United States were sold under decree of foreclosure. These represented a total mileage of 867 1-2, and they were represented by 26,160,000 of capital stock, $39,265,000 of bonds and other stocks. This was the smallest record of foreclosures since bankruptcy proceedings were instituted against defaulting roads. The Railway Age shows that during the last seven years 273 railway companies, having a mileage of nearly 21,000 miles and representing an investment of $1,430,000,000, have passed through bankruptcy and foreclosure proceedings. Some of these were seven years in dragging their way through the labyrinths of federal jurisdiction.

One often shudders at the peril to which telegraph workmen, or "linemen," as they are called, are exposed, as they move about on the tops of high buildings. In New York on Wednesday one of them came to his death from a terrible accident while thus engaged. William Jones was repairing the wires on a high building on Broadway, between which and another building is a triangular yard, or air-shaft. The windows that look out upon this are protected on the outside by an iron crossbar set in the masonary. In an attempt to swing himself from a sixth-story window to the roof of an adjoining building Jones took hold of this bar. It gave way, and the unfortunate lineman fell to the bottom of the yard, seventy-five feet or more, and was instantly killed.

Congress, at its last session, passed a bill declaring the title to Black Point, near the Presidio, in California, to be in General Fremont's wife, and referred the matter to the Court of Claims only to ascertain its value at the time she was dispossessed by the government, over twenty years ago, with an allowance of 6 per cent. interest per annum during the whole term. The sum to be realized will provide an ample fund for the support of the general and his family in the coming years. This piece of good fortune is said to be due to the deft hand and unflagging energy of his brilliant wife, Jessie Fremont.

An Indian at Alpena, Michigan, last week killed in the forest a deer that had a red ribbon, hanging from which was a bell, around its neck.

The Duke of New castle is at Jacksonville, Florida, taking a rest from travel.

Truth and Honor.

Query:—What is the best family medicine in the world to regulate the bowels, purify the blood, remove costiveness and biliousness, aid digestion and tone up the whole system? Truth and honor compels us to answer, Hop Bitters, being pure, perfect and harmless. See another column.—Toledo Blade.

Rheumatism quickly cured! Send stamp for free prescription. R. K. Helphenstine, Washington, D. C.

"Rough on Rats" clears out rats, mice, flies, roaches, bed bugs, ants vermin, 15 cts.

Mother Swan's Worm Syrup, for feverishness, restlessness, worms, tasteless, 25 cts.

Redding's Russia Salve is unequalled for chilblains, chapped hands, frost bites, etc. Try it.

Counterfeiting.

Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters has proved to be the finest thing of the kind ever discovered, and consequently dishonest persons are counterfeiting them.

The genuine is put up in round black bottles holding 1 1-2 pts. with a white lithographed label on one side bearing the signature of J. P. Allen, and a yellow label on the other side. These are the old genuine and original Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters, and if they had not been good no one would have thought of counterfeiting them. This is no advertising dodge. Look out for frauds.

Ladies & children's boots & shoes cannot run over if Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners are used.

Try the new brand Spring Tobacco.

Indorsed by the Clergy.

We take the pleasure in recommending Dr. Farmer's White Wine of Tar Syrup to the public, and especially to any public speaker that may be troubled with throat or lung disease. REV. M. L. BOOHER, Reading, Mich.

Sold by all Druggists.

REV. J. T. IDDINGS, Albion, Mich.
REV. V. L. LOCKWOOD, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Petrolia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1879

Messrs. Kennedy & Co.:—My hair is growing out so fast that I can almost see it grow myself, through the use of your Carboline.
D. Nixon.

Persons frozen to death are found in the streets of Moscow daily.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM

This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
Harmless to the Most Delicate.

By its faithful use Consumption has been Cured when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

WM. C. DIGGES, Merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes April 4, 1881, that he wants us to know that the LUNG BALSAM has cured his mother of consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says, others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

WM. A. GRAHAM & CO., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of MATHIAS FREEMAN, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The LUNG BALSAM cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

As an Expectorant it has No Equal!

FOR SALE by all MEDICINE DEALERS.

WOMAN CAN SYMPATHIZE WITH WOMAN.
HEALTH OF WOMAN IS THE HOPE OF THE RACE.

Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

A Sure Cure for all FEMALE WEAKNESSES, Including Leucorrhœa, Irregular and Painful Menstruation, Inflammation and Ulceration of the Womb, Flooding, PROLAPSUS UTERI, &c.

Pleasant to the taste, efficacious and immediate in its effect. It is a great help in pregnancy, and relieves pain during labor and at regular periods.

PHYSICIANS USE IT AND PRESCRIBE IT FREELY.

FOR ALL WEAKNESSES of the generative organs of either sex, it is second to no remedy that has ever been before the public; and for all diseases of the KIDNEYS it is the Greatest Remedy in the World.

KIDNEY COMPLAINTS of Either Sex Find Great Relief in Its Use.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER will eradicate every vestige of Humors from the Blood, at the same time will give tone and strength to the system. As marvellous in results as the Compound.

Both the Compound and Blood Purifier are prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price of either, $1. Six bottles for $5. The Compound is sent by mail in the form of pills, or of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Enclose 3 cent stamp. Send for pamphlet. Mention this Paper.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS cure Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the Liver. 25 cents.

Sold by all Druggists.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
25 CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. 100

THE WASHINGTON (D. C.) WEEKLY STAR. Established 32 Years. THE STAR is a large, independent eight-page paper of fifty-six columns, cut, pasted and folded. Contains reports of Congress, all Government Departments, U. S. Courts, Washington News and Gossip, Political, Personal, Society and Local Affairs, Correspondence, Sketches, Home Articles, Fashion Notes, Telegraph News (having its own wire to New York), Literary Notes, The Markets, etc. Send for specimen. Try it. Only One Dollar a year. Address
The Weekly Star, Washington, D. C.

MAGNETIC INSOLES!! Warm the feet, perfect the circulation, and prevent colds, rheumatism and disease. MAGNETON APPLIANCE CO., Sole Manufacturers, 218 State St., Chicago, Ill. For sale by all leading Druggists and Shoe Dealers, or sent to any address on receipt of $1 per pair. Send for illustrated paper. Magnetic Appliances have no equal in the world.

WHITE RUSSIAN OATS. Rust proof. Big cropper. [illegible] SEEDS. Catalogue free. JOHN A. SALZER, La Crosse, Wis.

PATENTS Procured, or NO PAY. Trade Marks, Etc. Send Model and Sketch, will examine and report if patentable. Many years' practice. Pamphlet free. N. W. FITZGERALD & CO., Patent Attorneys, Washington, D. C.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound ranks first as a curative agent in all complaints peculiar to women.

The auction sale of pews in Beecher's church netted $37,000.

"Buchupaiba."

Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Diseases. $1. Druggists.

Two horses, harness and sleigh were stolen from Archy Kennedy of Broadway.

There is no use in talking. Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills will cure nervousness in its worst forms, and produce a charming happy state in a troubled mind and permanently build up the general system. They contain no narcotic or harmful drug whatever.

The old Fort Crawford hospital at Prairie du Chien was burned yesterday.

"He who is ready to buy up his enemies will never want a supply of them." It is cheaper to buy a true friend in Kidney-Wort who will drive away those miserable enemies, a torpid liver, constipation, diabetes, piles, diseased kidneys and bowels. This remedy is now prepared in liquid as well as in dry form.

The City bank at Jersey City has suspended.

"Rough on Rats."

Clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, ants, bed-bugs, skunks, chipmunks, gophers. 15c Druggists.

News has just reached Austin of the death of Mrs. Sherman Page in Southern California.

The wonders of modern chemistry are apparent in the beautiful Diamond Dyes. All kinds and colors of ink can be made from them.

Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, is a candidate for mayor of that city.

Skinny Men.

"Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Debility. $1.

J. H. Millard, cashier of the Omaha National bank, is the barrel candidate for senator in Nebraska.

Consumption is a disease we all dread. It often carries its victim to an untimely grave. How important, then, for those who cherish life and health, to prevent that disease in its early stages. Every Cold or Cough should be treated with Allen's Lung Balsam. There is no better remedy.

Baby Saved?

We are so thankful to say that our baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and protracted irregularity of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength.—The Parents, Rochester, N. Y. See another column.—Buffalo Express.

An Awful Responsibility.

We all deplore the terrible ravages of consumption but only a few of us seem to have common sense enough to take the proper means of preventing it. Hale's Honey of Horehound and tar, taken as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Difficult Breathing or Hoarseness, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Sold by druggists.

Pike's Toothache Drops cure in one minute.

The Flesh Speedily Reunites when obstinate sores are cleansed with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Of Druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, 50 cents.

Eminent Dr. J. J. Caldwell, Baltimore, Md. states: I have used Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic largely in Debility, Febrile, and Nervous Diseases, and I have found it one of the most reliable of nutrient tonics now in use or to be found in pharmacy." (Take no other.) Of Druggists.

Personal—Men Only.

The Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich., will send Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts and Electric Appliances on trial for thirty days to men (young or old) who are afflicted with nervous debility, lost vitality and kindred troubles, guaranteeing speedy and complete restoration of health and manly vigor. Address as above. N. B.—No risk is incurred, as thirty days' trial is allowed.

"Brown's Bronchial Troches" are an effectual Cough Remedy. Sold only in boxes.

Mr. Whittier, the poet, is bothered very much by autograph hunters. He tell a reporter that during 1882 he received between 2,000 and 3,000 letters asking for his autograph.

Pure Cod-Liver Oil made from selected livers, on the sea-shore, by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York. It is absolutely pure and sweet. Patients who have once taken it prefer it to all others. Physicians have decided it superior to any of the other oils in market.

Chapped Hands, Face, Pimples, and rough Skin, cured by using JUNIPER TAR SOAP, made by CASWELL, HAZARD & CO., New York.

KIDNEY-WORT
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF CONSTIPATION.

No other disease is so prevalent in this country as Constipation, and no remedy has ever equalled the celebrated Kidney-Wort as a cure. Whatever the cause, however obstinate the case, this remedy will overcome it.

PILES. THIS distressing complaint is very apt to be complicated with constipation. Kidney-Wort strengthens the weakened parts and quickly cures all kinds of Piles even when physicians and medicines have before failed.

If you have either of these troubles
PRICE $1. USE Druggists Sell
KIDNEY-WORT

Acts at the Same Time on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.

DR. C. W. BENSON'S
SKIN CURE
Is Warranted to Cure
ECZEMA, TETTERS, HUMORS, INFLAMMATION, MILK CRUST, ALL ROUGH SCALY ERUPTIONS, DISEASES OF HAIR AND SCALP, SCROFULA ULCERS, PIMPLES and TENDER ITCHINGS on all parts of the body. It makes the skin white, soft and smooth; removes tan and freckles, and is the BEST toilet dressing in THE WORLD. Elegantly put up, two bottles in one package, consisting of both internal and external treatment.
All first class druggists have it. Price $1. per package.

DR. BENSON'S NEW REMEDY AND FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters gives steadiness to the nerves, induces a healthy, natural flow of bile, prevents constipation without unduly purging the bowels, gently stimulates the circulation, and by promoting a vigorous condition of the physical system, promotes also, that cheerfulness which is the truest indication of a well-balanced condition of all the animal powers. For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

KIDNEY-WORT
IS A SURE CURE
for all diseases of the Kidneys and
LIVER

It has specific action on this most important organ, enabling it to throw off torpidity and inaction, stimulating the healthy secretion of the Bile, and by keeping the bowels in free condition, effecting its regular discharge.

Malaria. If you are suffering from malaria, have the chills, are bilious, dyspeptic, or constipated, Kidney-Wort will surely relieve and quickly cure. [illegible]

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Price $1.
KIDNEY-WORT

FREE For Information & Maps of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, write to F. H. SMITH, 46 Clark Street, Chicago.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

YOUNG MEN learn TELEGRAPHY here and we will give you a situation. Circulars free. VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address Dr. H. G. ROOT, 183 Pearl St., New York.

WISE'S AXLE GREASE
Never Gums.
IT KEEPS MOIST, OILY AND CLEAN. Those who use it once always use it. Ask for "WISE'S" where you trade.

ADD TO YOUR INCOME
Club 13 of the Mutual Investment
Clubs offer the surest means of making regular monthly profits from investments of $10 to $1000 or more in GRAIN, PROVISIONS & STOCKS. Each member gets the benefit of combined capital of the Club. Reports sent weekly. Dividends paid monthly. Club 13 paid shareholders back their money in profits in past three months, still leaving original amount making money in Club, or returned on demand. Shares, $10 each. Explanatory circulars sent free. Reliable correspondents wanted everywhere. Address R. E. KENDALL & CO., Com'n Mchts, 177 & 179 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT, a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued by LAMBIE & CO., Druggists, Third street, corner Wabasha, St. Paul, Minn. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention.

WE DRESS THIS CARD IN MOURNING,
Because there are so many thousands of our fellow mortals suffering and dying who might be cured by using
"Dr. Sykes' Sure Cure for Catarrh."
Ask druggists for it, or write to
DR. C. R. SYKES,
169 MADISON ST., CHICAGO, ILL.
For full information, testimonials, etc.
Cut this out now, for this Card will be of value to you.
Name this paper when writing.

CONSUMPTION.
I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.
DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

Piles Piles Piles.
A sure cure for Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles. A single box of Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment has cured the worst chronic case of Thirty Years standing. Sold and recommended by all Druggists. Price $1.00.
NOYES BROS. & CUTLER, St. Paul. Agents.

SEEDS
I will give you the best Seeds for the least money of any firm in America or refund. Western Seeds are best. Mine take the lead. Gardeners say they never fail. I used 6000 lbs paper to print 50,000 pretty Catalogues illustrated with $2000 worth of engravings. It beats the world. worth many dollars. FREE. Prices below all. R. H. SHUMWAY, Rockford, Ill.
Best Seeds cheap pretty Book Free.

WHEAT GROWERS!
Why will it pay you to get some of the Saskatchewan Fife Wheat
For next spring's seeding? Because it is the PURE SCOTCH FIFE. Because it is nearly twice as prolific as the Wheat now grown here. Because it is a week earlier. Because it is healthy. Because leading millers and wheat men have pronounced it the best milling wheat today in the Northwest.
Write to ABERNETHY & WELLMAN, of Minneapolis, for Circulars giving full description.

SEEDS.
R. W. WOODVILLE, Northfield, Minn., Grower and Dealer in best Garden and Flower Seeds for this climate; sent postage paid. Catalogues free.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

HAIR Send postal for Ill'd catalog. HULL'S Hair Store, 38 & 40 Monroe, Chicago.

Educate For Business at the Oldest & Best Commercial College. Circular free. Address C. BAYLESS, Dubuque, Ia.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Me.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES. Sure relief ASTHMA. Price 35cts. by mail. Stowell & Co., Charlestown, Mass.

VEGETABLE & FLOWER SEEDS
For Home Gardens. Our Illustrated Garden Manual is a beautiful book given away to all. Send for it and examine our prices and [illegible] list. MARKET GARDENERS write at once for our wholesale price-list. Sent FREE. J. B. ROOT & CO., ROCKFORD, ILL.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS
Sold By ALL DEALERS Throughout The WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

SAMARITAN CURES AND NEVER FAILS. NERVINE
Is unfailing and infallible in curing Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Alcoholism, Opium Eating, Nervous debility, Scrofula and all Nervous and Blood diseases. To Clergymen, Lawyers, Literary men, Merchants, Bankers, Ladies and all whose sedentary employment causes Nervous Prostration, Irregularities of the blood, stomach, bowels or kidneys, or who require a nerve tonic, appetizer or stimulant, Samaritan Nervine is invaluable. Thousands proclaim it the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system. For sale by all Druggists. THE DR. S. A. RICHMOND MEDICAL CO., Sole Proprietors, St. Joseph, Mo.

THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST!
Oregon, Washington & Idaho.
Offers the best field for Emigrants—viz.: a mild, equitable, and healthy climate; cheap lands of great fertility, producing all varieties of Grain, Fruit, and Grasses, in wonderful abundance; an inexhaustible supply of Timber; vast Coal Fields, and other mineral deposits; cheap and quick transportation by railroads and river navigation; direct commerce with all parts of the world, owing to its proximity to the Pacific Ocean.
NO DROUTHS, NO INSECT PESTS, NO HURRICANES, WHIRLWINDS, OR OTHER DESTRUCTIVE PHENOMENA.
The Lands of the Pacific Northwest show an average yield of wheat per acre largely in excess of that of any other section of the United States.
No failure of crops has ever occurred.
Oregon Wheat commands a higher price than that of any other country in the Liverpool market.
An immense area of very fertile Railroad and Government Lands, within easy reach of the trunk lines of the Northern Pacific R. R., the Oregon Railway & Navigation, and the Oregon & California R. R. Co.'s and their numerous branches in the great Valleys of the Columbia and its tributaries, are now offered for sale at Low Prices and on Easy Terms, or open to pre-emption and Homestead Entry.
The great movement of population to the Columbia region now in progress will be enormously increased by the completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Co.'s systems. This renders certain a rapid increase in the value of Lands now open to purchase or to entry under the United States Land Laws.
For Pamphlets and Maps, descriptive of the country, its resources, climate, routes of travel, rates and full information, address
A. L. STOKES,
General Eastern Agent,
52 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

W. N. U. No. 4.

When writing to advertisers please say you saw their advertisement in this paper.

THE MAGNETON APPLIANCE CO.
Magnetic Insoles.
NO COLD FEET.
WHAT THEY DO.
Insulate the feet from the cold and damp earth, and thus prevent the abstraction of the positive force from the body.
Generate by their MAGNETIC ACTION an agreeable warmth, and insure against cold feet.
Secure perfect circulation in the feet and lower extremities.
Cure chilblains and remove all unnatural heat, perspiration, swelling and tenderness of the feet and ankles.
Exert a tranquilizing and invigorating influence upon the entire system through improved circulation.
Prevent, relieve, and in some cases CURE, Rheumatism, Neuralgia and kindred diseases.
In all forms of Chronic and Nervous Disease and Debility are of great value.
Are a great conserver and direct promoter of the general health.
One Pair of the Magnetic Insoles
Will demonstrate the truth of these claims
PRICE, $1.00 PER PAIR.
100,000
Prominent Residents of the City of Chicago Wearing Them.
THOUSANDS OF PERSONS
Are now writhing in Disease, all of whom date the contraction of their different Maladies from the catching of a Cold from DAMP OR COLD FEET.
"Keep the feet warm and the head cool" is an axiom as old as the hills, and yet is as true to-day as at any period in the world's history.
Sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00 by the Magneton Appliance Co., 218 State St., Chicago. [illegible]
Send for Illustrated Paper, giving cuts of Magnetic Appliances that have no equal in the world. MAGNETON APPLIANCE CO., 218 State St., Chicago.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

AMONG GREEK BRIGANDS.

It was on such a morning as we fog-nurtured islanders seldom witness at home, that I stood upon the deck of the good steamer Cumonundouros watching the nearing shores of the Pireus, which, as the world knows or should know, is the port of the classic city of Athens. the beautiful unclouded sky; the bright outline of the sun-bathed coast; the air laden with the scent of the distant Hymettus; the far eminence with the grand old Acropolis standing out, white and bold in the clear atmosphere; and close at hand the mouldering tomb of Themistocles—all combined to arouse such poetic fancies in my mind that I forgot for the moment the prosaic business upon which I had come. The screaming engine of the busy little railway which carries the traveler from the Pireus to Athens, soon reminded me, however, that I was accredited with a mission from a London Greek firm to their friends in the Attic city; and I was soon whirling over the sacred ground. We passed the monuments of those doughty champions of the war of Independence, Karaiskakis and Miaulis, and many other objects of interest, and after a ride of three or four miles I found myself at my destination.

After the first few days I certainly had a very pleasant time of it, the few hours' work each day acting only as a stimulus to my varied pleasures; and having examined the Acropolis, and lunched by the fallen pillar of Jupiter, seated myself in the ruins of Pynx—whence Demosthenes declaimed, and Pericles evolved his plans—I looked around like Alexander, for the more worlds to conquer. I thereupon consulted my genial but unwashed host, Kyrie Antonio Pericles Papademetracopouls. And when my host tried to dissuade me from going to Marathon by assuring me that a Greek gentleman's ear had been sent a fortnight before by the brigands to his obstinate relatives to hurry the negotiations for his ransom, it so roused my blood that I vowed I would go if I returned as close cropped as an English terrier. So away we started—myself and Themistocles, the son of my host, a sallow, unshaven youth, dirtier than his father—mounted on two high-spirited donkeys, our revolvers well primed and our commissariat well stocked.

"Adios Kyrie!" shouted my long-named host as we cantered off.

"Never fear," I replied, waving my revolver defiantly, and feeling that I should be greatly disappointed if the rascals did not show themselves.

On we went, enjoying the scenery and holding a hybrid conversation—he in broken English, and I in sadly mutilated Greek—until, in the excitement of the ride and the glorious panorama constantly unfolding itself to our view, I entirely forgot that there were such beings as brigands in existence.

"Now," I said to Themistocles, after a ride of some hours, during which my appetite had become unpleasantly sharpened, "let us look about for a spot where we can bivouac in comfort."

We soon found a delightful place, sheltered all round, save where through a small opening we obtained a view of a charming landscape. Dismounting, and allowing our animals to refresh themselves on the grass, we soon made havoc of the good things we had brought, I was laying upon my back smoking a cigarette after the meal, gazing dreamily at the blue firmament, and being too lazy to rise, had called upon Themistocles to pass the bottle.

"Has the fellow gone to sleep?" thought I, still indisposed to turn my head. "Themistocles!"

But Themistocles heard me not; and when I raised myself upon the elbow, I saw him standing, as if struck dumb and motionless with fear, staring upon the opening. Instinctively, I leaped up and clutched the revolver, but before I took a step the cause of Themistocles' fear became apparent, and three shaggy forms behind three blunderbusses aimed direct at me made me fully aware that I was in the presence of those scourges of Greece, the brigands: But oh! what a metamorphosis! Where were the natty green jackets with silver buttons, the plumed hats, and the tout ensemble of the brigands of my youth, of the pictures-books? Three ragged, disreputable-looking figures, clad in greasy sheepskins and dirty clothes, unkempt, unshaven, took the place of those tinselled heroes. With stern gestures and muttered threats ordered us to follow them. My first thought was resistance; but when I showed the slightest signs the three bell-mounted muskets were bent toward me, and I felt that the odds were too many, and, determining to wait events, grimly submitted to be led down the mountain by our unsavory guides.

At last, after winding through ravines and hollows, across glens and over mountain-paths innumerable, this most unpleasant journey ended by our guides calling a halt as we gained the summit of an eminence surrounded by trees and all rocks forming an extraordinary natural fortress. Beneath our feet, in a deep ravine, with seemingly but one outlet, and excellently sheltered by overhanging foliage, was the camp of the brigands, and here we found the rest of the shaggy ruffians—with the exception of one who stood sentinel—enjoying their siesta with indolent content.

A shrill whistle soon brought the rascals to their feet, and rushing up to meet us, they displayed a dozen of as unfavorable specimens of the human race as could well be found. Seizing our asses by their bridles, they relieved our captors, and led us down the ravine; and, having thoroughly assisted us to dismount, brought us into the presence of the chief of the band.

"Brave, lads! excellent, excellent!" he shouted, as his sparkling eyes bent upon us in delight and after a cursory examination, we were conducted, amid excited gesticulations of the brigands and without undue ceremony, into a dark cavern within the ravine.

"Shiver my maintops!" exclaimed a voice, as I groped my way in; "they might give us searoom, the vagabonds and not land us in this lubberly creek; and now they are shoving more craft into anchor!"

"Haul in, Jack, old chum!" answered another "we must make the best of a bad job, mate."

To say that my heart leaped to my mouth at hearing such unexpected words and finding myself in the company of my own countrymen, would no more than describe the cheering sensation that thrilled through me.

"What cheer, mate?" I cried, in the darkness. Answering exclamations of astonishment greeted my words, and in a few minutes our stories were told; and I learned that my new-found friends were the captain and supercargo of a ship then lying in the port of the Pireus who, seeking a like object, had met with a similar fate to my own.

"And now," said Capt. Jack Jenkins, "how are we to get out of this scrape? If I had Tim and Joe and Black Tom, each with a cutlass and a barking-iron here, we'd soon make a passage, I'd warrant!"

"That's all very well," said Will Johnson, the supercargo; "but we haven't. If I'd but the opportunity given me, I'd guarantee——"

Whatever the supercargo was about to say was cut short by the advent of two shock-heads at the little opening of our prison, and two harsh voices calling us—as my guide Themistocles informed us—to partake of a feast; for we learned afterward that the chief, in commemoration of having made such a good haul, had decided to allow us, his prisoners, to partake of the general festivity. But as a preliminary, we had to undergo an examination as to our capability of paying the anticipated ransoms. First, we were relieved of our watches and rings, the captain using language rather strong for translation to these pages, to the great amusement of his tormenters, who with similar gesticulations to his, endeavored to imitate the sound of the captain's words, which, of course, only added to his wrath and their hilarity.

"You uncombed, dirty-faced vagabonds!" he shouted, "if I had a few of you aboard the Annie Martin I'd twist your ugly heads over the yard-arm in the twinkling of a jiffy!"

Of course they only laughed the louder at his impotent rage, and I thought it quite as well that they did not understand the language in which he gave it vent.

The operation of stripping us of our valuables gave me an opportunity to observe the appearance of my companions. Capt. Jenkins was the beau ideal of an English seaman. In age about 35, of a large and robust build, a face broad, manly and bearded, and limbs such as would delight a sculptor to copy. His height was nearly six feet, and he had an air of command about him which was doubtless bred of his occupation. The supercargo, Will Johnson, was perhaps ten years younger; nearly as tall as his friend, strong and active; and take us altogether—for I am of no mean stature myself—we were three men who, under any circumstances, would be no disgrace to our country, and if any opportunity should arise for an attempt at escape, I felt certain that we should give as good an account of ourselves as any scratch three, here or there.

Having satisfied themselves of the value of my late father's watch, which I parted from with some emotion, and of the intrinsic worth of the captain's gold chronometer, as well as the supercargo's watch and diamond ring, we were interrogated through Themistocles as to our means. For myself, the name of the firm I was traveling for acted with a talismantic effect upon them, and I was immediately assessed—notwithstanding my protestations—at £300. At this price, too, the captain's freedom was valued, while the unfortunate supercargo—whose business they persisted in confounding with that of the owner of the cargo and ship—was unanimously voted to be worth twice our ransom. Having arranged this matter to their own satisfaction, if not to ours, we were told to sit down and enjoy ourselves with what appetite we could muster.

The smell of the roast lamb and the freshly-baked meal cakes, however, soon aroused pleasant sensations, and dimmed for a time the memory of our griefs; more especially, as, under the apparent certainty of obtaining his booty, the chief condescended to be quite patronizing toward us, carving the joints himself for us, and delicately handing on the points of a dagger our several portions. After we had satisfied our hunger with the more solid viands, we were regaled with dried fruit as desert; and a large jar of a peculiar sherry-colored but bad-tasting wine of a resinous flavor—which Themistocles described as the common wine of the country—was brought in and set down in the midst of us. This we told them we could not drink, and the chief very generously ordered us a couple of bottles from his own particular store, doubtless the proceeds of a raid upon some well-to-do household.

Will Johnson after a time managed to ingratiate himself in the favor of our shaggy host and his friends by his genial, happy manner and frank bearing, favoring the company with many remarks, which translated by Themistocles, evidently pleased them. When, too, by sleight-of-hand—in which he was an adept—he performed some simple tricks, and gave them a music hall song with a rollicking chorus, and wound up with a hornpipe, accompanied by the captain with a pocket comb and a piece of paper, the general enthusiasm knew no bounds, and the beetle-browed vagabonds laughed till the tears rolled down their cheeks.

Will now became on such excellent terms with them all that he proceeded to take some freedom with them; and when he snatched the horn from the cup-bearer, and installed himself in the official's place, ladling the wine out of the wine-mouthed jar and handing it round to the company, his triumph was complete.

"For heaven's sake!" said he, as he passed us, "don't take any of this stuff, and don't drink much of your own."

"Never fear," said Jenkins, making a wry face; "one taste is sufficient."

And so Will went round with the cup making a comical remark to this one and a grimace at that, until the chief—evidently fearing from their hilarity that that they were taking too much—ordered them to desist from drinking and return to their several duties.

Meanwhile we were sent back into our dungeon, with a sentinel stationed at the opening.

"Not a word," whispered Will, as we settled down in our prison. "Here's something," he continued, "that belongs to you."

"Why," said the captain in reply, as Will handed him the article mentioned, "this is a stopper out of my medicine chest."

"To be sure it is, Jack," returned Will, "and I must apologize for the liberty of taking your laudanum phial; but my confounded back tooth was so painful on board the ship last night that I got up and took it, and luckily forgot to return it this morning. You must debit me with the bottle and its contents for I dropped them both into the vagabond's wine jar!"

"What!" we all exclaimed in a breath.

"Now, stop your clappers!" continued the supercargo. "Jack, you know I'm not bad at sleight-of-hand tricks. Well, in the first place, having contrived to secrete the bottle while the blackguards were relieving me of my valuables, and then having attained the position of waiter, what was easier than to wriggle the bottle down my sleeve, whip out the stopper and drop out the lot into their swipes, giving the bottle a crack and stirring the laudanum up every time I dipped the horn into it."

"Bravo, Will!" cried the captain, seizing his hand and giving it a hearty shake. "If that's the case we're safe, for the black-faced rascal won't wake up for a dozen hours, I'll be bound. There! our guard has dropped off already!"

And, sure enough, the drowsy ruffian had planted himself right across the opening and was snoring loudly.

"Now for it!" cried the impetuous Jack Jenkins, rising.

"Hold hard!" said Will. "Let him get well off."

So, setting ourselves down for half an hour, we talked the matter over. At the end of this time we sent the trembling Themistocles to see how things were outside; and, after peeping over the prostrate sentinel, he gave us to understand that all were sleeping except three, and they were retiring to the farther end of the ravine, and would in a minute be out of sight.

"Capital!" said Will with suppressed excitement. "Now, each take a pistol and a cutlass from the fellows and follow me."

One after another we stepped across the sleeping brigand at the entrance, Will relieving him of his pistol, dirk and blunderbuss, while the captain and I stood by ready to give him his quietus at the slightest sign of waking. Then the four of us, gliding like ghosts, assisted ourselves to whatever weapons we could most easily lay hands upon, and, as Themistocles was not of much use for fighting, we gave him the bag containing our valuables—which we found by the side of the sleeping chief—as well as several spare pistols to carry. Picking our way without speaking a word, we advanced toward the open end of the ravine, and just as we turned round a jutting point of rock we saw the three sentinels, seeming in earnest conversation.

"Halt!" whispered Will. "Now for a rush," and each singling out his man and clutching his rifle by the barrel—for we avoided the noise of shooting—we sprang forward. Almost simultaneously, and before the enemy had time to observe us, we were upon them, and three rifle-stocks descended upon three shock heads with such force that two of the fellows dropped like stones. The stock of my rifle glanced off the hard head of my antagonist and crushed against the rock. With a stifled cry he turned, but in an instant my hand was upon his throat, and the sound died in his gullet, while with the strength of desperation, I dashed his head against the wall-like rock, and after a struggle, in which he wounded me with his dagger, he fell from my grasp, apparently lifeless.

"Now," said the captain, "where are the donkeys? Come, Greeky!" he cried to Themistocles; "bear a hand," and looking around we espied our four animals just as we left them, but with a brigand sitting by them. Here was an unlooked-for rencontre! He was fully a hundred yards off, and to get at him we should have to cross a small plateau.

"Leave him to me!" cried Jenkins, preparing to rush forward. But under the advice of the supercargo, he stopped. We could have picked him off easily, but dared not, for the noise of the rifles.

"Hang it," impatiently muttered Jenkins, "we shall be trapped again, after all;" and without further parley, the impetuous fellow started off, running on the tips of his toes, with a drawn cutlass in one hand and a pistol in the other. Just as he was within a few yards of the brigand, the latter turned round, and seeing how matters stood, made for his rifle, which was leaning against a tree a few feet off; but a revolver hurled deftly by Will Johnson—for we had all followed—catching him directly in the face, so effectually stopped his progress, that he fell stunned to the ground.

"You persist in doing all the work;" said Jenkins, as we came up to him. "But quick, lads; off we go!" and in a moment we were on our asses, and under the guidance of our Greek companion, were making, with break-neck speed for Athens. Up hill, down dale, on we went for a couple of hours without stopping or meeting a human being; then, just as we were about to cross the summit of a mountain at which we had arrived, a harmless-looking peasant wished us "good-day," and was about to pass on.

"Seize him!" cried Themistocles; "he's a scout."

So seize him we did, for caution's sake; and, as there were no trees near, we tied his hands and legs together, and left him begging for mercy. But there was no mercy in us, more especially as Themistocle explained that there was such a curious and mysterious connection between the brigands and villagers, that it was by no means unlikely—had we allowed him to go free—he would have hied to the nearest village and roused a swarm of semi-brigands about us.

Having traveled four hours, and as our asses could scarcely get along for fatigue, we called a halt, and after resting ourselves and watering our animals, we continued our journey until, late at night, we reached Athens, where, around the hospitable board of our host, we soon forgot our troubles.—Chamber's Journal.

IN THE MATTER OF REST.

Judge Blakely, of the supreme court of Georgia, having resigned, read the following verses on the conclusion of his last opinion. The verses may be found in 64 Ga., p. 452.

Rest for my hand, and brow, and breast,
For my fingers, heart, and brain!
Rest and peace! A long release
From labor and from pain;
Pain of doubt, fatigue, despair—
Pain and darkness everywhere,
And seeking light in vain.

Peace and rest! Are they the best
For mortals here below?
In soft repose from work and woes
A bliss for men to know?
Bliss oftime is bliss of toil:
No bliss but this, from sun and soil,
Does God permit to grow.

How She Won Him.

"Woman's at best a contradiction still," wrote Alexander Pope, and he had scores of intimate friends among the ladies. A woman has been known to whip a bear and then faint; to rescue her child from a burning house and then cry as if it were still in the flames. In the days when the late Senator Douglass had presidential aspirations, his wife lunched an influential but rough constituent, whose fingers were all thumbs. He broke a costly china plate. "They are so fragile," said the lady, with a smile, "that I frequently break a piece. See!" she continued, cracking a saucer with her fair hands, "how easily it breaks." The senator had one warm supporter in that man, but we doubt if Mrs. Douglass ever again invited that man to lunch. A writer in the Philadelphia Quiz tells a story—it may be true and may not—which humorously illustrates the tact to which Mr. Pope alludes. He says:

I have just heard the most remarkable story of the evenness of the female temper. It is a beautiful little fairy story and may appropriately be called "How She Won Him." It happened here in Philadelphia and is on this wise:

There was a beautiful dinner given "many years ago," and she sat opposite him and looked ever so charming in a wine colored silk with a square neck, and otherwise arranged as never were the lillies in any valley of this poor earth.

Well, the waiter in handing the soup upset the entire contents of a plate in her lap. Just think of it, girls! The whole front breadth ruined, and it could not be matched!"

Well, what did she do? Did she faint? Did she say, "you horrid man!" Did she scream? Not at all; she passed the thing off in some witty remark about fiery baptism and calmly resumed her dinner.

He, of course was delighted, thought her a remarkable woman, and indeed she was; became attentive to her, and finally married her. One evening long after the event, they were sitting before the fire, and the children having gone to bed, and were talking about old times, when he said,—

"My dear, I never told, I think, how I first thought I would like to marry you, did I?"

"Why, gracious goodness! no, never!"

"Well," he said, "do you remember that dinner at Mrs. Simpkins,' where your dress was spoilt by the soup?"

"Indeed I do!" she replied. "I shall never forget it as long as I live."

"Well," he continued; "you behaved so well about it that I thought you a perfect jewel."

"Yes," she answered, "I remember behaving well about it at the time; but, good land, you should have seen the marks of my teeth on the bed-post that night!"

The house military affairs committee agreed to report favorably a resolution proposing an investigation of the Soldiers' home at Hampton, Va. Also resolutions inquiring of the secretary of war what effort has been made to secure the arrest and trial of Capt. Howgate.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

Through English eyes more calmly soft
Looks from gray deeps the appealing charm;
Reddens on English cheeks more oft
The rose of innocent alarm;
Our old-world heart more gravely feels,
Has learnt more force, more self-control;
For us through sterner music peals
The full accord of soul and soul.

But, ah, the life, the smile untaught,
The floating presence feathery-fair!
The eyes and aspect that have caught
The brilliance of Columbian air!
No, oriole through the forest flits
More sheeny-plumed, more gay and free;
On no nymph's marble forehead sits
Prouder a glad virginity.
—F. W. H. Myres (an Englishman.)

An Embarrassed Detective.

A Story of a French Prefecture.

On the 15th of March, 1872, at nine o'clock in the evening, a hackney coach stopped in front of the entrance of the Boule Noire ball room. A man got out of the vehicle. He was about thirty-five, tall and slender, with an intelligent and bold looking face. He had a small flaxen mustache, curled up at the ends and well cared for, and wore a black velvet sack coat, bound with broad silk golloon, a soft hat planted a little on one side of his head, and Suede gloves.

Another man, for a quarter of an hour past, had been walking back and forth on the pavement. He had on an overcoat buttoned to his chin, with a small greasy collar extending beyond the frayed edge of a black satin necktie, and a huge hat pulled far down over his head. He carried a heavy cane in his hand. His complexion was florid. He had a thick mustache and very short side whiskers, cut square on the cheek.

These two men accosted each other and in low tones exchanged the following words:

"Here, Dubrisart, here.

"Marcon! Was it you who sent for me?"

"Yes, it was. But there are too many people and too much light on this pavement. Let us cross the boulevard."

"Shall I keep the hackney coach?"

"Yes, we shall have but a short job, and we will return immediately afterward to the Prefecture."

They crossed the street, and when they were on the opposite sidewalk alone, with their backs against the little stall of a tinsmith which was at the corner of the Rue des Martyrs, Marcon, the man with the overcoat, grasped, with great cordiality, both the hands of Dubrisart, the man with the velvet sack coat.

"Dubrisart, my dear Dubrisart," he said, "I am delighted to see you again. You never fall in our way any more; you work the great political lay now; you go on business to foreign countries. At least I have been so informed. And to think that you began at the very bottom of the ladder in my brigade—that I was your superior!"

"And you are still my friend, my dear old Marcon," replied the other. "I have had luck; influence has decided in my favor."

"Besides, you have merit, education, good breeding and refined manners. You dress with more taste than any man in the whole prefecture, not even excepting the prefect himself. You belong to an honorable family and can speak English, for which reasons you were entrusted with your first mission to England, under the empire, when you went to look a little into what was taking place at Titoue-Tiken—in short, at the residence of the Orleans princes."

"At Twickenham."

Yes, that's it. As for me I have continued to vegetate among small affairs. This evening, however, something quite important is on hand. During the day a certain Aglae Ripon came to the prefecture. Oh! you don't know her! She is a celebrity of the ball rooms and low drinking shops about here. Four or five of us were chatting about the store. The girl entered the office like a fury, saying that she was acquainted with one of the chiefs of the commune, a man who had burnt, robbed, shot people, and done everything else! Naturally, we offered Mme. Ripon a chair. She proposed to turn over to us this evening, at the Boule Noire, Stafner, who was a legion commander under the commune."

"Stafner!—the man who stabbed me in a little cafe at Belleville in 1860?"

"Yes, and I sent for you because I remembered the particulars of that stabbing affray. I do not know this Stafner, and I thought you would not be displeased at the idea of aiding us to—"

"With all my heart, and I will recognize him, you may depend upon it. He is coming to the ball, to-night, then?"

"At ten o'clock."

"And Aglae Ripon?"

"Three of my agents, Cerraifer, Pollat, and Chaulet, will bring her. They ought to be here by this time. After she had made her denunciations the girl wanted to go, but I kept her in charge. I know all about a woman's fits of anger. They vanish as they come, in five minutes. She had only to meet her friend again—for he is her friend—to be filled with remorse and warn him and the whole job would be spoiled. She had an appointment with Stafner for this evening at ten o'clock, and that was all I wanted. I told her that the government would pay for her dinner and the hackney coach to take her to the ball. And that she could return home only after she had put Stafner in our clutches. Ah! they are probably in that hackney coach which has just stopped on this side the boulevard."

The door of the vehicle opened a few steps from Dubrisart and Marcon. They saw emerge from it, flanked by three agents in citizens' clothes, a tall girl clad in a brown woolen dress, with a little gray cloth sack and a black hat, from the left of which hung a bunch of large red roses. One of the agents came straight to Marcon, while the two others kept watch over the woman, who glanced around her with an air of uneasiness.

"M. Marcon," said the agent, "you must talk to that girl. She disturbs me. She wept in the hackney coach. Two or three times she wiped her eyes with the tips of her fingers. It is quite certain that she regrets what she has done and is afraid of what she has yet to do."

"I will talk to her," answered Marcon, and he approached the woman.

"See here," said he to her, "no foolishness, if you please! Your record is at the prefecture. I have looked into it a little. It contains some ugly things, and if I wanted to send you to St. Lazare for five or six months, plenty of pretexts could be found. You are well acquainted with St. Lazare, are you not?"

"I've been there twice and come out. It don't kill!"

"Take care!" continued Marcon, raising his voice. "If you——"

"You are on the wrong tack," whispered Dubrisart to Marcon. "One should never be hasty with women. Let me talk to her."

Approaching Aglae Ripon, he said to her:

"Listen, my little beauty; listen a moment. You are right about St. Lazare, it don't kill; and a woman in your position is not hurt by a six months' sojourn there. Quite the contrary sometimes. But you have a reputation and you cling to it. Well, if you act wisely, we will take care of your reputation, and no one shall know that you betrayed Stafner. We will install you at the lower end of the ball room at a table beside the orchestra, near the entrance to the garden. You will remain there with these three gentlemen, who will give you vin sucre to drink and cigarettes to smoke, the government paying for everything. Monsieur and myself will be in the garden. When Stafner arrives you will go to meet him. If you try to lead him in the direction of the next door, the agents will throw themselves upon him and will not touch you they will tell everybody that you sold your friend for fifty francs. But if you bring him like a good clever girl, into the garden, we will collar both you and Stafner. There will be nothing for you to be ashamed of. You will be taken to the prefecture, but will be set at liberty fifteen minutes afterwards and can finish your evening at Tauxhall or the Elysee Montmartre. Do you understand, my little beauty? Of course you understand, don't you? And you will be reasonable. Why to be sure you will! Farewell for the present. Go with these gentlemen; we will wait for you in the garden, and you men give her plenty of vin sucre to drink."

Aglae and the three agents crossed the boulevard. Marcon gazed at Dubrisart with evident admiration.

"I understand the secret of your success in the profession," said he to him. "You know how to capture women."

"And men, also, as you shall see. Let us enter the ball room. It will amuse me to take another look at the Boule Noire and Stafner. I still bear the scar of his stab on my arm."

They climbed the fifteen steps of the stairway and entered an immense hall, in which were combined, in a highly concentrated form, the odor of pipes and the perfume of hot wine. The orchestra, with a deafening noise of brass instruments, was playing a quadrille. The girls and the nurses of the quarter were dancing in the middle of the hall. On each side of the circular promenade, which extended around the ball room, men and women were seated at tables. One heard the gurgle of heavy dark-red wine as it was poured into bowls of white faience; and the sound made by crushing lumps of sugar in the wine with pewter spoons.

Dubrisart and Marcon walked a short distance along the promenade and stopped near the platform occupied by the orchestra. The women stared a great deal at Dubrisart, because of his velvet sack coat and his gants de Suede. Aglae Ripon and the three agents were already installed at a table, around a bowl full of wine. Dubrisart looked at the woman and sent her a stealthy little greeting. She answered with a smile.

"Come, old man!" said Dubrisart to Marcon, "let's smoke a cigar in the garden while waiting for Stafner. The woman will bring him to us. I'll answer for it, and until then we can have a little chat."

The evening was cold and the place entirely deserted. They went to the lower end of the garden and sat down on a bench.

"I have a good cigar for you to smoke," said Dubrisart to his companion; "I bought three or four boxes of excellent ones at Antwerp."

"Oh! you have been to Antwerp, then?"

"Yes. I went there three weeks ago to look after the Comte de Chambord."

"You travel a great deal, do you not?"

"I have been constantly on the go since the 4th of September."

"You did not remain in Paris during the siege, did you?"

"No. After the 5th of September I saw what the government of the national defense was worth. Those gentlemen conceived the idea of holding Paris without the secret police. They were fools, absolute fools! As I had the reputation of possesing a certain amount of merit, they asked me to become the secretary of a newly appointed commissaire de police, who could not get along with his duties alone. I declined. I did not like sedentary positions; I need running about, coming and going. I said to myself; 'one day or another they will reorganize the secret police, then they will want me.' I left Paris with a company of sharp-shooters. For two months we scoured the Forest of Orleans, and at the expiration of that time, as we were somewhat thinned out and disorganized, we went to Tours to rest and recruit. It was about the 15th of November."

"The first person I met at Tours, in the Rue Royale, in front of the hotel du Faisan, was big Versac, who, prior to the 4th of September, was in the Chateau brigade. He conducted me at once to the administration of general safety. On the way he told me that Mons. Gambetta was a man who had the proper ideas of government, that since his arrival they had been engaged in reorganizing the secret police and that they were greatly embarrassed. It was not difficult for the government of Tours to improvise prefects, sous prefects, and generals but men of the police cannot be improvised. There's where our strength lies. They are always obliged to return to us.

"They gave me a very agreeable position, and when they learned that I had been, under the empire, to Twickenham, Baden and Woodnorton to watch the Orleans princes they said to me: 'You are the very man we want. We know that the prince de Joinville is hidden somewhere in one of the provincial armies. Try to find him.' I began to search for the Prince de Joinville. It seemed to me exceedingly droll to be doing for the republic the same business I had done for the empire ten years. All the old man, one becomes terribly philosophical when one has been fifteen years in the political police. The empire made us run after the Orleans princes; the republic made us run after the Orleans princes. No matter what change in the government it is always the same thing you see."

"We ultimately nabbed the Prince de Joinville. He was fighting against the Prussians in the army of the Loire. We kept the prince a prisoner for five days—from the 13th to the 18th of January—at Mans, in the hotel of the prefecture. After that I conducted him to Saint Malo, to take the packet for England."

"When I saw the Jersey packet, a big white and blue steamer, depart with the prince on board, I reflected that all this was a trifle extraordinary. They had found me in the streets of Tours in uniform, and altogether disposed, to take the field again with my comrades. They had made me remove my uniform, and I had just sent out of France a man who also wished to fight against the Prussians. But when one is in the police and likes the profession, one must not look too deeply into things."

"The fact is that our business is not monotonous. To think, for example, that I, who am now chatting with you in the little garden of the Boule Noire, arrested on the 13th of January, 1871, the Prince de Joinville at Mans, and on the 17th of July of the same year the painter Courbet, in the depths of a closet in Paris! To think that I paid my respects on the 17th of January, 1872, to the Emperor Napoleon at Chiselhurst, and on the 24 of February following to the Count de Chambord at Antwerp!"

"You talked with the emperor and the Count de Chambord?"

"As I am talking with you, Marcon. It required no great tact to gain admittance to Chiselhurst. One went in there as if it had been a tavern. All one had to do was to address the concierge, to say he was a Frenchman of distinction, and that he desired to be received by the emperor. One left his name, together with his London address, and the next day he had his audience letter. I had arranged a very pretty little Bonapartist history for myself. My grandfather, a captain in the Imperial Guard, was killed at Waterloo, etc. Everything went off like a letter through the postoffice. Ten or twelve of us were received in a batch, at the same time, one Sunday, after mass. We were shown into a small blue salon on the ground floor, and whom do you think I saw beside the emperor? Our former chief, M. Pietri. When my turn came to speak a few words I said something about the condition of Paris; where there was no longer either safety or police. I added that everybody regretted the Empire and the administration of M. Pietri. The Emperor smiled; and as I was taking my departure M. Pietri grasped my hand and told me that I had spoken like a good Frenchman."

"My campaign at Antwerp was more difficult. They summoned me to the prefecture and said to me: 'Go to Antwerp and see what is taking place there.' I demanded permission to start on what day and at what hour I thought best, and to act on my arrival in my own way. I received the requisite authorization; and it was agreed that I should not be stinted in regard to expense. They sent to Antwerp five or six persons. I let my comrades depart and did not set out until the 22d of February. The pilgrimage to Antwerp was then at its height. I went early to the depot of the North. I examined the passengers as they arrived. I said to myself: 'The train starts at seven o'clock in the morning and reaches Antwerp at three in the afternoon. I must carefully choose my compartment, open a conversation with my traveling companions and have people to answer for me when I arrive at Antwerp. I have eight hours for that. It's more than I need.'

"I was, as you can readily imagine, dressed irreproachably, seriously and simply in sober-hued garments. I had brought with me as my servant big Versac—you remember—the man I had met at Tours. We are great friends now, and always work together. He is a capable fellow, but he likes to fill minor roles; roles without responsibility. He was, however, well paid for the trip. He made the acquaintance en route of a little jewel of a Legitimist lady's maid, who told him a pack of things about one of the most aristocratic families of the Faubourg Saint Germain. Versac is a handsome man. The lady's maid fell in love with him. He found the little angel again in Paris, and she is now of great use to us."

"In the depot I spied out an old gentleman with a woman of about thirty; not very pretty, but very agreeable. I was attracted toward them. I scanned them closely, I said to myself: 'They will do!' I got into their compartment. I had not been deceived—they were going to pay their respects to the king; for once on the train it was no longer the Conte de Chambord; it was the king! In the vicinity of the station of Luzarches we told each other the name and rank. The old gentleman was called the Marquis de Bonstrasson. I called myself the Baron de Matronne de Lustrac. If I have a Bonapartist history, I have also a very complicated Legitimist history, which is adroitly hung upon two names of extinct families. At Creil I learned the name of the young woman. She was the daughter of the old Marquis and the widow of the Comte de la Riballiere. Between Creil and Compeigne and Fergnier I told him mine. I was a Frenchman from across the sea, who had come with the Montevideo volunteers to take part in the war, etc. At Fergnier the Marquis, the Comtesse and I breakfasted at the same table. At Antwerp we went to the same hotel; and at that evening Versac took our demands for an audience to the Comte de Blacas, at the Hotel Saint Antoine. The marquis in his letter had spoken of me, and I in mine had spoken of the marquis. We made, as it were, a combination; I was no longer alone; I had a godfather, and what a godfather!—a marquis with grand silver hair, all in curls, and with a majestic and venerable air. He was, I assure you the choice passenger of the whole train."

"The next day we were received at the Hotel Saint Antoine in a squad of from twenty to twenty-five persons. It was done, as at Chiselhurst, in batches. When the king entered there was a great sensation. The old marquis was altogether overcome. He fell upon his knees, and they had all the trouble in the world to get him up again. He insisted on kissing the king's hand. His language grew incoherent: he said that now he could die, etc. We bore him back to the Hotel du Grand-Labourer, where we were stopping. He took to his bed. The comptess and I passed the evening beside him. Eight or ten persons of our batch called to ask about the old marquis' condition. The following day we returned the visits we had received. I remained at Antwerp until the departure of the king, seeing hosts of people. I came back with a report and notes which did me the greatest honor."

"If I were the least bit inclined to be foolish I could tell you that the Comptesse leaned lovingly on my arm and showered stealthy little glances upon me when we went to see the pictures at the Antwerp Museum. Ah! perhaps I might have made a very fine marriage."

"M. Marcon, the man has arrived, and the woman is bringing him into the garden."

At these words, spoken by one of the agents, Dubrisart and Marcon arose, crossed the garden, and, standing upon the threshold of the door, gazed into the hall. They saw, coming toward them along the circular promenade, Aglae Ripon on the arm of a small, red-haired man in a gray peletot and soft hat. The small man was talking a great deal, and seemed very lively. The woman did not appear to be listening to him. Her step was uncertain, her look vague. She must have indulged largely in the vin sucre. Almost constantly, with a mechanical movement of the left hand, she pushed back her three red roses which beat against her face. Two of the agents were closely following the pair.

Do you recognize him?" said Marcon to Dubrisart.

"No; when I saw him last he wore a full beard, and had brown hair. This man is beardless, and has red hair. But we shall see very soon. I have a sure way of telling if it be Stafner."

When the woman saw the garden door, and recognized Dubrisart and Marcon waiting, one on each side of it, she drew herself up, stiffened herself, uttered a cry, and sprang backward. But the two agents seized the man and the woman by the shoulders and pushed them violently into the garden. Marcon shut the door. At that moment the pastourelle of a quadrille ended, and five hundred voices shouted, furiously, "Again, again!"

"Let go the woman," said Dubrisart, "and bring the man here under this gas jet. Good! And now, my friend, show me your left hand. Come, open your hand. I say, open your hand. Ah! there is the imprint of my three teeth. I gave you that mark, my friend, in exchange for you knife thrust. Put the handcuffs on him. It's Stafner."

At 10:30 that evening Dubrisart and Marcon arrived at the Prefecture. One of the chiefs of the service was there. They reported the result of their expedition to him.

"Everything is perfectly satisfactory," said he, "and I thank you both for your zeal and tact. Marcon, you can go; but Dubrisort, remain a moment, if you please. I have a question to ask you. Several reports have been made to me in regard to the receptions at Antwerp. In one of these reports a certain Baron de Martonne de Lustrac is stated to have used very violent language. He spoke publicly against M. Thiers in the most outrageous manner. You did not see this Baron de Mortonne de Lustras, did you?"

"Yes, monsieur, I saw him."

"You did not mention him in your report. Why is this?"

"Because I myself was the person."

"I suspected as much. See what it is to do police duty in a whimsical fashion, each one on his own account, without instructions and without discipline. In every line of your report you speak of a Countess dela Riballiere."

"Yes; a very refined lady, whose father—"

"The Marquis de Boustasson—I know—I know—wait a bit."

The chief of the service arose and opened a door.

"Mme. Robert," he called, "be kind enough to come here."

And the Baron de Martonne de Lustrac saw enter the Comptesse de la Riballiere, dressed in the plainest and humblest fashion. The Baron and the Comptesse stared at each other, with a disconcerted and bewildered air.

"M. Dubrisart, Mme. Robert; Mme. Robert, M. Dubrisart," said the chief. "Now take a good look at each other, and have the kindness, whenever you meet in the future, to remember that both of you are in the police service!"

Dubrisart and Mme. Robert quitted the chief's office and as they were descending one of the stairways of the prefecture, Dubrisart said:

"There is only one thing which puzzles me—who was the old man? He positively had the air of a nobleman. Where did you unearth that 'prodigy?'"

"He is my father," replied Mme. Robert. "Formerly he was an actor, and one of the best first old men on the boards."

Things in General.

The New York Riot Relief fund, which was subscribed in 1863 in aid of the families of the policemen killed in the draft riots and of the wounded policemen, firemen and soldiers, has been so wisely managed that it is now nearly as large as it was originally. While the expenditures have exceeded the total amount raised by $677,808, there still remains in the hands of the Trustees an unexpended balance amounting to $49,500.

A Canadian paper says that Jews are the longest lived people. The mortality among infants, so great everywhere, and said to be unusually so in Montreal, is among the Hebrews but 10 per cent. The mean age of Jewish life is given as forty-eight years. One-fourth of them live to be seventy-one, and another fourth survive to see their sixtieth year.

It turns out that the total cost to Great Britain of the Egyptian campaign will not exceed $17,000,000, which is only about $5,000,000 more than the original estimate of Mr. Gladstone. The Abyssinian campaign cost $40,000,000 or some $40,000,000 over Disraeli's original estimate.

The Mexican city of Chihuahua, which is on the line of the Mexican Central railroad, is said to be rapidly becoming Americanized. Citizens of the United States who have located there are engaged in extensive enterprises of various kinds, and do two-thirds of the business. Mills, breweries, sugar refinery, livery stables, street railroad, numerous stores and all the hotels are in the hands of the Americans, and a new city has sprung up amid the old, resulting from American enterprise.

The New York Mail says the lesson has been taught that brick is the best material to withstand fire and an exceptionally hard climate, and the chief material in the buildings of New York will hereafter be brick. Iron is warped and granite crumbled by extreme heat, but well-burned brick and hard cement will withstand both heat and time. Granite, marble and the sandstones will be used to ornament business structures and for the fronts of private residences, but the chief concern of builders will hereafter be to have the best brick and mortar for their structures.

The breaking down of religious barriers, which is becoming a feature of the times, has been remarkably illustrated at New Orleans recently. A Rabbi married his niece, a Jewish maiden, to a Protestant gentleman, in his own house; and a colored servant of the Bishop of Mississippi, who was a Roman Catholic, was buried from the rectory of Trinity Church, a Catholic priest officiating, and four white boys acting as pall bearers.

"Faint heart never won fair lady" must have been the motto of a youth told of by the Vicksburg Herald. He had been four times discarded by the same lady, but rallied a few nights ago and made a desperate effort. The young lady at first refused to see him, but finally entered the parlor. The lover fell upon his knees and by a flattering appeal conquered her. She is now reconciled and willing, and the wedding will soon take place.

Russia has beaten the record out of sight in the matter of bank failures. A financial institution in the town of Lapojok has collapsed with liabilities of millions of roubles and assets, exclusive of furniture, amounting to just twenty-nine roubles, or about $20.

The debt of New York City seems enormous, but really $90,000,000 is a much smaller sum in proportion to the wealth and population of the city than the debts of many smaller places. It is only about $70 per head for one of the wealthiest communities in the world.

Some of the Hotel Disasters.

The Newhall House fire in Milwaukee recalls other disasters of the kind that have recently transpired in this country; but the loss of life in all of them combined was insignificant in comparison with the Milwaukee holocaust. The greatest loss of life before was in the destruction of the Southern Hotel in St. Louis on the morning of April 11, 1877. The fire in that hotel broke out at 1:30 a. m. and caused the loss of eleven lives and the entire destruction of the building. Among the other hotels fires have been in the following houses: St. Nicholas Hotel, New York, December 10, 1869; Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, December 16, 1872—eleven lives lost; Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, N. J., March 1, 1879; Metropolitan Hotel, New York, June 20, 1879; Metropolitan Hotel, New York, January 23, 1881; Manhatton Hotel, New York, December 15, 1881; Parshall House, Titusville, Pa., April 15, 1882; Ocean House, Swampscott, Mass. September 7, 1882; Cliff Hotel, Newport R. I., August 26, 1882; Sturtevant House, New York, December 17, 1882; Pavilion Hotel, Staten Island, December 17, 1882.

A Connecticut man worth $1,000,000 didn't leave a shilling to any of his relatives. He explained that but for them he would have been worth $5,000,000.

AFFINITY.

The air is vibrant with subtle essence
Of some etherial, permeating presence—
Till though beyond my visual beholding
I'm fully conscious of its sweet enfolding!

My willing spirit yields to the enthralment,
Unconscious wholly whence the influence streams—
And prays kind heaven may send a second installment,
Though fleeting as the gossamer of dreams!

Exuberant nature's generously exhaling
Her inner life in aromatic gales,
Till in the ecstacy of its inhaling
The sweetest antecedent memory pales

With receptivity my spirit lingers
'Mid the enchantments of these glad aboundings,
And with its covetous, outstretched, grasping fingers
Seeks perpetuity for its surroundings.

But, as the roseiest dawn must fade away
Before the prosy brilliancy of the day,
So all these hazy, idealistic dreams
Give place to life's more realistic schemes.

And, logically searching, I soon find
What caused my sweet deliriousness of mind—
'Twas Cupid—who, conspiring with my wife,
Touched love's nerve center and thrilled through my life.

CARRADINE'S LOVE.

Carradine sat alone at his easel, painting; and as he painted he thought. Eight years before, when he was a poor struggling boy, just entering on that race which must be run by every aspirant to art and its honors, there happened to him something which neither time nor toil had ever been able to efface from his memory. As he was passing along the streets a wreath of fragrant roses suddenly fell on his head, and looking up in wonder, he beheld, reaching out from the embroidered draperies of an overhanging window, a child, with fairy-like proportions, with great dark eyes and long, curling black locks, who stood smiling and throwing him kisses from her curved lips, colored like a pomegranate. While she still gazed, a nurse had come forward and drawn the child away;—the curtains were closed, and he saw the little creature no more. Such was the vision that the artist had carried so long in his memory; in his memory only, for he had no second glimpse of the child. That very day an accident occurred which kept him a prisoner in his room for several weeks, and when next he went out the house was empty, and a placard with great flaring letters announcing it for sale stared him in the face, from the same window in which the little white-robed elf had stood waving her hand and smiling to him. In course of time other faces appeared there, but they were strange faces, and among them was never the one for which he looked.

Now, as Carradine sat painting alone, he thought of all this; of the struggle that had ended at length in success; of his hard, unfriended boyhood, and of the beautiful child with her fragrant rose crown, which had seemed almost like a prophecy. That rose wreath, dry and withered now, was all that was left to him of the fair vision; but when that morning, in turning over an old portfolio, he had come upon it by chance, it spoke to him of that by-gone day just as eloquently as when its blossoms were fresh and full.

"Eight years ago," he said, thoughtfully, letting the shriveled circlet slip through his fingers slowly. "She must be sixteen now—if she lives. If? No, I do not doubt her living presence—somewhere. I wonder where she is now, and what she is like at sixteen?"

With that he placed the wreath beside his easel, and began to paint. The face, as it grew on his canvas, presented a young girl in the dewy morning blush of first youth, with shadows in the great dark eyes and a half smile about the bright curled lips, like an embodied summer sun-shower. It was thus that the artist pictured his ideal of the child woman, whose infantile look and smile for eight long years had been his own dream of love.

Carradine had not had an easy life. An orphan from his earliest years, poor and unfriended, he had studied hard for the means to gratify that inherent idolatry for art which was always clamoring to find expression in form and coloring. He had fought and he had won; but now, at twenty-six, he stood in the place which he had gained for himself almost as much alone at the very heart as he had been eight years before, when the child's gift came to him as a prophecy.

It was not that he was friendless. There were men who liked and sought him, women who would gladly have taught him to forget his loneliness in their affection. But though his nature responded rapidly to any kindness, there was one chord, deeper than all, that remained untouched; and from the sweetest glances his thoughts went back to the unknown child that had smiled down on him so long ago.

The ideal head became his great source of enjoyment, and a dreamy softness shaded his dark-grey eyes, as line by line and tint by tint took him back into that past, which, all lifeless as it was, seemed to him, in those moments, more real than the busy present. Yet now, in reviewing that one bright vision of his memory, it was not so much the lovely child that he saw in fancy, as the beautiful girl whose face, with fuller depth and sweetness, looked out at him from his own canvas.

Instinctively, he hardly knew why, he disliked to work on this picture in any other presence, and he devoted to it only his hours of solitude. So it happened that it was nearly finished when by some chance, a friend discovered him bending over it, too absorbed to hear any approach. As the door opened, Carradine rose hastily, turning his easel to the wall, so as to conceal the face upon it. This little stratagem, however, was destined to be of no avail. Having been marked by the intruder, one of those cordial, well meaning people, good natured to a degree, but with little delicacy of perception—the action at once aroused his curiosity.

"Aha, master painter," he said, with a laugh, "let us see what it is that you work at by yourself till it steals away your eyes and ears. Only one peep!"

With that, he laid his hand on the frame, and receiving no forbidding word from Carradine, turned it around. The next moment he was loud in praise.

"But who is it, Carradine? If it is a portrait, tell me where to find the original, and I will, if it is a seven days' journey!"

Carradine smiled.

"If I myself knew where to find such an original I should not be here to tell you, my good friend," he answered evasively.

"Oh, a fancy sketch," said the other, misled, as the artist had desired. "I might have saved myself the trouble of asking. No real flesh and blood face ever looked like that—more shame to nature, I say. Of course you will exhibit it, Carradine?"

"No!" answered the painter, quietly.

"No!" repeated the other in surprise. "But my dear fellow, you must, or I shall betray your secret, and you will have a swarm of visitors, worse than a plague of Egypt, let in upon you."

Carradine hesitated. A chance word in his friend's speech had suggested a possibility that made his heart leap in spite of sober reason.

"You are right," he said. "I shall send the picture for exhibition. It will be better so."

After his visitor had left him alone again, Carradine bent low over his easel, gazing into the lovely, upturned face, until it began to fade into the gathering twilight.

"It—it!" he murmured to himself, half unconsciously. "But it cannot be. Yet I will send it—and perhaps——"

And so the picture was sent, in due time; and it seemed almost as if Carradine's soul had gone with it and drawn him to follow. Hour after hour, and day after day, he sat in the gallery, scrutinizing eagerly every face amid the visitors, whom taste or fashion had brought to look at the now celebrated artist's latest success. Every night he went away unsatisfied, and every morning he returned with hope springing afresh in his heart.

Still, the object of his search, whatever it may have been, does not appear; and one day, discouraged at last, he resolved to go no more on so fruitless an errand. Shutting himself in his studio, he began to paint, but, strive as he would, he could command neither hand nor fancy. Finally, tired of repeated failure, he abandoned work, and yielded to an impulse which drew his steps in the customary direction.

When he entered the small side room in which his picture hung, he found but two persons within, a young man and a girl.

Carradine could not see the faces of these two, but, with an earnestness for which he was at a loss to account, he followed their retreating figures as they moved slowly toward his picture. But the next moment an exclamation of astonishment burst from the lips of the young man.

"Why, here is your portrait, Leilia! What does it mean? Who can the painter be?"

With that he hurried out to purchase a catalogue. Carradine advanced quickly to the girl.

"I am the painter," he said.

She turned and looked at him with one steady gaze from those glorious eyes that had haunted his visions for so many years. Then she spoke:

"You painted that picture? and how?"

"From remembrance," he answered. "It is my only tribute to the little unknown princess who crowned me once with roses. Does she, too, remember it?"

For a moment doubt was in her face; but as he looked fixedly at her it vanished in certainty. A smile just touched her bright lips.

"It was you, then, on whom I forced my roses? A princess who gave away honors unasked. How often I have wondered since—"

She stopped, turned to the canvas, and added abruptly, "but I was a child then, and here—"

"Here you are a woman," said Carradine, completing the unspoken sentence. "It is so hard to understand? The same power that kept the child in my heart showed me into what she would ripen."

She did not look at him now, but at the picture, as she asked him in a low voice, "and whom am I to thank for such an honor?"

"My name is Hubert Carradine," he answered, and saw at once that it was no unfamiliar word to her. "And yours? Through all these years your face has haunted me always, but your name I never knew."

She hesitated a moment, then turned to him.

"You never knew my name? Then think of me still as you have thought of me through all these years," she said, a half smile lingering about her mouth, but never lighting the great dark that was shaded by some subtle sadness. The look, the tone, transported Carradine beyond all remembrance of place or circumstance, into the unreal realm of imagination in which his wish was supreme ruler.

"I have thought of you always as my life and my love," he said, half consciously, his dreamy, deep gray eyes glowing upon her face. She blushed suddenly, and then paled in an instant. Just then her former companion entered the room.

"I am Leilia Auvernay," she said hastily, "and this is Cecil Wyndham, my—my betrothed husband."

Not another word was said. As the young man approached Carradine fell back a step and looked at the two. His was a fair, handsome face, so little marked as yet by time, that it would be hard for an unpracticed eye to conjecture with what lines the shaping character would yet stamp it. Nevertheless, with one keen gaze Carradine estimated both present and future.

She said a few low, spoken words to her companion, who presently moved toward Carradine, and addressed him:

"I have the honor of speaking to Mr. Carradine, the painter of this picture?"

Carradine bowed without speaking.

"Will you pardon me for asking if it is a fancy sketch?" continued Mr. Wyndham.

"Partly so, but suggested by the face of a little girl," answered the artist.

"But the likeness is so very striking," muttered the young gentleman. "I must have it at any rate. Of course you will part with it—at your own price?"

"The picture is not for sale," said Carradine, quietly, still regarding the young man with that cool, steady gaze which had already caused him to betray a hesitation, almost confusion, very unlike his usual easy confidence. He seemed to have an instinctive knowledge that the artist was measuring him, and to shrink from that measurement with unconscious dread.

Carradine saw Leilia Auvernay once more before she returned to her home in a distant town. Then he took his picture from the academy walls and hung it in his studio, where his eyes could find it whenever he looked away from his work. For he did not give up work; yet, among themselves, his friends pronounced him an altered man, and marveled what had caused so subtle a difference. Always silent, he now seemed to live in an ideal world of his own; and, whatever he might occupy himself with, there was that in his manner which appeared to imply that it was only a temporary diversion until the coming of some event for which he was waiting.

So passed half a year, at the end of which there came a letter to Carradine. It was very brief, but it was enough to assure him of that which he had been almost unconsciously expecting.

The letter was from Leilia Auvernay. He went to her at once. She met him with a laughing light in her eyes soon as he had not seen there when she stood in the gallery beside her betrothed husband; a light which recalled the merry child who had smiled down on him so long ago.

"Mr. Carradine," she said, "I told you that my fortune was gone, but I did not tell you how utterly it had been swept away. I am nothing better than a beggar. Will you take me for one of your students, for charity's sake?"

He looked searchingly into her smiling face.

"And Mr. Wyndham?" he asked, in a low voice.

She laughed without so much as a flush of emotion.

"Mr. Wyndham has gone with the rest of my worldly possessions. Did I not say that I had lost everything? You see, Mr. Carradine, that I am not of as much worth now as my picture."

The words, as she said them, did not seem bitter. He took her hands.

"Leilia," he said, "does your loss make you unhappy?"

"Do I look so?" she asked, gayly. "As for the marriage, it was my father's wish, and to gratify his dying request I consented—before I knew my own heart——." Here, a quick, vivid color shot into her cheek, but she went on: "There never was love on my side; and on his—well, money is more than love—with some natures. I do not wish to blame him."

Carradine's grasp tightened on her hands.

"Leilia," he said, "once your answer put a bar between us when I spoke words that were surprised out of my heart. Would it be so now, if I should say them once more? My love, my life, will you come to me?"

"Will I come!" she repeated, looking up in his eyes and drawing nearer, until his arms silently folded about her.

And so Carradine found his love at last.

ANOKA PEAT.

Some Facts About Its Manufacture and the Machinery Necessary for Profitable Working.

ANOKA, Jan. 18.—In the month of March last there was organized in the State of New York a company to manufacture condensed peat for fuel in the State of Minnesota. The company here is managed by Dwight Mitchell and Franklin Dodge, the latter being the inventor of the process and machinery. Mr. Mitchell was the owner of a large tract of land about a mile north of the Manitoba railroad, and near the Coon Creek station. On this land was a large bed of superior quality of peat. Operations were commenced here in April last, and the machinery set in motion in August. This machinery consists of a scow 18x45 feet, which is placed in an excavation large enough to float it, and moored along as the work progresses; a fifty horse power boiler, two twenty-five horse power engines, peat machine, with reservoir; two centrifugal pumps—one for pumping water into reservoir, the other to pump out the liquid peat; an adjustable conveyor, with endless chain, projecting out in front, into which the shovelers throw the crude peat, which is carried into the machine. Four-inch galvanized pipes carry the liquid peat from the pump to the drying beds, which are level surfaces, 50x125 feet, inclosed by a ditch and embankment sixteen inches high, the water soaking away in a few hours. Then a cutter is run through crossways of the beds, separating the peat into cuts four inches wide. After drying about two weeks it is turned over, and in two weeks more it is ready for the cribs, which are built alongside ten feet wide and ten feet high, with roof and open work sides. Here it remains for four or five months, or till it is perfectly dry, which should be accomplished before freezing weather, as that interferes with the drying. When dry, it is calculated that one ton of it will require from four to six tons of the crude peat. The advantages claimed for this process are, briefly: the bog is cleaved from the very bottom as the machine proceeds, its great cheapness in labor, all that hands have to do is to shovel the crude peat onto the conveyor, and in the process of drying, once turning over and then wheeling it into the cribs. In going through the machine the fibre being completely mashed the product becomes almost as compact as anthracite coal. Sand and other foreign matter is separated, leaving a pure article. When once thoroughly dry, it is always dry, being impervious to dampness ever after.

Owing to the lateness of the season when operations were commenced, freezing weather came on before the peat was dry, consequently the best results were not obtained, and that now on hand is not of the best quality, yet it proves to be an excellent and popular fuel wherever tried, making a very hot fire without dirt, dust or unpleasant odor. Charcoal made from this peat is found to be a very superior article, according to an analysis made by Prof. Englehardt, of the Syracuse Salt company. "It contains about the same amount of carbon and more than twice the weight, bulk for bulk," as compared with wood charcoal. In regard to the cost of manufacturing this peat, it is, perhaps, too early to speak definitely, but enough has already been learned to make it certain that it will not be over $2 per ton, and probably not more than $1.50.

AN OLD MAN'S STORY.

FOR THE PIONEER PRESS.

You were harsh with Jennie to-day, Joe,
And you filled her eyes with tears.
You struck a blow at her heart-strings
That will leave its mark for years.
Yes, men are thoughtless and cruel,
Though strong to lead and control,
And the hands should be tender that fetter
A woman's sensitive soul.

I had passed the romance of youth, Joe,
When I won my fair, young bride,
And my wisdom had quite forgotten
The dreams of life's sweet spring-tide.
I was wrapped in plans for the future,
Winning riches, houses and lands,
And I chilled the joyous creature
Whose fate lay in my hands.

How could I know that her young heart
Was building its castles, too?
That the spell of her girlish fancy
Its glamour o'er me threw?
And each word of rebuke I uttered
Struck keen on her wifely pride,
Till the hopes of life's radiant morning
Faded and withered and died.

For I had a man's one model,
She must learn my mother's ways.
And all my life I had heard, Joe,
There was naught so harmful as praise.
That the lying breath of flattery,
Spoke in its subtle thrill,
And father and mother looked on, Joe,
While I taught my wife their will.

So a year went by unheeded
And Katie was growing old.
There were tiny lines on her forehead,
That a tale of suff'ring told.
Little I dreamed I had carved them
With my ceaseless words of blame;
That her burden of cheerless labor
Was crushing her slender frame.

One morning, how well I remember,
Something was left undone.
Mother was hurt and offended,
Father was sullen and glum.
I said there was never more quiet
Nor comfort for my life,
And the saddest day in my hist'ry
Was that which made her my wife.

Then up to the field I hastened,
But the day was dismal and chill,
And the lonesome wind of the autumn
Swept keen o'er the crest of the hill.
My heart it was filled with anger
As I turned the sodden loam.
"I will be obeyed," I muttered,
"And master of my home!"

But still as I trod the furrow
I thought of her winsome way,
And the wealth of love she lavished
On me, so old and gray;
Of the heavy weight of labor
That lay on her shoulders frail,
How her eyes were sad and hopeless
And her cheek was thin and pale.

The blackbirds chanted above me
A requiem in the trees,
And a breath of dim foreboding
Came shivering on the breeze.
And at last my heart relented;
Yielding to love's fond way
I left my plow in the furrow
And homeward went my way.

"Katie!" I called in the kitchen,
And "Katie" I called in the hall,
But a cricket chirped in answer
Slowly, and that was all—
Only the pipe of a blackbird
And the solemn caw of a crow
And the scream of a locomotive
In the village down below.

Across the field I hastened
With echoing anxious cry
When caught on a flaunting briar
A fragment smote my eye.
Only a dainty ribbon
Which had bound a golden tress,
A bit of snow-white ribbon
And a scrap of crimson dress.

Then a presence stood beside me
And chilled my very breath,
Numbing my throbbing pulses,
For the presence it was Death!
Blindly its lead I followed,
In my heart one fierce, mad prayer,
As a puff of pearly vapor
Rose up in the murky air.

She stood where the rocks loomed thickest
Over the rack below,
Her clasped hands raised to heaven,
Her blue eyes wild with woe.
Trembling, sinking, swaying,
I heard her frenzied cry,
And I caught her to my bosom
As the train went thundering by.

Oh! wondrous love of woman,
Undimmed by sorrow or pain,
Ready to ope death's portals
To free me from my chains.
Clasped in my arms, I bore her
Back to our home, forlorn,
And there, in the hush of twilight,
Our little child was born.

God reigns! In this far, dim future
Perhaps there is peace for me.
Her face all tender, forgiving,
In heaven, at last, I may see.
Through years of lonely waiting
I reap what I have sown.
Yes, Joe; 'tis your mother's story,
Whose life paid for your own.

SARAH D. HOBART.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

An Afternoon in the Boston Cooking School.

BOSTON, Jan. 15.—I arrived at the door of No. 158½ Tremont street at the hour of the lecture on Thursday afternoon, climbed several flights of stairs—in Boston everything is up several flights—paid the admission fee of 50 cents, and took a seat in the "kitchen." It is a long, narrow room, a platform at one end, raised, on which the visitors sit in chairs. Below is a long table, around which some of the ladies can sit, and on which Mrs. Lincoln works before the class. At the other end of the room is a small stove, several cupboards, tables, a sink with hot and cold water, etc. Two or three assistants were there to wait upon Mrs. Lincoln and help her in cooking the various dishes. The doors of the room are painted in a pretty drab color, and the panels a dark reddish brown, on which are painted flowers—a calla lily on one; narcissus, daisies, wheat, etc., on others. Mrs. Lincoln appeared when the room was filled with some forty ladies. She is a pleasant-faced, sweet-voiced woman of medium height and size, with an air of cozy "homeness" about her that at once makes you feel at home in her kitchen. She was enveloped in a huge apron that covered her whole dress, and had sleeves. Her head was adorned with a dainty cap, made of a fancy handkerchief, skillfully "puckered" to form a head-dress. She moved about her work in an easy, assured manner, and soon signified, by ringing a bell, that the hour for beginning was at hand. She then read the following recipes, copies of which we found in our seats. Reading them one at a time, and working them out before us and cooking them:

Braised Calf's Heart—Wipe and stuff with cracker crumbs, seasoned highly with salt, pepper, thyme and onions, and moistened with melted butter; lard, dredge with salt and pepper; put in a small braising pan, and half cover with brown gravy; bake one hour, or until tender, basting often; serve with sauce made as for any browned gravy, and seasoned with lemon or vinegar and chopped pickles.

Braised Beef—Four to six pounds of beef from the round or face of the rump; trim and tie in shape; rub well with salt, pepper and flour; cut two onions, one-half small carrot, one-half small turnip fine, and fry them till light brown in salt pork fat or drippings; skim them out into the braising pan, then brown the meat all over in the same fat, adding more if needed. Put the meat in the pan, add one quart boiling water, and a tablespoon mixed herbs; cover closely and cook in the oven four hours, basting often (every twenty minutes); turn over after two hours; when tender take up the meat, remove the fat from the gravy, add more salt and pepper, and thicken with flour cooked in butter; cook ten minutes and strain over the meat, or serve with horseradish sauce.

Larded Grouse—Singe, clean, wash, and wipe dry; lard the breast and legs; truss; dredge with salt and pepper; rub with soft butter; dredge with flour; bake in very quick oven twenty minutes if liked rare; thirty if well done; serve hot, with bread sauce; garnish with parsley.

Bread Sauce—Dry and roll one cup of stale bread crumbs; sift; boil the fine crumbs (about one-third cup) with one pint milk and one tablespoon salt, and one-half salt-spoon pepper. Fry the coarse crumbs (two-thirds cup) in a tablespoon hot browned butter, stirring lightly with a fork till they absorb all the butter and are separate. Put the white sauce on the platter and sprinkle the brown crumbs over the grease and sauce.

Horseradish Sauce—Four tablespoonfuls grated horseradish (grate the roots, because when purchased grated it is half turnip) four tablespoonfuls of powdered cracker, half cup cream, one teaspoonful powdered sugar, one teaspoonful salt, half salt-spoon pepper, one teaspoon made mustard, one tablespoon vinegar, or enough to give it a good, sharp taste; mix altogether and heat over hot water—set in the top of the tea-kettle.

Brown Sauce—Melt one tablespoon butter in an omelette pan (or spider); when brown add a tablespoon of flour; when well mixed pour on gradually a half a cup of stock, or hot water, letting it boil until it thickens; season to taste with salt, pepper, one tablespoon chopped cucumber pickles.

An Omelette—One tablespoonful milk to every egg used, and salt and pepper to taste; put your yolks into the bowl in which you are to make it; beat the yolks till thick and lemon colored, and add salt and pepper, then the milk; and beat the whites till stiff and dry (use an egg beater), and cut them carefully into the yolks with your spoon; do not stir them, just barely cover the whites with the yellow; when whites are stiff, let stand a moment, and then run a knife around the dish, and they will pour out in a moment without leaving a bit in the dish; butter just begun to brown in your spider when you pour your omelette in; then when brown on edges it will be brown on the bottom; set your skillet for a moment in the oven to dry the top of the omelette; then remove; run a knife around the sides; with a broad knife turn it lightly over half way; and serve on a hot dish.

I was greatly exercised to know what "braising" and "larding" meant, but was speedily enlightened as the work went on. "Braising" is cooking meat in a tightly covered dish in the oven. The French put coals on top of the cover so that the heat may come from both sides. "Larding" is done with a long "larding needle," threaded with long, thin strips of salt pork, drawn through the meat so that an end is left out on either side. These are trimmed evenly and present a very pretty appearance when taken from the oven, being crisp and brown. We were all given a taste of the various dishes; some that were cooked the same way by the class in the morning, were served to us cold, with the delicious horseradish and brown sauce. The wiser ones had brought teaspoons to use in tasting, the more foolish virgins had to use their fingers, primitive fashion. The delicious odors which for some time filled the room were a sufficient appetizer, if the sight of Mrs. Lincoln's beautiful dexterity was not enough in itself. I left about 5 o'clock, feeling fully convinced of two things; first, that cooking can be made a "thing of beauty and a joy forever," rather than the tedious, monotonous martyrdom it now so often is; and second, that I would come Saturday to the extra demonstration lecture on bread made without kneading, which Mrs. Lincoln said she considered the best.

Dinner Table Fancies.

To be in thoroughly good form at dinner is the very inflorescence of civilized life. Like many other regulations of social life, dinner table etiquette is arbitrary, but not to know certain things is to argue yourself unknown so far as society life goes. To take soup pushing the spoon from rather than toward yourself; to touch the napkin as little as possible; to accept or decline what is offered instantly and quietly; these and other trifles characterize the well-bred diner-out. The attempts to introduce too much color in dinner table decorations are rather declining. The finest white damask still holds the preference, and the center piece of plush or velvet under the lace is little used now. Fewer flowers, too, are seen, and these in very low forms. The dessert plates come in deep tones in Dresden china, and d'oyley on which the finger bowl rests should be immediately removed with the bowl on reaching the guest. The latest fashion in ice-cream plates is the Bohemian glass oval form with small handles. Menu cards, hand-painted, hold the preference, but many are seen on tinted cardboard, with engraved vignette in one corner and the date in another.

A Delicious Sandwich.

To make wonderfully appetizing sandwiches proceed in this way: Take equal quantities of the breast of cold boiled chicken and of cold boiled tongue. Chop them very fine: so fine in fact that you cannot distinguish the separate particles. Add a good large half teaspoonful of celery salt, a pinch of cayenne pepper and four tablespoonfuls of Mayonnaise dressing. This quantity of condiments will be enough to season the breast of one large chicken and an equal quantity of tongue. When this is perfectly cold, spread some thin slices of bread with butter and then with this mixture. Do not prepare them till you are about ready to serve them. If you wish to take sandwiches for a lunch when traveling, be careful not to make the dressing quite so moist as you would if they are to be eaten at home. The better way, if you do not object to the trouble, is to put the salad filling in a small glass jar, and spread the sandwiches as you need them.

Kitchen Keramics.

Directions for making mock-turtle soup: Take part of a calf's head, remove the brains, rinse the head in several waters, and then let it soak in cold water for an hour. Prepare four quarts of beef stock, put this in a large soup-kettle, put the head in, and let this cook slowly for an hour and a half. Then take the head out, let it get cold, and then cut all the meat from it and return bones and meat both to the soup. Fry in butter, till brown, a large onion which you have sliced very thin; add this to the soup, with some pieces of carrot, turnip, parsley, if you can obtain it, some celery, and any herbs, such as sage or summer savory, if you like them in soup. The secret of success in making this is to cook it long enough, and it should be cooked slowly. The scum should be skimmed off at an early stage in the preparation of the dish, and the soup must be strained, before it is served. One authority on this soup says that a lemon sliced and added to it a few minutes before removing from the fire is an improvement. This soup can be made in a large quantity, as it keeps well, and is thought by some cooks to be better the second or third day. B.

A sense of responsibility may be cultivated in children at an early age, and unless carried to excess, and burdens are laid upon young shoulders that ought not to be borne by them, it is a wise and helpful plan for a mother to pursue. Let the boys learn to take care of their own peculiar property—for instance, let it be their duty to see that when they come in with their skates they are dried and rubbed, if there is any suspicion of rust on them, with a flannel cloth with a little oil on it (kerosene is excellent for this purpose.) This is but one of the many little acts they can perform which will be of benefit to them, and, as a general rule, children who have something to do are happier, and have, as we say, better dispositions than those who are left to follow their own behests entirely.

An oyster omelette may be a new dish to some cooks, and I can assure them that it will be a favorite if the family like oysters. Stew a dozen oysters in their own liquor, if possible, if not, use a very little water; roll two or three lumps of butter the size of butternuts in flour, and put in and let it come to a boil; salt it well and add black or cayenne pepper to suit your taste. Take out the oysters and chop them, and, if necessary to make it thick, add a little flour to the sauce, then put the oysters in, and set the sauce pan in which they are on the back part of the stove. Beat your eggs until very light, and add to them two tablespoonfuls of cream or rich milk; fry in a well-buttered frying-pan. When done, remove to a hot platter or a deep plate, and pour the oyster sauce over it. Serve while hot.

Here is a novel and pleasing way to prepare a dessert. It is especially adapted for the children's birthday dinners in those happy households where such days are kept in joyous festivals. Make a small hole in the end or side of a number of egg shells. Through this pour out the egg. Fill the empty shells with hot pudding made of cornstarch, arrowroot or Irish moss. When cold break off the shells; serve on small saucers, and surround the egg-shaped pudding with jelly or jam. If you wish to take so much trouble, divide the pudding in two parts, and add to one a tablespoonful of grated chocolate, and in this way color part of the eggs. Sugar and cream, flavored with vanilla, is a very nice sauce with this kind of pudding.

A good breakfast dish can be prepared from the remains of yesterday's dinner, providing that consisted in part of roast mutton. Chop it fine, and put it in a saucepan with a cup of gravy or of soup stock, season with pepper and salt, and scatter over it, stirring all the time, a tablespoonful of flour; let the meat heat gradually, and, when "boiling hot," set the pan on the back part of the stove, and poach some eggs to serve with the meat. When the eggs are done, put the meat on a platter, and lay the eggs around the edge. With fried potatoes, muffins and good coffee, a wholesome breakfast may be provided at small expense.

Everybody who cares for the sick knows how difficult it is to remove or put on the knit wrapper; it seems as if the invalid needs to assume attitudes that would be almost impossible to one in robust health. A half hour's work with needle and thread will suffice to change a pair of these garments and make them more comfortable. Cut them open the entire length, then put on a facing on one side and a plait on the other; at proper intervals put on some small porcelain buttons and make the button holes, and you will be surprised when this is accomplished that you never thought of doing so before.

"Favorite" pudding is made by beating three eggs very light, the whites and yolks together; flavor with the juice and grated rind of a lemon and half a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg; to this add one cup of grated bread crumbs, one cup of finely chopped apple, one cup of English currants and one and a half cups of sugar; stir these vigorously until well mixed, then put in a buttered pudding dish and boil for at least two hours and a half. Serve with any good sauce, or with cream and sugar alone, or cream and sugar with a wineglass of sherry stirred in.

Good gravy can be made at any time if you have some nice pieces of cold roast meat. Put them in a sauce pan, and pour about a pint of boiling water over them; cover the sauce pan, and let the meat and water simmer on the back of the stove for an hour or more; then strain it through a fine sieve, add butter, pepper and salt; thicken with flour. If lamb or mutton, make the foundation of the gravy, flavor it with a teaspoonful of Worcester sauce, or with the same quantity of parsley, chopped fine.

Cold boiled parsnips, cut in slices and fried in butter, make a good side dish. If the family is large, and it is of importance to economize butter, take one or two thin slices of pork, and fry them. When they are almost done, put the pieces of parsnip in a frying-pan with the pork, and brown them. A lump of butter can be added to give flavor to the fat.

OVERCOMETH!

To him that overcometh,
O word divinely strong,
The victor's palm, the fadeless wreath,
The grand immortal song.
And his the hidden manna,
And his the polished stone,
Within whose whiteness shines the
Revealed to him alone.

To him that overcometh—
Ah, what of bitter strife,
Before he win the battle's gage
And snatch the crown of life!
What whirl of crossing weapons,
What gleam of flashing eyes,
What stern debate with haughty foes
Must be before the prize!

To him that overcometh
Shall trials aye befall.
The world, the flesh, the devil,
He needs must face them all.
Sweet sirens of temptation
May lure with silvern strain.
And cope he must with subtle foes,
And blanch 'neath fiery pain.

To him that overcometh
A mighty help is pledged;
He wields a sword of purest mold,
By use of cycles edged.
And prophets and confessors,
A matchless, valiant band,
Have vanquished earth and stormed the skies,
With that triumphant brand.

To him that overcometh,
O promise dearest dear!
The Lord himself who died for him
Will evermore be near.
Here, dust upon his garments,
There, robes that royal be,
For "On my throne," the King hath said,
"Mine own shall sit with me."

To him that overcometh,
O word divinely strong!
It weaves itself through weary hours
Like some rejoicing song.
For his the hidden manna,
And his the name unknown,
Which Christ the Lord one day of days
Will tell to him alone.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Licentiousness in England.

In a recent sermon Bishop Fraser of Manchester, said that it would be vain to build and restore churches, enlarge schools, and open mission rooms unless they succeeded in gathering the people into them, and influencing them spiritually, morally and socially. It was the moral life of the nation that seemed to him in peril just now—the faith of the nation first of all, and closely connected with that the moral life and well being of the people. Some persons thought that intemperance was the great curse hanging over England at the present moment. He did not think so. There was no doubt, a residuum who were cursed with that terrible curse of intemperance; but there were other curses more deadly still. People might be perfectly temperate as far as alcoholic drinks were concerned, and yet their lives might be anything but according to that which had been laid down for them. And seeing what he saw and hearing what he heard, he distinctly said that he believed that licentiousness was the sin which was eating out the moral life of this nation, that licentiousness which they saw rampant through the streets of Manchester every evening that they moved through those streets. That was a curse which in pulpits they hardly dared to mention for fear of shocking some delicate taste, but it needed to be mentioned sometimes, when they knew the ravages it was causing on every side. This is a word fitly spoken in season; and it is the duty of the clergy in America to imitate the fearlessness and honesty of Bishop Fraser, in touching on the magnitude of the social evil.

Work of Missionaries.

A Chinaman in a town called New-Bendigo, in Australia, where there is a large Chinese colony, was asked recently what practical good had been accomplished by the missionaries. He answered as follows: Before, no one understood God's word. Good many work Sunday all same as week day. Now, no work done on Sunday at New-Bendigo by my countrymen. Perhaps chop little wood for house, or wash him clothes; but no go work. No matter poor, every one no work on Sunday. Before, all worship idols. Now, many come to church; he no worship idols. When Lee Wah begin to read, good many had idols in house; thirty more. Myself had one. Now, only ten houses and stores at New-Bendigo with idols in them. Before, at old township, good many Chinese steal fowls, everything. Now, no more steal; every one work; go get work. Before, every night, Chinamen learn to practice fight. I tell him too stupid fellow. You learn God's word you no want to fight. Now, no more learn to fight. Learn God's word. Before, people no care for God's word; he no know or care. Now, good many people like to read God's word. Before, too much time, nothing to do. Now, many say I learn to read God's word. Now, no more waste time. I like to read. Before, good many make fun God's word; laugh. Papers were put upon outside of store, make laugh at Christian. Papers were put up on door of baptized men's house. Now, heathen men no more make fun; strong men's hands tied up. Himself like it now. Very quiet now.

A Strange Misfit.

In Denver, Col., there was a strange misfit on Thanksgiving day as to an expected service. The Rev. Martin Hart, who is a dean of the Protestant Episcopal cathedral, had invited the Rev. Dr. Jeffery of the Baptist church to preach for him, and Dr. Jeffery had accepted. Public announcement was made and a large congregation of the Denver people was expected. To the great disgust of all concerned, the Rev. Mr. Hart received just before the service a formal letter from two fellow clergymen, to the effect that if he allowed Dr. Jeffery to occupy his pulpit they would proceed against him ecclesiastically before the bishop of the diocese. This brought the expected service to a halt. Dr. Jeffery gracefully declined to preach and the Thanksgiving services went on elsewhere. But the matter has raised a great stir among the more liberal Episcopalians of Colorado. They express their sorrow that an almost absolute canon should stand in the way of Christian fellowship. The action of the two clergymen who sent the forbidding letter is denounced as particularly lacking in charity, and all the more so as they seem to have had abundant opportunity for notifying Mr. Hart in time, and deferred doing so until almost the hour appointed for service.

An Eastern Story.

There is an old Eastern story that ought to be read by those of the clergy whose sermons are never anything more than the statement of the baldest platitudes, which every one knew before. It is to the effect that one day a venerable sage named Moola Muscorodeen, ascended the desk of a mosque and thus addressed his audience: "O children of the faithful, do you know what I am going to say?" They answered, "No." "Well, then," replied he, "it's of use wasting my time on such a stupid set;" and saying this, he came down and dismissed them. The next day he again mounted the desk and asked, "O, true Mussulmans, do ye know what I am going to say?" "We do," said they. "Then," replied he, "there is no need for me to tell you;" and again he let them go. The third time his audience thought they should catch him; and on his putting the usual question, they answered, "Some of us do, and some of us do not." "Well, then," replied he, "let those who know tell those who do not."

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

As I was gathering violets in the snow,
Methought how often, when the heart is low,
And nature grieves,
The buds of simple faith will meekly blow
'Neath frosted leaves.

If imitation be the sincerest form of flattery, then the English Salvation army ought to feel very highly flattered. For it is now announced that a movement has been set on foot at Bristol, Oxford, Tunbridge, Richmond, and elsewhere, to form in organization for the purpose of developing within the lines of the church of England the work that has been regarded as the chief feature of the Salvation Army. So far the work has been successful. The services, which are of a bright and lively character, are usually preceded by processions and held in the open air. Hymns are sung, many of them set to secular tunes, and short addresses delivered. The Church Parochial Mission society hope shortly to provide lay church communicants of the working class to aid in carrying on the work.

The Christian Union says that it is very common nowadays to scoff at modern churches as being mere "social clubs," but that after all there is good New Testament authority for so regarding them. There are not a few families in every community who have very little elevating society except such as the church affords. To give the young people something else to do one evening in the week than to dance, and the old people something else than to gossip, is a most useful service. The church that knows how to conduct successfully and well what is with doubtful grammar called a "church sociable," knows how to practice as well as to preach brotherly love. How to do this is a problem which not a few churches have found too much for their solution. It really is a difficult problem.

The Rev. George A. Gordon has recently been called to be pastor of the old South church, Boston, at a salary of $8,000 a year and a parsonage. He has had an eventful history. He is not yet thirty years old. Ten years ago he went to Boston to learn the trade of a mechanic. While there he was induced to turn his attention to the ministry and was assisted in the preparatory studies. While pursuing the usual course of studies he supported himself by preaching, and after his graduation in 1875 he preached for a year in Maine and then went to Greenwich at a salary of $2,800 a year. He is probably the best paid minister of his age in the world.

According to the Japan Mail, Christianity is considered as an infectious epidemic by the fanatical Japanese Buddhists in the province of those who firmly believe that any one even treading in the footsteps of a missionary will be tainted with the foreign belief. Thus when a French missionary recently visited the district everybody refused to give him food or lodging, and he was obliged to apply to the police for help. So the priests called their followers together and agreed that they would kill the obstreperous foreigner if he stayed, taking an oath to excommunicate all who violated the agreement. The missionary retreated.

Rev. George R. Jackson and some other colored Baptists of Georgia propose to establish a new denomination, with Baptist principles and the Methodist system. It is to be called the African Baptist Missionary Episcopal church. The founder of the new church says independency may do very well for white Baptists, but among colored Baptists it leads to divisions and fightings, from which Episcopal Methodism is free. It is proposed to have bishops and presiding elders, and an itinerancy, the limit being two years.

Rev. Charles Garrett, at a missionary meeting in Edinburg a few days since, pointed out the fact that while $760,000 were contributed by the Wesleyan Methodists last year for foreign missions, Mr. Bass paid $880,000 for the carriage of his ale. The chairman, Ald. Stephenson of Newcastle, stated that while $500,000,000 were paid annually in direct taxation, only $5,000,000 were contributed for Christian missions.

The following are the principal statistics of the Protestant Episcopal church in Indiana for the year just closed: Value of property, $471,640; baptisms—adults, 103; infants, 334; confirmations, 289; communicants, 3,830; Sunday school teachers and scholars, 3,451; total offerings, $57,122; debts, $20,622.

A committee for aiding the shop girls of Paris, through the McAll mission of that city, has been formed in New York. Mrs. William E. Dodge, Mrs. W. P. Van Rensselaer, Mrs. Fletcher Harper and Miss M. D. Atterbury are actively engaged in this Christian enterprise.

By a curious coincidence, the Psalter of the Book of Common Prayer for the Sunday after Sir Garnet Wolseley's victory included the verse: "Thou hast subdued Egypt and destroyed it. Thou hast scattered thine enemies abroad with thy mighty arm."

The Old Testament revision committee finished their seventy-eighth session on the 30th ult., at the Jerusalem chamber. The company finished the second revision of Job, and proceeded with that of Proverbs as far as chapter xvi. 18.

The increase of Baptist churches in the United States during the last half century has been at the rate of 421 every year, or rather more than eight a week.

The Young Men's Christian associations of New Jersey gained 2,226 new members during the past year, and record 141 cases of professed conversions.

Three thousand five hundred churches built in fifteen years in this country, and more than one for every day during last year, is a record not to be despised.

The missionary collection in the Methodist Episcopal church for the past year exceeded the year before by over $60,000.

LORE FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

DANGER-SIGNALS.

The day may walk enrobed with flowers,
Singing a joyous lay,
With naught to chill the balmy hours,—
The storm-winds far away,—
And sunlight with its radiant showers
May fill the earth and sky;
And all the while from the watch-towers
The danger-signals fly.

The eve may fade in dusky light
Where tranquil waters lie,
And darkness in its silent flight
Veil every watching eye;
When wearied ocean's sleeping tide
The cool night breezes lave,
The fog-bell sendeth far and wide
A warning o'er the wave.

Though gale and zephyr be entwined
In crests of pearly snow,
With golden sunbeams, and enshrined
On ocean's changing brow,
Their glories fade when night comes down;
But one unsetting star
Hangs o'er the billow's wildest frown,—
The light ship on the bar.

Even so around a morning life
May opening roses cling,
And in the heart in joyous strife
Imprisoned warblers sing,
And not a cloud may upward roll
To dim the crystal sky,—
Yet o'er some watch-tower of the soul
May danger-signals fly.

Some Wise Boys.

Robbie Pierce, aged four and a half years, was very anxious to go to school this fall, and as the teacher, who is his aunt, was willing to have him attend, his mother let him go. The teacher was one day giving the little ones easy lessons in arithmetic, when she asked the following question:

"If a man has one horse and buys another, how many will he have then?"

Robbie answered very promptly, "Have a team."

Robbie's father keeps but one horse, and he was more quick to see the practical advantage of such a purchase than the numerical increase. Robbie is a great boy for fairs, and being quite trusty, is allowed to circulate by himself.

One day his mother gave him a nickel to buy taffy but shortly after he returned quite happy and excited, but without taffy. On being questioned he said he gave the money to a man with a machine and "blowed a hundred." He had invested with a lung-tester man.

On another occasion he went to look at the machinery, but he soon came back to his mother very much frightened, and said he had seen a hookey cow and was afraid it might get away and scare him.

The hookey cow proved to be one with a curly pate and a ring in its nose.

Johnny Castle is a year older than Robbie. The other day a man who had a slight acquaintance with Johnny was at work in his father's garden, when Johnny came out to see him. The man began a conversation by saying: "Well, Johnny, are you all right today?" The reply came quick and right to the point, "Yes, sir, and I'm all right every day."

Davie Marvin, somewhat older than Johnny, was one day inspecting a new horse that his cousin had just bought, and which was rather thin in flesh, and this was his opinion: "Well, Cyrus, your horse has an excellent framework, but is very poorly sided up."

Barbers' Poles.

In the records of the English parliament for the last century we read that Lord Thurlow, when he opposed the surgeons' incorporation bill in the house of peers, on the 17th of July, 1797, stated that, by a statute still in force, the barbers and surgeons were each to use a pole. The barbers were to have theirs blue and white striped, with no other appendage; but the surgeons', which were the same in other respects, were likewise to have a gallipot and a red rag to denote the particular nature of their vocation.

The origin of the barbers' poles is to be traced to the period when the barbers were also surgeons, and practiced bleeding. To assist this operation, it became necessary for the patient to grasp a staff; a stick or pole was always kept by the barber-surgeon, together with the fillet or bandage he used for tying the patient's arm. When the pole was not in use, the tape was tied to it, that they might be both together when wanted.

On a person coming to be bled, the tape was disengaged from the pole and bound round the arm, and the pole was put into the person's hand. After the operation was concluded, the tape was again tied upon the pole, and pole and tape were often hung at the door for a sign or notice to passers-by that they might there be bled. Doubtless the competition for custom was great, for our ancestors believed thoroughly in bleeding, and they demanded the operation frequently. At length, instead of hanging out the identical pole used in the operation, a pole was painted with stripes around it, in imitation of the real pole and bandage, and thus came the sign.

That the use of the pole in bleeding was very ancient appears from an illumination in a missal in the time of Edward I. In other ancient volumes there are engravings of the like practice. "Such a staff," says Brand, who mentions these graphic illustrations, "is to this very day put into the hands of patients undergoing phlebotomy, by every village practitioner."

THE TREE CULTURE ACT.

The Benefits of the Act to the West—Practical Results in Nebraska.

In view of the hostility evinced in congress to the tree culture act and the efforts of certain interested parties to secure its repeal, the following letter from Mr. J. T. Allen of Omaha will be of interest:

On the prairies of the West is where exists the great necessity of forests, and where the benefits of the timber culture act is felt. Nothing is more important to increase the quantity of crops, to prevent the evaporation of moisture, to ameliorate the climate, and afford protection for man and beast, both in winter and summer. There will no doubt be an effort made in congress to repeal the timber culture act. Mr. C. S. Sargent, in the North American Review, says "It has failed entirely in accomplishing what was honestly expected; it has given rise to gigantic frauds, and encourages the planting of trees where trees cannot grow unless artificially irrigated, etc." In regard to the working of the act in Western Nebraska, as far west as the 100th meridian and beyond, the writer has given personal observation, and the practical results of planting trees on timber claims differ widely from the foregoing statement. In Buffalo (200 miles west of the Missouri river) and adjacent counties there are at least 500 quarter sections where groves of from five to thirty acres have been planted on time entries, and are growing well. On many of these are thousands of trees thirty to forty feet in height and from eight to ten inches in diameter, grown from sprouts and seeds since the act became a law in 1873. Hundreds of instances might be given similar to the following: One man in Dawson county, near the 100th meridian, where wiseacres a few years ago fixed the western limit of rainfall, has thirty acres of cottonwood on his claim, where the law only requires ten. These trees are thirty feet high, planted in rows north and south half a mile long. Within a mile is a solid tract of twenty acres of box elders, twelve feet high, grown from the seed sown where they stand, and in half a day's ride ten claims were passed, all the young trees showing a good growth. Still further west, and beyond that imaginary rain line, numbers of timber claims were found, and the trees were as flourishing as those 250 miles eastward. Col. J. R. Roe of Kearney commenced in 1875, and has now 45,000 trees of cottonwood, maple, ash, walnut and box elder, of all sizes up to forty feet high and thirty inches in circumference, enough to keep two or three families in fuel, and the trees and of planting. The man who says trees will not grow on the prairies, and grow just as well as corn or potatoes, is wilfully ignorant of the facts. What has been said about the western portion of Nebraska is true as to the whole State, as well as those sections of Kansas and Dakota which have been settled since the act became a law, and it was one of the greatest benefits ever conferred upon the prairie country. There is no more land stealing under this than there is under the homestead act, and as far as it applies to citizens, it is much more general in its benefits. The latter requires the claimant to live on the land for a term of years before he can obtain a title.

LAND ARE WORTH THREE TIMES THE COST AND LABOR

The timber claim is open to the doctor, the lawyer, and, in fact, all classes of citizens, the only requirement being that ten acres of the land should be plowed, cropped, and planted with trees; that they shall be cultivated and protected, and if this is not done no one can get a title. Many are plowing a strip around a quarter section and planting, which is a great advantage to the adjacent lands, preventing the force of the wind and driving snow. Others who have claims in connection with homesteads are putting the whole into timber and seeding with tame grasses, combining protection and winter pasturage. Some may say the doctor or the merchant has no right to the benefit of this act, but it might be difficult for them to tell why the mechanic, the hired man or the hired girl should not have a square piece of the public domain which is offered, if they comply with the terms and plant trees. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred where a new settler in a town, no matter what his occupation, takes a timber claim he becomes interested in getting what he has looked forward to—the possession of real estate and a future home. This makes him a permanent settler, and any one who knows anything about the settlement of new Western towns knows there is a great difference between a fixed settler and one who is liable to drift about according to fancy or circumstances.

Upon inquiry I find that a large number of timber claims are taken by townspeople, who pay the farmer settlers near by for the breaking, plowing and cultivation, planting and protection against fires; by this both parties become interested and benefited by the transaction. In the Niobrara, and districts in the northwestern part of the State, 400,000 acres are entered, and 200,000 in the adjoining Neligh district, under the lumber act. Ex-Gov. Furnas, in a recent address before the National Agricultural convention, estimates the total number of trees planted in this State from 1854 to 1882, inclusive, at 403,000,000. The whole West is interested in the continuation of the timber culture act. It should not be repealed, but perhaps amended so that a tract once filed on, though the entry might be canceled for non-fulfillment of the law, still it should always remain for the purposes of timber culture, and not be open for homestead entry or pre-emption.

A Homestead Decision.

Washington Dispatch to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat: In the case of the homestead entry of Mrs. Graham on lands claimed by the Hastings & Dakota railway, the commissioner of the general land office has awarded the land to the former. The case has been taken up on appeal and is now before the secretary. It is understood that the decision has already been written and is favorable to the settler and against the railroad company. The attorneys for the road have asked for a delay of the decision to produce an additional argument. A law was passed during the war allowing a man in the army to make an entry while in the service, with the idea that the land should be occupied by some member of his family. In 1866 the entry in question was made, while Graham was in the service. The grant to the road was also made in 1866. The company claim that as the land had never been occupied by any member of the Graham family at that time the land would inure to the grant. It is held, on the other hand, that the filing being legal, and upon the face of it fair, it took the land from the operations of the grant. The case has been called up by Mr. Strait at different times, and he has endeavored to secure an early decision. He says he is for the settler every time.

Another Report of Arthur's Engagement.

New York Truth publishes a story to the effect that President Arthur has become smitten with the charms of Miss Sackville West, the daughter of the British minister, who is heir-presumptive to his brother, Lord Sackville. The paper discusses the event of the marriage, and comments also upon the personal charms of the lady. Miss West is not yet of age, says Truth, but to beauty and grace of person she adds the dignity and presence of a much older woman. Miss West's grandfather was Lord De La Ware, a descendant of Delaware of Edward the Third's time. In the event of the marriage, President Arthur will travel abroad at the end of his term, and perhaps reside permanently at Paris or London. After stating that the stars and stripes and union jack are likely to outwine sensationally in a matrimonial way, Truth goes on to show that the president of the United States is a British subject under British law, and if the president ever resided in England he would by courtesy of the court take precedence with the sovereigns. Miss West is a daughter of a Spanish lady of good family, but reduced fortune, whom the British minister married while at the British legation at Madrid. Truth does not say when or where the marriage is likely to take place.

Improvements in Dakota Cities.

The record of improvements in various Dakota cities the past season gives the magnificent total of $5,549,175. The list is as follows:

Mandan	$240,000	Watertown	75,000
Grand Forks	500,000	Scotland	30,000
Jamestown	300,000	Springfield	20,000
Yankton	343,000	Chamberlain	35,000
Fargo	1,044,000	Parker	[illegible]
Sioux Falls	575,000	[illegible]	[illegible]
Wahpeton	[illegible]	Milbank	[illegible]
Casselton	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Madison	[illegible]	Miller	[illegible]
Vermillion	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Pierre	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
St. Lawrence	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Mitchell	[illegible]	Columbia	[illegible]
Bismarck	[illegible]	Elk Point	[illegible]
Huron	[illegible]	Alexandria	[illegible]
Aberdeen	175,000

Duel with Shotguns.

St. Louis Special to Chicago Tribune: Michael Vandenburg and Matthew Woodlock quarreled near the town of Brooklyn, a short distance from St. Louis, to-day. Their friends advised them to settle their dispute with the shotguns they had carried home after a day's hunt. This advice was accepted, the men taking up their positions twenty paces apart. Both fired simultaneously. Vandenburg had his eye shot out and is so badly wounded in the head that he will die. Woodlock received a load from Vandenburg's weapon in his breast and neck. A large crowd witnessed the terrible affair and seemed to enjoy it. Dr. Grayson, who is attending the wounded men, took no less than twenty-four shot out of Woodlock.

BURNETT'S COCOAINE.

The Best and Cheapest Hair Dressing.

It kills dandruff, allays irritation, and promotes a vigorous growth of the hair.

Burnett's Flavoring Extracts are invariably acknowledged the purest and best.

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Publisher.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

NEWS CONDENSED.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

The topheaviness of the navy of the United States probably could not have been better illustrated than by the presence in the galleries of the house on Monday of fully 200 barnacles, representing the line and staff service. Their anxiety as the pending bill was discussed was painfully manifest, and a levy of page boys were kept busy carrying messages to members on the floor thought to be favorably disposed toward the watchers up stairs. The ladies, too, turned out in force. The feature of the day's debate grew out of the proposition to gradually abolish the pay corps of the navy in the same manner as authorized a few days ago for the same branch of the army.

Assistant Secretary Joslyn, of the interior department who has been criticised for his action in the matter of the lease of the Yellowstone park, says of the letter of Gen. Brisbin on the subject: "It shows what his motives were for assailing me. He expected to make $1,000,000, according to his letter; and, if he could do this, everything was all right. When he found that somebody else was likely to make money out of the enterprise, then the whole thing was a swindle. He is evidently very much prejudiced."

A large number of prominent residents of Washington were fined $2 each in the police court at Washington for neglecting to have the snow removed from their sidewalks, in accordance with law. Among them were Gen. Hazen, chief signal officer, U. S. A., and G. B. Raum, Commissioner of internal revenue. Attorney General Brewster failed to appear when his name was called, and as hed neglected to furnish collateral, the prosecuting attorney said he should have to ask that a warrant be issued for him.

The house committee of the whole agreed to Mr. Deering's bill for the relief of Stephen P. Yeoman and Andrew Leroach, formerly resister and receiver, respectively at Sioux City, Iowa. Leroach was receiver from October 1856 to March 1861. During this period they incurred expenses, in the case of the former, to $7,400, and in case of the latter to $4,050, for which no allowance was made to them. The expenses consisted of office rent and clerk hire.

Representative John W. Shackelford of North Carolina died recently. He was a native of North Carolina and was born Nov. 16, 1884. His home was in Jacksonville, in that state. He was elected to the forty-seventh congress as a democrat. In the house he served as a member of the committee on private land claims. He was not renominated as a member of the forty-eighth congress.

The following changes are issued from the postoffice department: Postoffices established: Bronson, Kanabec county, Minn; special from Brunswick. Postmasters commissioned: George W. Mattern, Donnelson, Iowa; Clark Lee, Quincy, Dak.; Elias Steenerson, Fisher, Minn.; Hiram S. Beardsley, Tomah, Wis.; Edward F. Cushing, Bronson Minn.

Ex-Senator Spencer, the much wanted witness in the star route trial, left Kingston, Ont., quite recently for Halifax, en route for England. During his stay in Ontario he was closely watched by detectives.

Fred B. Shaw was to-day indicted by the grand jury on charge of endeavoring to corrupt, by influence, Edward D. Doniphan, of the star route jury in the first trial, in favor of Stephen W. Dorsey.

Red Cloud was taken to Washington jail on Friday last to allow him to witness the execution of Shaw, the murderer. He was greatly pleased with the exhibition.

The president approved the joint resolution for change of the name of the National bank of Winterset in Iowa.

It has been decided to pay the expert witnesses in the Guiteau trial $25 a day.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

The Quincy house, one of the largest hotels in Quincy, Ill., was burned last Friday. There were in the hotel about fifty regular boarders; fifteen transient guests, and forty-two servants. Nearly all the guests and boarders lost everything. The hotel building was owned by J. L. Morris, and valued at $30,000. It was leased by G. P. Fay, who owned the furniture and fixtures, and will lose $15,000.

The Ledger Paper mills at Elkton, Ind., exploded with terrific force, wrecking half the immense building. Patrick McCormick was killed; John Garrett, is missing, and eight others are injured, one of whom will probably die.

Luke Driscoll died on the 18th at Baldwinville, N. Y., of hydrophobia. He was bitten by a dog a year ago. When in convulsions it required five men to hold him, and he held out a chair in which his father, who weighs 200 pounds, was sitting.

An engine on the Mansfield Tap railroad branch of the New Orleans Pacific exploded at the depot, at Mansfield, La., Engineer Shackleford, Tom Mays, fireman, and Jerry Hardy, brakeman—the two first named colored—were instantly killed.

Silverton (Col.) Special: Seth Page, justice of the peace at Ophir, attempted to cross the range without snow shoes to Silverton last Tuesday. He was found by a mail carrier Saturday frozen to death.

Six Chippewa Indians are reported among the lost of the wrecked steamer Cimbria. They passed through St. Paul last summer, went to Boston, thence to Europe for the purpose of exhibition.

A fire at Washington, Hemstead county, Ark., recently destroyed property valued at $50,000; about half insured.

At Lewiston, Me., Senator Frye's house was damaged $5,000 by fire; insured $10,000.

The high school at Marengo, Ill., which cost $23,000, was burned Friday.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

The Yellowstone National Park improvement company has been organized under the law of New Jersey, with a capital of $2,000,000. Its corporations include Rufus Hatch, Roscoe Conkling, Gen. J. A. Williamson, of Boston, Richard T. Merrick, of Washington, Frederick E. Church, the distinguished painter, J. B. Houston president of the Pacific mail, A. J. Vanderpoel, Judge John R. Brady, Samuel W. Alberton of Chicago, C. M. Loring, of Minneapolis, and other well known men in various parts of the country. The officers are Rufus Hatch, president; C. T. Holbart and Mr. Church, vice-presidents; Charles E. Quincy, treasurer. The Farmers Loan and Trust company are the financial agents of the company.

The action of Gen. Sharpe, governor of the Soldiers' home at Milwaukee, in not complying with the request for aid at the Newhall house disaster, refusing to send a steamer, is to be made a matter of official investigation. Congressman Deuster will take the necessary steps, and be assisted by Senator Logan.

George Albert Mason, a convict in Albany, N. Y., penitentiary, claims to have received the greatest number of sentences ever pronounced on one man. He was sentenced forty-three times in Canada before he came to this country to enter the confederate service. He is now serving a twelve year term for counterfeiting.

While Judge Johnson of the Cincinnati court was reading his decision granting Josephine Meyers a divorce from her husband on the ground of desertion, Peter Meyers put in a sudden appearance from Texas, where he had been stationed in the military service. The case was reopened for further hearing.

Anthracite coal is now selling in New York city at $6 per ton—a higher price than has been charged for many years. It only costs $2.50 per ton to mine this coal and deliver it at tide water on the Atlantic coast.

By a fire at Fond du Lac, Wis., the damage to Cooper & Son's stock amounted to $4,000; insurance, $2,500. The building was damaged to the extent of $2,500; other losses, $200.

Mersenstad & Co., wholesale jewelers, 70 and 705 North Fourth street, St. Louis, hav assigned for the benefit of creditors. Liabilities said to be $70,000; assets, $80,000.

A gift of $250,000 is reported from citizens of Cambridge to Harvard college for new dormitories, the rent of each of which is not to exceed $50 a year.

Mayor Ames of Minneapolis vetoed the ordinance granting the telephone exchange the right to lay wires in the streets.

RECORD OF CRIME.

John M. Shafner, an old citizen of Minneapolis, blew out his brains with a revolver On Monday. On the deceased was found $87.65 in cash, and his wife stated that he had about $700 in some bank. Just before he shot himself he talked about having the money divided between his children, if anything should happen to him, and lately he has told his son what to do with his money in case of his death. He has lived in the state about thirty-six years, and for twenty years owned and carried on a farm in the southern part of the state. He came to Minneapolis about thirteen years ago.

There is a great excitement in Catholic circles of Buffalo, N. Y., over the arrest and indictment of Thomas Waldron, familiarly known as "Brother Frank," on charge of rape in violating the person of a little girl aged seven, named Hattie Carr. Brother Frank has been for years director of a well-known Catholic school, called the Brothers' college and is well known throughout the state.

The colored boy, Charles Shaw, was hanged Friday for the murder of his sister the 16th of January, 1881. Shaw retired early Thursday night and rested well. He was nervous and excitable as the hour of execution approached, and at times shed tears and uttered imprecations against those having him in charge.

Mrs. Elliott, who eloped from Rippey, Iowa, in November last with the nephew of her husband, leaving three children, has been found with her paramour in Mankato, where they were living under the name of John Clay and wife. They were arrested and returned to Rippey, Iowa, on a charge of adultery.

At Denver, two men named Sullivan and Brennan were discussing the merits of the Robert E. Lee mine. Sullivan said the mine was as solid as Jesus Christ, at which Brennan, being a Catholic, became terribly enraged, drew a knife and stabbed Sullivan in the neck several times. He cannot recover.

J. Butler of North Adams, was married and twenty-seven years old, pleaded guilty to a charge of raping a niece, aged eleven, and intent to rape two others, aged seven and eight. He was sentenced to State prison for life, with ten days solitary confinement each year.

Brother Frank, director of St. Joseph's Catholic college in Buffalo, who was arrested for criminally assaulting a little girl, has been expelled from the order, and Bishop Ryan says the case must be pushed, regardless of consequences.

John W. Luke, secretary of the Missouri Masonic Relief association, is short in his accounts from $15,000 to $45,000, and other societies with which he was connected are believed to have suffered at his hands.

During the past year there were 2,000 cases of drunkenness before the Winnipeg police court, and $12,000 was collected in fines.

PERSONAL NEWS NOTES.

In the case of Engineer Melville of Jeannette fame, against his wife for the custody of their children, Judge Clayton of Pa., has rendered a decision as follows: That Maud, the eldest child, shall be remanded to the custody of the father to be sent to school; her mother to be permitted to visit her; the two younger children, Elsie and Meta, are remanded to the custody of their mother until further orders of the court; the habeas corpus is held in abeyance to prevent the removal of the children beyond the jurisdiction of the court by either parent.

Lord Lorne should be credited with a nerve and spirit worthy of an American citizen. The Coast line authorities laid exorbitant tribute upon his royal exchequer—charging him double what the Chespeake & Ohio had performed a like service for his party, and he indignantly repudiated the charges and chartered a Pullman car by sections for his Charleston trip.

The attention of the venerable philanthropist, Peter Cooper, having been called to a movement among New York business men to erect a statue to Mr. Cooper at Astor place, he said: "The people can do what they please after I am dead and gone, but it would cause me great pain to have a statue of myself erected during my lifetime."

Alfred Varrenne, an old citizen of St. Paul dropped dead on the 18th. Varrenne was of French birth, and has no relatives except his two nephews, who are somewhere in the East. His property is valued at about $20,000, and is in the charge of Ferdinand Willuis of the German American Bank.

George C. Burdette, a prominent stove manufacturer of Troy, N. Y., and Chicago, died suddenly Monday evening of heart disease, aged sixty-two. Burdette was at one time chamberlain of the city and a member of the assembly in 1865. He was also a member of the constitutional commission of 1872.

Mr. Washburn has succeeded in having O. V. Tousley transfered from the consulate at Trieste, Austria, to the consulate at Leipsic, which is considered one of the most desirable of all the consulates. This will no doubt please Prof. Tousley and his many friends in Minneapolis.

A powerful lobby, with a large stock of the sinews of war on hand, is laboring with the statesmen at Jefferson, Mo., to secure the repeal of the Johnson statute of the last session providing that gambling shall be punished as a felony.

It is quite likely that Dr. Holmes, the distinguished "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," will make an extended tour through Europe the coming summer.

John R. McPherson was renominated United States Senator by the Democratic caucus of New Jersey legislature on the first ballot.

George K. Shoenberger, a Cincinnati millionaire seventy-three years old, was married to Miss Ella Beatty at Coburg, Ont.

FOREIGN NEWS GOSSIP.

The marquis of Hartington, secretary of state for war, in a speech last evening referring to the condition of Ireland, said, through miserable hatred and a hideous conspiracy, he had lost a relation beloved by all, his brother, Lord Frederick Cavendish. He had, he said, the greatest confidence in Earl Spencer, lord lieutenant, and Trevelyan, chief secretary, who went to Ireland at a time of great risk. Irresponsible society existed there side by side with very threatening agitation and widespread sympathy with crime. In secret societies, the marquis said, no doubt existed in Russia, Germany, France and America, and where they existed extreme measures were always necessary. The evil must be grappled with. The Irish problem could only be met by firm determination. The marquis said he did not think the matter hopeless. The law must be strengthened to meet the exceptional condition of the country. The government meant to show that murder would meet its just reward. Home rule would never be permitted in Ireland. He suggested that the government find funds to establish a peasant proprietary in Ireland, but he strongly condemned the paying out of hard earned funds in the English exchequer for such a purpose, unless it could be shown that the people were capable and willing to work.

Dublin Cable: An excitement almost amounting to consternation prevails through out the city. Known members of the Irish National party unqualifiedly repudiate the stigma sought to be cast on their organization, protesting that while open and advised revolutionary action is the basis of their organization, it has never recognized, approved or tolerated the agencies of secret crime. The Fenian brotherhood deny that Farrell was ever a member of that body; while many persons acquainted with the antecedents of the informer say they would not hang a dog on his testimony, and that he would any day sell himself for a glass of whisky. The crown counsel, however, seem to be in earnest, and their confidence would lead to the supposition that they have strong evidence, circumstantial if not positive, to corroborate the infamous story.

A Dublin dispatch says: Although a wide belief exists that the authorities will now be able to bring the Phoenix park assassins to justice, the real fact is that Farrel's assertion that the members were unknown to each other and therefore not to be identified, is only too well founded. The Times says:

It is evident that Saturday's proceedings in Dublin unveiled a conspiracy to murder executive officials. Although the secrets of the prosecution have thus far been kept with praiseworthy discretion, it is not believed that counsel for the crown has begun with the strongest part of the case. The inquiry will probably be protracted several weeks.

Smalley's London Cable: The chief topic of the week relates to the reconstruction of Egypt and the publication of French official views on the English policy. Mr. Gladstone is struggling to avoid a protectorate. The French persist in questioning the disinterestedness of the English. The Tories are dissatisfied with Mr. Gladstone's policy, and believe it will be impossible to avoid a protectorate. They blame the government for not openly avowing that circumstances may compel England to remain in Egypt.

Princess Louise, the marquis of Lorne and party arrived at Charleston, S. C., on Friday. The depot was crowded with people. The princess and marquis bowed to the consul and vice consul, and walked rapidly to the waiting-room. Carriages were taken, and the party went immediately to the Charleston hotel, where a suite of eight rooms was in readiness. The princess is expected to board the Dido on the 27th and sail for Bermuda.

According to the usually well informed correspondent of the Revue Britannique at Constantinople, the leader of the recent insurrection in Egypt was a prominent member of a Masonic association, and that his Masonic affiliations account for much that was obscure in the conduct of the Egyptian commander, as for example, the abrupt cessation of resistance after the fight at Tel el-Kebir, and the consequent collapse of a rebellion which might have been considerably prolonged.

It is authoritatively stated that the Prince of Wales and suite will visit Canada the first week in March, remaining till after the meeting of the science association, visiting prominent cities of the United States. As soon as the Princess Louise leaves Charleston for Bermuda the governor-general will go to Washington a guest of the president, and will subsequently spend several weeks in New York, returning to Ottawa Feb. 6.

The Skene heirs of England have instituted legal proceeding to recover possession of 50,000 acres of land in New York, including the townsite of Whitehall, all valued at $300,000,000. Eminent counsel have been engaged and a celebrated case is being prepared for record.

The Quebec legislature opened Wednesday. In the speeches from the throne the lieutenant governor referred to the happy termination of the Egyptian campaign, and announced that the government will give special attention to colonization and primary schools.

The pamphlet attacking ex-Empress Eugenie of France, confiscated by the Berlin police, is immoral. It purports to be a recital of incidents in the private life of the ex-empress.

Major McMicken, City Clerk Brown and Alderman Wilson of Winnipeg are to deliver in New York $4,250,000 city debentures, purchased by English capitalists.

Arabi Pasha's wife did not accompany him to Ceylon, but is living in Paris.

A CALIFORNIA CALAMITY.

A Frightful Accident on the Southern Pacific Railroad and Loss of Life.

On Friday night, 19th inst, a train of cars on the Southern Pacific which left San Francisco in the morning stopped near Tehichipa station, to cut out an extra engine taken at Summer to assist in pulling up the Tehichipa grade. While making the change by some means yet unknown, the train got away and started back down the grade of 120 feet to the mile. The train consisted of two engines, express, mail and baggage cars, two sleepers, one coach and smoker. It went down the grade at frightful speed for about four miles, when the hindmost sleeper jumped the track and went over an embankment about 150 feet high, carrying with it the other sleeper, mail, baggage and express cars, which were piled in a shattered heap, which took fire and was consumed. The coach and smoker kept on the down grade and were stopped without leaving the track about two miles further on. All on board were uninjured. The scene following the wreck was terrible, and a number of persons were jammed amid the ruins of the train and roasted to death before the eyes of those helpless to save them. Twelve to fifteen persons were killed or burned to death. Many are missing, supposed, to have been buried in the wreck.

Search for dead soon showed that twenty-one persons had perished. Eleven were beyond all recognition, only headless bodies and charred limbs being found. Of the body of Mrs. Downey only the head and bust remained, being recognized by the jewelry. All the bodies and fragments were gathered up and coffined. The wounded were removed to the baggage car, and on the arrival of the relief train from Los Angeles were sent to that city. The dead colored Porter Wright, was crushed, Express Messenger Charles Pierson had his head shattered; five were burnt but recognizable, viz: Miss Mamie E. Squires, Mrs. H. H. Oliver, Mrs. Downey, Mr. Wethered and Mrs. James Cashell. Two men unknown, but supposed to be discharged soldiers, were found dead, but not burned. One body of a large man, badly charred, is supposed to be the body of Col. Larrabee, ex-congressman from Wisconsin. Gov. Downey says Larrabee was on the train, and he is missing since the accident. The remaining eleven are still unidentified.

The Duluth lumber exchange at its annual meeting elected the following officers: Pres. T. A. Barber; vice president, George Green; secretary, A. C. Arveson; treasurer, H. M. Peyton; executive committee, George Green, D. G. Cutler, J. W. Norton, D. A. Duncan and E. C. Bradley.

One million dollars worth of salmon has been shipped from British Columbia to England as the first of the season's catch.

THE CONGRESS.

Wednesday, January 17.

SENATE.—The only important measure introduced in the senate was Mr. Edmunds' bill for a railway commission. He proposes to have seven commissioners, three of them to be experts appointed by the president, who shall consider all question of rates, etc., bearing upon inter-state commerce, and report to congress on the first Monday in December.

Senator McDill introduced a bill providing for the distribution of public documents. He proposed to have them placed in charge of the secretary of the interior, to be sold at cost to persons desiring them. The postoffice appropriation bill was discussed at considerable length, and then work was resumed on the tariff bill.

HOUSE.—Charles L. Doxeymas and J. T. Caine were sworn in, the former as the late Mr. Orth's successor from the Ninth district of Indiana and the latter as delegate from Utah. The only other business done was the discussion and adoption of a joint resolution favoring the appointment of a new commission on Venezuelan claims to pass upon the action of the former commission.

Thursday, January 18.

SENATE.—After a long discussion, the amendment to the postoffice appropriation bill appropriating $185,000 for fast mail service on trunk lines, was agreed to. The tariff bill was discussed until adjournment.

HOUSE—The day was devoted to uninteresting routine work and the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Friday, January 19.

SENATE.—Mr. Harrison from the committee on territories, reported a bill authorizing the county to Yankton, Dak., to issue bonds. He said the majority of the committee were satisfied of the desire on the part of the people of that country to have such legislation as will enable them to refund their debt and get rid of the tint of repudiation. He would ask the senate to consider the bill at an early day.

Mr. Garland gave notice that three members of the committee disapproved the bill and would oppose its passage most strenuously.

Mr. Hale presented Frye's credentials of re-election.

After a debate on the postage reduction clause of the postoffice bill, the tariff bill came up and consumed the remainder of the day.

The discussion finally developed into a debate upon the labor question.

HOUSE—Mr. Moore introduced a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment enabling congress to prevent repudiation in any State.

The day was mostly devoted to the private calender

Saturday, January 20.

SENATE.—The senate finally disposed of the postoffice appropriation bill, making only two changes in the amounts appropriated by the house

There were $25,000 added for steamboat service, and $75,000 for postoffice clerk hire throughout the country—a total increase of $100,000, in which the concurrence of the house will be asked.

The 2-cent letter postage clause was adopted, to go into effect July 1, next. This is six months earlier than provided in the house bill.

The two houses will no doubt come together upon the time when the reduction shall go into effect, so that the country is practically assured of cheap letter postage at no distant day.

In the course of the debate, Messrs. Edmunds and Sherman came out squarely in favor of a postal telegraph system under the control of the government.

The tariff bill was considered until adjournment.

The following nominations were sent to the senate:

Calvin G. Shaw, postmaster at Vermillion, Dak.

Thomas Dawson, of Colorado, United States consul at Barranquilla; George D. Perkins, of Iowa, United States marshal for the northern district of Iowa; M. D. Connell, of Iowa, United States attorney of the northern district of Iowa; John B. Hoyt, associate justice of Washington Territory Samuel McCook, postmaster of Keokuk, Iowa.

HOUSE—Nearly the entire day was devoted to the naval appropriation bill, and several members criticised the weak and defenceless condition of the navy.

Mr. Knott made an extremely humorous speech, ridiculing naval officers, whom he declared possessed of too much rank and dignity to be of any use. He said: If some indiscreet secretary of the navy should order a chief engineer, a pay director, or a medical inspector for duty on a ship, the vessel would inevitably sink. There was not a craft afloat that could sustain so much official dignity. He gave notice of amendments he would offer looking toward the duties of the marine corps officers being performed by line officers, toward the gradual abolishment of the pay corps, and reduction of the engineer's corps. He opposed various propositions of the bill.

Monday, January 22.

SENATE.—Mr. Plumb from the public lands committee reported a bill to prevent the unlawful occupation of public lands.

The tariff bill was debated and the question of the preservation of our forests was quite thoroughly canvassed.

An amendment was adopted putting sawed lumber, lath, shingles and other articles on the free list.

Senator McMillan very strenuously opposed the proposition which passed in the senate, putting lumber on the free list in the tariff bill.

Everybody in Washington who represents the interests of the lumbermen is very much aroused over this action, and will use every effort to prevent the final passage of the provision.

None of the senators from Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Michigan, Minnesota or Wisconsin could vote for a bill containing such a proposition.

As it stands, the measure has received a very decided black eye, and is very sick from the result of the day's punishment.

HOUSE—A joint resolution passed appropriating $200,000 for continuing the work of the census bureau.

The naval appropriation bill then came up, but the house adjourned before completing the first paragraph.

Jay Gould's Coal Enterprise in Iowa.

It is stated that Jay Gould's great new coal and mining enterprise in Iowa has assumed the shape of a company with a capital of $1,000,000 nearly all paid up, with some 9,000 acres of coal lands as the original plant. The incorporators are Gould, Sage, Hopkins, Humphrey, Runnells, J. S. Clarkson, J. S. Polk and F. M. Hubbell. The land has been purchased very quietly during the past two years, and lies in two patches in Marion county. The workmen of the mines say that orders have been issued to crowd work so as to insure an output of at least 100 car loads a day by next September. The coal operations explain the building of several hundred miles of railroad by Gould northwest of Des Moines, and it is said now that the roads are to be pushed this year into Minnesota and Dakota. This big coal deal is not publicly known yet.

Postal Changes Northwest.

The following changes were issued from the postoffice department: Postoffices established: Cascade, Minn., special from Stanton; Dower Lake, Todd county, Minn. Postoffices discontinued: Lafontaine, Polk county, Minn., mail to Red Lake Falls; Rock Lane, Lyon county, Minn., mail to Leo. Postmasters commissioned: David W McDonald, Moorhead, Iowa; Adelaide J. Brown, Neptune, Iowa; Christopher E. Ireland, Quorn, Iowa; E. H. Kimball, Andubon, Iowa; William A. Hunter, Belle Plaine, Iowa; L. C. Teed, Creston, Iowa; B. H. Harkness, Humboldt, Iowa; John S. Pittman, Ogden, Iowa; William Jones, Mahtowa, Minn.; Fred H. Dale, Maple Bay, Minn.; Ole Dahlen, Twin Valley, Minn.; Arthur I. Drake, Cascade, Minn.; Lewis D. French, Dover Lake, Minn.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Tuesday, January 16.

Resolutions were adopted for a special committee of seven to investigate alleged bribery in senatorial contest, introduced by Senator Doran, and for joint committee of seven to investigate into alleged illegal exemption from tax of landsgranted railways, and sold by them.

Senator Wheat's bill to reduce contract rate of interest from 10 to 8 per cent., was definitely postponed, and Senator Castle's, to reduce rate of interest on sales of lands, recommended for passage by committee of the whole.

House, Tuesday, January 16.

The judiciary committee reported back the usury bid of Mr. Rahilly, with recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, but it was ordered printed and sent to committee of the whole. The members' mileage was reported.

J. E. Child offered a resolution of censure for Mr. Dunnell for being absent from his post of duty, which was indefinitely postponed and expunged from the record. Bills were introduced to regulate the carrying of passengers on railroads, amending the game law and regulating the carrying of freight on railroads.

The concurrent resolution offered by Judge Wilson, and adopted by the house, after stating the granting of lands to several railway companies and that certain of said lands have been exempted from taxation until sold, goes on to say that it is the duty of the railway company to report such sale that the same may be taxed, and that it is believed that some of such railroad companies have made such sales and not reported them, and hundreds of thousands of acres are exempt which should be taxed, being the property of private persons.

A committee of three from the senate and four from the house is called for to investigate this matter and report as soon as practicable, stating the lands which are held exempt and should be taxed.

Senate, Wednesday, January 17.

Bills affecting the school district of Stillwater were passed; Senator Craig introduced a bill amending the statutes relating to compensation of county auditors; Senator Clark, one allowing villages to regulate liquor licenses.

The bill relating to the reduction of tax on sales of public lands was re-referred to the committee of the whole. On Senator William's bill forbidding loans or donations to corporations, committee reported progress.

House, Wednesday, January 17.

Mr. Child made another effort to get the resolutions of censure of Mr. Dunnell on the records, and succeeded. A motion to send Mr. Rahilly's railroad bill to a special committee went over under notice of debate. Judge Brown introduced a resolution for investigation of charges of bribery in the senatorial contest.

Bills were introduced to regulate the handling of grain: repealing general laws relating to judgments of United States courts; adding election days to the legal holidays; nine bills amending the insurance law; giving chambers of commerce power to sell memberships to pay assessments; amending statutes relating to the sale of mortgaged property; reducing the rate of interest from 10 to 8 per cent.; for a township drainage act, providing for the drainage and reclaiming of land when adjoining land is to be entered; authorizing Crow Wing county to issue bonds for a bridge; appropriating $5,000 to Stearns county for expenses in the suppression of small pox.

Senate, Thursday, January 18.

Speaker Gilman announced the committee to investigate bribery according to Senator Doran's resolution.

A bill authorizing Todd county to borrow $25,000 for the erection of a court house, was passed; also one annexing unorganized territory to Marshall county.

An appropriation of $80,000 from internal improvement fund to pay legislative expenses, was authorized.

House, Thursday, January 18.

Bills were introduced: Amending the act in aid of the Cannen Falls Improvement company; amending Sec. 216, Chap. 66, statutes of 1878, relating to trials by jury; exempting the property of the Philharmonic society in Winona from taxation, and upon sundry other local topics.

The house very emphatically sat down on a proposition made by Mr. Rahilly in the form of a resolution to supercede the railroad committee in the performance of its commonly accepted functions.

Mr. Rahilly is the author of a bill to regulate the carrying of freights and passengers; four other gentleman have proposed similar bills in the house and in the usual course they have gone to the railroad committee.

Mr. Rahilly proposed a reference of his bill to a special committee of fifteen members of the house, all of whom are pretty well known to be in favor of so-called granger resolution. Speaker Fletcher, in constituting the committee on railroads, selected Messrs. Sabin, Cole, Collins, Boardman, Smith, James, Jr., Nelson, Johnson M., Anderson H., Sadley, Dyar, Spaulding, Moore, Potter, Buck, Child E. A. and Emery, believed to represent all sides of the question.

The house evidently believed it would be a wrong to this committee and the speaker to supersede them in the performance of their duties, and after expressions of that character at the of Messrs. Childs, J. E. Grimshaw, Cole, Smith, James, Jr., and Boardman, to which Mr. Rahilly replied, the resolution was indefinitely postpond.

Senate, Friday, January 19.

Senator O'Brien introduced a bill allowing Houston county to borrow $30,000 to build a court house, and the bill passed; the committee on agriculture reported favorably on Senator Traux's amendment to the game law; the special committee reported the mileage of members.

In committee of the whole the bill providing for the amendment to the constitution prohibiting aid to railway or private corporations was in order. Senator Wilson moved that the committee report for its passage.

Senator Bilson opposed.

Senator Gilfillan moved to amend by adding a clause prohibiting public credit from being loaned to any individual or individuals.

Before action could be taken, the hour for special order having arrived, and on motion of Senator Doran the committee rose and reported progress on the bill.

Upon reassembling it was ascertained that the house had adjourned until to-day only, and the senate took like action.

House, Friday, January 19.

James Smith, Jr., presented a petition in the house from L. K. Stannard, J. P. Owens, and others, praying for money due them by the state as land officers in the Taylors Falls land district. The memorial sets forth that congress in 1861 passed an act by which a fee of $1 was allowed to registers and receivers for the entry of each 160 acres of land, except agricultural lands, and that during the session of 1866, the legislature of the state passed an act by which this act was applied to state lands, and that notwithstanding this the attorney general has decided that fees for entries of swamp lands were not embraced in the provision of the acts in question. The memorial then sets forth that believing the decision of the attorney general in this matter was an error, and that the officers in question have a just claim against the state, ask that an appropriation be made by the legislature, at this time, to pay such officers such fees—the sum of $5,326.65.

Bills were introduced amending the act relating to commitments to the Reform school; to fix the charges and control the transportation of freights on railroads in this state; amending statutes relating to the recording of certificates of real estate; to provide for the organization of the National guard, amending statutes relating to the conveyance of land and on sundry local subjects. The bill appropriating $80,000 for legislative expenses was passed. The house concurred in the resolution for an investigation into the status of the railroad land grants, and for the investigation of the charges of bribery and corruption in the senatorial matter.

Senate, Saturday, January 20.

Bills approiating $500 for a bridge in Otter Tail and $1,500 for another in Swift were introduced; also one amending the act allowing St. Paul to purchse the franchise of the St. Paul Water company. The latter was passed under suspension of the rules.

House, Saturday, January 20.

Bills were introduced to amend an act relating to the Ramsey county alms house; a memorial for a lock and dam at the foot of Big Stone lake; renewing the privileges and grant of the Anoka & Princeton railway; to amend the act in relation to the foreclosure of mortgages; for the preservation of life and the protection of travelers.

The speaker appointed Representative Cole Collins, Merriam and Brown committee on the part of the house, to investigate the status of the general land grants.

Messrs. Boardman, Carson Child, J. E. Johnson, M., Bobleter, Wells, Cullen and Demeules were appointed a committee to investigate the charges of bribery.

Senate, Monday, January 22.

A bill allowing St. Paul to borrow $500,000 for enlarging and improving the water works was passed; C. D. Gilfillan introduced a bill to punish negligent railway employes, officers or agents.

The remainder of the session was taken up in discussing the bill for the repeal of the law licensing dogs, which was reported favorable for passage, and of the constitutional amendment and bill to prevent giving of aid to railway or other corporations.

House, Monday, January 22.

Bills were introduced abolishing poll tax; relating to discharge of attachments on real estate; amending the incorporation of Mount Zion Hebrew association; prescribing the manner of drawing juries; prescribing a penalty for disclosing the contents of a telegram.

Bills were passed, prescribing the punishment for setting fire to prairies and woods, and several special acts. The Rahilly usury bill was discussed in committee of the whole.

MINNESOTA SENATORSHIP.

No Choice on the Separate Ballotings of the Two Houses.

On Wednesday, Jan., 17, the two houses of the Minnesota legislature balloted separately for the United States senator.

In the senate, after various names had been placed in nomination, the senators proceeded to vote as follows:

For William Windom:

Ackerman, Billson, Chandler, Compton, Comstock, Fletcher, Gilfillan, C. D., Gilfillan, J. B., Goodrich, Greenleaf, Johnson, Langdon, Lawrence, McLaughlin, Pillsbury, Rice, Sergeant, Shaleen, Steenerson, Truax, Waite, Washburn, Wheat. Total, 23.

For Thomas Wilson (Democrat):

Castle, Christiansen, Craig, Doran, Griggs, Peck, Sackett, Vollmer, Welch—Total, 9.

For Gordon E. Cole:

Blake, Clark, Clement, Knudson, Van Hoesen Total, 5.

For Mark H. Dunnell:

Crosby, Hickman, Hollister, Ward—Total, 4

For Cushman K. Davis:

O'Brien—Total, 1.

For Charles F. Kindred:

Buckman—Total, 1.

For Lucius F. Hubbard:

Peterson—Total, 1.

For Charles M. Start:

Morrison—Total, 1.

For J. N. Castle:

Wilson—Total, 1.

For C. D. Gilfillan:

Hualton—Total, 1. Grand total, 47.

The secretary then counted the votes and the president announced the result as follows: Windom, 23; Cole, 5; Hubbard, 1; Kindred, 1; Wilson, (dem.,) 9; Dunnell, 4; Davis, 1; Start, 1; Castle, 1; Gilfillan, C. D., 1. Total, 47.

In the house the vote resulted as follows:

For William Windom:

Anderson, H., Anderson, W., Baker, Barker, Batchelder, Been, Boardman, Boblefer, Bohland, Burmeister, Capser, Child, J. E., Collins, Cornish, *Daniels, Demeules, Dyar, Emery, Ende, Gotzian, Gray, Groetsch, Halgren, Hicks, *Holmstrom, Johnson, M., Lydiard, Merriam, Miller, Nelson, Paulson, H., Peterson, John, Peterson, J. A., Peterson, Ole, Plummer, Porter, Sidener, Smith, J., Snow, Spaulding, Strong, Swenson, Thayer, Thompson, Torgerson, Turrell, Fletcher—47.

For Thomas Wilson—

Baumgarten, Becker, Brown, Buck, Childs E. A., Chisholm, Cook, Dilley, Doyle, Farrar, Frank, Gregory, Hill, Jacklin, Lenz, McNamara, Mortensen, Patterson, Rahilly, Randall, Richardson, Smith Jas., Jr., Stahlman, Stigeman, White. —25.

For Mark H. Dunnell—

Carson, Finch, Greer, Potter, Frohm, Simpson—6.

For Gordon E. Cole—

Morris, Morse, Seymour, May, Wells, —5

For Charles F. Kindred—

Hartley, Moore, Parker, Sadley—4

For D. A. Dickinson—

Blackman, Crawford, Johnson, W. H.—3

For C. K. Davis—

Grimshaw, McKusick—2.

For Thomas S. Armstrong—

Bell, Peterson, O.—2.

For L. F. Hubbard—

Holebak, Paulson, T.—2.

For John M. Berry—

Gordon E. Cole—1.

For Charles A. Gilman—

Van Dyke—1.

Grand total, 78.

Not voting—Baarnaas, Borck, Cullen (paired with Sabin), Linnell, Sabin (paired with Cullen)—5.

IN JOINT CONVENTION.

There being no choice in the two bodies voting separately, on Wednesday two ballots were taken in joint convention with the following result:

Name.	First Ballot.	Second Ballot.
WINDOM	65	61
WILSON	37	34
COLE	11	12
DUNNELL	9	9
DAVIS	4	3
KINDRED	5	5
HUBBARD	3	8
START	2	4
DICKINSON	3	3
STRAIT	2	2
GILMAN	1	1
BERRY	1	1
ARMSTRONG	1	1
CASTLE	1	1
GILPILLAN	1	1
FARMER	1	1
Totals	147	147

Those who voted for Mr. Windom on the first Tuesday and did not do so Wednesday, are, as follows:

Senator Ackerman—For H. B. Strait.

Senator Sergeant—For J. Q. Farmer.

Representative H. Anderson—For H. B. Strait.

Representative Capser—For Thomas Wilson.

Representative Emery—For Thomas Wilson.

On the second ballot Johnson deserted the Windom rank, and Daniels, T. Paulson and Dyar followed. Frank deserted Wilson and went over to Cole, and Dyar left the Wilson ranks and went over to Start.

The vote for Mr. Windom on the first roll call, was sixty-five out of a total of 148 votes cast, being a falling off of five from his vote of the previous day. The discouraging effect of this showing was manifested in the second calling of the roll, when his vote fell to 61, a loss of nine from his Tuesday count.

On Thursday, 18th, three ballots were had without choice, or very material alteration, Windom losing slightly. The ballots stood as follows:

Name.	First Ballot.	Second Ballot.	Third Ballot.
WINDOM	58	57	55
WILSON	35	34	34
COLE	14	14	16
DUNNELL	11	10	11
HUBBARD	8	11	9
KINDRED	5	5	5
START	4	4	4
DAVIS	3	4	4
FARMER	2	2	2
STRAIT	2	1	1
GILMAN	1	1	1
CASTLE	1	1	1
ARMSTRONG	1	1	1
BERRY	1	1	1
WAKEFIELD	..	..	1
Totals	146	146	146

The roll call showed Senator Washburn and Representatives Baarnaas, Baker, Cullen and Sabin absent, leaving only 145, but Baarnaas made his first appearance after the balloting had commenced, and by permission his vote was recorded as for William Windom. Senator Ackerman voted for Strait at first, but went to Cole on the 2d and 3d. On the first and all ballots Senator Houlton went over to Windom. Senator Johnson voted for Hubbard, and Sergeant for Farmer, while Morrison remained true to Judge Start. On the second ballot Senator Lawrence voted for Hubbard, as also on the third. This leaves Mr. Windom's status in the senate exactly as it was at the close of Wednesday's balloting. He gained Houlton and lost Lawrence, but Washburn, who is sick, is a Windom man. In the house he gained Morris for one ballot, and Baker is for him, but was absent. He lost Bell, Corbisn and John Peterson.

On Friday 19th, there were four more fruitless ballots for senator, as follows:

Name.	First ballot.	Second ballot.	Third ballot.	Fourth ballot.
WINDOM	53	51	51	50
WILSON	35	34	32	33
COLE	14	15	17	15
DUNNELL	11	11	11	11
HUBBARD	9	10	9	9
KINDRED	6	6	6	6
START	4	4	4	4
DAVIS	3	3	3	3
FARMER	3	3	4	6
ARMSTRONG	1	1	1	1
BERRY	1	1	1	1
GILMAN	1	1	1	1
CASTLE	1	1	1	1
STRAIT	1	1	1	1
WAKEFIELD	1	1	1	1
S. G. COMSTOCK	..	1	..	..
Totals	144	144	143	143

Windom lost on the first ballot from the last ballot Thursday, Senator Billson who voted for C. F. Kindred, and Senator McLaughlin, who voted for G. E. Cole.

The changes in the 2d ballot were Groetsch, Windom to Hubbard. Mortenson, Wilson to Cole. Torgerson, Windom to S. G. Comstock.

In the third ballot the changes were Baarnaas, Windom to Farmer; Emery excused from attendance; McNamara, Hubbard to Cole; Torgerson, Comstock to Windom; White, Windom to Cole.

On the fourth ballot the changes were Dilley, Wilson to Farmer; Mortenson, Cole to Wilson; Thayer, Windom to Farmer, and White, Cole to Wilson.

On Saturday, 20th, there were two ballots in the legislature for senator, both resulting as follows:

WINDOM	48	ARMSTRONG	1
WILSON	32	BERRY	1
COLE	17	GILMAN	1
DUNNELL	10	CASTLE	1
HUBBARD	9	WAKEFIELD	1
KINDRED	5	STRAIT	1
START	4
DAVIS	4	Total	139
FARMER	4

This ballot showed a loss to Windom of 22 votes since the contest began, when he had 70. His vote on the last of Friday's ballots was fifty. Saturday Gotzian and Merriam voted for Cole, Baarnaas voted for Farmer, and Comstock was paired with Doran. Baker was present, and Thayer voted for Windom. Billson, left Kindred and went to Davis, and Sampson voted for Hubbard, vice Dunnell. A second ballot resulted precisely as did the first, Representatives Boardman and Spaulding rescinding their votes for Windom after the roll had been called.

On Monday Jan. 22, there was only one ballot resulting as follows:

WINDOM	44	START	4
WILSON	26	STRAIT	1
COLE	16	ARMSTRONG	1
DUNNELL	10	BERRY	1
HUBBARD	9	CASTLE	1
KINDRED	5	GILMAN	1
DAVIS	3
WAKEFIELD	2	Total	128
FARMER	4

Necessary to a choice, 65.

The only defection from Windom was Senator Goodrich, who voted for J. B. Wakefield. Senator McLaughlin came back to Windom from Cole, so that set everything even. The light vote was on account of absentees who were paired with each other. Mr. Windom arrived at St. Paul in the evening and had earnest conversation with his friends.

Minnesota Horticultural Society.

At the annual meeting held at Minneapolis last week, the society proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year, and the following were elected:

President—J. S. Harris, La Crescent.

Vice presidents, A. W. Sias, F. G. Gould, Oscar Roost, G. W. Fuller, E. H. S. Dart.

Secretary—Oliver Gibbs, Lake City.

Treasurer—J. T. Grimes, Minneapolis.

Executive Committee—J. M. Underwood, Lake City; M. Pierce, Minneapolis; W. E. Brimhall, St. Paul; O. F. Brand, Faribault; F. G. Gould, Excelsior.

Representatives to Mississippi Valley Horticultural Society—J. T. Grimes.

Delegates to Wisconsin State Horticultural Society—Oliver Gibbs, Jr., J. S. Harris.

Delegate to Iowa Association—E. H. S. Dart.

Entomologist—R. J. Mendenhall.

Committee on Seedling Apples—Prof. Porter, Minneapolis; G. W. Fuller, Litchfield; S. M. Emery, Lake City; A. W. Lias, Rochester; H. D. Eldridge, Excelsior.

The president was then instructed to appoint all the other committees, but as he was absent the committees were not appointed.

James Morgan, of the saloon firm of Douf & Morgan, of Northfield, dropped dead Friday while adjusting his necktie at his residence. At an examination made by physicians they reported heart disease the cause of his death. He leaves a wife and two small children. His remains were taken to Caledonia.

The principals of the high schools of the state are being reminded by the state superintendent that a report of the schools each term and a copy of the course of study are required. Most of the schools are behind time with these reports.

Monday morning fire was discovered in the Northern Pacific hospital, at Brainerd, and in half an hour the building was a mass of flames, and was soon burned to the ground. Sixteen of the thirty six inmates were helpless, but all were taken out safely. Two, however, are in a dying condition. The seriousness of the situation was increased by the extreme cold, the mercury being 40 deg. below zero. The fire originated in a defective chimney, and first appeared in the kitchen. The building was formerly the old colony reception house here.

A writer who signs himself "Content," writes: "Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla has cured me of great weakness, disturbing dreams, etc. I am now in perfect health and am never troubled in my sleep, therefore am I content."

A dispatch says: There is much excitement over the news that application has been made by Catholics in high standing at Moorehead, to the bishop for the removal of the Catholic priest stationed there on account of his illicit connection with a lady formerly his housekeeper, but last September married to a respected practicing physician of Moorehead, also a member of the Catholic church. The woman was a few days ago delivered of a stillborn child, which the before mentioned M. D. claims is his, but which rumor says belongs to the priest; at any rate the outcome of it is that the Catholics will not attend church.

The young Swede who was thrown from a car last summer, near Dodge Center, died in that village, from the effects of his injuries, last Wednesday, death coming as a welcome relief after his long months of suffering.

COUNTY NEWS.

Carman Carrings.

From the Courier.

Mr. D. L. Kelley has disposed of his entire outfit of drilling tools to parties at Red Lake Falls.

The social held last Friday evening was well attended notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, being thoroughly enjoyed by those present. One will be held in two weeks again.

An estimate of the productiveness of the Red River Valley for raising cereals can be formed when it is stated that during the present season the Grandin Brothers have shipped from their farm in Dakota 120,000 bushels of wheat alone, most of it grading No. 1 hard.

Rather a singular freak of fire happened this week in the blacksmith shop of Messrs. Emoond & Veaux. The fire, supposed to have originated by a spark from the forge, burned a hole in the building nearly five feet in circumference and then went out of its own accord. Should the fire have continued longer, nothing could have saved the building as a strong gale was blowing from the southeast. Besides the loss of the shop the hotel and stables of Mr. Geo. Beauvaise would have been endangered by the consuming elements.

A man from Crookston was over to Crookston on Sunday and got so full of "Jersey lightning" that he couldn't tell a horse car from a steamboat. He attempted to cross the railroad bridge on his way home and on doing so fell through between the timbers—that is, all but his feet, they were too large to pass between the ties. He was rescued from his perilous predicament by the man who oversees the bridge before any loss was sustained by the road.

Rev. F. K. Roberts preached a very eloquent sermon last Sunday, which was well appreciated by those present. At its close he made a short review of the progress of the society in this vicinity since its organization on the 8th of January, 1880. They commenced with only sixteen members in Crookston and fourteen in Carman. One month later a Sunday school was started at the former place and in January, 1882, one was organized here. In the year 1881 aid was secured and a brick block erected at a cost of $5,000, which was occupied the first Sunday in January. Some time in November last steps were taken for the erection of the present chapel in Crookston, which was permanently occupied for the first time last Sabbath. This building cost about $1,000. He made a report of the financial condition of the two societies and shows that part to be in a good healthy state. The sum paid in for the various expenditures are as follows: For building purposes, $3,109; for lot $450; for furniture, $200; for Sunday school, $140; for maintenance of pastor, $,200; missions, $35; incidentals, $175. From a membership of fourteen in 1880 the list has increased until at present they number some fifty souls. Surely the Baptist society have just cause to feel proud of their rapid advancement in endeavoring to spread the gospel to all mankind.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

McKnight is sawing lumber, but logs are not coming in as rapidly as usual.

Sam Harlow, of the Windsor, starts for Memphis and New Orleans next week.

C. B. Rockwood, Esq., who has been in Indiana for some time is to return on Monday next.

The Dow property, near the Windsor, was sold to Lou Freeman, for the remarkably low price of $650.

Dick Hussey is in town, all the pious mothers fasten up their sons, they don't want them to hear Dick talk.

Frank Dorn, our "boss" carpenter is about to start for Wisconsin, on a visit to his old home and friends, he will return in a few weeks.

A most needed change has recently been made in the mail facilities of our railroad. A mail clerk, with postal car, now assorts all mail between Crookston and Larmore.

Uncle Nat Dickenson says he has the best place for a Poor Farm in the county, and if the county commissioners will come down handsomely he will sell it for that purpose. He is right; there could be no better point in the county for that purpose, there is all that is needed for such an institution. Plenty of timber, water and prairie, and the best of land.

Commissioners Bradish and Higdem in company with bridge constructor Nolan, visited Fisher on Wednesday for the purpose of inspecting our bridge across the Red Lake River. After a very careful survey of both banks for some distance, they come to the conclusion that the cheapest and best way, was to let the bridge stay in its present position. They determined to recommend the building of a stone pier for the east side of the bridge and to cut away the bank on the same side so as to prevent the pressure of the land-slide thereon, this could be done at a cost of about $1,000, where as the moving of the structure without approaches, would amount to at least $3,000 and even then, there would be the same liability to land-slips as at present exist. It is the opinion of all competent Judges, that the proposed alteration will make the bridge firm for all time. We certainly think that this is the wisest and best way out of the difficulty and is in conformity with the almost unanimous wishes of the town.

D. K. Smith, Superintendent of the Manitoba railroad, has shown the qualities for which he has the reputation during the severe storm of the week. Quick, ready, and competent every part, place and condition requiring attention, had his immediate attention at the first lull in the storm. Within an hour after the storm every train and every man were under way, and all obstructions removed. Discipline is the lever boys.

A few mornings ago a beautiful mirage was visible on the horizon to the north of us giving a plain view of our neighboring towns Fanny, Euclid and Warren. The latter being about twenty-eight miles distant. Tally one for the pure and clear atmosphere of Polk County.

St Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Mr. Harris, an experienced hotel keeper from Larimore, has leased the St. Hilaire hotel, which he has opened for business. Another man preparing for the boom.

Some pretty rapid traveling was made by Mr. S. W. Ritchie last week; he having been but fifteen hours on the road between Winnipeg Manitoba, and this place. He would be a good man to send "around the world in eighty days".

Mr. S. W. Ritchie advertises for 25 men to work on improving his water power at the junction of the Thief and Red Lake River, a short distance north of this town. Mr. R. informs us that he intends to commence at once, the erection of a large saw mill at this point, which when finished will knock the spots off anything in the Valley. Who says St. Hilaire is not the "coming city".

C. T. Palmer, county attorney of Rice Co., and brother of G. H. Palmer of this place, has been devoting considerable attention to lotteries lately, and so far as heard from has been very successful. The first one in which he tried his hand, was the lottery of love, and drew a partner for life, the first pop. He then bought the winning number on a team of horses, and sold them for a good price. Hib says he is glad there is one lucky member in the family.

Chas. Robbecke, the gentleman who is putting up the large bakery and restaurant here, was in town on Monday last, hiring carpenters to work on his building. He intends bringing up several carpenters from Crookston and has rented the Railson & Williams building where he will, for the present open up a boarding house for his workmen and as many others as may desire to patronize him. Mr. M. Williams has joined him in this last venture until his partner returns when they will open up their large general store. The building for the bakery and restaurant is to be rushed right through and will be in running order by the first of March.

We are pleased to note that the people who are putting up structures are building more with reference to the future than the present. They well know that within six months the building which now would be large enough will be insufficient for a town of a thousand inhabitants, and are governing themselves accordingly. These are the wise men who know they are building their houses upon the rock of future greatness, which will stand firm when other towns who have laid their foundation on the sands of page advertisements, will be washed away by the waves of common sense which arise on the sea of progress.

East Grand Forks.

From the Courier.

Travel is once more on the increase, and the promise for the coming spring rush is greater than ever.

The sand is now being hauled for the school house and its erection will be commenced immediately.

Jas. Sanders, the wounded man at the Lewis House, continues to rapidly improve under the skillful treatment of Dr. Duggan.

The King Farm, situated about three miles north on the Marea, and one of the finest farms near this place, sold for $4500 to Mr. Woodward, of Grand Forks.

The Misses Ryan one a school teacher in district No 3, Polk County, and the other the owner of a fine claim near Larimore, were the guests of Mrs. Masterson last Monday.

The petition to have the name of our postoffice changed from Nashville to East Grand Forks was sent in with the signatures of about eighty of our citizens.

There is great activity in the wood market about here. All week teams have been kept very busy hauling wood from up the Red and found a ready sale for it at $6 per cord.

Last Tuesday was by far the most beautiful day we have had this winter. The thermometer remained at zero all day and was just cold enough to make a fellow feel too frisky for anything.

The posoffice was removed yesterday to the hardware store of J. W. Howes, who is postmaster, and W. C. McCray will act as deputy. It is the intention of Mr. Howes to repair the boxes and he will also run a stock of stationery in connection.

Wheat is beginning to move in quite a lively manner, and our farmers are making good use of the splendid roads about here to bring the cereal to market. This will make our merchants feel happier, as they will begin to get in their outstanding accounts, and it now looks as though spring would open up with splendid prospects, the price of wheat to the contrary notwithstanding.

M. Gulliksen commenced work on his building on Field avenue last Thursday and has been pushing things along until it is now almost completed. It is a large two-story frame and when finished the lower room will be used as a paint shop, while the upper rooms will be used by Mr. Gulliksen for living purposes during the winter. This building, with the exception of one or two lots, makes Field avenue between the railroad and Sibley street one solid business block.

Look out for Seed Wheat.

Within about three months farmers will be required to commence sowing their wheat, and the importance of having good and pure seed should stimulate farmers to look after it at once. He who sows foul seed will reap the same, and while now farmers have nothing of importance to do, they should be selecting and cleaning their seed wheat. Let farmers change seed when the same production has been sown on the same ground for a number of years. Let prairie farmers get wheat grown in the timber and let timber farmers seek their seed wheat from among prairie farmers; but above all look for seed free from cockle, that worst of all pests to wheat raisers. Every farmer should procure a screen of some kind, one that will separate cockle from wheat, and the best one we know of is one manufactured at Rochester, and costs about twenty-five dollars.—[Glencoe Enterprise.

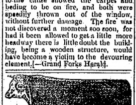
Contents of the February American Agriculturist.

The American Agriculturist for February, 1883, is an improvment upon the splendid number of the previous month. There are five fine full-page groups of engravings by Halm, Forbes, and other leading artists, namely: Indoor and Out; A Poultry Show (14 breeds); Maple Sugar Making; Winter Sports and Pastimes; and Houghton Farm (Experiment Station). Among the other leading engravings are portraits of a prize Devon Steer and Jersey Cow; a Cattle Barn; French Compost House; New Fodder Plant (Vetch); Alpine Strawberry; Pruning, Good and Bad (6cuts); a Monkey-skine; and various Farm, Garden and Household conveniences. Among the leading contributors are Dr. D. D. Slade (Harvard University), Sunlight in Stables; Wm. E. Pabor (Editor "Colorado Farmer"), Farm Lambs in the 'New Colorado"; Col. M. C. Weld, Poultry, and Live Stock articles; C. P. Dewey; Winter Cheer, etc.; Dr. Geo. Thurber, Plants, Fruits, Flowers, etc.; Wm Clieft, Home Supply of Foos; Orange Judd, Good Country Roads Pay, etc.; D. Z. Evans, Jr., Useful Farm articles; E. E. Rexford, Garden Tools; Joseph Harris, About High Farming; Dr. B. D. Halsted, Grafting, Farm Chemistry, etc.; Dr. T. F. wood, Sheep Laurel; P. H. Jacobs, Experiments with Poultry; J. W. Clarke, Poultry House; Prof. W. J. Beal (Michigan Agricultural College), Crossing Apples; Dr. A. Oemler, Hot-Beds and Cold Frames; Agnes Carr, Household articles, etc. Farm Experiments unlock the hidden truths of agriculture, and all tillers of the soil will be interested in the extended and fully illustrated article on Houghton Farm—an Experimental Station that is, in the words of its founder, "Dedicated to the Formers of America." We wonder that so much attractive and valuable matter can be furnished at the price. Yearly subscription, $1.50 Single number, 15 cents. Orange Judd Co., Publishers, New York.

The parlor of the Griggs House last evening was the scene of an important event in the lives of two of our most prominent citizens, being no less than the marriage of Miss Josephine Connell, a valued teacher in the high school, to Dr. H. M. Wheeler. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. W. Iddings, after which an elegant supper was served in the dining room. It was a very cosy wedding with only the school teachers and Rev. and Mrs. Iddings present, who presented the bride a handsome silver pitcher. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed by the teachers, whose circle is now broken and the rest are waiting to take their turn. The Herald wished the Dr. and Mr. Wheeler many years of happiness and prosperity.[—Grand Forks Herald.

Nearly A Blaze

The city came near being visited by another conflagration on Sunday. A traveling man stoping at the Viels House accidentally set the bed-clothes on fire with a lighted cigar that he held in his hand while sitting on the side of the bed. He left the room without discovering that the clothing was on fire, and shortly after the hall was filled with smoke issuing from the room. An investigation as to the cause showed the carpet and beding to be on fire, and both were speedily thrown out of the window, without further damage. The fire was not discovered a moment soo soon, for had it been allowed to get a little more headway there is little doubt the building, being a wooden structure, would have become a victim to the devouring element.[—Grand Forks Herald.



WINTER DE-COTE.

T. L. MILLER CO.,

BREEDERS AND IMPORTERS OF

HEREFORD CATTLE
COTSWOLD SHEEP
BERKSHIRE SWINE.

BEECHER, WILL CO., ILLINOIS.

C. CHURCHILL,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,

Kalsomining and Paper Hanging.

Contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors north of Methodist Church. Mainstreet.

THE PIONEER

HARNESS SHOP,

M. RAUENBUEHLER, Proprietor,

CORNER OAK AND THIRD STS., CROOKSTON MINN.,

Is ready for the Spring Trade with a full supply of Work and Light Harness, Single and Double, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Blankets, etc., etc. Give me a call before you purchase.

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.

PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.

ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA

Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line promptly attended to in the latest styles of the art. Give me a trial. PROF. THOMPSON.

NEW

DRUG STORE

IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh

DRUGS, MEDICINES,
PAINTS, OILS,
and YANKEE NOTIONS

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 50 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave orders at my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn.

DR. A. NELSON.

ESTABLISHED 1846 MUNN & Co PATENTS NEW YORK

We continue to act as solicitors for patents, caveats, trade-marks, copyrights, etc., for the United States, and to obtain patents in Canada, England, France, Germany, and all other countries. Thirty-six years' practice. No charge for examination of models or drawings. Advice by mail free.

Patents obtained through us are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which has the largest circulation, and is the most influential newspaper of its kind published in the world. The advantages of such a notice every patentee understands.

This large and splendidly illustrated newspaper is published WEEKLY at $3.20 a year, and is admitted to be the best paper devoted to science, mechanics, inventions, engineering works, and other departments of industrial progress, published in any country. Single copies by mail, 10 cents. Sold by all newsdealers.

Address, Munn & Co., publishers of Scientific American, 261 Broadway, New York.

Handbook about patents mailed free.

H. F. PLATO & CO.,

(SUCCESSORS TO POWERS BROS.)

131 EAST THIRD STREET, ST. PAUL. 131

Fall and Winter

—OF—

1882.

FINE GOODS AND LOW PRICES.

We are in a position to offer to the trade visiting St. Paul one of the most complete and attractive stocks of

DRY GOODS

Ever shown in this city.

BLACK AND COLORED SILKS IN GREAT VARIETY.

FINE DRESS GOODS, VELVETS, PLUSHES AND TRIMMINGS

Of all kinds and quality. An immense stock of

CLOAKS IN ALL THE NEW STYLES IN CLOTH, PLUSH AND SILK.

☞ Order business a specialty. The same careful attention given to orders as during the past ten years and satisfaction guaranteed. Agents for Butterick's Celebrated Patterns. Catalogues and samples sent to any address upon receipt of stamp.

H. F. PLATO & CO.

Mortgage Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty-three dollars, ($253 00-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Frank Peasley to Samuel H. Ver Plank, bearing date the 23d day of January, A. D. 1880, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 23d day of January A. D. 1880, at one o'clock p. m., in book "B" of Mortgages, on page 203, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-six (26) Township numbered one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range numbered forty-six (46,) containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the government survey thereof and situated in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 2d day of March A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and thirty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated January 15th, A. D. 1883.

SAMUEL H. VER PLANK,
Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorney's for Mortgagee. [33-44]

$250.00

In Gold Given Away.

$2.00 PER YEAR, POSTPAID.

1841. FORTY-SECOND YEAR. 1883.

The Prairie Farmer.

The oldest, most reliable and leading Agricultural Weekly of America.

Advocates the interests of the Farmer, the Breeder and the Dairyman

It aims to educate and elevate, and to give its patrons the latest, best and freshest news pertaining to every line of industry.

The publishers aim to make THE PRAIRIE FARMER the Standard Agricultural Paper of the country. Its columns are devoted to the growing wants of farmers, treating upon all subjects relative to the farm, garden and household. Breeders of live stock will find their interests carefully and fully treated in a spirit of perfect fairness. As a family paper it is designed to place it in the front rank, and keep from its columns all that is objectionable.

The Prairie Farmer offers a novel list of cash prizes for the largest list of words that can be formed from the letters composing the name of "THE PRAIRIE FARMER." Every competitor however, must become a subscriber for one year. For full rules and regulations see The Prairie Farmer. Sample copies sent to any address on the receipt of six cents in postage stamps. Address

PRAIRIE FARMER PUBLISHING CO.
[illegible] [illegible] Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

Assignees Sale!

Consisting of

A large and well selected stock of Dry Goods, Notions, Clothing, Hats and Caps, Furnishing Goods, Boots and Shoes, Crockery and Groceries,

THE STOCK OF

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY.

THESE GOODS

MUST BE SOLD

Regardless of Cost.

First Come First Served.

Chicago Store, Dobson's Block,

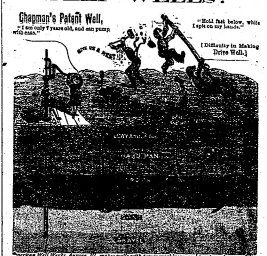
M. R. BROWN,

Assignee.

NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spring stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respeetfully,
C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.
Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!



Chapman's Patent Well,
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
GIVE US A REST!
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
HARD PAN

American Well Works, Aurora, Ill., make wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.

Address R. W. RANNEY,
Carman, Polk County, Minn.

READY, FIRE!

WOOD

Is much better than kerosene and paper--cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to

LEECH & McMANUS,

OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

Wood Office and Yard on Elm Street, east of Planing Mill.

CLOSING OUT SALE.

Our Immense Stock of

CLOTHING,
OVERCOATS,
UNDERWEAR,
CAPS,
Ladies' Cloaks,
Furs,

And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.

HACK & GALLASCHE,
Opposite Merchants' Bank.

LIVERY, FEED,

—AND—

SALE STABLES

Two doors north of U. S. Land Office

Main St., Crokston, Minn.

T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.

Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.

For a stylish rig, by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

—THE—

RED LAKE FALLS

FLOURING

MILL

Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.

BUSE & COLBENTSON,

PROPRIETORS,

RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos

—AND—

Organs

W. W. KIMBALL CO.

Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites. Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. [illegible]

Crookston Nurseries.

Tree-Claim-Stock.

Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $5.00 per acre, also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.

HASELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT.

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all

CALL AND SEE ME

At my New Store on Main Street.

A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. B. KAUFER & SON

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

and are now prepared you furnish everything in their line as cheaply else can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere teed in the New Northwest. Our work is guaranteed as good as any and our prices as reasonable. Call and see! H. KAUFER & SON. Red Lake Falls, Minn

Fournet & Herron,

DEALERS IN

FLOUR,
FEED,
CORN,
OATS,
POTATOES

Robert Street,
Crookston, [illegible]

DEFECTIVE PAGE

COUNTY NEWS.

Carman Carvings.

From the Courier.

Mr. D. L. Kelley has disposed of his entire outfit of drilling tools to parties at Red Lake Falls.

The social held last Friday evening was well attended notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, being thoroughly enjoyed by those present. One will be held in two weeks again.

An estimate of the productiveness of the Red River Valley for raising cereals can be formed when it is stated that during the present season the Grandin Brothers have shipped from their farm in Dakota 120,000 bushels of wheat alone, most of it grading No. 1 hard.

Rather a singular freak of fire happened this week in the blacksmith shop of Messrs. Emoond & Veaux. The fire, supposed to have originated by a spark from the forge, burned a hole in the building nearly five feet in circumference and then went out of its own accord. Should the fire have continued longer, nothing could have saved the building as a strong gale was blowing from the southeast. Besides the loss of the shop the hotel and stables of Mr. Geo. Beauvaise would have been endangered by the consuming elements.

A man from Crookston was over to Crookston on Sunday and got so full of "Jersey lightning" that he couldn't tell a horse car from a steamboat. He attempted to cross the railroad bridge on his way home and on doing so fell through between the timbers—that is, all but his feet, they were too large to pass between the ties. He was rescued from his perilous predicament by the man who oversees the bridge before any loss was sustained by the road.

Rev. F. K. Roberts preached a very eloquent sermon last Sunday, which was well appreciated by those present. At its close he made a short review of the progress of the society in this vicinity since its organization on the 8th of January, 1880. They commenced with only sixteen members in Crookston and fourteen in Carman. One month later a Sunday school was started at the former place and in January, 1882, one was organized here. In the year 1881 aid was secured and a brick block erected at a cost of $5,000, which was occupied the first Sunday in January. Some time in November last steps were taken for the erection of the present chapel in Crookston, which was permanently occupied for the first time last Sabbath. This building cost about $1,000. He made a report of the financial condition of the two societies and shows that part to be in a good healthy state. The sum paid in for the various expenditures are as follows: For building purposes, $3,109; for lot $450; for furniture, $200; for Sunday school, $140; for maintenance of pastor, $,200; missions, $35; incidentals, $175. From a membership of fourteen in 1880 the list has increased until at present they number some fifty souls. Surely the Baptist society have just cause to feel proud of their rapid advancement in endeavoring to spread the gospel to all mankind.

Fisher's Fancies.

From the Bulletin.

McKnight is sawing lumber, but logs are not coming in as rapidly as usual.

Sam Harlow, of the Windsor, starts for Memphis and New Orleans next week.

C. B. Rockwood, Esq., who has been in Indiana for some time is to return on Monday next.

The Dow property, near the Windsor, was sold to Lou Freeman, for the remarkably low price of $650.

Dick Hussey is in town, all the pious mothers fasten up their sons, they don't want them to hear Dick talk.

Frank Dorn, our "boss" carpenter is about to start for Wisconsin, on a visit to his old home and friends, he will return in a few weeks.

A most needed change has recently been made in the mail facilities of our railroad. A mail clerk, with postal car, now assorts all mail between Crookston and Larmore.

Uncle Nat Dickenson says he has the best place for a Poor Farm in the county, and if the county commissioners will come down handsomely he will sell it for that purpose. He is right; there could be no better point in the county for that purpose, there is all that is needed for such an institution. Plenty of timber, water and prairie, and the best of land.

Commissioners Bradish and Higdem in company with bridge constructor Nolan, visited Fisher on Wednesday for the purpose of inspecting our bridge across the Red Lake River. After a very careful survey of both banks for some distance, they come to the conclusion that the cheapest and best way, was to let the bridge stay in its present position. They determined to recommend the building of a stone pier for the east side of the bridge and to cut away the bank on the same side so as to prevent the pressure of the land-slide thereon, this could be done at a cost of about $1,000, where as the moving of the structure without approaches, would amount to at least $3,000 and even then, there would be the same liability to land slips as at present exist. It is the opinion of all competent judges, that the proposed alteration will make the bridge firm for all time. We certainly think that [illegible] tion during the severe storm of the week. Quick, ready and competent every part, place and condition requiring attention, had his immediate attention at the first lull in the storm. Within an hour after the storm, every train and every man were under way, and all obstructions removed. Discipline is the lever boys.

A few mornings ago a beautiful mirage was visible on the horizon to the north of us giving a plain view of our neighboring towns Fanny, Euclid and Warren. The latter being about twenty-eight miles distant. Tally one for the pure and clear atmosphere of Polk County.

St Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Mr. Harris, an experienced hotel keeper from Larimore, has leased the St. Hilaire hotel, which he has opened for business. Another man preparing for the boom.

Some pretty rapid traveling was made by Mr. S. W. Ritchie last week; he having been but fifteen hours on the road between Winnipeg Manitoba, and this place. He would be a good man to send "around the world in eighty days".

Mr. S W. Ritchie advertises for 25 men to work on improving his water power at the junction of the Thief and Red Lake River, a short distance north of this town. Mr. R. informs us that he intends to commence at once, the erection of a large saw mill at this point, which when finished will knock the spots off anything in the Valley. Who says St. Hilaire is not the "coming city",

C. T. Palmer, county attorney of Rice Co., and brother of G. H. Palmer of this place, has been devoting considerable attention to lotteries lately, and so far as heard from has been very successful. The first one in which he tried his hand, was the lottery of love, and drew a partner for life, the first pop. He then bought the winning number on a team of horses, and sold them for a good price. Hib says he is glad there is one lucky member in the family.

Chas. Robbecke, the gentleman who is putting up the large bakery and restaurant here, was in town on Monday last, hiring carpenters to work on his building. He intends bringing up several carpenters from Crookston and has rented the Railson & Williams building where he will, for the present open up a boarding house for his workmen and as many others as may desire to patronize him. Mr. M. Williams has joined him in this last venture until his partner returns when they will open up their large general store. The building for the bakery and restaurant is to be rushed right through and will be in running order by the first of March.

We are pleased to note that the people who are putting up structures are building more with reference to the future than the present. They well know that within six months the building which now would be large enough will be insufficient for a town of a thousand inhabitants, and are governing themselves accordingly. These are the wise men who know they are building their houses upon the rock of future greatness, which will stand firm when other towns who have laid their foundation on the sands of page advertisements, will be washed away by the waves of common sense which arise on the sea of progress.

East Grand Forks.

From the Courier.

Travel is once more on the increase, and the promise for the coming spring rush is greater than ever.

The sand is now being hauled for the school house and its erection will be commenced immediately.

Jas. Sanders, the wounded man at the Lewis House, continues to rapidly improve under the skillful treatment of Dr. Duggan.

The King Farm, situated about three miles north on the Marsh, and one of the finest farms near this place, sold for $4500 to Mr. Woodward, of Grand Forks.

The Misses Ryan one a school teacher in district No 8, Polk County, and the other the owner of a fine claim near Larimore, were the guests of Mrs. Masterson last Monday.

The petition to have the name of our postoffice changed from Nashville to East Grand Forks was sent in, with the signatures of about eighty of our citizens.

There is great activity in the wood market about here. All week teams have been kept very busy hauling wood from up the Red and found a ready sale for it at $6 per cord.

Last Tuesday was by far the most beautiful day we have had this winter. The thermometer remained at zero all day and was just cold enough to make a fellow feel too frisky for anything.

The posoffice was removed yesterday to the hardware store of J. W. Howes, who is postmaster, and W. O. McCray will act as deputy. It is the intention of Mr. Howes to repair the boxes and he will also run a stock of stationery in connection.

Wheat is beginning to move in quite a lively manner, and our farmers are making good use of the splendid roads about here to bring the cereal to market. This will make our merchants [illegible]

his building on Field avenue last Thursday and has been pushing things along until it is now almost completed. It is a large two-story frame and when finished the lower room will be used as a paint shop, while the upper rooms will be used by Mr. Gulliksen for living purposes during the winter. This building, with the exception of one or two lots, makes Field avenue between the railroad and Sibley street one solid business block.

Look out for Seed Wheat.

Within about three months farmers will be required to commence sowing their wheat, and the importance of having good and pure seed should stimulate farmers to look after it at once. He who sows foul seed will reap the same, and while now farmers have nothing of importance to do, they should be selecting and cleaning their seed wheat. Let farmers change seed when the same production has been sown on the same ground for a number of years. Let prairie farmers get wheat grown in the timber and let timber farmers seek their seed wheat from among prairie farmers; but above all look for seed free from cockle, that worst of all pests to wheat raisers. Every farmer should procure a screen of some kind, one that will separate cockle from wheat, and the best one we know of is one manufactured at Rochester, and costs about twenty-five dollars.—[Glencoe Enterprise.

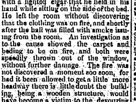
Contents of the February American Agriculturist.

The American Agriculturist for February, 1883, is an improvment upon the splendid number of the previous month. There are five fine full-page groups of engravings by Halm, Forbes, and other leading artists, namely; Indoor and Out; A Poultry Show (14 breeds); Maple Sugar Making; Winter Sports and Pastimes; and Houghton Farm (Experiment Station). Among the other leading engravings are portraits of a prize Devon Steer and Jersey Cow; a Cattle Barn; French Compost House; New Fodder Plant (Vetch); Alpine Strawberry; Pruning, Good and Bad (4cuts); a Monkey-skine; and various Farm, Garden and Household conveniences. Among the leading contributors are Dr. D. D. Slade (Harvard University). Sunlight in Stables; Wm. E. Pabor (Editor "Colorado Farmer"). Farm Lands in the "New Colorado"; Col. M. C. Weld, Poultry, and Live Stock articles; C. P. Dewey; Winter Cheer, etc.; Dr. Geo. Thurber, Plants, Fruits, Flowers, etc.; Wm Clieft, Home Supply of Food; Orange Judd, Good Country Roads Pay, etc.; D. Z. Evans, Jr., Useful Farm articles; E. E. Rexford, Garden Tools; Joseph Harris, About High Farming; Dr. B. D. Halsted, Grafting, Farm Chemistry, etc.; Dr. T. F. wood, Sheep Laurel; P. H. Jacobs, Experiments with Poultry; J. W. Clarke, Poultry House; Prof. W. J. Beal (Michigan Agricultural College), Crossing Apples; Dr. A. Oemler, Hot-Beds and Cold Frames; Agnes Carr, Household articles, etc. Farm Experiments unlock the hidden truths of agriculture, and all tillers of the soil will be interested in the extended and fully illustrated article on Houghton Farm—an Experimental Station that is, in the words of its founder, "Dedicated to the Formers of America." We wonder that so much attractive and valuable matter can be furnished at the price. Yearly subscription, $1.50 Single number, 15 cents. Orange Judd Co., Publishers, New York.

The parlor of the Griggs House last evening was the scene of an important event in the lives of two of our most prominent citizens, being no less than the marriage of Miss Josephine Connell, a valued teacher in the high school, to Dr. H. M. Wheeler. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. W. Iddings, after which an elegant supper was served in the dining room. It was a very cosy wedding with only the school teachers and Rev. and Mrs. Iddings present, who presented the bride a handsome silver pitcher. A very pleasant evening was enjoyed by the teachers, whose circle is now broken and the rest are waiting to take their turn. The Herald wished the Dr. and Mr. Wheeler many years of happiness and prosperity.—[Grand Forks Herald.

Nearly A Blaze

The city came near being visited by another conflagration on Sunday. A traveling man stoping at the Viets House accidentally set the bed-clothes on fire with a lighted cigar that he held in his hand while sitting on the side of the bed. He left the room without discovering that the clothing was on fire, and shortly after the hall was filled with smoke issuing from the room. An investigation as to the cause showed the carpet and beding to be on fire, and both were speedily thrown out of the window, without further damage. The fire was not discovered a moment soo soon, for had it been allowed to get a little more headway there is little doubt the building, being a wooden structure, would have become a victim to the devouring element.[—Grand Forks Herald.



WINTER DE-COTE.

T. L. MILLER CO.,

BREEDERS AND IMPORTERS OF

HEREFORD CATTLE

COTSWOLD SHEEP

BERKSHIRE SWINE.

BEECHER, WILL CO., ILLINOIS.

C. CHURCHILL,

HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,

Kalsomining and Paper Hanging.

Contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors north of Methodist Church, Mainstreet.

THE PIONEER

HARNESS SHOP.

M. RAUSENBUHLER, Proprietor.

Corner Oak and Third Sts., Crookston, Minn.

Is ready for the Spring Trade with a full supply of [illegible]

NEW DRUG STORE IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh

DRUGS, MEDICINES,

PAINTS, OILS,

and YANKEE NOTIONS

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 50 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave orders at my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn.

DR. A. NELSON.

MUNN & Co PATENTS ESTABLISHED 1846 NEW YORK

We continue to act as solicitors for patents, caveats, trade-marks, copyrights, etc., for the United States, and to obtain patents in Canada, England, France, Germany, and all other countries. Thirty-six years' practice. No charge for examination of models or drawings. Advice by mail free.

Patents obtained through us are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which has the largest circulation, and is the most influential newspaper of its kind published in the world. The advantages of such a notice every patentee understands.

This large and splendidly illustrated newspaper is published WEEKLY at $3.20 a year, and is admitted to be the best paper devoted to science, mechanics, inventions, engineering works, and other departments of industrial progress, published in any country. Single copies by mail, 10 cents. Sold by all newsdealers.

Address, Munn & Co., publishers of Scientific American, 261 Broadway, New York.

Handbook about patents mailed free.

H. F. PLATO & CO.,

(SUCCESSORS TO POWERS BROS.)

131 EAST THIRD STREET, ST. PAUL. 131

Fall and Winter

—OF—

1882.

FINE GOODS AND LOW PRICES.

We are in a position to offer to the trade visiting St. Paul one of the most complete and attractive stocks of

DRY GOODS

Ever shown in this city.

BLACK AND COLORED SILKS IN GREAT VARIETY.

FINE DRESS GOODS, VELVETS,

PLUSHES AND TRIMMINGS

Of all kinds and quality. An Immense stock of

CLOAKS IN ALL THE NEW STYLES

IN CLOTH, PLUSH AND SILK.

☞ Order business a specialty. The same careful attention given to orders as during the past ten years and satisfaction guaranteed. Agents for Butterick's Celebrated Patterns. Catalogues and samples sent to any address upon receipt of stamp.

H. F. PLATO & CO.

Mortgage Sale.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty-three dollars, ($253 00-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Frank Peasley to Samuel H. Ver Plank, bearing date the 23d day of January, A. D. 1880, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 23d day of January A. D. 1880, at one o'clock p. m., in book "B" of Mortgages, on page 203, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in, and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-six (26) Township numbered one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range numbered forty-six (46,) containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the government survey thereof and situated in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 2d day of March A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and thirty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated January 15th, A. D. 1883.

SAMUEL H. VER PLANK,
Mortgagee.

BREWER & McLEAN,
Attorney's for Mortgagee. (38-44)

$250.00

In Gold Given Away.

$2.00 PER YEAR POSTPAID.

1841. FORTY-SECOND YEAR. 1883.

The Prairie Farmer.

The oldest, most reliable and leading Agricultural Weekly of America.

Advocates the interests of the Farmer, the Breeder and the Dairyman.

It aims to educate and elevate, and to give its patrons the latest, best and freshest news pertaining to every line of industry.

The publishers aim to make THE PRAIRIE FARMER the Standard Agricultural Paper of the country. Its columns are devoted to the growing wants of farmers, treating upon all subjects relative to the farm, garden and household. Breeders of live stock will find their interests carefully and fully treated in a spirit of perfect fairness. As a family paper it is designed to place it in the front rank, and keep from its columns all that is objectionable. [illegible]

Assignees Sale!

Consisting of

A large and well selected stock of Dry Goods, Notions, Clothing, Hats and Caps, Furnishing Goods, Boots and Shoes, Crockery and Groceries,

THE STOCK OF

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY.

THESE GOODS

MUST BE SOLD

Regardless of Cost.

First Come First Served.

Chicago Store, Dobson's Block,

M. R. BROWN,

Assignee.

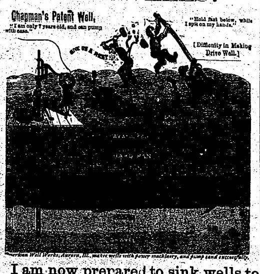
NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spring stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respeetfully,

C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.

Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!



Chapman's Patent Well.
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
American Well Works, Aurora, Ill., make wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.

Address R. W. RANNEY,

Carman, Polk County, Minn.

READY, FIRE!

WOOD

Is much better than kerosene and paper—cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to

LEECH & McMANUS,

OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

[illegible]

CLOSING OUT SALE.

Our Immense Stock of

CLOTHING,

OVERCOATS,

UNDERWEAR,

CAPS,

Ladies' Cloaks,

Furs,

And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.

HACK & GALLASCHE,

Opposite Merchants' Bank.

LIVERY, FEED,

—AND—

SALE STABLES

Two doors north of U. S. Land Office

Main St., Crokston, Minn.

T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.

Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.

For a stylish rig, by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

—THE—

RED LAKE FALLS

FLOURING

MILL

Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.

BUSE & COLBENTSON,

PROPRIETORS,

RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos

—AND—

Organs

W. W. KIMBALL CO.

Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites. Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. (36-tf)

CrookstonNurseries.

Tree-Claim-Stock.

Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $5.00 per acre, also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.

HASELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by

W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT,

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all

CALL AND SEE ME

At my New Store on Main Street.

A. YVERNAULT,

Crookston, Minn

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. B. KAUFER & SON

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

and are now prepared [illegible] you furnish everything in their line as cheaply [illegible] else can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere [illegible] teed in the New Northwest. Our work is guaranteed to be as good as any and our prices as reasonable. Call and see! H. KAUFER & SON.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.

Fournet & Herron,

DEALERS IN

FLOUR,

FEED,

CORN,

OATS,

POTATOES

Robert Street,

Crookston, [illegible]

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

DEFECTIVE PAGE

TIME TABLE

Of the Arrival and Departure of Mails at the Post Office at Crookston, Minn.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
Grand Forks, Fisher,	10:30 a. m.	10:45 a. m.
South	7:30 a. m. 11:30 a. m.*	4:01 p. m.* 8:45 p. m.
North	7:30 a. m.	8:45 p. m.
Red Lake Falls, Gentilly,	2:30 p. m.‡	9:00 a. m.†

*Carries only mail for St. Paul, Minneapolis and beyond.

†Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

‡Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE

FOR CROOKSTON.

GOING NORTH.

		ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 3	Passenger,	8:55 p. m.	10:10 p. m.
" 5	"	10:30 a. m.	10:40 a. m.
" 11	freight.	4:30 p. m.	8:00 p. m.
" 13	"	7:30 p. m.	6:30 a. m.
" 17	"	5:45 p. m.	[illegible]

GOING SOUTH.

		ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 2	Passenger,	4:40 a. m.	4:40 p. m.
" 6	"	4:30 p. m.	11:15 a. m.
" 12	Freight,	[illegible]	5:55 p. m.
" 14	"	5:15 p. m.	2:05 a. m.
" 18	"	1:20 a. m.

GRAND FORKS BRANCH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 9 Mixed	10:00 a. m.	10:30 a. m.

No 1, daily except Sunday. No. 5 daily. No. 11 except Sunday. No. 13 except Monday. No. 17, daily

No 2 except Sunday. No. 6 daily No. 12 except Sunday. No. 14 daily. No. 18 except Sunday.

C. H. MIX. Agent.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

We call the especial attention of postmasters and subscribers to the following synopsis of the newspaper laws:

1 A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the law) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and states the reason for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publishers for payment.

2 Any person who takes a paper from the post office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether a subscriber or not, is responsible for the pay.

3 If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and collect the whole amount, whether is be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

4 If the subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time and the publisher continues to send it, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post office. The law proceeds upon the ground that a man has to pay for what he uses.

5 The courts have decided the refusing to take a newspaper and periodical from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, as "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud. [37-40.]

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for February, among which is the following: We will give $20.00 in gold to the person telling us which is the middle verse in the Old Testament Scriptures by February 10th, 1883. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner February 15th, 1883. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the March Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published. This may be worth $20.00 to you; cut it out. Address Rutledge Publishing Company, Easton, Penn.

Health in the Red River Valley.

In the majority of articles that appear to be written for the purpose of inducing imigration to the Red River Valley, the chances of accumulating property in a short time seems to take the precedence, and the advantages it offers as a superlatively healthy country is a secondary consideration. As far as the accumulation of property is concerned, any one with good health, economy and application can acquire a competence anywhere on the continent of North America. If a person has the wealth of a Rothschild and the dyspepsia, he is poorer than the man who works at hard labor for a dollar a day and is free from any ailment. Money can be made and acquired most anywhere, but health cannot. All a man possesses is what he uses, and actual necessities require but a little money to satisfy. As a general thing the more frugal people live, the better health they enjoy; each new dish means another ailment, another war declared against the digestive organs. Many like to make money and amass wealth, and will risk life and limb [illegible] until the habit of hoarding becomes a morbid disease, which warps and shrinks the soul of the possessor, and the only music that moves him, is the jingle of coin and the rustle of greenbacks. All mankind he looks upon as a butcher looks on a flock of sheep, as something that there is so much money for him. He goes through the world pinching and grinding, and finally dies and the only regret of his heirs is that he had not done so before. The greatest inducement that can be offered for those coming to this country being blooming, robust health they can secure without tilling [illegible] on the prairie six months. The air of Dakota is as exhilerating as crested [illegible] vintage of 1880. Anything like fever and ague which is the bane of most of the western and southern [illegible] [illegible] into perfect contentment by the climate. It fills the Red River valley, which outrivals the wonderful spring that Ponce de Leon lost his life trying to discover. The waters which drank of would secure everlasting life.

We have received as many as a dozen orders for the weekly Pioneer Press during the past two weeks unaccompanied by the cash. While we should be pleased to fill those orders, we are unable to do so for the simple reason that an order to the Pioneer Press is no go without the almighty dollar. We do offer the weekly Press and the JOURNAL to our subscribers for the small sum of $2.50 per annum cash IN ADVANCE. If any one doubts that let him put up his cash and see how quickly his order is honored. We also club with other papers but only upon the same terms—SPOT CASH one year in advance. [36 41]

Some lady ought to secure at once the agency for the book advertised in another column. "The care and Culture of Children." It is one of the books that no mother can afford to be without. It treats, in simple language, of the cause, symptons, and home treatment of every disease to which children are liable, and deals beside with their training up to mature manhood and womanhood. Like all books in "The Household Series," is published by the same house, it a practical and helpful boook. [37-89]

Notice to Owners of Real Property.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m. for furnishing the county a tract of land not exceeding 160 acres; and also for furnishing a tract of timber land not exceeding 20 acres, to be used as a poor farm.

Proposals must show the description and location of and improvements on said land.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners at January session, 1883.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Notice to Physician.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m from physicians, stating the amount for which he or they will agree to furnish medicines and medical attendance (including surgery) to the paupers of the 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th commissioner districts respectively.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Notice to Contractors.

CO. COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Polk County, Minn.
Crookston, Jan. 10, 1883.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m., for performing the following work and providing all the materials therefor, according to the plans and specifications for same now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said county, to-wit:

For putting Ice Breakers at the County bridge across Red Lake River adjacent Red Lake Falls (as shown in plan.)

For moving the county bridge at Fisher to a point to be designated by the Board.

For building a bridge across a creek on the town line between Fisher and Roame Townships at a point where the Crookston and Frog Point county road is intercepted by said creek (See plan.)

For building a bridge across the Marais at Sec. 12, Town 151, R. 50.

For building piers (ice-breakers) at a county bridge across Red Lake River about six miles east of Crookston (See plan.)

Bids will be received for each separately and as a whole.

The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

See advertisement of Dr. Sozinskey's great book "Care and Culture of Children," in another column. [37-89]

Consumption Cured.

An old physician retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for General Debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his fellows. The recipe, with full particulars, directions for preparation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be sent you by return mail, free of charge, by addressed envelope.

DR. J. C. RAYMOND,
106 Washington street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Mention this paper. [illegible]

ANXIOUS MOTHERS [illegible]

E. M. WALSH,

DEALER IN

HEAVY AND SHELF Hardware, Tinware Of all kinds. JOB WORK a specialty

BAR IRON, STEEL, AND Blacksmiths SUPPLIES Building Paper, Sash Etc.

RATHBONE, SARD & CO. ACORN STOVES & RANGES.

ALSO AGENT

For the Celebrated Monitor Plows.

CROOKSTON, MINN.

Farmers, do you know

IT PAYS

To raise No. 1 Hard every time!

To be sure of doing this, sow nothing but the purest and best

Scotch Fife Seed.

10,000 BUSHELS

Of the finest seed wheat in the Red River Valley for sale in car load lots or smaller quantities,

AT LOW PRICES.

Samples furnished by mail on request, accompanied by 10 cents to pay postage. All orders promptly filled. Order now before price advances.

E. D. CHILDS & CO,
Carman, Minn.

MONEY TO GIVE AWAY

IN BARGAINS

at MARKHAM'S,

THE LEADING GROCERY HOUSE

AND THE LARGEST BOOT AND SHOE STORE

IN CROOKSTON.

Goods Delivered to any Part of the City

FREE OF CHARGE.

THE ONLY 5 AND 10 CENT COUNTER.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM,

MAIN STREET,

HAVE ALWAYS ON HAND A WELL SELECTED STOCK OF

Groceries, Dry Goods,

Notions, Boots and Shoes Clothing, Hats and Caps,

And everything usually kept in a General Store. We also have on hand a full line of first-class

FARM MACHINERY,

Including the Osborne and Champion Twine Binders, Reapers and Mowers, John Deere and First and Bradley Walking, sulkey and Gang Plows, The Pride of the West, and Buffalo Pitts Straw Burning and Horse Power Threshing Machines, Rockford and Fish Bros. Wagons, &c. &c.

Call and Examine Our Stock!

STEWART & LAWRENCE,

Dealers in

Pine Lumber.--Pine Lumber.

Windows, Doors, Mouldings, Building Paper, &c

YARD ON OAK STREET, NORTH OF BROWN'S LIVERY STABLE.

CITY PAINT SHOP.

W. H. McCULLOUGH,

HOUSE, SIGN,

AND GENERAL

PAINTER.

Broadway, Crookston, Minn

Great Bargains

—IN—

REAL ESTATE!

RESIDENCE LOTS

Are now offered in the Choicest Portion of the City,

Sletten & Cromb's

ADDITION,

AT PRICES

Within the Reach of All!

Those who invest now are sure to DOUBLE THEIR MONEY before Spring. Call early, for they are going off rapidly.

All persons are cautioned not to Cut or Remove Timber from Sletten & Cromb's Addition.

SLETTEN & CROMB,
Crookston, Minn.

REAL ESTATE AGENCY.

LANDS, LOTS, AND PROPERTY OF ALL KINDS

Bought and Sold,

Property Rented and Rents Collected.

LOANS NEGOTIATED, TAXES PAID FOR NON-RESIDENTS,

If you want to Buy, Sell or Rent, call or write to us and have your wants supplied.

JAMES W. LILLY,
ATTORNEY AND R. E. AGENT, CROOKSTON, MINN.
MAIN STREET, OPPOSITE POST OFFICE.

CROOKSTON CITY BAKERY!

EARNEST MILLER, Proprietor.

(SUCCESSORS TO THE PLUMB BROTHERS.)

Takes advantage of the occasion to say that he will keep a full line of all goods that are usually found in a

FIRST-CLASS BAKERY,

And that the citizens of Polk County will find none but the best at his place of business. A fine line of

CIGARS AND TOBACCO, NUTS, FRUITS, CANDIES, PIES, CAKS, BREAD,

AND EVERY THING TO FILL OUT A HUNGRY MAN.

JOHNSON, STEPHENS & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE

MINNESOTA CHIEF THRESHER,

CELEBRATED DEERING MARSH HARVESTER,

THE DEERING AND WARRIOR MOWERS,

Moline Plows,

Orvis Hollow Tooth Drag,

DIAMOND TOOTH DRAG, THE VAN BRUNT SEEDER.

[illegible] Subject to Trial. Satisfaction guar[illegible] Warehouses at Crookston and Fisher.

Benham & Underhill

(Successors to John McLean.)

Attorneys at Law,

AND

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

LOAN, LAND

—AND—

Insurance Agency.

(Established in 1879.)

Money Loaned to Prove Up with!
Money Loaned on Improved Farms!
Money Loaned on City Property!

U. S. LAND OFFICE
BUSINESS ATTENDED TO!
ENTRIES MADE
AND LAND PROVED UP!

500 City Lots in Crookston for sale!
Business and Residence Lots for sale!
Improved and Unimproved Farms in Polk County for sale on easy terms!

A Full Line of Old Reliable
Fire Insurance Companies
REPRESENTED.
CROOKSTON, POLK CO. MINN.

Merchants' Bank,

OF CROOKSTON.

CASH CAPITAL, $32,000.00.

J. KELSO, PRESIDENT
Bellvue, Iowa.
M. R. BROWN, VICE PRESIDENT.
Crookston, Minn.
H. R. MONTGOMERY, 2D VICE PRES'T,
St. Paul, Minn,
W. M. ROSS, CASHIER
Crookston, Minn.

WILL RECEIVE DEPOSITS, AND ALLOW INTEREST BY SPECIAL CONTRACT.

BUY AND SELL FOREIGN & DOMESTIC EXCHANGE,

Make Collections,

And do a strictly Legitimate Business.

Agents for Foreign Passage Tickets
De skandinaviske Sprog tales her
W. M. ROSS, Cashier.

FOR A CHOICE

STEAK OR ROAST

GO TO THE CITY

Meat Market,

H. STEEGE, Proprietor,

THE CHOICEST

STEAKS,
ROASTS,
VENISONS,
PORK STEAKS,
FRESH PORK,
MUTTON CHOPS

In fact everything of the very choicest in the line of

Meats, Fresh or Salt,

MAY BE FOUND AT THE CITY MARKET.

FOR

Choice Butter

GO TO THE

City Meat Market,

Robert Street. Crookston, Minn.

M. N. BERG,

Practical Watchmaker

—AND DEALER IN—

WATCHES,
CLOCKS
AND JEWELRY.

ROBERT STREET

Crookston, Minn.

First National Bank,

OF CROOKSTON.

PAID IN CAPITAL $50,000.00.

ROBT. H. BAKER, President.

M. R. BROWN, Vice President.

ANSEL BATES, Cashier

Receives Deposits, Buys and Sells Exchange on all parts of the United States and Europe, Careful attention to collections and prompt remittance. Negotiate loans, pay taxes for non-residents owners. Correspondence solicited.

DIRECTORS—Robt. H. Baker, Racine, Wis.
J. I. Case, Racine, Wis.
M. R. Brown, Crookston, Minn.
Wm. Anglim, " "
Ansel Bates, " "
E. D. Childs, Carman, Minn.

HOUSES MOVED.

Do you want to move your house to another lot? If so, call on or address

[5-31] T. A. HARRIS, Crookston.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Proprietor. DEVOTED TO THE WELFARE OF POLK COUNTY. TERMS----$1.50 per Annum.

VOL. VI. CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1883. NO. 40

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

H. E. COOKE, Editor and Proprieor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar Fifty Cents, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum sent to any address.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

SPACE.	1 w.	2 w.	3 w.	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 year
½ Inch...	50	$1 00	$1 25	$1 50	$3 00	4 50	6 00
1 Inch.....	75	1 25	1 75	2 00	4 50	6 00	10 00
2 Inches..	1 25	2 25	3 00	3 50	6 25	9 50	15 00
3 Inches..	1 75	2 75	3 75	4 50	9 50	13 50	20 00
4 Inches.	2 50	3 50	4 50	5 50	10 00	15 00	25 00
5 Inches..	3 00	4 00	5 00	6 00	12 50	20 00	30 00
¼ Column	3 50	4 50	15 50	6 50	15 00	25 00	35 00
½ Column	6 00	7 50	10 00	12 00	15 00	35 00	50 00
1 Column	9 50	12 50	15 00	18 00	25 00	60 00	100 00

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class Matter.

OUR WHEAT!

The No. 1 Hard of the Red River Valley Acknowledged to be Far Superior to that of Any Other Country!

Peculiarities of the Soil Which Produces It, East Grand Forks Courier.

The object of the present communication is not to exaggerate existing facts, but to conscientiously place them unvarnished befour your readers as they naturally occur; and while with a feeling of unworthiness approach the question, well knowing how difficult it is to do adequate justice to a subject of such prime importance, I feel assured that my humble effort will be eagerly read, minutely investigated, and moderately appreciated on account of the practical bearing and close relationship with the subject at issue bears to the prosperity, felicity and healthfulness of the world's community; the object of which being in part in fact one of the essentials upon which the human family is obliged to subsist, and for which, since the commencement of Christendom they have regularly asked for in the form of daily bread.

To deal with wheat in general would be foreign to my present purpose and I will therefore confine myself to that grown in the Red River Valley; mainly Scotch fife, and modestly endeavor to make a comparison between our own No. 1 hard and that produced in other countries, and in this connection I may be permitted to introduce a letter from Mr. Simon Lyons, late of Cork, Ireland, whose maturity of years, life time experience, intellectual cultivation in his own particular line of business, and having been a contributor to the leading milling journals in England and the United States for the past twenty years, ought certainly to entitle his opinion to respect. Being so replete, so concise and so much to the point we cannot do better than reproduce it in his own language:

"Regarding the Red River Valley wheat, being a practical miller in Cork and surrounding country, Ireland, for thirty-five years, and having experience in grading wheat from all parts of the world, I do unhesitatingly assert that the No. 1 hard of the Red River Valled is far superior to that of any other country. One barrel of flour made from this wheat will in the process of bread making absorb ten pounds more water than the same quantity of flour made from any other, on account of its being harder and more fully formed, and having a thinner bran and a larger percentage of glutin."

Any number of testimonials similar to the above could easily be obtained, but this will suffice as the statements contained are admitted facts.

Let us now examine more minutely what advantages our wheat possesses:

First, more bread can be made from a certain quantity of our flour than from any other, and ten to twenty pounds on every barrel means quite an item to the baker who does an extensive business. But this is not all, for second, the bread is of a better quality owing to the greater elasticity of the dough, consequently upon its larger percentage of glutin, and third, the bread is more nutritious as it is only the glutinous material of the wheat which is able to build up nerve or muscle. Starch can create fat, and heat and force, but it is only the glutin that is capable of building and repairing the solids of the body; and hence men fed on our flour although not so fleshy, are able to endure more physical exertion, which fact is practically demonstrated by the large amount of labor performed by our citizens. Does any person still doubt the fact of our flour containing more nutrition—more glutinous material. If so, all he need do to convince himself, is to take five pounds of our flour and the same quantity of any other, wash out the starch of each through a cloth and dry and weigh the residue which will show a balance in favor of our flour, or simply take a handful of our wheat and chew it until all the starch is converted into sugar and dissolved in the saliva of of the mouth and it will be found that the gum (glutin and bran mixed) is capable of being stretched twelve inches. From four to eight inches is the extent to which the gum from the same quantity of any other wheat can be stretched, because the admixture contains more bran and less glutin.

This fact then having been demonstrated I will now proceed to account for the distinguishing characteristics possessed by our far-famed Red River Valley wheat, which part of the article, though essential to its completion, must of necessity appear somewhat unsatisfactory to the general reader owing to its essentially scientific nature, however for the sake of such we will endeavor to simplify and abridge as much as possible. The differences as pointed out by our correspondent, Mr. Lyons, are first, that our wheat is harder, and second, our flour is capable of absorbing a larger quantity of water, both of which qualities belonging to its glutinous nature and our drying prairie breezes. We know how very hard glutin becomes when separated by washing and then thoroughly dried. Third our wheat has a thinner bran, and fourth, it contains more glutin, which excellent qualities are dependant upon the mutural mineral manures existing in our black fertile prairie soil in the form of neutral salts of lime, potash and soda. These serve the purpose of hastening the decomposition of the organic compounds and setting free nitrogin in the form of ammonical salts for the instant consumption of the plant. 'Tis only in this way we can account for the large percentage of nitrogenous (glutinous) material existing in both the grain and the stem, and giving to our ripening wheat fields deficient in nitrogen never present that resplendant yellow, which is only seen in the Red River Valley, and which always indicates the fertility of the soil manifested in an excess of nitrogen in the matured stems of the plants. The lime serves the double purpose of enriching the soil and causing the wheat to have a thinner skin.

Picture to yourself then our wheat plants fixed in our rich alluvial soil, fanned by our gentle prairie breezes furnished with a most abundant supply of nutriment, daily warmed and utilized by the rays of the sun for from fifteen to sixteen hours in such a manner that the process of growth and assimilation attains its maximum degree and continues unceasingly from the germination of the seed to its maturity and tell us what you would expect! The quickest possible interchange of tissue and the most rapid process of growth—the highest condition of vitality and maximum gaade of vitality—the perfect specimen of species with the most prolific multiplication of its kind—the larges yield per acre and best quality of grain. Precisely so. The conclusions at which we have arrived have already received the universal endorsement of the civilized world. Our country, yet in its infancy, is destined to a wonderful future. Our wheat surpasses that of any other locality in both quality and quantity, not on account of the superior intelligence and active industry of its citizens, but because of the physical adaption of the soil and climate to the production of cereals, no artificial manures being required. The robust plants produced on our soil have never yet known a blight, which circumstance naturally makes our people energetic and hopeful, which gradually gave place to the most satisfactory feelings of the happiness of possession as the abundant golden harvest is annually gathered and marketed. In conclusion we invite honest inspection of our conscientious statements based on the authority of personal observation, and challenge intelligent criticism of our scientific exposition of chemical and botanical truths.

F. J. DUGGAN, M. D.

THE RED RIVER VALLEY.

From the Fargo Argus.

It is astonishing how the Red River Valley fever is spreading and catching all over the eastern, middle and even south Atlantic States. They have it bad in all of the northern Mississippi Valley States, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin are in deathly love with it. The lower valley States and the western States are determined to have their share, and the Territories and Pacific States are beginning to turn their longing eyes toward the Land of Promise, across the Red River Jordan. They are coming from northern Europe by the hundreds of thousands. Thousands of dollars have been sent by thrifty farmers and tradesman to friends over the sea with invitations to come to the golden wheat fields of the northwest. They are coming in colonies of tens, fifties and hundreds of families each. The railroad companies anticipating the great rush of immigration, have given largely increased orders for rolling stock. Over one hundred sleepers, a number of drawing rooms and dining cars, hundreds of coaches and freight [illegible] contracted for. The general impression is that the coming year will eclipse everything in the way of material growth; additional mail facilities, marvelous increase of population and influx of capital equal to ten fold what has ever come before. This boom is to come early. Only ninety days hence. It is coming. The past sixty days of grand winter weather, together with the like winters gone by, have settled this question of climate. The people of milder climates know nothing of its granduer. It would read like a fable if described. Such roads, such sleighing, such bracing atmosphere; such clear blue sky, and heavenly nights made bright with the diamond like brilliant stars, peeping from out the deep blue firmament above, vieing with nature's moon and bright, sparkling electric light of art, cannot be conceived in the midst of those living in the fogs, rains, wet snows, mud and slush of the southern climates.

Adjudged Insane.

We were somewhat surprised yesterday to learn at the probate court that Judge Tallant was engaged in trying the mental capacity of Geo. Bates of Ojata, heretofore considered one of the most prominent business men west of Grand Forks. It appears that Mr. Bates has within the past few months given himself up to the use of drugs and narcotics, until he has become unfitted for business and is oblivious to all surroundings, totally neglecting his family and business affairs. The application was made through Judge E. St. Julien Cox, and the evidence before his honor, Judge Tallant, conclusively established the facts above stated. A. W. Allison, on furnishing the requisite bonds, was duly appointed guardian. It is very distressing to the family of Mr. Bates, who has the sympathy of the community at Ojata. [Grand Forks Herald.

Was it murder, or was it an accident? are the queries that are now being put by every citizen of this community. On Sunday morning, last, about 8 o'clock, the residence of Amedee Beaudry, some three and a half miles north of town, was burned. There were in the house at the time the fire originated, Mr. Beaudry, his wife and three children—the oldest a girl under six years—and a Mr. Roy. The remains of Mr. Beaudry were found in the ruins of the building. How they came there is, up to this time, a mystery; for though those who were present at the origin of the fire, have made detailed statements of their version of the horrible affair, no person with the intelligence of an ox, can give them credence. Their story is ridiculous, absurd, impossible. We shall not attempt a suggestion as to the motives which prompt them to conceal the facts, but that the truth and the whole truth has not been told is conclusive; and a thorough and rigid investigation of the mystery should be gone into without delay or hesitation. —[Argyle Banner.

NEW
DRUG STORE
IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh

DRUGS, MEDICINES,
PAINTS, OILS,
and YANKEE NOTIONS

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 50 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN & SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave orders at my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn.
DR. A. NELSON.

MERCHANTS'
BILLIARD HALL!

M. L. PRETTS, Proprietor,
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

The Choicest Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand.

C. CHURCHILL,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,
Kalsomining and Paper Hanging.

Contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors north of Methodist Church. Mainstreet.

THE PIONEER
HARNESS SHOP.
M. RAUENBUEHLER, Proprietor,
CORNER OAK AND THIRD STS. CROOKSTON, MINN.

Is ready for the Spring Trade with a full supply of Work and Light Harness, Single and Double, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Blankets [illegible]

E. D. SCHRAER

LIVERY.
Feed and Sale Stable.

Best Turnouts in the city. Single or Double Rigs, with, or without drivers or Saddle horses always ready at a moments notice by day or night. If you want a

NOBBY TURNOUT
—CALL AT THE—
RED BARN
E. D. SCHRADER,
Cor. Main and Third Streets, Crookston

Jas. G. McDonald,
MANUFACTURER OF
BRICK AND TILE
—ALSO—
CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

We are prepared to fill orders for brick in any quantity at the kiln or delivered, and to furnish estimates, plans and specifications, and to complete buildings of every description. Mason work of all kinds done promptly.
Plans and specifications of all building under our charge furnished free, executed by the best architects in the Northwest.

NEW RESTAURANT!
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

JACK CONFAIR, Proprietor.

Warm meals at all hours. First-class in every particular. TRY THE NEW RESTAURANT at Losey's Old Stand, Main street, Crookston, Minn.

F. A. DUFOUR,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELOR AT LAW
—MAIN STREET,—
CROOKSTON MINN

REYNOLDS & WATTS,
Attorneys at Law,
MAIN STREET. CROOKSTON, MINN

THIS SPACE
WILL BE OCCUPIED
NEXT WEEK
—BY—
J. R. CLEMENTS
ANNOUNCING
THE SALE
OF LOTS
—IN—
Clements' 2d Addition
TO CROOKSTON,
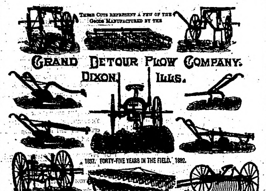
AND
NUMBER OF LOTS
TO BE
GIVEN AWAY
BY HIM TO PARTIES
WISHING TO BUILD
THIS SEASON.

$20,000

Worth of failure stock, consisting of
CLOTHING,
DRY GOODS,
GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,
CLOAKS AND DOLMANS

Of the late Chicago failure will be offered for sale at Crookston at 50 cts. on the dollar. Sale commencing on Wednesday, January 24th, and will continue until the entire stock is sold. Everybody invited. Remember the place, opposite Cowing's hardware store, Main Street, Sign of the Red Flag. Yours,

CHEAP JOHN.



THESE CUTS REPRESENT A FEW OF THE GOODS MANUFACTURED BY THE GRAND DETOUR PLOW COMPANY.
DIXON, ILLS.
1837. FORTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE FIELD. 1882.
AND FOR SALE BY

McKINNON BROS.
MANUFACTURERS OF
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, WAGONS,
CUTTERS, SLEDS, MILL CARTS, &C.
Axles, Springs, and all Repairs kept in stock.

DEALERS IN
FARM MACHINERY.

In Farm Machinery, we have a full line of Hoosier and Wolverine Seeders, Dixon Diamond Tooth Harrows; Davenport, Peru City and Norwegian Walking and Sulky Plows; Chieftain Hay Rake. Iron King Mower Centre Draft; St. Paul, Twine Self-Binder. Extras for the different Machines always in stock.

MOSER & MOECKEL,
—DEALERS IN THE BEST CLASS OF—
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,
—INCLUDING THE—
FOUNTAINE CITY AND BUCKEYE SEEDERS,
Case Wagons, Cassady, Buford and Hapgood Walking, Sulky and Gang
---PLOWS,---

Minneapolis Twine Binder, the Meadow Lark and Buckeye Mowers, the celebrated Fargo and Scotch Harrows, Nichols & Shephard Vibrators and Straw and Wood Burning Engines, the Cooper Stationery and Portable Straw and Wood Burning Engines, C. Aultman & Co's new Model Thresher and Monitor Engine. A full line of

—BUGGIES, SLEIGHS, CUTTERS—
—AND PLATFORM SPRING WAGONS.—

In fact everything usually kept in their line.

INSURANE AGENCY.—We write policies only in the best and most responsible companies, at as low rates as can be secured on the class of property insured. Our list of companies will bear inspection.

Money to Loan.

MOSER & MOECKEL.

J. ENGEL,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN
BAR GLASS,
Of all kinds and Goods used in Bars Only. full line of
LAMPS AND CHANDILIERS.
The only House in this line west of Chicago.
[illegible] St. Paul Minn.

GENERAL
Merchandise.

Call at our New Store on Main street, opposite the U.S. Land Office, when you require articles in our line. We carry a full and complete stock and invite invite inspection.

[illegible]

Van Dyke & Denniston,
PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.
COR. MAIN AND SECOND STREETS.
Will attend to all professional calls promptly.

A. A. JUST, M. D.,
Homoeopathic Physician and Surgeon.
Main Street, near U. S. Land Office,
CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINN.

A. H. DUNLAP, M. D.
GRADUATE McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.
Licensed College Physician and Surgeon, Quebec.
OFFICE OVER MERCHANTS' BANK.

AIME GABOURY,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
Graduate Doctor in Medicine Laval University Canada. Licensed Coll. Phy. Surg., Quebec Late of Michigan University, U. S.
Office over the "Arcade" Clothing Store Crookston, Minn.

DR. M. WATTS.
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Office on Main Street, one door north of Star Drug store. Professional calls, by day or night attended to with promptness.

DENTISTRY.
J. H. THOMAS, D. D. S.,
ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN
Artificial teeth from one to an entire set inserted. Gold, silver or artificial filling as desired. Regulating children's teeth a specialty All work warranted.

G. W. BARNES, D. D. S.,
Graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery.
OFFICE AT RESIDENCE ON
BROADWAY CROOKSTON.

JOHN LEO. H. STEENERSON.
LEO & STEENERSON.
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
MAIN STREET,
CROOKSTON, - - MINN

—JOHN N. IVES.— —D. E. HALTESTAD—
IVES & HATLESTAD,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW.
Collection and Land Office Business made a Specialty.
Money secured for final proofs on short notice.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

CROOKSTON HOUSE,
Main Street, Crookston, Minn.
J. E. MITTEN, - PROPRIETOR.
FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR
☞ Good Sample Room.

COMMERCIAL HOUSE.
W. H. TOPPING, Proprietor.
SECOND STREET - CROOKSTON, MINN
Having leased this new and commodious hotel we are now prepared to supply the needs of the traveling public in first-class style. Our house is entirely new and newly furnished; we have had a long experience in the hotel business and hope to be able to meet the wants of our patrons and friends. We would respectfully invite a share of the public patronage. Call and see us.

Second Street
MEAT MARKET
STANTON & CO., Proprietors.
Choice Meats of every description. Fish and game in their seasons. Everything of the very best quality and lowest prices. Call and see us. Stanton & Co. [illegible] Second Street.

WINNER DE-COTE.
T. L. MILLER CO.,
BREEDERS AND IMPORTERS OF
HEREFORD CATTLE
COTSWOLD SHEEP
BERKSHIRE SWINE.
BEECHER, WILL CO., ILLINOIS.

$250.00
In Gold Given Away.
$2.00 PER YEAR, POSTPAID.

1841. FORTY-SECOND YEAR. 1883
The Prairie Farmer.

The oldest, most reliable and leading Agricultural Weekly of America.

Advocates the interests of the Farmer, the Breeder and the Dairyman

It aims to educate and elevate, and to give its patrons the latest, best and freshest news pertaining to every line of industry.

The publishers aim to make THE PRAIRIE FARMER the Standard Agricultural Paper of the country. Its columns are devoted to the growing wants of farmers, treating upon all subjects relative to the farm, garden and household. Breeders of live stock will find their interests carefully and fully treated in a spirit of perfect fairness. As a family paper it is designed to place it in the front rank, and keep from its columns all that is objectionable.

The Prairie Farmer offers a novel list of cash prizes for the largest list of words that can be formed from the letters composing the name of "THE PRAIRIE FARMER." Every competitor however, must become a subscriber for one year. For full rules and regulations see The Prairie Farmer. Sample copies sent to any address on the receipt of six cents in postage stamps. Address

PRAIRIE FARMER PUBLISHING CO.
[38-56] 150 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

MIDWIFERY.
Mrs. Olena Dewley, a graduate of the mid-wife College of Christiania, Norway, has opened an office on Fletcher Avenue. Having had an experience of 12 years in Norway and six years in America, she is fully competent to treat all cases entrusted to her. All diseases of women and children carefully and scientifically treated.

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON, THURSDAY, FEB. 1.

No. 1 wheat 88, No. 2, 83.

Oats are worth 45 cents and potatoes 80 in this market.

The railroad wood saw is buzzing away every day, rain or shine.

Leech & McManus purchased 750 cords of wood on Thursday last.

The little daughter of A. R. Mugon died on Wednesday morning of diptheria.

W. A. A. Perkins, of Euclid, was in the city on Monday en route for Chicago.

Herb Mason has been heard from. He does not improve as fast as his could wish.

No mail on Wednesday. The first blockade of the season and we trust it will be the last.

Hon. H. Steenerson spent the Sabbath in our city, returning to his duties on Monday evening.

The preliminary examination of doctor Pinard resulted in his acquittal. Lack of evidence to convict.

Barber and the New York store have new silver-plated, gold-bowed spectacles on their nose—signs (of good times.)

The Carver Company gave two entertainments in Ericsson's Hall this week. This troupe won golden opinions.

Pleasant weather last week. The backbone of winter appeared to be broken, but got a plaster on it on Wednesday.

Mr. M. Jeffers returned from Red Lake Falls last week. He says he took in as fine a piece of land as there is in that section.

Gene Sidwell, Russell, Averill & Carpenters' irrepressible representative took pot luck with our good citizens during the temporary blockade this week.

Owing to the unfavorable weather of Tuesday evening last the programme at the M. E. Church Lyceum was postponed until the next meeting, Tuesday evening, Feb. 6th.

The Carver troupe made a virtue of necessity on Tuesday evening and favored our citizens with "Lord Dundreary". They could not get to the Forks until Wednesday.

The Misses Hale and Robinson gave an entertainment in Ericsson's Hall on Saturday evening, assisted by musical talent of our city. These ladies are always welcome to our city.

Hon. B. Sampson left on Monday night for a business trip to Ohio. He has a bee in his bonnet in the manufacturing line and we expect that the bee will not prove only a hum-bug.

Congregational services at Lawrence Hall every Sabbath. Services 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. Preaching next Sabbath by the pastor, Rev. C. E. Page. Subject—morning service, "Go forward;" evening, "Every day Religion."

Elsewhere will be found an interesting news letter from Fertile. Our correspondent promises to come again which we trust that he will do often. Such letters are always welcome and will always receive our attention.

Mr. K. Steenerson, of St. Hilaire, has gone south to spend the balance of the winter. He is engaged in the real estate business and is doing well. His acquaintance with the country renders him peculiarly fit for the place.

Mayor Allen has returned from his eastern trip. At St. Louis he saw the Jersey Lily and says our Crookston beauties will discount her two to one. The Lily may decide to come up and try conclusions with them.

Tom Jeffers was in this week and reports matters booming at Thief River. He says he has a contract for driving 1,000 piles for Charlie Kretzschmar's canal and has 800 piles out and the work is being pushed with his usual vim.

[illegible] brushing up for the [illegible] trade, renovating, painting. [illegible] Mark [illegible] is the place to do your trading [illegible] economical. His goods are the very best, freshest and cheapest always. Try him.

[illegible] Swickey took the train on Monday evening for the purpose of arresting two [illegible] who were [illegible] of [illegible] in the baggage [illegible] game and delivered it safely to the Sheriff of Wilkin County.

D. A. Moore, representing H. H. Warner, and Mosler Safe and Lock Co., passed the days of the blockade busily working up trade in this city. He is a rattling business man and we are pleased to learn that he did a good business here while temporarily blockaded.

John Moser, of Crookston, one of the pioneer officials of this county, was in town the greater part of last week. When John left here, four years ago, he took with him as much vim and energy as any one man ever buttoned up in a coat and from all accounts he has been exercising it in his Crookston field of labor.—[Alma (Wis.) Journal.

A telegram from the marshal at Springfield, Mass., was received by a gentleman in this city on Wednesday in relation to [illegible] Keneuf, who was engaged in the [illegible] business in this city [illegible] short time ago. The [illegible] in response to the inquiry [illegible] Keneuf had shown up [illegible]. The marshal says he [illegible] not like[illegible] is wanted [illegible] very partic[illegible]

[illegible]

A grand masquerade ball will be given in Ericsson's Hall on the evening of St. Valentine's Day. All who enjoy a good time should be sure to be there.

Mark Kaltenbuehler, the Broadway harness maker, invites attention to a large and superior stock of harness and everything in that line. When in want of anything in this line call and see what Mark can do for you.

At the council meeting last Saturday evening the bridge question was discussed pro and con and action postponed until Monday evening, Feb. 5th. It is thought that the amount will be voted unless a remonstrance appears to head it off.

MAPLE LAKE, Jan. 22, 1883.

The enclosed thermometer record from Jan. 1st to Jan. 22d, 1883, is a correct account as kept by myself, at Maple Lake, Polk County, Minn., 30 miles southeast from Crookston. In addition to the low temperature, the snow is 26 inches deep on the level.

				B. Z.	A. Z.
January	1	clear.	wind s.	4		7:00 a. m.
"	2	cloudy,	" w.	48		8:00 "
"	3	"	" n.	16		11:00 "
"	4	"	" sw.	14
"	5	clear.	" sw	40		7:00 "
"	6	"	" w.	30		7:00 "
"	7	"	" nw.	42		7:00 "
"	8	"	" w.	38		6:00 "
"	9	"	" s.	15		7:00 "
"	10	"	" n.	10		8:00 "
"	11	"	" e.	35		7:00 "
"	12	"	" s.		5	7:00 "
"	13	"	" n.	25
"	14	"	" n.	45		7:00 "
"	15	"	" e.	10		7:00 "
"	16	"	" ne.	5		8:00 "
"	17	"	" sw.	10		8:00 "
"	18	"	" ne.	34		7:00 "
"	19	Blizzard.	" ne.	35		all day
"	20	clear.	" s.	65		9:00 "
"	21	"	" n.	56		7:00 "
"	22	"	" sw.	63		7:00 "

T. J. WEST.

Notice to Physicians.

Sealed proposals will be received from physicians, stating the price they will accept per annum for treating the poor of the 3d Commissioner District, comprising the following territory:

Town 140, Ranges 46 and 47.
" 150, " " "
" 151, " " "
" 152, " " "
" 153, " " "
" 154, " " "

Such treatment to include medicine and medical attendance (including surgery.)

The Board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

P. J. McGUIRE,
Clerk County Commissioners.

Dated at Crookston, Minn., January 31st, 1883. [40-41]

NOTICE.

All persons in interest are cautioned against the fraudulent representations of E. D. Childs in relation to the "Proprietors" or owners of the Townsite of CARMAN. That portion located on Section 36—the southern boundary of which is the brick block—is owned jointly by E. S. Corser, E. D. Childs & Co. and myself—my interest representing an undivided one-sixth—originally owned by N. P. Stone, Esq., and purchased from him under deed dated Sept. 1, 1882, of which due public notice was given. At this time the record title was yet in the STATE. This interest is for sale either as a whole or in any part to suit purchasers.

[40-tf] J. H. KLING.

Sealed Proposals.

Sealed proposals will be received by the clerk of the board of education of the city of Crookston, until Saturday Jan. 27th, for furnishing sixty cords of sound oak cord wood. Fifty cords to be delivered at the high school building and ten cords at the school house on the hill. Parties can bid for the whole or lots of ten cords.

J. G. McGREW,
[38-39] Clerk of Board of Education.

For Sale.

On Eighth Street, between Ash and Broadway, two lots with good house and good barn, also house and lot on Ash Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, also lots 3 and 4, block 12 on Main Street. Terms easy.

CALVIN B. PALMER,
[38-tf] Crookston, Minn.

Money to Loan.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to loan on improved farms from THREE to FIVE years time at very reasonable rates. Apply at my office on Main street, opposite U. S. Land Office.

[14-tf] [illegible] STEENERSON.

For Sale. To Rent.

Four thousand acres of cultivated and timber lands at the mouth of the Sand Hill on the Red River, for sale. Also farms to rent. Address,

STEENERSON BROS.,
[30-tf] Crookston or Fisher.

School Desks.

Districts wanting the best desk manufactured, and warranted to be so, will do well to call on W. H. Jennings, Sherman House, Crookston. He represents the Racine School Furniture Co. and warrants from five to ten years. [4-tf]

Hair Dressing.

For particulars call at Mrs. I. U. Jennings Millinery Rooms, on Main St., Crookston, Minn.

[30-tf]

Notice.

All parties indebted to us are requested to call and settle by note or cash, at our place; do not ask for further credit till settlement is made.

[34-tf] [illegible]

$100,000 to Loan.

Prove up your claim. Cash paid for school lands and county orders. Call on or address [illegible]

[24-tf] [illegible] Crookston, Minn.

[illegible]

A fine farm of [illegible] acres only a short distance from the city. Twenty-three acres timber, [illegible] acres [illegible] house and barn. [illegible]

Lost.

A young female greyhound. I will give $5.00 reward to anybody returning same to me in Crookston.

J. B. CHINIQUY.

DIED.

BUCKLEY—At the residency of Phil. McLaughlin, in this city, on Wednesday, January 24th, 1883, [illegible], only daughter of Edward and Kate Buckley, of Mandan, D. T., aged 2 years and 8 months.—[Bismarck and Mandan papers please copy.]

The above item relates to a peculiarly sad affair. Mrs. B. had come to this city to visit her sister, Mrs. Phil. McLaughlin, when her little daughter was stricken down with diphtheria and died in a short time. The remaining child also contracted the disease but did not appear to be very sick, so after the funeral Mrs. B. went to visit relatives at Ardoch, D. T. On Wednesday a telegram to Mr. McLaughlin announced the death of the remaining child.

LINDSLEY—In this city, Tuesday morning, January 30th, 1883, of consumption, Mrs. STELLA LINDSLEY, wife of Mr. Wm. Lindsley, aged 23 years.

Farmers' Review

of Chicago, Ill., which is very properly known as the BUSINESS Farmer's Paper.

Profitable Agriculture is its motto, and it strives to live up to it by strictly adhering in every one of its various departments, to the principle that the farmer's work does not end with growing a good crop; he must also know how to obtain the largest profit.

Its Market Reports and its editorials on the supply and demand of agricultural products throughout the world are made up by the same experienced hand that prepared the Annual Review in Business Supplement with the issue of Dec. 29, 1881, and are justly commended for their completeness and accuracy.

Its Crop Reports are furnished by 1,000 intelligent farmers, scattered throughout the whole Northwest; men who work for no selfish motive, but for the sake of serving their brother farmers. They are compiled by an experienced crop-editor, and present to the reader every week a bird's-eye-view, as it were, of the condition of the crop throughout the country.

Its Chief Departments are: FIELD AND GARDEN, embracing Field Crops, Horticulture, Forestry and Entomology. STOCK AND DAIRY, including the breeding and feeding of cattle, horses, swine, sheep, poultry; all that pertains to the Dairy; and a "Query and Answer" column, conducted by a thoroughly competent veterinarian; THE F. R. CLUB, devoted to the interchange of practical suggestions among our own readers; THE SHEAF, giving agricultural and general news and information in a condensed form.

For Home and Young Readers we have a special department, full of fine literary selections, good stories, useful domestic information, and admirable articles prepared especially to instruct and interest young people in agriculture.

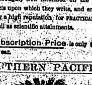
Editorially, the FARMERS' REVIEW occupies a strong anti-monopoly position; it works faithfully and constantly for the best interests of the farmer, and in all respects lives up to the principles of its motto, "PROFITABLE AGRICULTURE, ANTI-MONOPOLY, EQUAL TAXATION, HAPPY HOMES."

Its Contributors are composed of men thoroughly well informed on the subjects upon which they write, and enjoying a high reputation for PRACTICAL as well as scientific attainments.

Its Subscription Price is only $1.50 a year.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

PIONEER



THE OLD

RAILROAD

To the Land Explorer,
To the Business Man,
To the Farmer,
To the Mechanic,
To the Laborer,
To the Sportsman,
To the Tourist
To the Miner

TO ALL CLASSES

For the Raising of Wheat,
For the Raising of Stock,
For Ready and Cash Markets,
For a Healthy Climate,
For [illegible]
For Remunerative Investment,
For Business Opportunities,
[illegible]

The Northern Pacific Country

HAS NO EQUAL.

Round trip tickets are sold at all ticket offices [illegible] stations at reduced rates.

Pullman Sleepers between Moorhead and St. Paul.

Coupon tickets sold to all eastern points, and baggage checked through [illegible]

[illegible]

THE BEST WAGON —ON WHEELS—

IS MANUFACTURED BY

FISH BROS. & CO., RACINE, WIS.,

WE MAKE EVERY VARIETY OF

Farm, Freight and Spring Wagons,

And by confining ourselves strictly to one class of work; by employing none but the Best of WORKMEN, using nothing but FIRST-CLASS IMPROVED MACHINERY and the VERY BEST of SELECTED TIMBER, and by a THOROUGH KNOWLEDGE of the business, we have justly earned the reputation of making

"THE BEST WAGON ON WHEELS."

Manufacturers have abolished the warranty, but Agents may, on their own responsibility, give the following warranty with each wagon, if so agreed:

We Hereby Warrant the FISH BROS. WAGON No........to be well made in every particular and of good material, and that the strength of the same is sufficient for all work with fair usage. Should any breakage occur within one year from this date by reason of defective material or workmanship, repairs for the same will be furnished at place of sale, free of charge, or the price of said repairs, as per agent's price list, will be paid in cash by the purchaser producing a sample of the broken or defective parts as evidence.

Knowing we can suit you, we solicit patronage from every section of the United States. Send for Prices and Terms, and for a copy of THE RACINE AGRICULTURIST, to [135-] FISH BROS. & CO., Racine, Wis.

Bobsleds, Cutters.

The McKinnon Brothers have 250 pairs of bob-sleds, 45 swell box cutters and also a good supply of cutters suitable for grocers, which they will sell cheap for cash. These sleighs are all their own make which is a good and sufficient guarantee. Call and examine their stock if you intend to purchase.

[29-tf]

Mortgage Sale.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE in the payment of the sum of Two Hundred and Fifty three dollars, ($253 00-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Frank [illegible]easley to Samuel H. Ver Planck, bearing date the 3d day of January, A. D. 1880, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 3d day of January A. D. 1880, at one o'clock p. m., in book "B" of Mortgages, on page 203, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof:

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The northeast quarter of Section twenty-six (26) Township numbered one hundred and forty-seven (147) Range numbered forty-six (46,) containing one hundred and sixty acres more or less according to the government survey thereof and situated in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 2d day of March A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and thirty dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated January 15th, A. D. 1883.

SAMUEL H. VERPLANK,
Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [38-44]

MUNN & Co. PATENTS NEW YORK ESTABLISHED 1846

We continue to act as solicitors for patents, caveats, trade-marks, copyrights, etc. for the United States, and to obtain patents in Canada, England, France, Germany, and all other countries. Thirty-six years' practice. No charge for examination of models or drawings. Advice by mail free.

Patents obtained through us are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, which has the largest circulation, and is the most influential newspaper of its kind published in the world. The advantages of such a notice every patentee understands.

This large and splendidly illustrated newspaper is published WEEKLY at $3.20 a year, and is admitted to be the best paper devoted to science, mechanics, inventions, engineering works, and other departments of industrial progress, published in any country. Single copies by mail, 10 cents. Sold by all newsdealers.

Address, Munn & Co., publishers of Scientific American, 261 Broadway, New York.

Handbook about patents mailed free.

Cut This Out

A MOST ASTONISHING OFFER!

Read what $1 will do.

ON receipt of $1.00 we will send CITY AND COUNTRY one year to any address in the United States or Canadas, and in addition will give each subscriber 20 Choice Books, each book containing a COMPLETE story or first class novel by a celebrated American or European author, handsomely illustrated and bound in pamphlet form, and send them, free of postage. These books bound in cloth, and bought separately at the book store would cost at least $1.00 each.

For $1.25 City and Country and Thirty Books.

MONTHLY PRIZES.—Feb'y.—To first Ten giving middle verse of the Bible, correctly, a two year's subscription to CITY AND COUNTRY and 10 books. March.—To first Ten stating correctly, number of times word "Reverend" occurs in Bible and where, CITY AND COUNTRY one year and a Self-Adjusting Watch Key. April.—To the one giving the largest list of words ending in "ance," CITY AND COUNTRY one year and 30 books. Competitors for these prizes must enclose ten cents for each prize. Prizes announced in March, April, and May issues, and copies sent to competitors.

The above are the most astonishing offers of the century. The already very extended circulation of CITY AND COUNTRY and the great demand for these works enable us to make this unparalleled offer. CITY AND COUNTRY is a 24-page, Illustrated, Literary and Agricultural monthly which is destined to have an enormous circulation and tremendous influence, and is already a recognized leader. Any one sending in the money who can HONESTLY say they are not perfectly satisfied with the books can have their money promptly refunded. We guarantee entire satisfaction. Money by Post-Office order or registered letter may be sent at our risk.

Our Grand Premium Offer.

For 150 Subscribers to CITY AND COUNTRY at $1.00 per year, we will present the sender of the club with a handsome Combination Spring Buggy, (no top.) We will also pay the freight, so that the club raiser will have nothing to pay out of his own pocket.

COMBINATION BUGGY GEAR. WITH LONGITUDINAL SPRINGS.

The Combination Buggy, (cash price at factory, $100,) of which the above cut represents the Gear, has become known as the very best for easy riding and durable qualities. Years of most trying use, in private and in livery, has abundantly proved this fact. These buggies are in every respect first class, being manufactured by the world renowned COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, of Columbus, Ohio, Kansas City, Mo., and Indianapolis, Ind., whose work is everywhere acknowledged by those who are acquainted with it as strictly first class.

Before attempting to earn this Bonanza Premium we expect you to write to the COLUMBUS BUGGY COMPANY, Columbus, O., who will forward full description of this buggy accompanied with hundreds of testimonials. Space here will allow us to only describe the peculiar merit of the longitudinal central spring, marked "A" on cut. This prevents the [illegible] strain on the end springs which causes them to become loose, and rattle, and frequently break, besides it adds in the elasticity of the springs, producing easy riding qualities. Only first class material is used—[illegible] and axles, trimmings of [illegible] [illegible] cloth or [illegible] leather.

For sample copies of CITY AND COUNTRY, Premium Lists and Special Terms to Agents address

CITY AND COUNTRY,
317, 319, & [illegible] Street,
[illegible] COLUMBUS, O.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 25th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 6th, 1883, viz: ANDERS BAKKEN, Pre. D. S., No. 5435, for the w½ se¼ sw¼ ne¼ se¼ nw¼ S. 30, T. 146, R. 44. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Andrew Anderson, Albert Andersen, Hans Knuddon and Nels S. Kaar, all of Fertile, P. O., Polk Co., Minn.

[40-44] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 30th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given, that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 5th, 1883 viz: OCTAVIENNE JOLY, Pre D. S. No. 6,870 for the n½ se¼ ne¼ sw¼ and lot 3, Sec 7, T. 149 R. 43. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: John Quesnelle, C. Forget, E. Quesnelle, V. Robillard, all of Red Lake Falls, Polk County, Minn.

[40-44] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 22d, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land office, at Crookston, Minn., on March 2d, 1883, for the ne¼ Sec. 20, T. 147, R. 48, viz: OTTO P. ENGLESTAD, Hd. No. 4451. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Peder Johnson, Martin Paulson, Hans P. Englestad, Ole P. Englestad, all of Caledonia P. O., D.

[36-41] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 11th, 1883.

Complaint having been entered at this office by William Schumaker against Oscar Bernard for abandoning his Homestead Entry, No. 7,487, dated June 12th, 1882, upon the se¼ Sec. 18, T. 151, R. 46, in Polk County, Minnesota, with a view to the cancellation of said entry; the said parties are hereby summoned to appear at this office on the 1st day of March, 1883, at 10 o'clock a. m. to respond and furnish testimony concerning said alleged abandonment.

JOHN CROMB, Register
[38-41] P. C. SLETTEN, Receiver.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 4th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Feb. 10th, 1883, viz: FRANK [illegible], Hd. No. [illegible], for the sw¼, Sec. 12, T. 150, R. 46. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Felix Fournet, [illegible] Faille, Bartime [illegible], Benjamin Du[illegible], all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn. [37-41]

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Dec. 29th, 1882.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office, at Crookston, on Feb. [illegible], 1883, viz: CHARLES N. SANFORD, Pre. D. S., No. [illegible], for the se¼ S. 18, T. 148, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Francis [illegible], William Martin, C. C. Dillon and [illegible] Stone, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[35-40] JOHN CROMB, Register.

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed by L. A. Micaud and Philomene Micaud his wife, mortgagors, to Duncan Campbell, of Polk County, Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 25th day of November 1881, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on the day, whereby said Mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said Mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, to-wit: All of the northeast quarter of Section numbered [illegible] in Township numbered one hundred and fifty [illegible], of Range numbered forty-seven (47) west, according to the government survey thereof. And also the following described parcel of land: [illegible] (15) in block five (5) in [illegible] addition to the original Townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat of said addition, on file in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, [illegible] forty one feet (41) fronting on [illegible] street and twenty five feet (25) wide at the rear [illegible] and extending eastward from said [illegible] one hundred and fifty feet (150). To secure the payment of nine hundred dollars ($100), and interest thereon from the date of said mortgage at the rate of 12 per cent per annum until fully paid according to the terms of two certain promissory notes in said Mortgage described, executed and delivered by said Mortgagors to said Mortgagee, both of which notes are overdue, and have not been paid and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk on the 28th day of November 1881 at 2 o'clock p. m. in book "D" of mortgages on page 331.

And whereas the said Mortgage and the said notes were heretofore duly assigned by said Duncan Campbell duly to Louis Fontaine and William Anglim copartners as Fontaine & Anglim, of said Polk county, in the State of Minnesota, by deed of assignment duly executed and delivered, bearing date the 16th day of January A. D. 1882, and duly filed and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 16th day of January A. D. 1882, at 11 o'clock a. m. in book "C" of Mortgages on pages 59 and 60, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the said premises so described in and conveyed by said Mortgage which [illegible] and the same will be sold in separate tracts, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said Polk County, and State of Minnesota on the 20th day of March 1883 at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest thereon, and taxes if any on said premises and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject nevertheless, to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Dated January 31st 1883.

Louis Fontaine and William Anglim as copartners, Assignees of the Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
[40-46] Attorneys for the Assignees.

AGENTS WANTED.

For our popular and fast selling publications, embracing the following standard works:

EVERY-DAY CYCLOPEDIA of Useful knowledge: 100,000 Facts for 100,000 people, a perfect Dictionary of Every Day Wants. 640 pages, 500 illustrations.

MORMONISM UNVEILED, or the Life and Confessions of John D. Lee. History of Polygamy from its rise to the present time, with a graphic account of the Mountain Meadow Massacre, in which 120 men, women and children were butchered.

THEATRICAL and CIRCUS LIFE, or Secrets of the Stage, Green Room and Saw Dust Arena. Revealing the mysteries of the Theatre, Circus, Variety Show, Concert Dives, Ballet Girls, Mashers, Matinees, &c. Home and Private Life of Actors and Actresses, 150 beautiful engravings and elegant colored lithographs.

FINE PICTORIAL FAMILY BIBLES, 2,500 Illustrations on Steel and Wood.

Good terms to live agents on the above works. $120 per month guaranteed. Circulars free. Address,

SUN PUBLISHING CO.,
[illegible] St. Louis, Mo.

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAVING BEEN made in the payment of the sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars, ($3500,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, executed and delivered by James G. McDonald to Ansel Bates bearing date the Third day of April A. D. 1882, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the Third day of April A. D. 1882, at 10:45 o'clock a. m., in Book 1 of Mortgages, on pages 2, 3 and 4, and which Mortgage was given to secure the payment of Thirty five hundred dollars, and interest according to the conditions of a certain promissory note in said Mortgage described and executed and delivered by said Mortgagor to the said Mortgagee, in said sum of Thirty-five hundred dollars payable on the first day of November 1882, with interest until paid, at the rate of ten per cent per annum, and bearing even date with said Mortgage, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: All of Lot six (6) in Section thirty (30) in Town No. one hundred and fifty (150), Range forty-six (46,) excepting from said lot six. The following described piece or parcel of land, viz: Beginning at the southwest corner, of the southeast quarter, of Section thirty (30) Town No. one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty six (46,) thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet (560) to a corner, thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river, thence south 35° west one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 24° west, one hundred feet to a corner, thence south 15° west, one hundred and eight feet to a corner, on the south line of said Section thirty (30,) thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30,) one hundred and fifty eight feet (158) to the place of beginning, containing three acres and nine-tenths, which has been conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, in deed book "b" page 504. And also excepting from said lot six (6) the following described lot of land, viz: All that strip of land thirty-three feet wide (33) off of the north end of said lot six (6) Section thirty (30) Town one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-six (46,) the said strip being eighty rods long. The land Mortgaged in the above mentioned Mortgage and which will be foreclosed by a sale thereof embraces all the balance of said lot six not included in the above mentioned exceptions and contains twenty-two acres and eight-tenths, which was Mortgaged as and will be foreclosed and sold as one tract of land, situated in the City of Crookston, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the eighth day of February A. D. 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises and one hundred dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated December 19th, A. D. 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [34-40]

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage duly executed by S. R. Norris and Allie A. Norris, his wife, mortgagors, to Andrew C. Johnson, of Polk County, Minnesota, mortgagee, bearing date the 22d day of October, 1879, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on the 29th day of December 1879, whereby said mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate, situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, (to-wit): All of lot six (6), in Section number thirty (30) Township number one hundred and fifty (150), Range forty-six (46), containing twenty-seven and 70-100 acres, more or less, according to the government survey thereof, to secure the payment of twenty-six hundred and thirteen dollars, and interest thereon from date, at the rate of ten per cent until fully paid, according to the terms of five certain promissory notes in said mortgage described, executed and delivered by said mortgagors to said mortgagee, each in the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, three of which notes have been paid, and one of which notes for the sum of five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, and interest thereon at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the 22d day of October, 1879, became due and payable on the 22d day of October, 1882, and has not been paid; and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, on the first day of April, 1880, at three o'clock and [illegible] minutes p. m., in book "B" of mortgages, on page 211.

And, whereas, the following described piece or parcels of land was released from the lien of said mortgage, to-wit: A piece or parcel of land beginning at the south-west corner of the south-east quarter of Section 30, Township number 150, Range 46, thence north a distance of five hundred and sixty feet, to a corner; thence east a distance of three hundred and fifty feet (350) to a corner, thence south a distance of three hundred and twenty-one feet (321) to a corner on the bank of the river; thence south thirty-five degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south twenty-four degrees west one hundred feet to a corner; thence south fifteen degrees west one hundred and eight feet to a corner on the south line of said Section 30; thence west along the south line of said Section thirty (30) one hundred and fifty eight feet to the place of beginning, which said piece or parcel of land contains three acres and nine-tenths, and was conveyed to Ella Ross. See deed on record in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk, in deed Book "b," page 504, and which described piece or parcel of land is excepted from the said described lot six, Section 30.

Also excepting from said lot six, Section, Township and Range aforesaid, all that strip of land thirty-three feet wide off of the north end of said lot six, Section thirty (30); the said strip of land being eighty rods long.

And, whereas, said mortgage was heretofore duly assigned by said Andrew C. Johnson, mortgagee, to Ansel Bates, of Crookston, Polk County, Minnesota, by deed of assignment duly executed and delivered, and bearing date the [illegible] day of December, 1881, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, on the 30th day of December, 1881, at [illegible] o'clock p. m., in Book "F" of mortgages, on page 153.

And, whereas, there is unpaid on said mortgage the sum of ten hundred and forty-five dollars and twenty cents, with interest thereon from October 22d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, that one note or instalment, viz: five hundred and twenty-two dollars and sixty cents, with interest thereon from October 22d, 1879, at the rate of ten per cent., is now due and unpaid, amounting to the sum, including the interest thereon, six hundred and eighty-eight dollars and thirty-five cents ($688.35-100) which is due at the date of this notice, and the further sum of seventy five dollars which is allowed as an attorney's fee in case of foreclosure, by the terms of said mortgage. And no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the amount of said note and the interest thereon, or any part of the debt secured by said mortgage.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the said mortgaged property, not including the parcels of land hereinbefore mentioned as having been released from the lien of said mortgage, and the balance of said mortgaged property will be sold in one tract by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, at the front door of the Court House in the City of Crookston, in the said County and State, on the eighth day of February, 1883, at ten o'clock a. m. of that day to satisfy and pay said debt and interest thereon and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the seventy-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the expenses and disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale, as provided by law.

Dated this 19th day of December, 1882.

ANSEL BATES,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
Attorneys for Assignee. [34-40]

GOLDEN STAR

WHEAT

The Best Wheat in the Market!

Yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre and weighs 64 pounds per bushel.

Price $2.50 per Bushel.

☞ Leave orders at Juve & Bergland's or Eiken Bros., where samples may be seen.

T. O. BERGLAND.

HARDWARE!

EIKEN BROS.,

ARE JUST RECEIVING THEIR LARGE STOCK OF

Hardware,
Tinware,
Stoves
and Shelfware

WE SHALL KEEP A

FULL and COMPLETE

STOCK

OF GOODS.

In our [illegible]ne and Invite the Patronage [illegible] all.

COME AND EXAMINE [illegible] STYLES AND PRICES.

One door south of U. S. Land Office Crookston, Minn., (Overland's old stand.) EIKEN BROS.

Extraordinary Offers.

FOR ONE MONTH!

The Farmers' Union

AND

Minneapolis Weekly Tribune

One of the Largest, Ablest, Brightest and Best News and Family Papers in the United States.

FREE! FREE! FREE!

For one year to any subscriber to the

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

ANY SUBSCRIBER to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL who is in arrears on subscription one year or more, and who will pay his account in full to date and one year in advance, will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMERS' UNION free.

ANY PERSON who will subscribe for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and pay in advance for not less than twenty-four months will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMER'S UNION free.

THE FARMERS' UNION

Is a weekly journal of eight large pages of seven columns to the page, and in all the features of a pure, bright, able, interesting news and family paper it is not surpassed by any journal in the country.

RECOGNIZING the demand of the intelligent, progressive people of the Great Northwest for a newspaper that in all its departments shall not only fully up with the times, but shall keep pace with the wonderful development of the region in which it is published, the FARMERS' UNION has perfected such arrangements as will meet all the requirements of a first-class newspaper.

MOST COMPLETE.—It contains the most complete commercial and market reports received by telegraph up to the hour of going to press, a large amount of matter specially prepared for farmers and their families on the very best methods of all grades of crops of all kinds, stock growing, fruit culture, and every subject in which farmers are specially interested.

A HOUSEHOLD DEPARTMENT is devoted specially to the work of the homes of the [illegible] brighter and happier, and of lightening the labor of women in making them so.

BESIDES these popular and valuable features the FARMERS' UNION contains choice stories and sketches, interesting and instructive to old and young; poetry, choice miscellany, the news of the week from all parts of the world, and, in brief, the constant aim is to make it as nearly as possible a perfect news and home paper.

WE HAVE great pleasure in offering such a paper as this FREE to our subscribers on the terms named above. Orders should be sent in promptly, as the offer will remain open only for a limited time. Address,

H. E. COOKE,
Ed. and prop. POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.

PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.

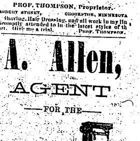
ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA

Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line promptly attended to in the latest styles of the art. Give me a trial. PROF. THOMPSON.

A. Allen,

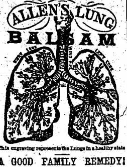
AGENT

—FOR THE—



HOWE SCALE COMPANY.

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM



This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
Harmless to the Most Delicate.

By its faithful use Consumption has been Cured when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

WM. C. DIGGES, Merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes April 4, 1881, that he wants us to know that the LUNG BALSAM has cured his mother of consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says, others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

WM. A. GRAHAM & Co., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of MATHIAS FREEMAN, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The LUNG BALSAM cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

As an Expectorant it has No Equal!

FOR SALE by all MEDICINE DEALERS.

TUTT'S EXPECTORANT

Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the [illegible] Slight colds often end in [illegible]. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that no remedy has ever been found that is as prompt in its effects as TUTT'S EXPECTORANT. A single dose raises the phlegm, subdues inflammation, and its use speedily cures the most obstinate cough. A pleasant cordial, children take it readily. For Croup it is invaluable and should be in every family. In 25c. and $1 Bottles.

TUTT'S PILLS

ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.
Cures Chills and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Bilious Colic, Constipation, Rheumatism, Piles, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Torpid Liver, and Female Irregularities. If you do not "feel very well," a single pill at bed-time stimulates the stomach, restores the appetite, imparts vigor to the system. Price, 25c. 35 Murray St., N.Y.
WRITE FOR TUTT'S MANUAL FREE.

KIDNEY-WORT
THE GREAT CURE
FOR RHEUMATISM
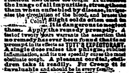
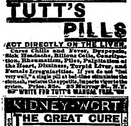
As it is for all the painful diseases of the
KIDNEYS, LIVER AND BOWELS.
It cleanses the system of the acrid poison that causes the dreadful suffering which only the victims of Rheumatism can realize.
THOUSANDS OF CASES
of the worst forms of this terrible disease have been quickly relieved, and in short time
PERFECTLY CURED.
PRICE, $1. LIQUID OR DRY, SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.
Dry can be sent by mail.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington Vt.
Acts at the Same Time on Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.
KIDNEY-WORT

"OH MY HEAD
HOW IT THROBS,
I CAN'T SLEEP."



DR. C. W. BENSON'S
CELERY & CHAMOMILE PILLS.
ARE PREPARED EXPRESSLY TO CURE AND WILL CURE HEADACHE OF ALL KINDS
NEURALGIA, NERVOUSNESS
AND DYSPEPSIA.
Dr. C. W. Benson
FAC-SIMILE SIGNATURE ON EVERY BOX.



Yours for Health
Lydia E. Pinkham

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S
VEGETABLE COMPOUND,
Is a Positive Cure
For all those Painful Complaints and Weaknesses so common to our best female population.
A Medicine for Woman. Invented by a Woman.
Prepared by a Woman.
The Greatest Medical Discovery Since the Dawn of History.

It revives the drooping spirits, invigorates and harmonizes the organic functions, gives elasticity and firmness to the step, restores the natural lustre to the eye, and plants on the pale cheek of woman the fresh roses of life's spring and early summer time.

Physicians Use It and Prescribe It Freely.

It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach.

That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. For the cure of Kidney Complaints of either sex this Compound is unsurpassed.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S BLOOD PURIFIER will eradicate every vestige of Humors from the Blood, and give tone and strength to the system, of man woman or child. Insist on having it.

Both the Compound and Blood Purifier are prepared at 233 and 235 Western Avenue, Lynn, Mass. Price of either, $1. Six bottles for $5. Sent by mail in the form of pills, or of lozenges, on receipt of price, $1 per box for either. Mrs. Pinkham freely answers all letters of inquiry. Enclose 3ct. stamp. Send for pamphlet.

No family should be without LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S LIVER PILLS. They cure constipation, biliousness, and torpidity of the liver. 25 cents per box.

Sold by all Druggists. (1)

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS

Hostetter's Stomach Bitters gives steadiness to the nerves, induces a healthy, natural flow of bile, prevents constipation without unduly purging the bowels, gently stimulates the circulation, and by promoting a vigorous condition of the physical system, promotes, also, that cheerfulness which is the truest indication of a well-balanced condition of all the animal powers.

For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

A DANGEROUS LOVER.

A pretty, inexperienced girl was Clotilda Fry, daughter of one of the richest farmers in Clarke County. Her pink cheeks, bright eyes and brown locks, with a very attractive expression of face, gave her a certain right to be called the little beauty of Lake Farm.

Tilda knew she was pretty. Added to this, her novel-reading had excited her imagination, and her ideas of life and of her own future were full of romantic notions, that only an inexperienced young girl could have. She tossed her head at the farmers' boys who sought to make her acquaintance, and felt that she should like to be sought by some elegant suitor, who, if need be, would carry her off by force, as her novels had pictured.

Of course, the child—for being but sixteen she was looked upon by her parents as hardly more than a child—never gave voice to her thoughts. If she had, she would have been soundly lectured by her blunt father.

It happened about this time that two men, who offered sweet-scented soaps for sale, had been in town and had called at many of the farmers' houses. Their appearance was such that some of the farmers had suspected them of being something worse than small peddlers.

At this time, too, a house in the village was entered and several articles of value taken from it. This had caused great excitement in the quiet country town, and everybody was more careful that doors should be locked, and that the houses should not be left without some one to guard them.

One Sunday, Farmer Fry, after a family consultation, decided that Clotilda should remain at home from church in charge of the house, and that a new boy he had just hired should stay on the premises, so that the house should not be left unguarded. Clotilda's heart gave a bound—so did Joseph's. She would have such a "splendid chance" to read a book she had secretly borrowed, "The Robber of the Rhine," while he decided that he would go down to the end of the meadow and spend the forenoon in fishing.

Farmer Fry and his wife stepped into the new carryall, while James, the son, mounted his horse, to which Clotilda had given the sonorous name of Thunder.

"If any stranger comes to the door, you must call Joe," said her father, the reins in his hand.

"And you'd better take the key out of the silver-closet," added her mother.

"Don't let any one run away with you, sis," laughed her brother. "There's a loaded pistol in my drawer."

Down sat Clotilda on the porch, the coveted novel in her hands, a frightfully-illustrated, paper-covered volume, dirty and thumbed, the prospect of revelling in its pages giving her a pleasure of which any sensible girl would have been ashamed. Tilda knew that this was unwholesome reading, and that it was also forbidden; but she had become infatuated by it, and was rapidly losing her pleasure in the ordinary concerns of life, declaring to herself that they were very dull and insipid.

She was just reading in the novel, "Isabel, startled by the clash of bayonets, darted frantically up the companion-way," when suddenly it seemed to her that some one was walking in the room overhead.

"Perhaps it's Joe," she thought; and going to the foot of the stairs, she called him.

No answer followed.

"Any one up there?"

All was still as the grave.

"It was only my fancy," she said to herself, and for ten or fifteen minutes became once more absorbed in the volume, when she heard footsteps. This time a well-dressed young man came from the vines around the corner of the porch. Tilda let the book fall with a cry of alarm.

"Pray don't be afraid," said the new-comer, in a pleasant voice. "I am a friend of your father's, and have come to ask a favor."

"Papa is at church," said the girl, reassured. The man looked to her like a gentleman. He had black eyes and hair, and the "daviest smile!"

"Indeed! I am sorry. I was stopping at the hotel at the Center, and was robbed of my money and watch last night. This morning I received a despatch that my mother is ill, and I want to get home on this account, for I fear it's a dangerous illness. If I had the money I could hire a horse and buggy to take me to Dash, where the express train for New York is due this afternoon. I am entirely without money, and I hoped I could borrow twenty-five dollars from your father. He knows me, and if he has it with him, I am sure he would loan it to me. Now I must wait, I suppose, till he returns from church, and then it will be too late to catch the afternoon express. Though if I could only get to Dash, possibly I might find some acquaintance there who would help me out of my difficulty."

"How sorry I am that the horses are all gone! I could drive you there myself if Thunder was only here," said Tilda.

"Thunder! What a fine name for a horse! I wish he was here. And to be driven by so beautiful a young lady!" and he stared at her pretty face.

"I named him after the colt driven to death by the mad Duke of Argyle," said Tilda, growing insensibly more and more confidental.

"Ah! I might have known you were something superior to the farmers' daughters in this region—that is, judging from those I have seen."

"And I seem to forget that you are a stranger," said Tilda, blushing with pleasure. "If you were not a friend of my father"—

"Certainly, one in whom he has the utmost confidence; and talking of strangers, I knew a rich young fellow who fell in love only last summer with a pretty girl in a log-cabin. He was hunting. The father would not allow his daughter to say much to him. But upon my word, if you'll believe me, they were married in three days after he first saw her. He took her off on a fast horse, and the old man chased them with a yoke of oxen. Fact. Did you ever hear anything more ridiculous? Now they are living in fine style in Paris."

"Splendid! just like a story!" said Tilda. "But then I would go to the ends of the earth with one I loved."

"Ah, then, my sweet girl, go with me—I am rich and well-connected, and—but come to think of it—my money and my watch are gone, and my mother is sick waiting for me."

"Of course I would not go with you under any circumstances," said Tilda, mildly.

"But if I come again to woo, perhaps to win you in the regular orthodox style—perhaps you would not object?"

Tilda, with averted face, blushingly replied that she could not tell.

"And will you accept this diamond ring—one that belonged to my mother, and is a family heirloom—to remind you of me while I am gone?"

Tilda's eyes opened wider; she thought she had never in her life seen anything so splendid as this pure, white stone encircled by emeralds, which she allowed him to place on her finger.

It certainly was no harm, she thought, to allow this, as he suggested that she might let him have only enough money to carry him home, it seemed to her that her father could not object when he learned his name, if she should let him have the twenty dollars in the old money-box, that he had put aside for taxes, particularly as the young man promised to return it in the first mail after he reached home, with five dollars for interest.

So she went to the bureau, opened the box and gave him the money. He took it with a profusion of thanks, and gave his name as Edgar Montague. As he left the door, he stooped and kissed her, declaring that he should return as soon as the illness of his mother would allow him, and gain her father's consent to make her his bride.

It seems almost incredible that any girl could be deceived by such disgustingly abrupt lovemaking and gross compliments. But Tilda knew nothing of the world, and her book heroes and heroines were of this character.

No sooner had Mr. "Montague" gone then came Patty, one of the neighbors' daughters. "Mother had a spell," she said, "and could she borrow some camphire?"

"Oh my, what a splendid ring!" she cried.

"It's my engagement-ring," said Tilda, proudly; "or just as good. The gentleman who gave it to me lives in New York, and I never saw him before, but he fell in love with me at first sight, and I shall probably marry him right away."

Away went Patty with her budget of news. In a few hours, every neighbor within half a mile knew that Clotilda had a "diamond ring," and was going to be married to a New York gentleman.

Tilda was awakened from her dream of magnificence by the arrival of her parents and her brother. Mrs. Fry went up stairs to remove her bonnet, and then gave a shrill and terrified shriek. An earthquake and cyclone combined would hardly have created more confusion.

Her husband and Tilda and Jim rushed up stairs. A scene of confusion met their eyes which will not soon be forgotten. Every drawer and closet had been sacked and their contents thrown about the floors. Somebody had dressed himself in Jim's best broadcloth and left in their place threadbare, dirt-crushed clothes and a shocking bad hat. The old gold watch, an heirloom, all Tilda's little trinkets, valuables of every kind were gone.

Tilda remembered the noise she had heard up stairs, and resolved not to mention her "diamond," or more of the conversation of the young man—her father's friend—than she could help. But she forgot that simple Patty knew all about it, and that Patty was the gossip of the neighborhood. In forty-eight hours, everybody in the country was talking of the robbery, and laughing at the silly girl who had confided in a smoothly-spoken rogue, dressed up in her own brother's clothes, and had even lent him money out of her father's desk.

As for the ring, that proved to be utterly worthless. Poor Tilda! Never was a girl more thoroughly mortified. In the confusion the book she had been reading was taken up by her father. He laid it aside, and the next day, after showing her its character, he took it between the tongs and threw it in the fire, declaring that if he ever saw any more such trash in the house, he would shut Tilda in her room and keep her on bread and water for a month.

The up shot of the whole affair was that the tramp, an accomplished villain, who had already served his time in States Prison, was soon arrested, and poor Clotilda suffered the severe mortification of being obliged to identify him in court. Even he when he saw her, burst into a coarse laugh, while the long-faced judge and the lawyers had all they could do as she told her story, to suppress their smiles.

But the cruel lesson sufficed, romance had lost its attractions for her, and sensational novels and strangers are just now both alike repugnant.—Youth's Companion.

QUEEN BESS.

How She Made Love to One of Her Persistent Suitors.

Gentleman's Magazine.

The Duke of Alencon' was lodged at Whitehall, but afterward had apartments assigned to him at Greenwich, where the Queen then was. The closest intimacy again ensued between the two: the warmest of love-letters passed between them, though the couple saw each other daily, and every morning Elizabeth came into the young man's room to give him with her own fair hands a basin of soup. On the day of the anniversary of her coronation she was walking with the Duke arm-in-arm along the corridors of the palace. The French Ambassador was announced, and craved an audience. As soon as he appeared Elizabeth stepped forward and said with a smile to him: "You can write to your husband that the duke will be my husband." Then, taking a ring from her finger, she placed it on the hand of the duke, and turning to her maids of honor, said, "I have a husband; you of you can follow my example if like." After this declaration it seemed impossible that the marriage ceremony could be longer deferred. Elizabeth had given excuse after excuse for not fixing the day when the duke was to be made the happiest of men; now it was her health, then it was the state of Europe, then it was the opposition of her subjects, until there seemed good ground for the fears entertained by Simier. "Je ne croirai au mariage," he said, "que lorsque les draps seront leves, les flambeaux eteints en mon maitre dans le lit." But after this open acknowledgment of the man who was to be her husband, further excuse and hesitation seemed impossible. Yet the very morning after this announcement this hysterical spinster came into the Duke's room and declared that it could not be; she had passed the night in tears; three more nights of such misery, she said, and she would be a dead woman—indeed, she could not marry. The Duke threw the ring on the floor, cursing the fickleness of the whole sex, and vowed that he would at once take his departure. But Elizabeth, who would not marry him, did not think it beneath herself to put her arms around his neck, to kiss him and caress him, and to implore him not to go. The duke, thus petitioned, consented to remain for a time. And for a time Alencon passed his days now in the hope and then the despair common to the lover who is not accepted and yet not dismissed. The queen flirted with him, smiled upon him, and presents still continued to be exchanged between the two. One morning, while sitting with the duke hand-in-hand, Elizabeth, in her softest tones said she could never marry a Papist. Hereupon Alencon, with the most charming impartiality, offered to turn Protestant. Alas! sighed the queen, she did not feel toward him as she had once felt. The duke now lost his temper, and reminded her of all he had gone through, what anguish of mind he had suffered, how he had lost the good opinion of the Catholic world, how deeply he loved her, and how he would rather die with her than quit England—indeed he swore he would not quit England. "It is very ill of you," said the queen, "to threaten an old woman in her own kingdom; you are mad, and talk like a madman." The duke wept, and Elizabeth sat by his side alternately wiping his tears away with her handkerchief and caressing him as of old.

Stories from Life.

Eugene Field in Denver Tribune.

An Impressario once Approached a Mule and offered him Advantageous Terms to become a Prima Donna. "Alas," quoth the Mule with a Sigh, "that is an Impossibility, for though I have an Ear for Music, my Voice is Sadly Attuned." "But you can Kick?" inquired the Impressario. "At kicking," admitted the Mule, "I am Positively Peerless." "Then," exclaimed the Impressario, "you have the Highest Qualification of a Prima Donna. Consider yourself Engaged."

A foolish showman once advertised for the following curiosities: a printer who carried tobacco, a negro minstrel who did not wear a plug hat, a woman who did not wash her face with a rag, an editor who had ten dollars in his pocket, a dog whose hind legs were in plumb with his front legs, a business manager who did not consider the editors robbers and a pair of shoes that were too small for the lady who wore them. The foolish showman died a death of bitter disappointment.

A child, having sustained horizontal relations with his mother's lap, was heard to philosophically remark that spankings not only developed the bottom facts of a slipper's usefulness but also afforded the spankee an admirable opportunity of appreciating the beautiful and wondrous intricacies of the carpet pattern.

"Buchupaiba."

Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Diseases. $1. Druggists.

Grave-robbers are said to be working the Arlington Soldiers' cemetery, getting subjects for physicians and museums.

Consumption is a disease we all dread. It often carries its victim to an untimely grave. How important, then, for those who cherish life and health, to prevent that disease in its early stages. Every Cold or Cough should be treated with Allen's Lung Balsam. There is no better remedy.

Ex-Member of congress Charles Delano of Mass. is dead.

No woman really practices economy unless she uses the Diamond Dyes. Many dollars can be saved every year. Ask the druggist.

George K. Shoenberger, a Cincinnati millionaire seventy-three years old, was married to Miss Ella Beatty at Coburg, Ont.

The unpleasant appearance of even the most amiable and intelligent face, when covered with surface irritations as from tetter, pimples, or eczema can be dissolved naturally by Dr. Benson's Skin Cure, an excellent toilet dressing. It cures dandruff of the scalp.

The president approved the joint resolution for change of the name of the National bank of Winterset in Iowa.

"Rough on Rats."

Clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, ants, bed-bugs, skunks, chipmunks, gophers. 15c Druggists.

Alfred Brady, one of the largest iron founders in this country, died at New York, aged sixty-seven.

Reliable help for the weak, nervous, and debilitated dyspeptic sufferer found in Browns Iron Bitters.

The Vicksburg Herald says there are forty pistols to every subsoil plow in Mississippi.

"They who cry the loudest are not always the most hurt." Kidney-Wort does its work like the good Samaritan, quickly, unostentatiously, but with great thoroughness. A New Hampshire lady writes: "Mother has been afflicted for years with kidney diseases. Last spring she was very ill and had an alarming pain and numbness in one side. Kidney-Wort proved a great blessing and has completely cured her."

The New York court has dismissed the suit of Col. James M. Selover against Senator Chaffe to recover $750,000.

Skinny Men.

"Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Debility. $1.

The Massachusetts house, 97 to 95, rejected the resolution to print 10,000 copies of the governor's message.

If you are a woman and would contribute your influence to redeem humanity from its numberless ills, make all things else subordinate to health. If you possess this inestimable treasure you may transmit the same and your offspring may rise up and call you blessed. To secure this it will be well to seek the motherly countenance of Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

Baby Saved?

We are so thankful to say that our baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and protracted irregularity of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength.—The Parents, Rochester, N. Y. See another column.—Buffalo Express.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

Petrolia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1879

Messrs. Kennedy & Co.:—My hair is growing out so fast that I can almost see it grow myself, through the use of your Carboline.

D. Nixon.

An Awful Responsibility.

We all deplore the terrible ravages of consumption but only a few of us seem to have common sense enough to take the proper means of preventing it. Hale's Honey of Horehound and tar, taken as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Difficult Breathing or Hoarseness, will effect a radical and rapid cure of the ailment, and avert all danger. Sold by druggists.

Pike's Toothache Drops cure in one minute.

The Flesh Speedily Reunites when obstinate sores are cleansed with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Of Druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, 50 cents.

Eminent Dr. J. J. Caldwell, Baltimore, Md. states: I have used Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic largely in Debility, Febrile, and Nervous Diseases, and I have found it one of the most reliable of nutrient tonics now in use or to be found in pharmacy." (Take no other.) Of Druggists.

Indorsed by the Clergy.

We take the pleasure in recommending Dr. Warner's White Wine, of Tar Syrup to the public, and especially to any public speaker that may be troubled with throat or lung disease. REV. M. L. BOOHER, Reading, Mich.

Sold by all Druggists.
REV. J. T. IDDINGS, Albion, Mich.
REV. V. L. LOCKWOOD, Ann Arbor, Mich.

Try the new brand Spring Tobacco.

Redding's Russia Salve is an invaluable dressing for inflamed and sore joints. Price 25c.

Mr. W. W. Astor, the American Minister to Rome, has organized an American club in that city for the purpose of affording facilities to visitors. The rooms of the club-house are well furnished and have reading, billiard, card, dress and conversation rooms.

Miss Lizzie G. Shaw, the bride of Thaxter Shaw, of Dexter, Me. received $60,000 in wedding presents.

GOUNOD ON MODERN MUSIC.

The Coming Master to Restore the Simplicity of Mozart and Rossini.

From an Interview in London.

"To my mind the intellectual tendency of the art of music is greater than the sentimental to-day, but the great fault of music now is that it is complex and not simple. Masters are too apt to study the effects of a hautboy, of a violin, of a flute—questions of detail—and to disregard the great value of the tout ensemble—the expression, in its completeness, of an idea. It was not always so. Rossini and Mozart, for example, were both sublimely simple. All the greatest things are always simple. Rossini composed divinely from divine inspiration. It is as though God had ordered him to sing and he sang—naturally, easily and spontaneously. It was his nature, and there was no effort. The same was true of Mozart."

"What is your opinion of the art of music now?" inquired the interviewer.

"Like everything else, it is in a transitory stage. It is not wholly sentimental or wholly practical. When the two are wedged together it will be sublime, and the fact of our being in this transitory state gives me confidence. There is strength in weakness, and where there is opposition to truth, truth would be the loser. We gain the strength and experience by combat and failure, and it is always after a transitory and hesitating stage like the present that the grandest epoch comes, when ideality and reality go hand in hand, when faith and reason are one. The time will come, rely upon it, although perhaps neither you nor I will see it. It is the natural evolution of all things, and the history of human thought is as the physical history of this planet. As years and centuries roll on we shall see things clearer, until at length faith and reason will be as one, and things which we now consider supernatural will be natural. Music is only one phase of thought, and in consequence its present condition and its future I cannot seperate it from other forms of thought. They all have the same history and will eventually meet with the same full completeness and perfect power."

"But what will be the result of this present complex condition of the theory of music in Europe?"

"Why, naturally from this complexity will spring simplicity. The next great master will be as simple as Mozart or Rossini. He will come as a giant and break all, but with the fragments of what he has broken he will erect a splendid temple—Power; powerful, because it is truth, and simple, because it is true and powerful. As it is with the history of any art, so it is with the history of nations. Germany has been for years the head, the reason, the intelligence; and France, the heart, the sentiment. The day will come when they will understand each other and be as one."

Aaron Burr as a Cross-Examiner.

A writer thus describes the conclusion of a case in which Burr was one of the lawyers: The evening session opened and Burr resumed his cross-examination of the witness. It was a test of the profound skill and sobriety of the lawyer, the self-possession, courage and tact of the witness standing on the very brink of a horrible gulf firmly and intrepidly resisting the efforts of the terrible man to topple him over. At last, after dexterously leading the witness to an appropriate point, Burr suddenly seized a lamp in each hand, and holding them in such a manner that their light fell instantaneously upon the face of the witness, he exclaimed in a startling voice, like the voice of the avenger of blood: "Gentlemen of the jury behold the murderer!"

With a wild, convulsive start, face of ashy palor, eyes starting from their sockets, lips apart, his whole attitude evincing terror, the man sprang from his chair. For a moment he stood motionless struggling to recover his self-possession. But it was only a momentary struggle, shaking every nerve with paralyzing fear. Conscious that the eyes of all in the court-room were fixed upon him, reading the hidden deeds of his life, he left the witness stand and walked shrinkingly to the door of the court-room, but he was prevented from making his escape by the sheriff. The effect can be better imagined than described. It struck the spectators with silent awe, changing the whole aspect of the trial in an instant, overthrowing the hypothesis of the attorney general, which he was convinced would send the prisoner to the gallows, saving an innocent man from the dreadful hands of a bold and skillful perjurer. The false witness was arrested, two indictments were found against him, one for murder another for perjury. He was acquitted for murder, but subsequently convicted for perjury, and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment.

Truth and Honor.

Query:—What is the best family medicine in the world to regulate the bowels, purify the blood, remove costiveness and billiousness, aid digestion and tone up the whole system? Truth and honor compels us to answer, Hop Bitters, being pure, perfect and harmless. See another column.—Toledo Blade.

The most comfortable boot in town is that with Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners, 25c. a pair.

Young, old, and middle-aged women get health and strength by using Brown's Iron Bitters.

Counterfeiting.

Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters has proved to be the finest thing of the kind ever discovered, and consequently dishonest persons are counterfeiting them.

The genuine is put up in round black bottles holding 1 1-2 pts. with a white lithographed label on one side bearing the signature of J. P. Allen, and a yellow label on the other side. These are the old genuine and original Allen's Iron Tonic Bitters, and if they had not been good no one would have thought of counterfeiting them. This is no advertising dodge. Look out for frauds.

Personal—Men Only.

The Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich., will send Dr. Dye's Celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts and Electric Appliances on trial for thirty days to men (young or old) who are afflicted with nervous debility, lost vitality and kindred troubles, guaranteeing speedy and complete restoration of health and manly vigor. Address as above. N. B.—No risk is incurred, as thirty days' trial is allowed.

Irritation of the Throat and Hoarseness immediately relieved by "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Price 25 cts. Sold only in boxes.

Mensman's Peptonized Beef Tonic, the only preparation of beef containing its entire nutritious properties. It contains blood-making, force-generating and life-sustaining properties; invaluable for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, nervous prostration, and all forms of general debility; also, in all enfeebled conditions, whether the result of exhaustion, nervous prostration, overwork, or acute disease, particularly if resulting from pulmonary complaints. CASWELL, HAZARD & Co., Proprietors, New York. Sold by Druggists.

THE OLDEST MEDICINE IN THE WORLD IS probably Dr. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription and has been in constant use for nearly a century, and notwithstanding the many other preparations that have been introduced into the market, the sale of this article is constantly increasing. If the directions are followed, it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits.
JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., Troy, N. Y.

SURE CURE for Epilepsy or Fits in 24 hours. Free to poor. Dr. Kruse, 2844 Arsenal st., St. Louis, Mo.

1883 NORTH STAR ★ SEED FARMS 1883
GO TO HEADQUARTERS FOR
EARLY MINNESOTA SWEET CORN

Educated and practical growers now assent to our motto "That the further North Seeds are grown the earlier their product will be." We offer this year a full line of Standard Potatoes, true to name, grown on dry upland; Scotch Fyfe and Blue Stem Wheat; White Russian Oats; Stumpes Cabbage, said to be one week earlier than Early York; our North Star Yellow Dent Corn still takes the lead, and for fodder is equal to any; of onion seed, tomatoes, carrots, peas, &c., &c., a full line and large crop, all 1883 growth on our own farms. Wild Rice for duck ponds always on hand for Spring or Fall sowing. 7th Annual Catalogue, Free. T. M. METCALF, Grower, Importer & Jobber, St. Paul, Minn.

ROYAL

FULL WEIGHT
ROYAL BAKING POWDER

BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.

This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans. ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

No Whiskey!

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is one of the very few tonic medicines that are not composed mostly of alcohol or whiskey, thus becoming a fruitful source of intemperance by promoting a desire for rum.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is guaranteed to be a non-intoxicating stimulant, and it will, in nearly every case, take the place of all liquor, and at the same time absolutely kill the desire for whiskey and other intoxicating beverages.

Rev. G. W. RICE, editor of the American Christian Review, says of Brown's Iron Bitters:

> Cin., O., Nov. 16, 1881.
> Gents:—The foolish wasting of vital force in business, pleasure, and vicious indulgence of our people, makes your preparation a necessity; and if applied, will save hundreds who resort to saloons for temporary recuperation.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS has been thoroughly tested for dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, weakness, debility, overwork, rheumatism, neuralgia, consumption, liver complaints, kidney troubles, &c., and it never fails to render speedy and permanent relief.

$5 TO $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

YOUNG MEN learn TELEGRAPHY here and we will give you a situation. Circulars free. VALENTINE BROS., Janesville, Wis.

PATENTS NO PATENT, NO PAY! R. S. & A. P. LACEY, Patent Attorneys, Washington, D. C. Full instructions and hand book on PATENTS SENT FREE.

FREE For Information & Maps of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Texas, write to E. H. SMITH, 46 Clark Street, Chicago.

PENSIONS Soldiers on any disease, wound, injury. Parents, widows and children are entitled. Millions Appropriated. Fee $10. Increase pensions, bounty, back pay and honorable discharges procured. New laws. Send stamp for instructions and bounty table. N. W. FITZGERALD & Co., Attorneys, Box 588, Washington, D. C.

POTATOES Do not grow old, degenerated sorts when a small amount will buy our VIGOROUS SORTS, increasing crops 3 to 10 fold! New Spring Wheat, Oats, &c. All kinds of SEEDS AND PLANTS. JNO. A. SALZER, La Crosse, Wis. Catalogue free.

KIDNEY-WORT
HAS BEEN PROVED
The SUREST CURE for
KIDNEY DISEASES.
Does a lame back or disordered urine indicate that you are a victim? THEN DO NOT HESITATE; use Kidney-Wort at once, (druggists recommend it) and it will speedily overcome the disease and restore healthy action.
Ladies. For complaints peculiar to your sex, such as pain and weaknesses, Kidney-Wort is unsurpassed, as it will act promptly and safely.
Either Sex. Incontinence, retention of urine, brick dust or ropy deposits, and dull dragging pains, all speedily yield to its curative power.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. Price $1.
Acts at the Same Time on Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.
KIDNEY-WORT

"THE NEW" ELASTIC TRUSS
Has a Pad differing from all others, is cup shape, with Self-Adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the Ball in the cup presses back the Intestines just as a person would with the Finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.
EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

SAVE MONEY

By buying at dealers' prices. We will sell you any article for family or personal use, in any quantity at Wholesale Price. Whatever you want, send for our catalogue (free) and you will find it there. We carry in stock the largest variety of goods in the United States.
MONTGOMERY WARD & CO.
227 & 229 Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease, to any sufferer. Give Express and P. O. address.
DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good.
Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

WHEAT GROWERS!
Why will it pay you to get some of the Saskatchewan Fife Wheat
For next spring's seeding? Because it is the PURE SCOTCH FIFE. Because it is nearly twice as prolific as the Wheat now grown here. Because it is a week earlier. Because it is healthy. Because leading millers and wheat men have pronounced it the best milling wheat to-day in the Northwest.
Write to ABERNETHY & WELLMAN, of Minneapolis, for Circulars giving full description.

THE
PACIFIC NORTHWEST!
Oregon, Washington & Idaho.

Offers the best field for Emigrants—viz.: a mild, equitable, and healthy climate; cheap lands of great fertility, producing all varieties of Grain, Fruit, and Grasses, in wonderful abundance; an inexhaustible supply of Timber; vast Coal Fields, and other mineral deposits; cheap and quick transportation by railroads and river navigation; direct commerce with all parts of the world, owing to its proximity to the Pacific Ocean.

NO DROUTHS, NO INSECT PESTS, NO HURRICANES, WHIRLWINDS, or OTHER DESTRUCTIVE PHENOMENA.

The Lands of the Pacific Northwest show an average yield of wheat per acre largely in excess of that of any other section of the United States.

No failure of crops has ever occurred.

Oregon Wheat commands a higher price than that of any other country in the Liverpool market.

An immense area of very fertile Railroad and Government Lands, within easy reach of the trunk lines of the Northern Pacific R. R., the Oregon Railway & Navigation, and the Oregon & California R. R. Co's and their numerous branches in the great Valleys of the Columbia and its tributaries, are now offered for sale at Low Prices, and on Easy Terms, or open to pre-emption and Homestead Entry.

The great movement of population to the Columbia region now in progress will be enormously increased by the completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Co.'s systems. This renders certain a rapid increase in the value of Lands now open to purchase or to entry under the United States Land Laws.

For Pamphlets and Maps, descriptive of the country, its resources, climate, routes of travel, rates and full information, address

A. L. STOKES,
General Eastern Agent,
52 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER
FREE WITH EACH
FREE WITH EACH
WHITE
EVERY BOBBIN SMOOTH AS A SPOOL OF SILK
A THIRD MORE THREAD ON EVERY BOBBIN.
SEWING MACHINE
ADDRESS
WHITE SEWING MACHINE CO.
CLEVELAND, O.

A HOUSEHOLD FAVORITE.
COLE'S Carbolisalve
Is the Best External Remedy Known.

It will immediately relieve the pain of Scalds and Burns and cure the worst case without leaving a scar.

IT POSITIVELY CURES

PILES, FEVER SORES, INDOLENT ULCERS, CHAPS, CHAFES, CUTS, WOUNDS, BRUISES, CHILBLAINS, SCALY ERUPTIONS, ITCHINGS AND IRRITATIONS, AND ALL DISEASES OF THE SKIN AND SCALP.

Get Cole's Carbolisalve; the wrapper on the genuine is black and the letters green. Small boxes, 25c.; large boxes, 75c.

Cole's Carbolisoap

Is cleansing, healing and refreshing; free from all impurities, and is unequaled for the Toilet and Bath. Prepared only by
J. W. COLE & CO., Black River Falls, Wis.
Sold by all druggists and dealers in medicine.

ADD TO YOUR INCOME
Club 13 of the Mutual Investment
Club offers the surest means of making regular monthly profits from investments of $10 to $1000 or more dealing in
GRAIN, PROVISIONS & STOCKS
Each member gets the benefit of combined capital of the Club. Reports sent weekly. Dividends paid monthly. Club 13 paid shareholders back their money in profits in past three months, still leaving original amount making money in Club, or returned on demand. Shares, $10 each. Explanatory circulars sent free. Reliable correspondents wanted everywhere. Address R. E. KENDALL & Co., Com'n Mchts., 177 & 179 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Health is Wealth!

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATMENT: a specific for Hysteria, Dizziness, Convulsions, Nervous Headache, Mental Depression, Loss of Memory, Spermatorrhœa, Impotency, Involuntary Emissions, Premature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, self-abuse, or over-indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. One box will cure recent cases. Each box contains one month's treatment. One dollar a box, or six boxes for five dollars; sent by mail prepaid on receipt of price. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our written guarantee to return the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. Guarantees issued by LAMBIE & CO., Druggists, Third street, corner Wabasha, St. Paul, Minn. Orders by mail will receive prompt attention.

SEEDS.

R. W. WOODVILLE, Northfield, Minn., Grower and Dealer in best Garden and Flower Seeds for this climate; sent postage paid. Catalogues free.

SAMARITAN CURES AND NEVER FAILS. NERVINE

Is unfailing and infallible in curing Epileptic Fits, Spasms, Convulsions, St. Vitus Dance, Alcoholism, Opium Eating, Nervous debility, Scrofula and all Nervous and Blood diseases. To Clergymen, Lawyers, Literary men, Merchants, Bankers, Ladies and all whose sedentary employment causes Nervous Prostration, Irregularities of the blood, stomach, bowels or kidneys, or who require a nerve tonic, appetiser or stimulant, Samaritan Nervine is invaluable. Thousands proclaim it the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system. For sale by all Druggists. THE DR. S. A. RICHMOND MEDICAL CO., Sole Proprietors, St. Joseph, Mo.

HAIR Send postal for Ill'st'd Catalog. HULL'S Hair Store, 38 & 40 Monroe, Chicago

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

When writing to advertisers please say you saw their advertisement in this paper.

POPPING THE QUESTION.

Proposals of Marriage—Leap-Year Privilege—How De Lesseps Won His Wife—The Suez Celebration.

The proposals of marriage is a modern Eleysinian mystery, but with no organized society to give it a uniform ritual or to communicate its mode. There is no uniform receipe for it, nor can one be precribed which shall be infallible while another is uncertain. No one sees how it is consummated except the parties immediately interested, and if it is crowned with success they do not, I am told, remember a year later, the exact manner and phraseology of it.

"It would be an interesting study," says a writer in Demorest's Magazine, "to turn over a hundred or more of the best novels and romances, and witness the way this happy—or as often unhappy—event is described and set forth in them. But I do not propose to do this. In Mr. Howell's story, "Dr. Bruce's Practice," the real proposal comes at last from the heroine herself, in which she was justified, I make free to say, not perhaps by Mrs. Grundy, but by the soundest canons of common sense. If she had not been undergoing a long tutelage in a profession which is still mainly outside of the feminine field, she might not have been equal to this effect. At least, a good many others who should be are not."

To all the various kinds of proposals—suggestive, point blank, or other—one maxim, I think, of the wisdom of the world applies, namely—that you must not, unless you are away from the object of your love, make the first declaration of regard and affection through pen and ink. Except in rare cases, nothing but failure comes of it, though when the subject has been properly begun, in a proper way, the employment of stationery may prove, in wise hands, a valuable auxiliary process.

But it is the conventional code rather which has solidified itself round this subject which calls for most remark. Doubtless if some genius of a tendency like Herbert Spencer should give us a thorough, radical way its history, with all the whys and wherefores, he would find himself the author of a most unique and wonderful treatise. The etiquette, as it it now stands seems to be not the product of the feminine mind, but its ideal of virtuous essence, and to find its most sturdy support on that side of humanity. And yet it places woman on an enormous inequality. I have been wondering all my life why it is that, in the matter of initiative, a course, unattractive young man should have the privilege to ask any unmarried woman in the whole world to marry him, while his refined and much more accomplished sister must make no motion toward any choice of her own, except to sit still and wait for some other girl's indifferent brother to make a proposal to her. If it be true, as I am assured, that the most attractive young lady cannot hope to have more than from six to twelve offers at the most in a lifetime, and practically must depend on much less than this number of eligible ones, then, while her field of secondary choice is pitifully small, her brother's is absolutely unlimited, amounting, in fact, to hundreds of millions. I believe I have asked nearly every prominent lady lecturer on behalf of woman's rights if this is not a state of things that need as much reforming as anything else, and in every instance I got an affirmative answer. But ask almost all other women, and you will get the opposite answer.

I have long suspected—if the gentle feminine reader will pardon the heresy—that the present custom of masculine exclusiveness in the matter of marriage proposal is little less than a survival from Asiatic barbarism. It is a signal of a small remnant of that tremendous science of feminine disabilities, of which something more is left in Asia, which gives the European and Western man a partial kinship to the high pretensions of the Shah and Sultan. It pleases him, no doubt, and why should it not?

The so-called leap-year prerogative has evidently grown out of the suspicion that the existing order of things has somewhere a defect, or a weak side; and has been offered as a make-weight against the injustice. But every one knows that all talk about it in society is only a part of that universal habit of joking and levity which surrounds marriage and the marriage proposal. It is true a joke may break the ice sometimes over deeper waters, and may prove the avenue to seriousness. Except in some such way, it is not a matter that has ever essentially modified the system we are considering. We read sometimes of instances in which a lady has availed herself of the matrimonial privilege. One such case, cited by a writer in a late English magazine, is worth quoting here:

"As the controversy has often been waged," says this writer, "as to whether it is competent for a lady to pop the question, even so far as the leap-year is concerned, an interesting example may be quoted, the heroine being no other than the wife of M. de Lesseps. This distinguished lady was at La Chesnave, when all Europe was astir about the achievements of the Suez enterprise. One day, in the garden, she saw De Lesseps walking on a terrace. She plucked a rose, and going up to the widower, begged of him, for her sake, to wear it at dinner. He asked her whether she did not mean it for his son. No; it was for himself. De Lesseps explained to her that he was on the wrong side of sixty, while she was not yet nineteen. That it did not matter what his age was had never occurred to her. She had only thought of his grandness and goodness. In short, he was her beau ideal, How was it possible for a man to be reared on the sunny side of a Pyrenean mountain to reason down the feelings this confession aroused? Time was given to Mademoiselle to reflect, and she was made to understand that no friendship would be lost were she to change her mind after the banns had been published. The marriage, however, was celebrated contemporaneously with the Suez fetes. As the young lady referred to was reared under the French code of manners, which is almost one of oriental strictness, the reader can judge whether this pretty piece of romance is likely to be founded on fact." The writer having seen the same account, told in the same way at the time of the event, hopes it may be.

One of the worst features of this unmitigated silence which is imposed upon one sex alone is the insincerity and hypocrisy which it not only inculcates, but places a premium upon. Nothing irritates a woman so much as to have any ground given for a suggestion that she has gone a step out of her way to secure a gentleman's interest or attention. She would rather be won by a peasant than move the least bit aggressively to win a prince. Her natural feelings are smothered and suppressed, and she accepts the artifice which she must put on, as if it were both reasonable and natural.

It is not very likely that any such revolution as I have hinted at will occur in our generation, however grievous the disabilities of women may be; but, when we consider that some of the civilizations which are not Puritans and Anglo-Saxon, have mediatorial methods of bringing about marriage—in which third parties play the chief part—it is not lunacy to suggest that modifications may be produced in time, in our habits, when we become more in unison with the rest of the world. It is certain that, even now, the marriage proposal, as it exists here, is as shocking to French ideas, as any other mode than ours is to us—so tyrannically do convictions rule us. If we can outlive this conviction, it will doubtless be by exceptions and by degrees. Let us hope that some day, by the quiet and delicate intermediacy of some wise tribunal—if not otherwise—a young lady or a woman may secure a privilege of choice in matters of the highest consequence that can only now happen by a lucky accident. In this era, the poet's pretty test will have a positive value:

"Thou shalt know him, when he comes
(Welcome youth!)
Not by any din of drums,
Nor the vintage of his airs;
Neither by his crown,
Nor his gown,
Nor by anything he wears.
He shall only well-known be,
By the holy Harmony
That his coming makes in thee!"

Personal Gossip.

John Ubalta, of Beaver, Pa., one of "Tennyson's Six Hundred," who died last week, was wounded in the leg during the famous charge. He was discharged from service on account of physical incapacity, went to London, and afterward to Holland, the East Indies, Borneo, Sumatra, Canada, and to Beaver in 1872. He leaves one son.

An almost incredible instance of lost identity is brought to light in a letter written by a woman in Mexico, Mo., to a grocer in Detroit. In 1844 the said woman was a resident of Detroit. She married and moved away, and now, on account of death or removal of all the persons she knew years ago, she is unable to prove by documentery evidence or living witness that she is the person whom she claims to be, and whom she doubtless really is. An interest in an estate hinges upon her success at self-identification.

The party of twelve men, headed by Lieut. Garlington, who will start to the relief of Lieut. Greeley from St. John's, Newfoundland, will leave for the north about June 15, considerably earlier than last year's party. There is no doubt of their ability to work through the middle-pack in Baffin's bay, and to reach the lower end of Smith's sound by the middle of July. Whether they will be able to steam up the sound depends, of course, on the condition of the ice. If they cannot go north in the vessel, the stores will be landed at Life-Boat cove, and the party will make preparations to winter and to start sledges northward to the relief of Greeley.

Kee-Wee, a cannibal, has been visiting Pittsburg. He is a South sea savage, a chief of the Maori tribe, of New Zealand. His cheeks are tattooed in a manner no doubt pleasing to himself, but not æsthetically beautiful. He does not like to be considered an epicure of human flesh, but he refers with pride to the fact that his father killed the famous Cheif Kerecora and ate his eyes. The eyes of white men are considered a rare delicacy by the Maoris.

The wife of Robert Coombe, of Toronto, Ont., has for years been afflicted with mental aberration, which physicians called insanity, and which the devoted family called harmless delusions. For six years the afflicted lady has been nursed by her three daughters, over whose minds there came little by little the terrible malady of their mother. On Sunday they were seen behaving very strangely on Yonge street. The nurse summoned a policeman, and in the end the three young girls were taken to the Toronto Asylum, from which they had so long saved their mother. The disease is, of course, hereditary, as proved by the fact that the mother and brother of Mrs. Coombe died in insane asylums.

Judge Pitman, of the Superior Court of Boston, often says a bright thing. The other day a case came up wheerin the plaintiff sued a constable for the conversion of a lot of liquors, and the principal witness for the plaintiff was questioned as to the daily profits of the business. A lawyer followed his inquiry with another as to the daily receipts, when Judge Pitman with a smile interrupted and said, "O never mind; where there probably such difference between the receipts and the profits."

Nearly every Congressman is just now somewhat in the predicament of the famous Light Brigade, which charged so gallantly at Balaklava. He has protectionists before him, free-traders behind him, steel-rail men on one side of him and coal-miners on the other side—all trying to talk at once. Tobacco and whisky, ships and crockery, books and barbed wire—each and every manufacturing interest, in short, has its representatives some of them having the "gift of gab" which distinguishes a London patterer. The most importunate are the representatives of small interests, who are unqualifiedly in favor of a general reduction of duties, but want their own articles left unchanged, alleging that it requires peculiarly skilled labor.

The warden of the Illinois penitentiary has collected figures as to the death rate in penal institutions, and astonishing variations are shown. While at Sing Sing the yearly deaths from 1,000 inmates number less than 7, at Auburn they are 12, and at Clinton over 20. The lowest rates is 3 in Wisconsin, and the highest is 77 in Mississippi. He says that the practice of letting convicts work in mines and upon railroads without food or lodgings, causes frightful destruction of life in several southern states, but he cannot understand why the figure is so high as 48, in New Hampshire.

Wendell Phillips, in his old age, likes to talk about the fiery years of the struggle against slavery. To Mr. Fortune, colored, the editor of the New York Globe, he related the other day how he went to a New York hotel in 1863 to pass the night. The proprietor handed him his satchel back, saying: "We have no vacant rooms." "Do you mean that or do you mean you do not desire to accommodate Wendell Phillips?" asked Mr. Phillips. "I mean I do not care to accommodate you, sir." Mr. Phillips walked away more in pity than disgust.

Mr. S. G. W. Benjamin, the accomplished artist and writer, who has just been appointed American consul general for Persia, was born at Argos, Greece, in 1837, and after eight years' residence in various parts of that country and the Greek Islands, he went with his father (an American missionary, and for two years acting consul at Athens) to Turkey, where he remained till he was twenty. After graduating at Williams College, he returned to the East and spent about a year in travel.

More About Mrs. Tilton.

A Brooklyn telegram says: A special telegram from New York, which is now going the rounds of the press, does Theodore Tilton great injustice in stating that his wife, from which he is separated but not divorced, is in such straightened circumstances that she was compelled to hire out as nurse. The one instance when Mrs. Tilton did this was more for the purpose of occupying her mind than to secure remuneration, and she ceased acting the part of a nurse after ten days' experiment, at the earnest solicitation of her daughter, Mrs. Florence Pelton. The assertion that Mrs Tilton had to support her daughter is also untrue. Mr. Pelton is in delicate health, but is quite wealthy. Another daughter, Mrs. Alice Gardine, lives in Chicago, her husband, John Gardine, having a lucrative position in a bank of that city. Mr. Tilton's son has a good situation in New York. Mr. Tilton contributes amply to the support of Mrs. Tilton, giving never less than $1,000 a year, and more when it seems necessary. Mr. Tilton invariably expresses great respect for Mrs. Tilton whenever he refers to her in conversation with particular friends.

A Over-Zealous Stage Hero.

Years ago, in the early days of the Comstock excitement Pat Holland, now Postmaster and Coroner in a little town in Cachise County, Arizona, was the most respected man in the state. He had the reputation of being a deadshot with a pistol. Of course this accomplishment made him feared by everybody, and there was no man in Virginia so bold as to cross him in public. Pat acquired his reputation by shooting on the stage and could knock an apple off his son's head with an accuracy and carelessness which combined to impress the public far more than the manner in which the painstaking William Tell performed the feat with an arrow. Finally Pat secured a young lady who would allow an apple to be shot off her flaxen roll, and when Pat executed the feat he would throw his keen eye at the girl and then roll his orbs up into the gallery, and without looking at his mark send a bullet through the fruit. This was put down on the bills as "Pat Holland's pyschological feat of shooting from memory," and drew crowded houses.

One night he advertised to shoot apples from twelve young ladies' heads in succession, and only take one look at the crowd. Piper's Opera-House was packed with men at $1 a head, and when the curtain rose twelve immaculate ballot dancers were in line along the wings, each with an apple on her head. Pat stepped amid the footlights, and bowed amid tremendous applause. He had a six-shooter in each hand, and the stage manager announced that he would shoot the last six apples with his hand. Casting his eye along the line, he took a long breath, a steady position, and then faced the audience. Lifting his revolver, he began to shoot in rapid succession, and the apples began to fly out of sight amid the breathless silence of the audience. The curious part of the performance, however, lay in the fact that by the time Pat had fired six shots all the apples had disappeared, yet he kept right on banging away with his left hand, amid roars of laughter and derision. To cap the climax, two apples got tangled together and remained dangling from the edge of a scene in plain sight of the audience. The trick was at once apparent. Each apple had a fine thread attached, and at the shot was jerked quickly out of sight. The supes behind the scenes who pulled the strings got confused at Pat's rapid firing, and half the apples disappeared before the time. Two were snatched off simultaneously, and the strings overlapping in the air brought the apples together, where they hung to the edge of the scene, the strings being on each side. This ended Holland's career as a public soloist on the pistol, and the public gradually came to look upon him as an ordinary mortal. Soon after this he got into a street row in Pioche and fired twelve shots in a densely populated portion of the city without killing a man. But for attempting to do too much at once he might have gone to congress from this state years ago.—Carson (Nev.) Appeal.

Queen Victoria's Yachts.

It has been denied by the British Admiralty that the queen's principal yacht, the Victoria and Albert, shall be repaired, and that a new yacht, accordingly, shall not be built. For building a new yacht in her place, there would be, says the Pall Mall Gazette, no justification whatever, because, during the last ten years she has not been used by the queen for half as many weeks." Her sole service is declared to have been to convey her majesty to Cherbourg and back on the rare occasions when she has visited the continent. This is an amount of work to which her annual cost seems "monstrously out of proportion." Besides the Victoria and Albert there exists the Osborne, (1,850 tons,) always available, the Alberta, (370) tons, and the Elfin, (90) tons. The same paper remarks that the annual pay of the officers and seamen employed on these four vessels amounts to over £16,000, and that last year over £8,000 were paid to workmen in Portsmouth Dock-yard who were employed on them. There are further charges in connection with them amounting to at least £10,000 a year, while they are altered and redecorated with startling frequency, which entail additional expenditure.

A Good Note from Bob Ingersoll.

The Clover-leaf Club of Philadelphia, composed of journalists, library men, and other congenial spirits, had a dinner in Philadelphia a few evenings since Colonel Ingersoll sent the following letter of regret: "I regret that it is impossible for me to be in "clover' with you to-morrow. A wonderful thing is clover It means honey and cream; that is to say, industry and contentment: that is to say the happy bees in perfumed fields, and at the cottage-gate Old Boss, the bountiful, serenly chewing satisfaction's cud, in that blessed twilight pause, that like a benediction falls between all toil and sleep. This clover makes me dream of happy hours—of childhood's rosy cheeks—of dimpled babes—of wholesome loving wives—of honest men—of springs and brooks and violets, and all there is of stainless joy in human life. A wonderful word is clover! Drop the 'C' and you have the happiest of mankind. Take away the 'C' and 'r' and you have left the only thing that makes a heaven of this dull and barren earth. Cut off the 'r' alone, and there remains a warm, deceitful bud that sweetens breath and keeps the countless homes whose masters frequent clubs. After all, Bottom was right: 'Good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.'"

Portrait of Bill Nye.

It now transpires that Bill Nye, the Laramie Boomerang man, has been laid up with gout, instead of mountain fever, as previously announced. What walking he does now is by the aid of a crutch and cane. He is going to make a trip to New York in a few weeks, and the Yankees will then be afforded an opportunity of seeing what manner of man the justly-famed humorist of the plains is. They will find him a tall, well-shaped fellow, about 38 years of age, with regular features, a close-cropped brown beard, sharp brown eyes, a fine forehead, and a bald head with a fringe of brown hair. He dresses simply and in good taste. It is only occassionally that his humor corps out in conversation, and his manners are otherwise mild. He appreciates a good story, a well-made cocktail, a mild cigar, and plug tobacco. He appears to be fond of the society of ladies, and is invariably to be found in their presence when not corralled by the men folks who court his company.—Denver Tribune.

A Catholic priest in Lynn, Mass., has been sued for $10,000 for denouncing a physician in his pulpit.

FARMERS' COLUMN.

Farmer's Miscellany.

Our agricultural fairs have without doubt accomplished much good. Through them new breeds of animals and new varieties of seed and garden products have been introduced to the notice of many who had no previous opportunity of seeing them. Still but few who visit them become acquainted with the different methods of production. They serve to show what has been done, but do not impart the knowledge that a live experimental station affords to the public.

A Chicago gentleman who has spent much time in England and Scotland says that greater importance is attached to the potato crop there than here. He states that potatoes are found on the tables of the rich and poor alike at each meal and that the general healthful condition of the people is largely due to this fact. As our country becomes more densely populated more attention will probably be given to this crop, and we shall hear of potato growing states as we now hear of wheat, corn, tobacco and cotton growing states.

Jacob Van Doren, of Muscatine, Iowa, writes us: Molasses making with me this fall was a decided success. Made 4,223 gallons of the best average quality that I ever made. Defecated the juice in five pans, and finished with steam. I had sixteen acres of cane that made 1,764 gallons of molasses. I raised Minnesota Early Amber and Neeazand or small white Imphee. I like the last named cane the best, will send you a gallon of it in a few days by express. I had 2,300 gallons to sell: 1,800 are sold at 65 cents per gallon.

Farmers who burn green wood are probably not aware of the waste of heat. The sap uses up—that is, carries off in a latent state—a very large portion of the heat produced by its carbon, or its dry material. As much man and team power is required to haul three or four cords of green wood as for six or eight cords of dry wood. The lesson is: cut the fuel, and split it as finely as it is to be used, in the grove; haul it home when well-dried, and keep it in a dry place for use. It will be worth far more for heating purposes than if burned green, or wet, or damp even. The only exceptions to this advice is, when by reason of easier hauling on snow, and on account of the leisure of men and teams in winter, it may be expedient to haul home the green wood then; but in all cases let it be well dried before it is used.

The Power of Woman's Beauty Over Man.

Since the days of Helen of Troy beautiful women have influenced events in an astonishing degree. Mrs. Lantry's advent in this country induces the London Spectator to moralize after this fashion:

All women, even the ugliest, feel that beauty is a weapon on their side in the battle of life; like to see it exert a force, and when it is great, and, so to speak, beyond criticism, admire it with genuine heartiness—heartiness as real as that which men show in their admiration for strength manifested in any conspicuous way. It is usual to say women decree beauty, but that is a blunder caused by stretching instances into a law. Of all decorations, the one least grudged by men is the "V. C.," and that whether the admirers be in themselves brave or timid; and of all sources of success, women grudge beauty the least.

They may deny it is beauty, but if they admit it they are so far content. Let any one of the thousand cynics now lounging in London ask himself whether an English prince who made a mesalliance for money or for beauty would sooner be forgiven, or whether the love match of Napoleon III was not the main cause of that popularity with English women which outlasted everything but his surrender. They thought he should have performed the impossibility of "cutting his way through." To this very hour the deep feeling of English women for the French Empress, though founded, of course, on pity, is greatly assisted by the recollection among the middle-aged of a triumph so conspicuous, and so visibly owing to personal charm. This kind of female interest is universal, and extends in a more languid degree of the men who find in any national appreciation of beauty not only the charm which springs from kinship in taste, but an excuse for a secret imbecility, a powerlessness in presence of the attraction, which they all resent and feel. We wonder if, beside all this, there is any residuum of the old Greek feeling of beauty was a clear good in itself, a harmony, something which indicated that the gods of nature were not essentially and at heart hostile to man. Many artists say so, and to judge by the extent of feeling, almost of pious feelings, excited by the beauty of scenery—the positive esteem felt in England or Switzerland, for instance, for being so beautiful a place—the feeling should be general, but we doubt it it is so. If it were we should more often hear of the beauty of kings and men in high places, but is a remark never made by the most abject courtier.

The next Prince who ascends a throne anywhere will have his praises and qualities hymned on the European wires, but if he were an Apollo or a Jove, the bulletin-makers would feel instinctively that to say so would be regarded not as adulation, but as ridicule. It is for women to be beautiful, for men to be dignified—the latter a credit arising from a different order of ideas, the idea of harmony between place and appearance in the world. We should doubt if beauty were admired in the abstract very consciously, but that the interest excited by beautiful women rivals the interest excited by beautiful scenery, and this among those who never see either, except in pictures, we have no doubt whatever.

Carp Culture.

Never try carp culture except in ponds. Do not commence in any ready-made pond, especially a mill pond. Never place carp in open streams till you have an overstock of young ones. Never make carp ponds over the bed of streams except at the extreme head. Never make them in deep ravines or shaded places. Never make them anywhere till you know something of the business. Except in rare cases, never use wood or masonry in their construction, beyond what is required for the indispensable collectors and sluices. Never feed carp till near the time they will be required for market and the table, and then only in feeding-vats or live-boxes that can be flushed daily. This is about all the attention they will require from the time they are hatched till ready for market. Don't think of turning carp into their pasture till there is plenty of feed growing in it. Don't put carp where there are other fish, not even minnows. And finally, don't expect to succeed in the business till you avail yourselves of the experience of those who have acquired a knowledge of it at the cost of years of time and large sums of money.

Drilling Onions.

The best time to drill onion seed is as soon as the frost is out of the ground and it is dry enough for preparation; then set all hands at work and rush it through. No matter if it is only the first of March, don't be afraid of after freezing; it won't hurt them. I have frequently known the ground to be frozen to a crust after onions were up, without any perceivable damage. The reason for early planting is obvious, when it is known that onion seed will germinate at a lower tempeature than most other seeds, while weed seeds require a much higher temperature; consequently the onions will make their appearance many days before any weeds, enabling one to commence cultivation before any weeds are seen, and thus keep weeds in check. Fall plowing facilitates early spring preparation, making early drilling practicable. After the ground has been made fine and mellow, drill four pounds of seed to the acre, in rows at one foot apart.—Landreth's on Onion Culture.

By An "Awful Man."

Having heard a good deal recently of the complaints that women have not half a chance in this world, and been called upon often and often to sympathize over blighted ambitions of wives and mothers, a "thoughtful citizen" bethought himself to observe them in their long vacations, when, all furbelows and puffings being duly stowed away, a little respite from housekeeping and sewing machines was sought in country places. Then, if ever, the ideal of life might have its opportunity. It has been interesting to note the books chosen for summer reading, the plans laid for enjoyment, the conversation most delighted in. Statistics then collected show that not one woman in fifty cares for the fauna or flora of the neighborhood where she elects to pass two months. She has no interest—perhaps because no proper intelligence—in natural history, in botany, or in astronomy. She will paint, when she cannot draw correctly, and lose herself in a crewel sea of embroidery when the ocean and its wonders are all unnoted. Gorgeous and cloud masses elicit less attention than the combinations of worsteds. Poetry, science, nor even the best fiction is to be seen in her hands. After all the music lessons one hears of at the conservatories and elsewhere, not one, often in a large hotel full of women, can give pleasure upon instrument or with voice. Does this sound uncharitable? It is an opinion based upon experience and given with sad earnestness.—Boston Transcript.

Warm Stables Economical.

I found out years ago that a few loads of manure used to bank up the stables around the foundations was one of the best things that could be done to save feed, for it is true that stock in a warm stable will eat less and require less to keep in good condition than when the cold wind is allowed to blow into it. A few hours' labor in this way will stop the cracks and make stables several degrees warmer. It is queer that farmers do not appreciate this, which means a saving of fodder. When an animal is obliged to stand or lie on a floor as cold as ice, it costs something—a great deal more than farmers imagine. As barns are usually constructed, the foundation walls consist of loose stones more or less tumbled down, through which the wind penetrates making the floor as cold as the air outside. Piling manure along these open foundations will keep the wind out, and then the floor may be warmed by the animals and the higher temperature of the stables. Stock will lie down on such a floor more readily than on a cold one. And this is a comfort, and does not make the drain upon them which standing the most of the time would do. This may be a little item, but it counts nevertheless.

Travesty on Home Hints.

A pretty ornament for a window sash is an old hat. Ram in up to the brim and trim with Hamburg edging. A cheap and pretty bed-room curtain is made by pinning up an old shirt by the sleeves. Never ask for soup twice. It is very ill-bred to sit at the theater and call out "Supe! supe!" An inexpensive improved tidy is made from an old dish-cloth; trim with tarred rope and ornament with bows of red tape. Attach a sockdollager fishhook at the top, and the guest will carry the article to his next calling place, hitched to his coat collar, instead of dropping it in the front hall, as usual. A lovely toilet cushion can be evolved from a large white turnip; trim with Honiton lace, brass bugles, and passementrie, fluted up the back and gored in the center with a polonaise of gunny bagging and demi-train of crash toweling cut pompadour. This will make a simple but tasteful addition to the toilet table.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

Texas Beating the Northwest.

The rapidity with which a "city" is "started" along the lines of the new railroads in the northwest and southwest has, within the last decade, been often a matter of astonishment and amusement to eastern people. Such phenomenal growths seem characteristic of the far west, and have no parallel in the previous history of human immigration.

Take for example the new town of McGregor, Texas. On a certain day in September, a little over a year ago, it was decided and announced that the new line of the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe railway would cross the Texas and St. Louis railway at a certain point.

This was in the afternoon. By ten o'clock the next morning, the entire section about the proposed junction was staked out in house-lots, streets and projected public squares. At noon that day the sale of lots opened; and in three hours five thousand dollars' worth had been sold. Before sunset four hundred and forty-two lots, covering over three hundred acres, were taken up.

The next day the building of houses and the moving in of the people began, and began in earnest. From far out on the prairie, upon all sides, the shanties and houses could be seen, coming on rollers! Before night twelve houses were up, and as many more had arrived. Twice this number of tents, too, had been pitched.

On the third day stores, "saloons" and a "hotel" were opened; and before night the necessity of a municipal government and a "lock-up" was keenly felt and promptly provided for. Thus day by day McGregor "boomed."

Within a few weeks the new "city has been spoken of as "one of the most thriving towns" of the south-west frontier It had given birth to a vigorous newspaper, the McGregor Plaindealer, a recent number of which gives, as an item of the town's business, the statement that fifteen thousand bales of cotton had been exported from that town within the last two months.

Taken as an index of human activity and energy in the west, and of the pressure of the current setting in that direction, such precocious growths are absolutely startling. One cannot help wondering what vent this eager, tumultous current of immigration will find, when the now rapidly filling west is full and the Pacific stops the human tide.—Youth's Companion.

The Insurance Cronicale reports 404 deaths by suicide in three autumn months of 1882. The occupation furnishing by far the greatest number was by farming, fifty-four; next comes merchants, twenty-eight; clerks, twelve; courtesans, ten.

THE ZENITH CITY.

An Authentic History of the Famous Duluth Speech—Proctor Knott to an Interviewer.

Thursday morning a very polite, pleasant gentleman came into my room and told me that on the following Wednesday a bill would come up to improve the harbor at Duluth. I turned to him and said with an honest, questioning smile, "My friend, will you please tell me where Duluth is?" Of course I knew its situation, but I wanted him to understand I did not think much of his bill, and thus the easier refuse his request. He did not see the irony of the remark, but put his hand into his breast pocket and pulled out a map and handed it to me. As soon as I looked at it I saw that here was the finest field for a funny speech that had ever been presented in the country. No one can rightly appreciate that Duluth speech without having seen that map. On its face the whole civilized world was drawn in circles. These circles became smaller and smaller, until they terminated in a dot at the center, and at that dot was written the word "Duluth." On the different circles were the words 100 miles from Duluth, 200 miles from Duluth, 300 miles from Duluth, 1,000 miles from Duluth, 4,000 miles from Duluth, and so on. All the great cities of the country were noticed, and their distances from Duluth given. Chicago, St. Louis, San Francisco and New York on that map looked like hamlets compared with Duluth, and the distances from Liverpool, London and Constantinople were given, as though Duluth was co-equal with them. Below it were printed numerous statistics, showing that here were 2,000,000 square miles, all tributary to Duluth. I looked at the map while the bland young man delivered his eulogy of this prospective metropolis, and as he closed I said: 'Would you have any objections to leaving me this map? I must consider the matter. I live in the interior of Kentucky, in a defile away up at the head of a little creek, and most of my constituents have never seen a ship. I have to be very careful in my conduct in congress to not displease them,'—and went on for some time in this manner. Strange to say he suspected nothing. He not only cheerfully lent me that map, but he gave it to me. As he left my room he looked back and said, "Mr. Knott after you have studied that map I hope you will go for our bill."

"Yes," said I, 'I'll go for it." I never saw him afterwards. On going up to the capitol I could not keep the fun out of my mind. It took entire possession of me and stayed with me. I then saw Mr. Kerr. He told me that Holman had consented to let me have the half hour. It then occurred to me that as Superior City was near Duluth and almost connected with it, that I could make some funny remarks about Duluth in the introduction of my speech on the land subsidy, get the good will of the house and have my time extended indefinitely so that I could deliver my prepared speech. I sent for Friday's Globe and by the next day had thought out many things which I used in the speech. But the great part of it came from the inspiration of the moment. The situation was peculiarly favorable. Every word seemed to be appreciated, and the mind of the audience responded in perfect harmony to mine. After I had spoken out my half hour, I was forced to go on in the same strain or to risk a failure in the sudden change to my sober and carefully prepared sobriety speech. I saw my danger and wound up as I began. The other speech over which I had spent days of labor was never delivered."

"Was you not astonished at the reception of your speech by the country," I asked.

"Yes," was the reply. "I was never more astonished in my life. It was delivered late in the evening, and the house adjourned immediately thereafter The next morning the journals of the country were full of it, and at the capitol everyone was laughing over it and congratulating me."

Singular Will of a King Killer.

Guglielmo Oberdank, who has just been hanged in Rome amid great popular agitation, for his attempt to murder the Emperor of Austria at Trieste last autumn, appears to have left a sort of political will. It was written by him just before crossing the Austrian frontier on his regicidal errand, and sent to his friends, sealed with seven seals, to be opened only after his death. It reads as follows: "I go to accomplish a solemn and important act—solemn because I set about to sacrifice myself; important because it will bear fruit. Such acts are wanted to rouse from their shameful torpor the minds of the young, who are free, yet not free. Too long already have generous sentiments slumbered; too long have coward foreheads bent to every kind of foreign insult. The sons forget the fathers. The Italian name threatens to become synonymous with cowardice or indifference. No! generous instincts cannot thus die! They slumber, but shall awaken. At the first alarm cry the youths of Italy will run with the names of their great men on their lips to drive forever from Trieste and Trent the hated stranger who has so long threatened and oppressed us. Oh, that this act of mine might lead Italy to war on the enemy! To war, the only safety, the only dyke which can stem the ever-growing moral dissolution of our youth! To war, ye young men, whilst yet we are in time to blot out the shame of the present generation, fighting like lions! Out with the foreigner! And victors, and strong moreover in that great love of the true fatherland, we shall prepare to fight other battles and to conquer for the true idea, for that which has ever urged strong souls on to bloody initiatives, the republican idea. First independent, then free. Brethren of Italy! Avenge Trieste, and avenge yourselves."

Conducting an Eclipse.

A good story is going the rounds of the German papers. On the morning of the last eclipse of the sun, Capt. Von S——, of the Fusileers, issued a verbal order to his company, through his sergeant-major to be communicated to the men after the forenoon parade. This was its form:

"This afternoon a solar eclipse will take place. At three o'clock the whole company will parade in the barrack yard. Fatigue jackets and caps. I shall explain the eclipse to the men. Should it rain, they will assemble in the drill shed."

The sergeant-major, having set down his commanding officer's instructions in writing, as he had understood them, formed the company into a hollow square at the conclusion of the morning drill, and read this version of the order to them, thus:

"This afternoon a solar eclipse will take place in the barrack yard by order of the captain, and will be attended by the whole company, in fatigue jackets and caps. The captain will conduct the solar eclipse in person. Should it rain, the eclipse will take place in the drill shed."

The new process of making iron direct from the ore, called the Adam's process, is in full operation at Pittsburg. The experiment, which has been watched with much interest, is considered to be successful in all respects. It is stated that while it costs $38 to produce a ton of ore by the old process, the cost of the new is only $17.70.

Breaking Up School.

It was given out in church Sunday that school would open on Monday morning. After the evening service the boys got together and talked it over, and decided to give the new teacher just a week. It had been thawing for a day or two, and the boys were tired of skating, so they thought they could afford to spend a week educating themselves in how to break up a school. On the evening we were duly elected a member of the class of hard citizens, and we were to open the ball and do something bad, get the teacher to lick us, and then the boys were to jump in and help. Monday morning the school commenced, and the teacher proved to be a sickly looking, slim sort of a fellow, a timid, nervous man, with a hand and face like a girl. Every time he looked at one of the boys there seemed to be an expression on his face as though he would say, "I hope you will be good." When he had anything to say to the scholars he said "please," and gave other evidences of being pretty soft, we all thought. That morning the weather changed and it froze hard, and at recess the boys got together and said we would wind up the school before noon and go out on the ice. It was our turn to be bad, and it commenced right off. The big boys had to carry in the wood and lay it down quietly by the stove. We took in an armful and dropped it on the floor, so that it shook the building and loosened the stove-pipe. The pipe came out of the chimney and filled the room with smoke, but it was put back, and the slim teacher only reprimanded us, and said that it must not occur again. We just ached to go after more wood, but there was no opportunity. Pretty soon the teacher said we might go and get a pail of water, and while at the well we decided to stumble on entering the schoolroom, and spill the water all over the floor, and thus give the sickly-looking teacher a chance to show what he was made of. The teacher was near the stove, and we stumbled, and the water went all over everything, wetting his boots, and making him pretty mad. In sizing him up we had not noticed before that his eyes were black as coals, and that he seemed to be about eight feet high, but as he looked at us, we could see it plainly. He seemed to read our thoughts and knew that it was done on purpose, and we have always thought he heard the boys talking it over at recess. Any way, he jumped clear across the room, grabbed us by the neck and sat us down in the water, then he lifted us up and shook us so the teeth rattled, then he seemed to grab us all over and just maul us. We got a chance once or twice, to look around to the back seats, as he was revolving us around on our own axis to see if the other boys were coming to help us put him out doors, but they were the most studious lot of big boys we ever saw. They had their heads down in their books, and their lips were moving in silent prayer. After the teacher had mopped the floor with us, he took us by the back of the pants, just as a dog would carry a duck, and went to his desk and got a big hickory ruler, and proceeded to dry our pants. Well, it was the meanest way to dry pants that ever was, and while it dried them well enough, it left great ridges inside of them that made a corrugated chair almost a necessity. The boys did not fulfill their part of the programme, and when the teacher got through drying our pants, and said: "Please return to your seats," we felt as though his politeness was a perfect sham. We looked at the boys as we went to our seats, but they never looked up. We have witnessed contested seats in the legislature since, but never saw one that was so exciting as that one in the old white school house, at the foot of the hill. The teacher never spoke during the proceedings, and when it was over he looked paler and even more sickly than when he had one hand in the hair that once grew where we are now bald, while the other was at work in the vineyard. But none of the boys seemed to care to pitch on to the sick man, and he taught that school two terms and never had to whip another boy. That was the last school we ever broke up. The slim, sickly teacher is an old man now, living quietly in this state, with children as old as we are, and we occasionally see him and ask him if he remembers how we broke up the school. He is feeble now and walks with a cane, but if we had to have a fight with him, even now we would hire a man to do it.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Preacher and Pugilist.

One of the arguments in favor of a future life is based on those inequalities of the present life, which man's mortal sense asserts ought to be remedied somewhere. The following sketch from the New York Commercial Advertiser presents one of these suggestive inequalities:

"Who is the well-dressed man with sealskin overcoat, hat and gloves? He carries a gold-headed cane, and is followed by a scarlet blanket. Do you know him?"

"Oh yes; that is Slugger, the pugilist. Fine man. Hard hitter. Very popular. Always surrounded by a crowd of admiring friends, as you see him now. He is very well off; was given a benefit the other night which netted him five hundred dollars."

"Indeed! he is very fortunate."

"Oh yes; a very fortunate fellow. Ranks high in his profession, you see."

"Who is that white-headed, weary-looking old man, close behind the pugilist and his friends? Poor man! he seems thinly clad for this wintry weather. Do you know him?"

"Oh yes; that is old Faithful, a country clergyman. Very learned man they say. Been a preacher of the gospel all his life, but poor as a rat. He had a benefit, too, the other night."

"Oh, indeed! Did it net much?"

"I don't think it did. You see it was a sort of a surprise party. His parishioners called upon him in a body, ate up everything there was in the house and left him presents to the amount of sixty cents."

Some of the Adulterations.

That credulous class of Americans who insist on drinking the stuff labelled champagne, which never fermented its dubious body nearer the champagne country than New Jersey or California, may learn something from the confessions of a club man in London Truth. I have seen a miserable, clear honey, which no bee ever made with a bit of white honey comb in the middle of it, which looked as if it resented being drenched with the spurious fluid. I have eaten oleomargarine, and dreamed it was "the very best butter," only a little "unfresh." I am accustomed to chicory. I don't mind being told that "best coffee," especially on the "continent," is mixed with it. I can even bear to learn that chicory itself is adulterated with another mess. I have tasted a "variety" cigar with a decided bouquet of cauliflower; and washed down a sausage roll with a sparkling gooseberry wine, widely known as champagne. I will not describe my "orgies" of "London cream"—an entirely unique fluid—which might possibly yield "oleomargarine" itself under proper treatment neither over having any connection whatever with a cow.

INTENSE.

Oh, give me the love of your soul
My lily of sweetness and light!
I've got a real Palissy bowl—
A Drago—a beautiful fright!
The rarest Nankin! On the who
You'll think my old china too
Oh, give me the love of your soul
My lily of sweetness and light!

I never use gas or burn coal,
Sunflowers illumine my night;
I bend like a willowy pole—
My hair is a wonderful sight.
Oh, give me the love of your soul,
My lily of sweetness and light!

MR. JOSIAH SMITH'S CABMAN.

"Hi! hi! wot's this?"

It was the voice of the cabman. Josiah knew he would complain. As far as his experience went he always did, though none could say that Josiah treated him shabbily. He was always on the safe side; that is, he in the first instance gave the man sixpence or a shilling over his fare, and anxiously scanned his face as he paid him, to see if he would like another sixpence, which he frequently did.

Josiah felt it was very hard, but it was harder still to wrangle; and whenever he took out his purse to pay a cabman, he deposited an extra sixpence in his waistcoat pocket to hand him upon the first note of controversy. If the cabman only knew it, they would have recognized a considerable loss owing to their treatment of Josiah. Many a time he walked where he would have taken a cab. But he saw in the perspective of a journey the inevitable grumble at the end, scarcely to be modified by the propitiatory sixpence. Rather than face it he would walk. Now he had ridden, and here was the customary conclusion of the ride.

Josiah heaved a sigh, and felt in his waistcoat pocket for the sixpence. There stood the cabman at his heels, with hand outstretched and a coin reposing in the palm. Josiah knew it all too well, and fished out the sixpence.

"I don't think, my good man," he said, "that your fare is more than one-and-sixpence, and I have given you two shillings. But your life is a hard one, and your temper is apt to grow ruffled."

"Two shilluns, was it, yer guv me!" said the cabman, breaking in upon Josiah's little homily; "I should like to 'ave a few more shilluns 'o that color."

Josiah looked down into the horny hand which the son of toil had now thrust under his nose, and behold! there lay in it a sovereign.

"You don't mean to say that I gave you that in mistake, and that you have brought it back?" Josiah asked, his gentle eyes the homes of wild surprise.

"That's just about it, guv'nor. When I was a kid I was teached as honesty's the best policy. When a gen'leman gives me a sovereign, meanin' to be a shillin', am I to pocket it or not? 'Nor,' I says to myself, sharp off, not givin' myself time to think over it; and there y'are."

"It's very odd," said Josiah, peering into his purse. "I don't keep my gold and silver together, and I don't know how I could have made a mistake. Still, you are a fine, honest fellow, and if you will allow me we will share the sovereign."

"What! ye'r a-goin' to give me half a sovreign for bein' honest?"

"Yes, and I'd like to shake your hand as well."

This was done, but not immediately. The cabman, his scruples suddenly vanishing, took the half sovereign, carefully eyed it, tried it between his teeth, and placed it at the bottom of a small sack that would have conveniently held a hundred. This he tied round with a string and deposited in his trousers pocket, approachable only through many overcoats; then, laboriously polishing his hand on his trousers he held it out to Josiah, who fervently clasped it.

"I use a good many cabs," said Josiah. "or I would use them if I always had honest, obliging men like you to deal with. Do you stable about here?"

"Close 'andy, sir," said the honest cabman. "I passes here every mornin'; "I'll look in for orders if you like."

"Do," said Josiah; and the cabman went off to lay out a portion of his half sovereign in a "bit o' supper for me an' the missis."

The cabman arrived in the morning, and Josiah made some business that should take him out for a drive in the afternoon. This happened through many days; and though Josiah didn't find that the cost came less than it had done when he engaged promiscuous cabmen, he had the satisfaction at least of knowing that he was being honestly done by. As far as he could judge, for example, it was not four miles from his rooms in King street, St. James', to Victoria station; still, a man like honest James Barmer, who had driven cabs in the streets of London, man and boy, for forty years, was more likely to be right. So Josiah paid his two shillings, and felt the great comfort of dealing with a man of this kind.

"It's just like having your own carriage, without the expense," he said to himself with glow of satisfaction. "James comes round for orders every morning. If I am going anywhere he takes me and charges the exact fare; if I am not, he goes off and charges nothing."

Josiah had not forgotten that reference to Mrs Barmer made on the night when he was providentially led to form the acquaintance of James. He had some reason to believe that the London cabmen were not models of domestic virtue. He knew they occasionally got drunk, and he had read of their beating their wives when business was slack and the aggregate of fares fell short. But here, a slice of good luck having fallen to the lot of James Barmer, he immediately thought of Mrs. B., and longed to be with her that she might share it.

Josiah had made the acquaintance of Mrs. Barmer, and was aware of the existence of an indefinite number of little B.'s—how many there were precisely he did not know, and did not like to ask, this being evidently a sore subject between James and his better half.

"Some say," James once observed with a scowl, 'Blessed is him wot's got his quiver full of 'em.' I say, blowed is him so siliwated. Those children costs in eatin' and drinkin' wot 'ud keep a hoss; and a hoss earns money, when they're in the 'ouse all day a-eatin' their heads orf."

Josiah noted that the children did not cost their parents much in shoe leather, since they went about barefooted. Nor were their wardrobes costly. Still they must eat; and Josiah often dropped in with a packet of buns, and sometimes on Saturday night the butcher's boy unexpectedly arrived with a noble joint for Sunday's dinner. James was accordingly inclined to encourage these visits of his patron, more particularly when they led to beef. Buns be despised, but six or seven pounds of beef made his eyes glisten.

"Bill Muggins is in luck again," Mr. Barmer abruptly remarked to Josiah, as he looked in for orders.

"Is he? Now, that's very nice,' said Josiah, beaming benevolently through his spectacles. He was always glad to hear of good being done to any one, and the circumstance that he had never before heard of Bill Muggins did not greatly hamper his satisfaction.

"Yes; a bloomin' lucky chap, that Bill, and don't deserve it, neither. He ain't got no wife nor childer reglar every year seven year runnin', an' yet he gits the luck."

"What's happened to him? Some one been giving him a sovereign for a shilling?" Josiah asked, chuckling at his own humor."

"More nor that," said James gloomily. "There's a cove as he's been and druv for less than a month, and wot's he been an' done? Why, he's a-gone an' a-set him hup with a cab and a couple o' hosses, chargin' him nothink except interest, and taking that out in hire."

Before he has concluded this brief narrative James had worked himself up into a violent passion, as if "the cove" who had befriended Bill Muggins had done him (James Barmer) a personal injury.

"Gently, James; gently. That was very good, indeed, of the gentleman. I won't be going out to-day, thank you."

"Oh! won't you?" James growled, and stalked off, still nourishing the bitterest resentment against the benefactor of Bill Muggins.

Josiah mused a good deal on the circumstances throughout the day. If this anonymous gentleman had thus volunteered his aid to Bill Muggens after so brief an acquaintance, why should he not do something for honest James? Doubtless if James were set up in business, Mrs. B.'s thin frame would fill out a little, her scanty clothing would be replaced by warmer garments, the children would [illegible] accustomed to boots and shoes, and James would cease to repine because, as he with bitter humor put it, he'd 'bin and married a 'bloomin' flowerin' annual.' It would, [illegible] cost a deal of money, and Josiah was not a rich man. Perhaps, if he economized for six months or a year in the matter of his excursions in quest of material for his great work on Underground England, he might make this honest man and his family happy. He had a dim notion that a hansom cab could not be less than £50; that would make £150. Still, there was the security. The cab and horses would of course be his until James had paid off the money, and then he would get his rides for nothing, the amount going against the weekly payments. That looked really economical. Now, he paid James rarely less than £1 a week. Then he would pay him nothing; why, it was really economical—besides doing good to a whole family.

"James," he said, when the honest cabman turned up on the following morning with a settled gloom on his brow that told he was still thinking of Bill Muggins' luck, "do you know how much the gentleman paid for your friend's stock as a cab proprietor?"

"Ninety pun," James growled. "Ninety pun, an' didn't drive the cove above a month; besides treatin' of him 'andsome, and never lookin' at a hextra sixpence afore forkin' it out."

"Ninety pounds!" exclaimed Josiah, his mind greatly relieved; "why, that's not much."

"He got 'em on the cheap," James added hastily; "maybe no one else could buy the lot under a 'undred."

"I'll tell you what James; I'll lend you 100 pounds. You buy a couple of horses and a cab. They shall stand in my name; I will charge you 5 per cent interest, and you pay it off at the rate of 20 shillings a week, which I will take out in cab fare."

"Couldn't you make it 10 bob a week?" said James. "When times is hard an' fodder dear it makes it a tight fit. I've 'eard Bill Muggins say as he were sorry he'd ever met that 'ere cove wot set him up."

"Oh," said Josiah, "I thought it was such a good thing for him. Of course, I only want to help you, and if it would not be a good thing we won't say anything more about it."

"That's accordin'," said James, whom Melancholy seemed to have marked for her own; "with good managering and a honest man wot don't drink, and takes home every penny to his wife an' children, both ends would meet pretty well if you made it ten bob a week to pay back."

"Very well," said Josiah; "if you prefer it, though you will be so much the longer paying off; it shall be ten shillings a week."

Thus it was settled, and Josiah, walking down one morning to the mews under the pilotage of Mr. J. Barmer, found himself the proud possessor of a pair of horses and a hansom cab. The cab was, it is true, a little seedy, as it well might be, having apparently been one of the earliest essays of the late Mr. Hansom. The horses, too, were undoubtedly screws. "But what can you expect for a hundred pun?" said James, "with five shillin's out of my own pocket for drink money.

Josiah had expected something more than this; still, compared with his original estimate, £100 was certainly very little. He did not find his personal comfort added to by the change. The cab seat was abnormally high, and Josiah's legs were not long. The springs were either broken or non-existent, and one of the horses had cultivated an action which gave the unfortunate fare the impression that he was running on three legs. But if Barmer was happy, and Mrs. B. and the children had more to eat, these little inconveniences did not come into the account. Once or twice Josiah took another cab; the change was agreeable, but he felt horribly guilty, and when morning came and brought Barmer for orders he could scarcely look the honest cabman in the face.

Josiah did not acknowledge the truth himself, but the fact remains that it was this terrible vision of the shabby cab at his door in the morning, and the prospect of a jaunt with the three-legged horse, that decided him to carry out forthwith a long-brooded-upon notion, and visit the United States. His long delving amid the underground antiquities of England had given him a great yearning to behold the freshness of the new country across the sea. He broke the news gently to James, who, whilst at first accepting it with evident satisfaction, promptly relapsed into that condition of moodiness which had grown upon him, and which was explicable by an apparently incessant and perpetual upward movement in the price of oats. How oats could go up in price every week, and what famine figure they would touch at last, Josiah really did not know. But he was sorry for James, who could really do nothing in the way of fattening Mr. B. or shoeing the children whilst the oat market was thus unreasonable.

It appears oats had gone up again, and what James was to do he really did not know. He was owing a sovereign here and a sovereign there; and if Josiah was going away, who was to make up for his best customer, and where was he to find the "the bloomin' ten bob a week?"

Josiah felt that there was a deal of justice in this. What business had he to go away seeking his selfish pleasure, while this honest man with an infinity of children stayed at home? He eased his concience by immediately advancing James two sovereigns, and undertaking to forego weekly payments while he was away. Also he visited the Barmer household, stuffing the children with buns for at least a fortnight to come, and left an order with the butcher for four noble joints, to be delivered bi-monthly.

"That will see them into the eighth week," Josiah said, "and I will be back by then."

Josiah was at San Francisco, gazing through the Golden Gate, when a telegram reached him. It was from his London solicitor, and ran thus: "Barmer bolted, sold horses and cab, beaten wife, gone to New York. Have communicated with agents there; send them authority to act."

This was terrible news, and was soon followed by another telegram from Mr. Spottiswoode's agents in New York, announcing that they had got Barmer and cast him into the tombs.

Josiah wished Spottiswoode had not been so prompt, and had let Barmer go off with his ill-gotten gains, which after all were not so much, seeing that he had already been proprietor three months, and that 10 shillings a week had been paid with moderate regularity. However, the thing was done. What remained was to undo as quickly as possible. He accordingly telegraphed to Mr. Aminadab J. P. Doveton, Spottiswoode's agent in New York, to let Barmer go. To this he promptly received the following reply.

"Barmer won't go. Demands compensation, unlawful imprisonment. Come to town."

This was a cheerful incident, but there was no help for it, and Josiah wearily wended his way to New York. Upon his arrival he learned that James' capture had been effected under circumstances reflecting the highest credit on Mr. Aminadab J. P. Doveton's young man. He had boarded the vessel on which James was reported to be a passenger, and had inquired for him by name. But there was no James Barmer on the passenger list.

"You can take a look round for'ard," the purser said. "All the steerage passengers are there except one chap that we've got locked up in his berth. He's had the blues."

The young man inspected the steerage passengers, but failed to find any one answering to the description of James Barmer.

"Let's have a look at the man with the blues." he said.

The patient was now convalescent, and sat up in his berth, staring with lack-luster eyes at the new comers.

"Well, James Barmer, how are you to-day?" said the 'cute young man.

"Who told you my name?" the interesting convalescent growled in a voice that would have been familiar enough to Josiah had he been privileged to hear it. Honest James had shipped as William Wilson; but taken aback in this way, he was not ready enough to deny his identity. The 'cute young man had him forthwith hauled to the Tombs, where he was searched, and £40 were found sewed in the lining of his waiscoat.

At first James gave himself up for lost, and in the dead, unhappy night was filled with remorse that he had not drunk more of the proceeds of the sale. He had done pretty well, he owned, but had he known of his impending fate he would have done better. With the day came hope. James found in a fellow-denizen in the tombs a gentleman who had at one time been a respectable citizen, and an attorney in good practice. He had commited some little error—mixed up his clients' accounts with his own—and his case was now awaiting investigation by one of the judges. Questioning James on the circumstances that brought him thither, Mr. Chewton discovered a serious flaw in the procedure. James had unquestionably been illegally arrested. Apart from the non-observance of certain forms, if there was any charge against him at all, it was a matter for civil action.

"You've got a good case, young man," Mr. Chewton sententiously observed. "It ought to be worth $500 to you, at least."

James' small gray eyes, deeply sunken under a bullet forehead, lit up with cheerful reflection. Mr. Chewton bargained for a fee of $20, to be paid out of Josiah's pocket, to which James readily assented, reflecting that, as he would be out before Mr. Chewton, payment would be optional. Fully instructed, he treated the emissaries of Josiah's lawyer with airy disdain. "Then as yer me here 'till we're [illegible] said, Only that, and nothing more. It was a good fortune, and James stuck to it.

"James Barmer," said Josiah, when he came down and was taken to visit his old servitor, "it's very sad to see you here. I never would have thought it of you."

"Nor me you," [illegible] said James, eyeing his benefactor with a look of contempt. "Why, you ain't fit to be trusted without a nuss. Instead of 'avin a cab yer ought to 'ave a perambulator. I never seed a man of your age more like a baby, and a nice mess ye'r in now. To go for to put a hinnocent bloke into prison as if yer was the Bay o' Naples, and could do wot yer liked! Tell yer wot, Mr. Smith, it'll cost you a hundred pun' afore you see the end o' this."

Josiah was very much shocked at the altered tone of James Barmer, and began seriously to think that he had been deceived in him. It was evidently no use arguing with him in his present mood. Josiah was about to follow out his usual impulse, and hand out the supplement to the fare demanded. But £100 was a good deal, in addition to the £100 originally invested in his now dispersed stud. Mr. Aminadab J. P. Doveton, who felt that his young man had been too sharp, undertook to see what could be done. He had an interview with James, and in the end succeeded in inducing him to accept £50, and be good enough to leave the prison and go his way. This James did, permitting himself the additional luxury of not paying Mr. Chewton.

Josiah returned to England much depressed by the evidence of the depravity of human nature as illustrated in the case of James Barmer. Suspicion once aroused, doubt darkened over many episodes of his connection with the cabman. He began to believe that Bill Muggins was an entirely imaginary person, and that no transaction such as that described by James Barmer had ever taken place. He was also convinced that it was not four miles from King street, St. James', to Victoria station. But here was one reflection really too horrible against which he stubbornly closed his mind. Still, he could not help sometimes remembering that, a day or two after he had made the acquaintance of James Barmer under promising circumstances, he had got into serious trouble through tendering a bad sovereign in payment of wares. He had taken the coin from his purse, and he did not like to think how it might have got there.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Ribbon Work Embroidery.

A quite new and very elegant kind of art decoration is made up of ribbon work and arrasene embroidery. For plush tablecloths and other articles made of the same soft silk material, it can hardly be surpassed in beauty and richness. A design of dogwood on crimson or cardinal plush is very effective. The large white flowers are made of creamy white plush ribbon. The pattern is first stamped as for any embroidery; then the ribbon is cut into small pieces, just large enough for one petal, of the flower. A piece is sewed, wrong side out, on one side of the petal, turned over and blind-stitched down on the other side. The outer point of the petal and part where it joins the center of the flower are pulled in a little, thus giving the effect of a raised leaf. Delicate lines of fine yellow silk radiate from the center, and the terminus is shaded with a few stitches of darker silk. Sometimes, if the under side of a petal shows, the satin side of the ribbon is turned out, giving a very beautiful effect. Heavy, soft, surah satin ribbon is used also in the same way as described for the plush. The leaves and stems are worked in arrasene embroidery, with different shades of green. The Kensington stitch is employed, and the arrasene floss used just as if it were crewel. The whole effect of this kind of work is extremely rich and particularly handsome on plush. A moss rosebud pattern for a table covet is very beautiful worked in this manner. The arrasene floss gives such a soft, mossy look to the stems and calix of the buds, while the pink satin ribbon folded into the compact petals of the opening flowers, gives a charming effect.

A portfolio for engravings or large photographs, intended to rest on an easel, is made of heavy cardboard about twenty-four inches long and eighteen wide, covered with plush on the outside, and lined with silk. Two bands of handsome ribbon, three inches wide, pass around the portfolio a little distance from each end, and terminate with long pieces, which are to be used as ties to fasten it together at the top. The decoration consists of two branches of dogwood, starting from under the ribbon band in the upper left-hand corner, and nearly filling the central space. This useful and very elegant article may be made of cardinal or olive plush, the effect of either color being very handsome.

The Grotesque Quartet.

A very amusing and funny amateur entertainment can be arranged and gotten up with little trouble and expense in the following way, if a half dozen persons with artistic and musical talent can be pressed into the service. The entertainment consists of a concert given by a quartet of wonderful singers, purporting to have been secured by the manager at an enormous cost and brought to this country from distant quarters of the globe. The programme is made up of songs in different languages, duets, choruses, etc. The particularly comical feature of the affair is produced by painting or sketching with crayons four figures, as ridiculous and absurd as they can possibly be made, side by side on a white curtain or screen. One may represent a very large woman, another a very tall, slim man, another a dwarf, and another some odd looking person or a very young child, a remarkable prodigy. Each is dressed in the most fantastic costume imaginable. The heads are drawn in such proportion that the faces when cut out leave the openings just large enough for a person's face to protrude through each from behind, allowing the chin to pass through as far as the neck, but concealing the ears and hair. In this position the performers can move their heads, turning their faces toward each other, upwards, or in any way they wish, producing a very ludicrous effect.

The curtain or screen should be so arranged that the back part will be protected perfectly from view. A little ingenuity will dictate how to manage this part of the matter. If there are folding doors, the opening can be easily utilized for the purpose. The persons who take the part of the tall characters should have something fixed for them to stand on behind the screen so that their faces will come exactly on a level with the openings. The short characters will have to stoop in as comfortable a position as possible. Should there be no stage, and the performance be given on the floor with the audience, it would be well to have a strip of some dark material fastened across the bottom of the picture, thus raising the figures and giving the appearance of a platform. This will make it much easier for those who take the short characters, as it will bring the heads on the screen up to about the height of a person. A curtain should be arranged in front of the picture which can be dropped at a signal from the manager, so that the singers can withdraw and rest, as to continue in the same position through the entire performance would prove rather tiresome.

The manager, after introducing the different musicians, enlarges upon the particular merits of each, and gives something of their history, the description, of course, corresponding with the characters as represented in the picture. This part of the entertainment may be made very amusing if the director has a little tact in story telling. Each of the characters should be given some long, unheard of cognomen, and if it is thought worth while a comical programme for the concert may be printed, giving the names of the performers and the music selected.

Altogether a concert of this kind may be made a most comical and laughable entertainment, affording no small amount of amusement to the audience invited to attend it.

Kitchen Keramics.

This recipe for mock mince pies is contributed by a practical housekeeper, who says that the pies made from it are delicious, and are not nearly so indigestible as those where suet and meat are used; two cups of chopped apple, one cup of dried breadcrumbs, rolled very fine; dry the bread in the oven until it is crisp without being brown; one cup of raisins, one cup of vinegar, one cup of molasses, and one of brown sugar; spice to your taste. Put little lumps of butter in the pies just before putting the top crust over. The apples are to be quartered, and the cores and all spots carefully cut out, but they are not to be peeled. A little jelly or jam is an addition, and gives good flavor to the pies, and it is a good way to dispose of small quantities left over from tea.

An old-fashioned washstand that has no drawers or closet can be improved by tacking a [illegible] curtains could be easily and quickly looped back.

Handsome waste paper baskets can be made by covering a peach basket outside and in with turkey-red calico, or with silesia, or with more expensive material in some bright color, and then crocheting a cover or lambrequin out of macreme twine. This cover should be about half as deep as the basket, to allow space for a fringe to be tied in; as this should reach to the bottom of the basket, it is just as well to use some cheap covering for the basket. This may be used for a workbasket instead of one for papers, if you please; in this case, to the upper rim of the basket fasten a small pincushion, a needlebook, and one or two little pockets.

Crystallized fruits form a prominent feature in all confectioners' windows just now, and beguile boys and girls into spending all their spare money for them. If they care to take the trouble they can prepare oranges at home, which will take the place at half the expense of the costly fruit. Peel and quarter oranges, make a syrup of one pound of sugar to one pint of water, let this boil until it is like candy around the edge of the dish, then dip the oranges in this and let them drain; keep them where it is warm, and the candied syrup will become crystallized. Try this; it is delicious.

Here is a recipe for molasses cookies, and if it is followed exactly the cookies are excellent: Two cups of New Orleans molasses, one scant cup brown sugar, eight tablespoonfuls boiling water, one cup of shortening (butter and lard in equal quantities is best), three teaspoonfuls of soda, one teaspoonful of salt and one of ginger, two eggs well beaten, added the last thing, flour enough to make a soft dough. The only danger in making these is that you will be tempted to make the dough too hard at first. You must bear in mind the fact that the dough becomes harder after each kneading.

To make an apple-custard pie, take one pint of sweet milk, and one pint of apple sauce; beat this sauce till it is smooth, and entirely free from lumps; then stir it in the milk; sweeten this well—a good full cup of sugar will be needed, and if the apples are tart, more will be required; to this add three well beaten eggs, flavor with lemon, and bake with under crust only.

When, as is often the case, it is found impossible to mash turnips so that they are free from lumps and are smooth, do not attempt to serve them in this way; it is much better to acknowledge defeat and send them to the table in slices if the turnips are large, or in halves or quarters if they are small. Put a lump of butter and a little pepper and salt on each piece.

A breakfast dish, which is welcome on many tables, is made by shaving very thin a piece of frozen beef; heat a little butter in a frying-pan, and when hot put the beef in; it will cook in five minutes; season with salt and pepper, and serve while hot. To vary it you may add one or two beaten eggs to it a minute or two before taking it from the fire.

Here is a substitute for cream, to be used in coffee: To a pint of milk allow the yolk of one egg; beat the egg till very light, then strain it, and stir it in the milk; set this on the stove and let it scald—that is, become thoroughly heated, but not boiling. This, although lacking much that is desirable, is better than a little cold milk in the coffee.

The narrow Nottingham lace that is made for the windows in halls makes serviceable coverings for chair backs. Cut it the length of the back, and hem the edges or finish with narrow torchon lace. This may be used also as a covering for the seat of a nice easy chair, and will protect it from dust and wear more than one would think possible.

A good side dish can be made of carrots by boiling them until they are soft and then mashing them. When entirely free from lumps, stir in a little milk, with a lump of butter in it. Serve in a vegetable dish, and put little lumps of butter at intervals on the top, with salt and pepper scattered over the butter.

Celery leaves and bits of stalk can be given to a canary. The old notion that it is hurtful is entirely disproved. My own bird is a witness to the fact that it has an excellent effect on his general health, and he never sings so sweetly as he does after a meal in which celery has an important place.

When you cannot obtain celery for salad—and this is sometimes the case—cabbage may be used in place of it, with the extract of celery for flavoring, or celery salt may be used; choose the firm, white part of the cabbage, and chop it fine.

An appetizing sauce, to be served with boiled fish or with roast mutton, is made by mixing two ounces of melted butter with a tablespoonful of parsley, chopped fine, and the juice of two lemons. A pinch of cayenne pepper gives tone to it.

For a common sitting room a table spread made of canton flannel is useful; the border made of the figured or brocaded canton flannel, which is a novelty in stores just now; or you may trim it simply with a stripe of cretone.

A rich rice pudding cold is excellent for dessert. Cut it in slices and serve on small plates. It should be made early enough in the day to be perfectly cold at dinner time, or it will be impossible to cut it in slices.

Failure of a Frigid Mutton Scheme.

London Cable: It is stated that the importation of the frozen carcasses of about 21,000 sheep from Australia has involved the company conducting that business in a loss exceeding $15,000. At the cattle markets all over the country it is said that the scarcity of live sheep is the chief complaint of the butchers, and it appears that this well conducted London company could not land their carcasses of mutton in England under 6½d a pound, the cost in Australia being not less than 3d a pound. The opinion of well-informed persons seems to be that unless the carcasses can be bought in Australia under 2d a pound, the importation of them in a frozen condition cannot, even with present prices, be profitable. This failure in so large an import gives, it is felt, new urgency to the question of the entry of live sheep from the United States. There is not so strong a plea in regard to German sheep, which are excluded for the same reason, the existence of foot and mouth disease in the exporting country. The passage from Germany is short, so short that infected sheep might not display the disease before landing; which, however, is said not to be possible in the case of sheep coming the ten days' voyage from the United States. If sheep are free from disease on arriving from America, every veterinary surgeon admits that from foot and mouth disease they must unquestionably have been free at the time of embarkation, as the utmost period of incubation of that disease is much less than a week. An application will be made to the privy council, strenuously urging the removal of the present restrictions on the importation of American sheep.

A Crank Creates a Panic.

Bangor, Me., Special: A crazy fellow created quite a stampede in a ball room at Tyler Stand, which is located about seven miles west of this city, at an early hour this morning. He came into the hall shortly after midnight, and behaved so rudely and boisterously that he was approached by Fred Mathess and several others, whose intent it was to quiet him. He became more excited than ever, and drawing a knife when unobserved, he stabbed right and left, inflicting wounds on five persons. The wounds are not considered dangerous. The man fled from the hall, and was found shortly afterward by officers in a house near by and taken to the station house. He gave the name of John Patten of Hermon. Without a doubt he is insane, for while in the station house he claimed that he was Jesus Christ. He said that he was destined to be the king of this world, and that the deeds done by him had been actuated by divine inspiration. He spoke of Guiteau as John the Baptist. He says he is about thirty-two years of age, and lives in Hermon with his father and aunt. He is of large stature, has a very good presence, and is not a bad looking fellow. The weapon used was an ordinary jackknife.

A Hysterical Convert.

Troy Special; In a Baptist church last night the congregation was startled by a woman's shrieks coming from a room below, where Mrs. Angevine of West Troy was found partially dressed in baptismal robes and writhing in hysterics. After much exertion she was restored. Mrs. Angevine was a convert from the Catholic church, and was to have been baptized. Her husband followed her to the church and quietly slipped into the ladies' room. Mrs. Angevine was almost ready for the ceremony, when her husband sprang upon her, and she fell into a hysterical fit. He had escaped when she recovered. She offered no explanation for the man's conduct, and left the church [illegible]

So prevalent and so fatal has consumption become that it is now everywhere dreaded as the great scourge of humanity. And yet, in its earlier formative stages, all pulmonary complaints may be readily relieved and controlled by resorting promptly to Dr. [illegible] Extract—a curative specially adapted to soothe and heal the [illegible], allay inflammation, and loosen and remove all obstructions. It is also a sure remedy for asthma, and also for coughs and colds.

THE CROSS.

The cruel cross, the cross of shame,
Our blessed Lord has glorified,
Since it has borne his sacred name,
And on it he has bled and died.

No wanderer through the world's dark night
Need ever lose his heavenward way,
With Christ's all radiant cross in sight
To turn its darkness into day.

The pathway of our brilliant sun
From dawn of morn till evening's shade,
Is not so bright as that we run,
When in the path our Saviour made:

Illumined by the brighter rays
Of this great "Sun of Righteousness,"
And by the light his cross displays
To guide and comfort, cheer and bless.

Then, O my soul, keep near the cross,
And lift its glorious standard high,
And count earthly gain but loss,
Within its radiance live and die.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Religion in Ireland.

The London Globe has been looking into the present condition of religion and education in Ireland. It finds that there are practically four great religious bodies in that country, the Roman Catholic, the Protestant Episcopal, the Presbyterian and the Methodist churches. The Roman Catholic church is still, as it always has been, the dominant religious community in Ireland. Its members numbered, according to last year's census, 3,960,891, or 76.54 per cent of the whole population. Protestant Episcopalians numbered 639,574, or 12.36 per cent; Presbyterians, 470,734, or 9.10 per cent; and Methodists 48,839, or a little less than 1 per cent. The proportion of Roman Catholics to the population has declined since 1861 more than 1 per cent, and still shows a slight tendency to decline. The proportion of Episcopalians shows a progressive but very small tendency to rise, and the same may be said of the Methodists. The proportion of Presbyterians to the population is a little smaller than in 1871, but larger than in 1861. The decline in the Roman Catholic population is believed by the census commissioners to be due entirely to emigration. The Roman Catholics are most numerous among the poorest of the people, and it is the poorest who have contributed the largest proportion of emigrants. Dividing the different religions according to provinces, we find that in Leinster the proportion of Roman Catholics to the population is 85.6, Protestant Episcopalians, 12.3; Presbyterians, .9; and Methodists, .6. In Munster the Roman Catholics include 93.8 per cent of the people, the Episcopalians 5.3, the Presbyterians .3, and the Methodists .4. Connaught is yet more completely devoted to the Roman faith, the proportion of its adherents to the whole population being 95.3. The Episcopalians number but 3.9 per cent, the Presbyterians but .4, and the Methodists but .3. Even in Ulster, the Protestant North, as it is often termed, Protestants of all descriptions hardly number more than half the population, while the Roman Catholics greatly outnumber any other denomination. The respective percentages of the four denominations are: Roman Catholics, 47.8; Presbyterians, 25.9; Episcopalians, 21.8; and Methodists, 2. Episcopalians and Methodists are slightly more numerous in comparison with the general population than in 1871, while the Roman Catholic percentage is considerably, and the Presbyterian slightly, less. The strength of the Roman Catholic church in Ulster is brought out in this way in the census commissioners' report: Out of every 1,000 inhabitants 478 will be Roman Catholics, 259 Presbyterians, 218 Episcopalians, 20 Methodists, and 25 "all other denominations." It is in Ulster that the "other denominations" attain their greatest numerical strength. It is of some interest, in connection with the electoral power which may be considered as more or less at the command of the Roman hierarchy, to note that in all but five of the thirty-one parliamentary boroughs the Roman Catholics constitute more than 50 per cent of the population; in most cases the percentage is considerably greater. There is but a single borough in which any denomination but the Roman Catholic has a majority. The exception is Carrickfergus, where the Presbyterians exceed all other denominations combined. In Lisburn a like position is very nearly, but not quite, attained by the Episcopalians. In this borough alone in Ireland the adherents of the disestablished church outnumber Romanists and Presbyterians united.

Converting the Heathen.

New York Tribune: It was the brave and gifted Norman McLeod who uttered this noble protest against the old idea of converting the heathen—a protest which ought to be remembered and acted on by the missionary societies to-day: "Is it not monstrous to make the man they ordained on the banks of the Ganges sign the Westminster Confession of the Church of Scotland, or the Deed of Demission and Protest of the Free Church? Was that the wisest, was it the Christian way of dealing with Hindoos? The doctrines of their confessions might be true in themselves, but the confession was a document closely connected with the historical development and with the metaphysical temperament of the people who had accepted it, and might not be equally suitable for those who had not the same traditions and tendencies. Was it necessary to give these minute and abstract statements to Orientals, whose habits of mind and spiritual affinities might lay better hold on other aspects of divine truth, and who might mold a theology for themselves, not less Christian, but which would be Indian, and not English or Scotch? Let them prepare the Hindoos to form a church for themselves! Give them the gun powder, and they will make their own cannon!"

Bad Taste.

The Philadelphia Press heard of a clergyman of this city who in one of his prayers recently asked for the conversion of his choir, and makes it the occasion to condemn the bad taste of such performances. "The manners of this clergyman," it says, "must certainly have been neglected in his youth, or else he is trying to attract audiences by a reputation for eccentricity, and on either supposition his church had better quietly advise him to seek a profession where the proprieties form a less conspicuous part of the needed credentials. Clergymen need to be gentlemen as much as to be Christians, and a man who needlessly gives offense in public, and then is unable to see the wrong, can never command the confidence which a clergyman needs in order to be a successful teacher of righteousness."

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

According to the Lutheran, the first Lutheran minister ordained in what are now the United States was Justus Falkner. He was a German, who, immediately after the completion of his university studies, came over to America to escape the wishes of his parents and friends, who designed him for the ministry. But soon after his arrival here, he voluntarily consented to take the ministerial office. He was ordained in 1703 by the three Swedish pastors, Rudman, Bjork and Sandel, in Wicaco church, near what afterwards became Philadelphia. He organized the first German Lutheran congregation in Pennsylvania, at the Swamp, in what is now Montgomery county. This was about forty years before the arrival of Muhlenburg. He subsequently went to New York and Albany, where he ministered to many people. He was a man of learning, and proved himself "a faithful pastor," as testified by Acrelius' History.

SS. Peter and Paul's Guild was formed about two years ago in London for work among the criminal classes. The second annual meeting was held recently in the Chapter House of St. Paul's cathedral. During the year the membership was increased from 107 to 160. Two Discharged Prisoners' Aid societies have been formed, one at Derby and one at Nottingham. Immigration has been found a very successful method of dealing with discharged prisoners of the better class. Of seventy families sent out but five have failed. Mr. Howard Vincent, the director of criminal investigation, offers to examine any applicant for employment previously to recommending him.

The Home for the Friendless at Chicago has done a year's good work, befriending over 2,000 adults and children, for the majority of whom employment and homes have been furnished. The Industrial school has an average attendance of sixty. The financial report showed that the receipts for the year had been $25,030; expenditures, $21,712.

At the Presbyterian conference at New York last week, [illegible]

The Cleveland Herald asserts, and apparently proves, that its title "City of Churches" does not so properly belong to Brooklyn as to Cleveland. [illegible]

The Los Angeles presbytery, at its session a few months ago in San Diego, Cal., decided to erect somewhere in that district a female seminary, on the basis of Mills seminary at East Oakland, or Vassar college in New York, to cost about $200,000.

At the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, held at Napanee, Ont., Jan. 11, the proposed basis of union was considered, clause by clause, and finally passed by a vote of seventy-four to twenty.

The Congregationalists at Petersham, Mass., have closed their church for the winter, and worship with the Baptists. "Behold how sweet and pleasant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Mrs. Simpson, wife of Bishop Simpson of the Methodist Episcopal church, has presented to the new Methodist church at Long Branch, N. J., a handsome organ.

The remains of the first Catholic archbishop of New York, the Most Rev. John Hughes, will be removed from the old cathedral to the new Jan. 30.

CHAT FOR CHILDREN.

BE CONTENT.

I wish I were a little bird,
I'd scale the mountain high;
I'd fly away, and gather hay
To make a nest so sly.

I wish I were a little fish,
I'd frolic in the brook;
I'd sail away into the bay—
How pretty I would look!

I wish I were a little flower,
I'd sweetly scent the grove;
I'd scent the air with fragrance rare,
And in the breeze I'd move.

And thus these little children three
Are wishing as they play,
As down they look into the brook,
Enjoying what they may.

Ah, little children, be content,
Whate'er your lot may be,
And do not wish to be a fish,
Or any thing you see.

Ned, the Children's Dog.

Everybody in Midway, Ky., knows old Ned, the children's dog. He formerly belonged to the late Mrs. Margaret Buford, but, as there were no children at her house, he came to town and took up his abode at Mr. S. N. Rogers'. He goes to school with the children every morning and remains there all day. When they go out to play he goes, too, and is quite expert at catching a ball; indeed, in a game, he takes the place of a child. When the bell rings he is the first to run into the school house, and when the classes are called up to recite he takes his place in line at the foot. After the child next above him has recited, he answers the next question by an intelligent bark and bow of the head. Should a question be missed by the child at the foot of the class and passed to the next by the the teacher, Ned will answer it in his peculiar way. Spelling seems to be his favorite branch of study, his answers in that being exceedingly quick and vigorous. Although he turns the children down, after his fashion, he never goes above them. He will fight for any of the pupils, as well as teachers, and could not be induced to stay where there are no children.

Bless His Heart.

In a very elegant palace car entered a weary-faced, poorly dressed woman with three little children, one a babe in her arms. A look of joy crept into her face as she settled down into one of the luxurious chairs, but it was quickly dispelled as she was asked rudely to "start her boots."

A smile of amusement was seen on several faces as the frightened group hurried out to enter one of the common cars. Upon one young face, however, there was a look which shamed the countenances of the others.

"Auntie," said the boy to the lady beside him, "I am going to carry my basket of fruit and this box of sandwiches to the poor woman in the next car. You are willing, of course?"

He spoke eagerly, but she answered, "Don't be foolish, dear; you may need them yourself, and perhaps the woman is an imposter."

"No, I'll not need them," he answered, decidedly, but in a very low tone. "You know I had a hearty breakfast, and don't need a lunch. The woman looked hungry, auntie, and so tired, too, with those three little babies clinging to her. I'll be back in a minute, auntie; I know mother wouldn't like it if I didn't speak a kind word to the least of these when I meet them."

The worldly aunt brushed a tear from her eye after the boy left her, and said, audibly, "Just like his dear mother."

About five minutes later, as the lady passed the mother and three children, she saw a pretty sight—the family feasting, as perhaps they had never done before. The dainty sandwiches were eagerly eaten, the fruit basket stood open.

The eldest child, with her mouth filled with bread and butter, said, "Was the pretty boy an angel, mamma?"

"No," answered the mother, and a grateful look brightened her faded eyes, "but he is doing angels' work, bless his dear heart!" And we, too, said, "Bless his dear heart!"

What Brownie Did.

Good, old Santa Claus brought our little Brownie a little nigger baby just as black as a coal. It was a pretty baby, and Brownie thought she could love it dearly if only it was a white baby. The other day, while we had a man white washing the ceiling to our room, Brownie was found as you see her in the picture—white washing the poor, black baby's face. But she could not do it. The black would show through. With all the whitewash, it was a nigger baby still. So next year Brownie is going to ask kind Santa to bring her a white, really, really doll, that opens and shuts its eyes, and cries.

THE NORTHWESTERN DAIRYMEN.

Some of the Features of the Forthcoming Convention—A Fare and a Fifth Round Trip Tickets and an Opportunity that Should Not be Missed.

To the Editor

ELGIN, Ill., Jan. 22.—The Seventeenth annual convention of the Northwestern Dairymen's association will be held at Mankato, Minn., Feb. 14, 15 and 16, with three sessions daily. I am assured by such leading dairymen, writers and speakers as Hon. Hiram Smith, Charles R. Beach, S. Favill, R. D. Torrey, George Lawrence, J. M. Weeks and J. A. Smith, of Wisconsin; Robert McAdam, C. F. Dexter, J. H. Broomell, J. G. Lumbard, H. B. Gurler and I. Boies, of Illinois; Col. R. M. Littler, Joseph Sampson, C. A. Hustin and S. S. Coffie, of Iowa; C. E. Marvin, A. T. Felton, W. B. Straight, Gen. James H. Baker and Congressman Wakefield, that they will severally be present and give papers or make speeches on the dairy and stock raising, showing that what has been done in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa can be duplicated in Minnesota. Col. T. D. Curtis of Syracuse, N. Y., will also attend and give a paper on Dairying in a New Country. Dr. Grange will present a paper on the Diseases and Treatment of Cows. Prof. Bliss of Vermont writes that he will endeavor to be there and give his assistance. From the above it will be seen that there will be more speakers than usually attend a convention of this kind; and beside the above, there will be many others who will make impromptu speeches on various questions. A stenographer has been engaged, and the entire proceedings will be faithfully and correctly reported and published by the association in a handsome pamphlet of over 100 pages, so that members can have the benefit of the same.

A QUESTION DRAWER

will be opened, and any person can drop a question into it and have it answered. This is an important feature in convention work. The Chicago & Northwestern, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis & Omaha rail roads will return all members at one-fifth fare who procure certificates from the secretary.

Thomas Higgin & Co. offer as a premium a Gorham silver challenge cup, valued at $50, for the best tub of butter salted with Higgin's Eureka salt. The party winning it to hold it one year, when it will be returned to the association to be competed for next year. The party winning it two years in succession will become the absolute owner of the cup. It is handsomely engraved and should be contested for by a large number, as any creamery, dairyman, farmer or dairywoman can enter the list.

The American Salt company of Syracuse, N. Y., offer as premiums, $15 for the best and $10 for the second best package of butter salted with Onondaga salt.

Ample room will be provided for the display of butter and cheese, dairy and creamery apparatus and farm machinery and all are most cordially invited to make exhibits and committees will be appointed to PASS UPON THEIR MERITS.

Dairymen, farmers and stock-growers will not have another opportunity of attending such a convention for some time, and they should avail themselves of it and learn how the dairy farmers of Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa have improved their farms and [illegible]. The [illegible] farmer with one cow will receive as much benefit as the man owning twenty-five or forty cows. [illegible] the people of Mankato extend a cordial invitation to all [illegible]. Programmes of the meeting are now ready for distribution and will be sent, on application, to any address. [illegible]

R. P. McGLINCY,
Secretary Northwestern Dairymen's Association.

ABOUT MONTANA MATTERS.

Weather in the Territory—Trouble for the Buffalo Hunters Who Come in Conflict With the Law, and Thieving Redskins—Railroad Progress and the Park Monopoly.

Special Correspondence

MILES CITY, Mont., Jan. 22.—The severe weather we are now experiencing has had a very depressing effect upon business, and the merchants are complaining of the dull times. It could hardly be expected that people would leave their firesides with the thermometer registering 48 degrees below zero, unless stern necessity should drive them to it. An offset to the extreme cold, however, is an absolute calm, which usually accompanies the lowest temperatures. Very fair sleighing is found from this place up the Yellowstone 200 miles to about Merrill, from there to the railroad tunnel sixteen miles east of Bozeman, there is no snow except in the ravines where it has been driven by the high winds of ten days ago. It is doubtful about there even being sleighing at Livingston, the new town where the Northern Pacific leaves the Yellowstone, on account of the winds that constantly prevail there. Winds that, at other points, would be only a gentle breeze, owing to the convergence of several deep valleys and canyons from the southwest and west, hemmed in by lofty mountains, at that point, sweep with the force and velocity almost of a hurricane.

OUR BUFFALO HUNTERS

are having poor success this winter, as most of the herds are north of the Missouri on Milk river, in the Indian country, where only a few of the most daring hunters are willing to follow, on account of the risk of capture and confiscation of their robes, horses, guns, and, in fact, everything they have. When the buffalo come south of the Missouri upon the coded lands, these same Indians follow them up, and, if they find the wild animals scarce, they do not hesitate to shoot down cattle belonging to the settlers. James Fergus, formerly of Little Falls, Minn., living within fifteen miles of Fort Maginnis, has lost several hundred head by these same roving devils, whose agent at Fort Peck is now sending out United States troops to capture the white hunters who are following up the buffaloes across the Missouri river. Montanians can scarcely understand the logic that all the vast herds of wild buffalo, the moment they cross to the north bank of the Missouri, are the sole and exclusive property of a handful of red men, who have done nothing to rear them, while if they happen to recross to the ceded lands, they are no more the property of the white man than they are of the trespassing red. Does a "pass" from their agent confer any rights upon them? If the line of the ceded lands is to be held sacred to the Indians upon their side, and all white men found hunting upon one side are to be imprisoned and their property confiscated, then let us have the same right to imprison and confiscate on the other side. Forbearance has about ceased to be a virtue, and these old frontiersmen, who for years have carried their lives in their hands almost, may be provoked to retaliations, in which case the government will have to bear its share of responsibility.

INDIANS WITH BAD HEARTS.

A few hundred Blackfeet, Bloods, Piegans and Assinniboines, the greatest thieves and villains on the continent, are now olding from settlement all that tract of country from the eastern line of Montana to the Rocky mountains lying north of the Missouri and Marias rivers. This tract is larger than all New England, and contains the most valuable portion of Montana for agriculture. As long as they are allowed to roam over this vast tract, and from its borders make predatory excursions into the adjoining settlements, efforts for their civilization are worse than useless. The existence of this extensive reservation, and the game found within it have a powerful effect to retard the civilization of the Indians at Standing Rock and other agencies below; for the restless spirits there are constantly seeking some excuse to get away to their relatives at Popler Creek, or Wolf Point, instead of remaining at home to till their ground, as they should do. There is plenty of room for these Indians at Standing Rock, and under the able management of Maj. McLaughlin they would soon be on the road to civilization. The opening of this immense region of country from Fort Buford to the Rocky mountains would bring in a vast tide of immigration, and villages and cities would spring up along the Missouri, and Montana would receive some benefit from the westward wave of settlers. The Milk river flows through this tract from west to east for a distance of about 300 miles, with a wide and fertile valley nearly the whole distance. The Bear's Paw and Little Rocky mountains, known to be rich in the precious metals, are securely locked up in this reservation, and will remain so until the Indian title is extinguished. With these Indians located at one of the lower agencies, three military posts now kept up at great expense to the country can be safely dispensed with.

RAILROAD PROGRESS, ETC.

From the amount of work to be done on the Northern Pacific between Muir City and the foot of Rocky canyon, east of Bozeman, it will probably take at least a month, if not more, to get the track laid to Bozeman. The end of the track is now about sixteen miles east of the latter place. From Bozeman to Helena, a distance of 100 miles, the road bed is nearly all ready for the iron, and tracklaying will proceed rapidly. The contract made by the secretary of the interior with Rufus Hatch and others, granting them a monopoly of the most interesting portions of the National park, under the pretext of a public benefit and to protect it from spoliation, has produced an almost universal dissatisfaction throughout the Territory. It savors too strongly of an Alaska scheme. Fortunately for Niagara, a part of it is in Canada, or it would be granted to some syndicate of lobbyist hanging around Washington. The exclusive navigation of the James river in Dakota is now demanded, and if granted, soon the same will be claimed for the Missouri, and mayhap for the Yellowstone.

ARRIVAL OF GOV. CROSBY.

Special Correspondence of the Pioneer Press.

HELENA, Mont., Jan. 20, 1883.—Hon. Schuyler Crosby, the newly appointed governor of Montana, arrived in the city Saturday afternoon last. He is at present the guest of Judge Alden. On the day of his arrival quite a number of our prominent citizens were invited to dine with him at Judge Alden's, and assist in greeting the guest. The governor has already entered upon the duties of his office. Yesterday Gov. Potts, the retiring governor of the Territory, delivered his sixth and last biennial message to the Thirteenth legislative assembly. The governor reported the Territory, for the first time in its history, free from indebtedness, with over $14,000 in the treasury. The tax duplicate of the Territory has reached the sum of $33,211,319.12, and the revenue for Territorial purposes for 1882 was $90,863.47. The assessment of property for taxation in 1882 was about $9,500,000 greater than in 1881. While the financial condition of the Territory is so flattering, every county in Montana is carrying a debt, aggregating on the 1st of March last, $658,074.32. The several county debts are being reduced, however, and the credit of the counties consequently improving year by year.

THE LEGISLATURE

assembled on the 8th inst. The house organized at once, and elected Hon. A. Mayhew, of Deer Lodge, speaker. Most of the week has been spent in appointing committees and getting ready to go to work. A few bills have been introduced. The council has not yet completed its organization. There are 12 members, divided politically as follows: Republicans, 5; Democrats, 6; Independent, 1. The Independent, Back, from Choteau county, has matters pretty much his own way. The members meet every morning and take a few votes for permanent president, which vote has stood for several days: Stuart, Democrat, 6; White, Republican, 5; Back, Independent, 1. It is claimed that Back was snubbed by some of the Democratic members, else he would have voted with the Democrats. It is impossible to tell how long the deadlock will continue. Many think Back's chances are the best of the three candidates for the speakership.

A. E. B.

Rich Anthracite Lead.

Bismarck Tribune: From a thoroughly reliable source the Tribune learns that anthracite coal has been discovered at a point eight miles west of Livingston, twenty-five miles east of Bozeman, and fifty-five miles from the National park. The North Pacific Coal company have sunk two shafts, one down 140 feet, the other 125 feet. A seven-foot vein of genuine anthracite coal has been found which [illegible] for blacksmithing and makes, as our informant states, "a bushel of steam." [illegible] the Tribune [illegible] wouldn't know that at last anthracite coal has been discovered in the Northwest.

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Publisher.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

NEWS CONDENSED.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

Judge Pettigrew, of the Utah commission says the commission will go to Utah in the early spring to prepare for the August elections. The information he has is that the amendments now pending in the senate to the Edmunds bill creating the Utah commission will be adopted at th s session. The most important of these amendments is the one which requires a record of all marriages to be kept. The polygamist say that they have such a record now in their endowment house. If there is a record of this kind there, the government has never been able to get at it, and consequently has never been able to convict a Mormon of bigamy, although guilty of that crime. Judge Pettigrew says that the temper of the Mormons seems to be at present to give up their political rights rather than give up their institution of polygamy.

The plan of Gen. Walker to complete the tenth census contemplates a reduction of the volume of reports upon special topics from 11,000 to about 8,000 pages. General Walker adds: All reports not already printed are in a fair state of progress. Acting Superintendent Seaton is the third chief clerk prostrated, one dead, another gone south and a third lingers upon the verge of the most distressing disability. The general resumes charge of the census, and if granted the necessary money, says he will bring the whole business to a close during the current calendar year. The expense of this census will be about 9½ cents per head of population, against 9 cents in the ninth. The appropriation of $20,000 will be enough to complete the work.

The secretary of the navy will recommend the passage of a bill to compensate the officers and crew of the late steamer Rogers, for loss of personal effects when the vessel was destroyed; to allow the mother of the master to be put in the name of that vessel on one year's pay; and to reward the natives of St. Lawrence Bay for hospitalities to the shipwrecked crew.

President Arthur, upon the recommendation of Secretary Teller, has appointed Gen. H. H. Sibley, ex-Gov. William R. Marshall and Indian agent Luce, commissioners to settle with the Chippewa Indians for damages from overflow, resulting from the construction of reservoirs on Winnebagoshish and Leech lakes.

The Suffering Sisters, now in session at Washington, have resolved that the disfranchisement of women in Utah is a cruel display of power and subversive of their right to preserve the integrity of the society and the permanence of American institutions.

Senator Logan got very angry on the floor of the senate the other day, and informed the finance committee, to use his own words, "that it couldn't ram its bill down the throats of senators, and he wanted that committee to understand it."

The attorney general and Mrs. Brewster have issued cards for the wedding of their daughter, Mary Walker Brewster, to Robert J. W. Koons, of Philadelphia, in Washington, Feb. 6.

Mr. Strait introduced a bill in the house or the relief of John Bush, of the First United States infantry. It proposes to give to Mr. Bush a pension as a soldier from 1825 to 1835.

Senator Vest, who had a long talk with the president the other night, says he is perfectly convinced that there will be an extra session called in case the tariff bill fails.

RAILROAD RUMBLINGS.

General Superintendent C. F. Hatch, of the Omaha line, has resigned to take effect Feb. 1. It is understood that he will have a position elsewhere more desiralbe.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

At Battle Lake a fire broke out on Main street in the store building owned by J. R. Elliott, of Wadena, and occupied by George Rice as a billiard parlor and confectionary. The building and stock together with the pool and billiard tables are a total loss, $1,500; insurance on the building, $800. The cause of the fire is unknown.

At Topeka, Kans., Frederick S. Miller, brother-in-law of Prof. T. J. Lovewell, of Washburn college, was instantly killed at Prof. Lovewell's residence, by falling from a ladder against the house. The deceased had been in the commission business in Chicago, and was on a visit to Topeka.

Further details of the British storms indicate that there are worse winter misfortunes than the American blizzard.

Cattle are dying rapidly in the vicinity of Vincennes, Ind., with a disease resembling pinkeye.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

Lizzie Ruesch, a fourteen-year-old girl, who came to Milwaukee from Elm Grove, Wisconsin, last Saturday, to attend the wedding of a relative that evening, disappeared very suddenly Sunday on the south side, and the most dilligent search has failed to discover any clew as to her whereabouts. The friends of the girl are at a loss to account for her disappearance on any other grounds than that she has been carried off and is forcibly detained by parties unknown.

Mr. Guenther has again turned his attention to the subject of immigration: "The head tax law enacted a year ago," said he, "is found to be a failure as far as the chief object is concerned, to provide clean and comfortable quarters for immigrants arriving at New York. The trouble is believed to be due to the fact that commissioners are appointed by local or state authorities, and are not subject to the regulations of the treasury department."

Inquiries at headquarters department of Dakota show that more than $4,000 of unexpended balance from the sale of Cheyenne and Standing Rock Sioux ponies remains in the hands of the chief quartermaster. Nearly $20,000 of the proceeds of these sales was expended in the purchase of cattle, long ago the property of the quondam owners of the ponies.

At Chicago, in the case of Jack Sturgis, on trial charged with obtaining money under false pretenses in issuing duplicate warehouse receipts on grain in the Keokuk elevator, the jury, under instructions from the court, returned a verdict of "not guilty," as the conclusion of the evidence for the prosecution.

Gov. Cleveland of New York, has vetoed a bill appropriating $250,000 to carry on the work on the new capitol. He will recommend that immediate measures be taken to finish the structure on a business-like basis, and without unnecessary expense.

Business men of La Crosse have sent a commission to congress, asking for the construction of a pier at the entrance to protect the Des Moines river canal for the protection of navigation.

Colton & Co., the great crystal palace notion traders of Minneapolis have failed and made an assignment.

RECORD OF CRIME.

Mr. J. W. Thompson, a banker of this city, has been at the head of a committee of citizens who have been the means of disclosing the rascality of the detectives here, who, by a conspiracy with thieves and burglars, have been engaged in a system of compounding felonies for some years. He is evidently marked for vengeance, as it has been discovered that he is constantly shadowed wherever he moves by some one. Whenever he leaves the house in the evening he is followed, and upon his return the same mysterious individual may be seen dogging his footsteps, near or at a distance, according as his movements are observed. Who it is following him Mr. Thompson cannot, up to this time, be discovered, but his friends have become anxious about his personal safety, and means are being taken to solve the mystery.

Four prisoners broke jail at Grand Forks, Dak., Sunday night. The county jail is only a rickety affair, and was somewhat shattered by the battering rams that were used in getting Thurber, the rapist, from the same. The prisoners secured a knife and chisel, and made a wrench of hard wood with which they unscrewed the bars holding the staple, which let the door open. The four who escaped are Charles W. Bracket, a horse thief, who had been awaiting trial; Morton and Hickerson, two men for stealing wheat; and a barber, who stole a watch some time ago and was serving out a term. Silberg, who burned Dana's house at Devil's Lake, was in jail but asleep when the others fled and did not wake up.

Thomas Nelson, who committed suicide by leaping from the suspension bridge, was engaged in business as a wool broker at No. 138 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, and had been a resident of that city for thirty years past. Eight or ten years ago he decamped with $40,000 of the firm's funds, but was captured and compromised. The cause of his suicide was financial difficulty, earning $2,000 a year, and spending $8,000.

The criminal suit against the officers and pilot of the steamer Centennial, which ran down a fishing boat near Lake City last summer, has just been tried in the Wabasha court before Judge Start and a jury. It resulted in the acquittal of Capt. Davidson, and the verdict of manslaughter in the fourth degree, for the death of Collins against Pilot King.

At Denver, two men named Sullivan and Brennan were discussing the merits of the Robert E. Lee mine. Sullivan said the mine was as solid as Jesus Christ, at which Brennan, being a Catholic, became terribly enraged, drew a knife and stabbed Sullivan in the neck several times. He cannot recover.

At Boston, Elizabeth Wessels, aged 14, killed her brother-in-law, Henry Fasshauer, a dissipated fellow, separated from his wife. Fasshauer visited his wife, quarreled with her and his little brother, and while abusing him was shot dead.

At Philadelphia, lawyer Thomas Maher, Jr., Isaac L. Street and Joseph Myers, the first named a democrat and the other two republicans, and all election officers, have been convicted of making false returns.

Noah D. Smith, special deputy surveyor United States customs at the port of Memphis, Tenn., has been arrested in Chicago on a charge of embezzling government funds to the amount of $5,000 to $6,000.

Mrs. Gruber, a widow of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, deserted her three small children to elope with a fellow named Lanceglor, and the little ones almost perished with cold before being discovered by neighbors.

At Detroit, Mich., F. A. Wordell, an especial agent for the pension department, pleaded guilty to four charges of forging endorsements on promissory notes, and was remanded for sentence.

At Wellsville, Ohio, early on Saturday morning, John McEarren and Patrick McIntosh fought twenty-three rounds for $800, the latter winning.

PERSONAL NEWS NOTES.

Col. C. E. Bostwick of the firm of C. H. Graves & Co., of Duluth, who disappeared rather mysteriously ten weeks ago and of whom no trace was found for a long time, returned home Monday from New York where he had been nearly all the time. He had communicated with his family several times and set various dates for returning, but failed to arrive so often that it was thought he would not come at all. The firm of which he is a member has been reorganized, and he will have no more connection with it.

The marquis of Lorne attended St. John's (Episcopal) church Sunday morning. He was subsequently entertained at dinner by Gen. Sherman. Monday the marquis met the diplomatic corps at an early dinner given by the British minister.

Dr. George M. Beard, one of the most noted specialists on mental mechanism in its abnormal exhibitions, is dead. Dr. Beard was an original investigator, thoughtful, if not always profound.

Agnes Herndon is playing the Langtry trick, with an army officer for her Gebhardt. He is tall, sweet and handsome, as is the scandal also.

Gov. Hamilton, of Illinois, like Logan, has an accomplished, ambitious wife, who helps him pull wires.

Lewis Selyee, ex-congressman, died at Rochester, N. Y.

FOREIGN NEWS GOSSIP.

London Cable: A terrific gale, amounting in some places to a perfect hurricane, exceeding in violence anything experienced in ten years, visited the western and northwestern coasts of the British islands on the night of the 25th, extending itself far into the midland counties. Wherever this devastating storm raged it left sad witnesses of its fury and violence, such as roofless houses; demolished buildings, chimney stacks hurled down, trees uprooted, vessels breaking adrift in dock, driven helplessly ashore, or at sea becoming total wrecks, occasioning loss of life in some instances, and severe injuries in a great many others. Heavy rains and snow storms accompanied the gale in the more northern districts, thus adding to the element of further destruction by rivers overflowing their banks, lowlands submerged and cattle drowned.

An English company has applied to the authorities having in charge the demolition of the Tuileries for the material contained in the two laterial pavilions. It is proposed to remove them piecemeal to London, and rebuild them at the Crystal palace. Some Russians have applied for a part of the interior fittings of the main building to deposit in a museum at St. Petersburg, and an American virtuoso is making great efforts to purchase the great clock.

The phenomon plainly visible of a moving bog can now be seen near Castle Rea, in Ireland. The bog is a very large one, and in consequence of the recent heavy rains, has left its place and is proceeding toward Castle Rea, overwhelming thousands of acres of the adjoining country. Several farmhouses have been overwhelmed and the inmates have had narrow escapes. Part of Castle Rea is in danger.

London cable: Cardinal Manning is very ill, and it is reported that he is in a low, weak state. The recent attacks upon his eminence in Bishop Wilberforce's diary increases the wide and profound sympathy that is felt for him. It is known that these attacks gave him great pain.

The heaviest floods in the British lake district for twenty years now prevails. Lakes Derwentwater and Basinthwaite now join and a portion of Keswick is now submerged.

Full returns of the Manitoba provincial elections have been giving nineteen government supporters and eleven oppositionists.

The ceremony of electing Archbishop of Canterbury took place at the cathedral Monday.

A British gunboat has gone with supplies for the starving people at Sligo.

Killed by his Wife.

In Bath township, Clinton county, Mich., David Clark, a farmer, was shot and instantly killed by his wife. The parties had lived unhappily for some years, often coming to blows. Their last disagreement arose from the wife's determination to administer medicine other than that prescribed by the attending physician to one of her children. The child's illness continued and grew worse, until she was supposed to be dying. While Clark was endeavoring to restore her to consciousness, his wife took a revolver from an adjoining room and deliberately shot her husband through the back. The murderess was arrested immediately afterward.

The Sham and the Real.

Every good thing has its host of imitators; every genuine article its counterfeits. Bad manners and wicked habits have theirs also; but he who shams the bad never boasts of it, while they who ape the virtues of the good or simulate the genuine never hesitate to place the counterfeit before the public in their most alluring tones. When these people imitate they always choose a pronounced type or popular subject to copy from; and when they claim to be as good as "So-and-So," or to sell an article equal to "So-and-So," the public may depend upon it that Mr. "So-and-So" and his article are always of the best kind. Thus the sham is always proving the genuine merit of the thing it copies.

A firm of enterprising gentlemen produce and popularize an article of household use, such as the Royal Baking Powder, whose convenience, usefulness and real merit make for itself an immense and universal sale. A hundred imitators rise on every hand, and as they hold out their sham articles to the public, yelp in chorus, "Buy this; it's just as good as Royal, and much cheaper!" The Royal Baking Powder is the standard the world over, and its imitators in their cry that theirs is "as good as Royal" are all the time emphasizing this fact. In their laborious attempts to show by analysis and otherwise that the "Snowball" brand has as much raising power "as the Royal;" or that the "Resurrection" powder is as wholesome "as Royal;" or that the "Earthquake" brand is "as pure as the Royal," as well as by their contortive twistings of chemical certificates and labored efforts to obtain recognition from the government chemists and prominent scientists who have certified the superiority of Royal over all others, they all admit the "Royal" to be the acme of perfection, which it is their highest ambition to imitate. But the difference between the real and these imitations, which copy only its general appearance, is as wide as that between the paste and the true diamond. The shams all pay homage to the "Royal."

Fresh Meat in Camp.

The story of the coward who "captured" two of the enemy by running away when they gave chase, and reaching camp just in time to get them caught, instead of getting himself caught, is repeated below in the experience of a lazy man. The incident was given in the Toronto (Canada) Globe:

A Toronto lawyer recently made one of a party who were hunting in the Muskoka district. The members of the party had arranged that they should each take turns at the cooking. The gentleman in question did not take kindly to this work, and when the remainder of the party returned from the chase he was invariably asleep, not having prepared a meal.

His companions became somewhat disturbed at his laziness, and declared that he should go out and bring in some game. This he proceeded very gladly to do.

In a few minutes, however, he was seen at the top of his speed rushing frantically towards the camp with an immense bear in hot pursuit. He dashed into the shanty, the heavy doors of which were at once barred against the would-be intruder, the frightened hunter exclaiming, between gasps in trying to catch his breath,—

"Boys—here's your—fresh meat—all alive!"

After some dozen shots had been fired from the roof of the shanty, where the gallant hunters had managed to crawl through one of the numerous smoke-holes, the bear was killed and the men descended and soon were enjoying a hearty dinner of bear-steaks.

LATE MARKETS.

ST. PAUL.

FLOUR—Quotations: Patents, $6@6.75; clears, $5@5.75; straights, $5.50@6.25; common brands, $3@5; in bbls. 25c extra. Buckwheat flour, $6@6.50 per bbl. Rye flour, $4@4.25 per bbl. Graham, $4.50@5.25 per bbl. The market was firm.

WHEAT—The market was dull, yet quotably firm. There were scarcely any offerings, receipts being light. There was a little milling inquiry. But very little business was done outside of the board of trade. Yesterday morning wheat in Chicago jumped 1c upward very suddenly. Prices and values can be better regulated when the snow embargo is relieved, and there shall be a chance to see what the farmers really intend about marketing. Quotations: No. 1 hard, $1.10@1.12; No. 1, $1.05@1.07; No. 2 hard, $1.05; No. 2, 97c, No. 3, 87c—all bids.

CORN—Dull; no demand to speak of. Stocks fair. Prices weak. No. 2, old, 48c bid, 50c asked; February and May, 50c asked; new, mixed, 47c asked.

OATS—Quiet and weak at unchanged quotations: No. 2 mixed, 39c asked; February and March, 37c bid; April, 38c bid, 39c asked; May, 39c asked, 40c bid; No. 3 mixed, 38c asked; No. 2 white, 38½c bid, 41c asked. Sales: 1 car No. 2 mixed at 38c; 1 car No. 2 mixed April at 39c.

MINNEAPOLIS.

FLOUR—Quiet in local prices, and an easier feeling was noted in outside advances. Quoted as follows: Patents, $6@6.75; straights $5.50@6.25; clears, $5.25@5.75; low grades, $2.50@3.22 per bbl.

MILLSTUFFS—Bran was easier in prices, and the demand was also a little less: $8 was bid and $8.50@8.75 asked, with sales reported at $8.25 in bulk. Shorts were quoted nominal at $19.50@20. Corn meal and mixed feed were steady at previous prices, $19.50@20 for good fresh stock. There were sales reported at both prices, on track.

WHEAT—There were more offers to sell for future delivery yesterday, but the offers were something lower than the prices at which sales were recorded on the day before. Buyers were also off in their views. The bidding for No. 1 hard was at about $1.10 for spot and for seller February. For seller May bids were at $1.14 at the close of 'change. There were sales made at $1.15 but at the close there were offers to sell May at $1.14½. A few cars of choice No. 1 sold by sample at $1.09, and others at $1.07. Selling appeared to be in the most favor, as there were more dealers offering to sell than were in the humor to buy. This, however, indicates nothing more than the natural scramble to get out when there comes a dip in values. The closing quotations for the grades named were as follows: No. 1 hard, $1.10; No. 2 hard, $1.06@1.07; No. 1 Northern, $1.06@1.07; No. 2 Northern, $1.01@1.02; No. 1 Southern, $1.01; No. 2 Southern, 96@97c.

CORN—There was but little trading in this cereal. Spot No. 2 sold at 50c, and that was bid for more. The same price was bid for February, but sellers refused to accept below 52c, and so trading in futures was at a standstill for the day. No grade sold to a limited extent in car lots by sample, ranging from 44@47c.

OATS—Were offered more freely and the feeling was a shade easier than on the preceding day. No. 2, in car lots, brought 36c, and for No. 2 white 38c was bid f. o. b.; No. 2 quoted at 36c; new white at 37c; rejected, 34c. The inquiry was less, as the amount offered was larger. Prices were, to some extent, influenced by advices from other points.

MILWAUKEE MARKET—Flour, quiet and nearly nominal. Wheat, stronger and higher; No. 2 hard, $1.13; No. 2, $1.01½; January, $1.01½; February, $1.02; March, $1.03; May, $1.09; No. 3 and No. 4, nominal. Coarse grains nominal. Provisions, steady; mess pork, $17.35 cash and February; $17.65 March. Lard, prime steam, $10.00 cash and February; $11 March. Dressed hogs, in fair demand at $7.25@7.30. Butter, quiet. Cheese quiet and firm. Eggs scarce and firm. Receipts—Flour, 9,604 bbls; wheat, 5,625 bu; barley, 13,920 bu. Shipments—Flour, 6,875 bbls; wheat, 2,425 bu; barley, 15,960 bu.

CHICAGO MARKET — Flour, firm and unchanged. Wheat, stronger and higher; regular, $1.02¼@1.02½ January; $1.02½@1.02¾ February; $1.03¾@1.03½ March; $1.04¾ April; $1.08⅞@1.09⅛ May; No. 2 Chicago spring, $1.02¾@1.02⅞; No. 3 Chicago spring, 97½c; No. 2 red winter, $1.03. Corn, active, firmer and higher; 69c cash and January; 59½@59⅝c February; 57@57½c March; 58⅜@58¾c May. Oats, steady and fair demand; 37¼c cash; 37¾c January; 37¾c February; 38c March; 39¼c May; 38¾c June. Rye, lower, at 62c. Barley, dull at 83c. Flax seed, firmer, at $1.31@1.32 on track. Dressed hogs, quiet; light, $7.15@7.20; heavy, $7.25@7.30. Pork, steady and fair demand; $17.30@17.35 cash and January; $17.42½@17.45 February; $17.62½@17.65 March; $17.82½@17.85 April; $18.02½@18.05 May; $18.15@18.17½ June. Lard, unsettled and generally higher, at $10.70@10.72½ cash and January; $10.72½@10.75 February; $10.90@10.92½ March; $11.02½@11.05 April; $11.15@11.17½ May; $11.17½@11.20 June. Bulk meats, in fair demand; shoulders, $6.75; short ribs, $9; do clear, $9.80. Butter, dull; fair to fancy creamery, 25@30c; good to fancy dairies, 23@30c. Eggs, quiet and unchanged. Whisky, steady and unchanged, at $1.16. Call—Wheat, firmer, but not quotably higher. Corn, irregular; 69½c January; 59½c February; 57c March; 58⅜c May. Oats advanced ⅛c. Pork advanced 2½c. Lard advanced 2½c. Receipts—Flour, 16,000 bbls; wheat, 8,000 bu; corn, 100,000 bu; oats, 25,000 bu; rye, 6,500 bu; barley, 40,000 bu. Shipments—Flour, 8,000 bbls; wheat, 18,000 bu; corn, 61,000 bu; oats, 22,000 bu; rye, 4,000 bu; barley, 9,500 bu.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Tuesday, January 23.

SENATE.—The senators were every one absent to-day, except Butler of South Carolina, when Chaplain Bullock asked the divine blessing upon the deliberations of the body.

As soon as the amen had been said, Gen. Butler, seeming to feel the loneliness of his position, asked for a call of the senate, and the pages were sent out to look for absentees.

After a sufficient number arrived to proceed, the morning business was disposed of and it was agreed to go to work upon the tariff bill every day after the disposition of routine matters and continue in session until 6 o'clock.

The hour for adjournment arrived, with iron ore still under discussion. Senator Sherman made a significant speech, to-day, in which he carefully reviewed the schedules of the commissioner's report, and showed that the bill of the committee was not comparable to it as a wise and statesmanlike measure. Beck attacked both as frauds. The prospects for the bill grow darker daily. The only interesting action taken was the rejection by a vote of 11 to 37 of an amendment increasing the duty on iron ore from 50 cents to $1.

HOUSE.—A bill was introduced by Mr. Butterworth for the appointment of seven railroad investigating commissioners, and Mr. Young offered a resolution to retire Gen. Rufus Ingalls with the rank of major general. The day was principally consumed in the discussion of the naval bill, which was amended in several particulars.

Wednesday, January 24.

SENATE.—After some unimportant routine business, the consideration of the tariff bill was resumed.

A motion by Mr. Sherman to increase the duty on pig-iron, scrap-iron and scrap-steel from $6, to $6.72 per ton was lost—16 to 37.

Mr. Voorhees presented a memorial of Gen. Herman Sturm of Indiana, setting forth his claim against Mexico for aiding in the expulsion of the French forces from Mexico and the re-establishment of the republic.

HOUSE.—The day was spent in committee of the whole on the naval appropriation bill. The provision for the completion of the unfinished monitors was adopted.

Thursday, January 25.

SENATE.—Nothing was done except the deliverance of eulogies upon the late Senator Hill of Georgia.

HOUSE.—The naval bill passed. The house then took up the ways and means tariff bill, after refusing to take up various revenue bills. Among the latter was the bill to reduce the tobacco tax, the vote being 100 to 147 against the consideration of that measure.

The tariff bill was read by its title, and at 1:30 o'clock Mr. Kelly rose to open the debate. His views have already been given in these dispatches, but in his opening he declared that although there were many items in the present bill that he did not approve, nevertheless he would support it in all its details as he considered it the best tariff scheme ever submitted to the American congress.

Not more than a half hour had been consumed in the opening, when a message was received from the senate announcing the death of Senator Hill of Georgia, and the house proceeded to eulogize the deceased senator and then adjourned.

Friday, January 26.

SENATE.—There was a long and earnest debate on the tariff. The first thing taken up was iron bars, flats and rods. Senator Beck proposed to make a sweeping reduction, which was not agreed to; but Brown, Georgia, was more successful. Sherman came to his support. The Ohio senator's action caused some surprise at first, because he had been up to this time resisting every effort at reduction. Mr. Brown's motion was to make the tariff on bar iron $18 per ton; on flats $20, and rods $22 per ton. The rate fixed by the committee's bill was per pound, but was equal to $19.60 on bars, $22.40 on flats, and $24.84.4 on rods. When the ayes and noes were called, the strength of the proposition was for the first time developed, and the solid democrat vote was reinforced by that of Sherman and Van Wyck on the republican side, which carried it, 30 to 27. The debate continued through the day.

The president sent to the senate, the following nominations: Lieut. Col. James C. Duane, corps of engineers, to be colonel; Maj. Henry M. Robert, corps of engineers, to be lieutenant colonel. Postmasters: M. W. Moir, Eldora, Iowa; C. A. Lisle, Fort Madison, Iowa; James M. Emery, Lemars, Iowa; Sophia M. Miller, Alexandria, Minn.; Alfred H. Lewis, Milbank, Dak.

HOUSE.—The debate on the tariff occupied the whole day, and one which only giants in tariff could discuss, and the small fry wisely refrained from interrupting. The old quinine story was told over and over again.

Saturday, January 27.

SENATE.—The senate disposed of routine business early in the session, and then proceeded to consider the tariff bill. The debate was long, tedious and, except to those engaged in the speech making, exceedingly dull.

A very late session was held, the metal schedule occupying the day.

In the course of the debate Mr. Beck again attacked the tariff commission. He said that no body of men more artfully concealed their deceptive designs than that commission, adding that it went to work deliberately to deceive congress and the country. He was particularly severe on Messrs. Porter and Skinner of the commission.

The principal changes made in the bill to-day were in the direction of reduction. But some of the attempts made to reduce duties were unsuccessful, and the reductions generally were not so great as some of them have been. Barbed wire was ordered to .6 of cent a pound.

HOUSE.—The tariff discussion in the house was not enlivened by any exciting scenes, but was remarkable for the interest manifested by the members in the remarks of Messrs. McKinley and Carlisle. Both must have been greatly flattered by the throngs of eager associates, who utilized every available spot to hear what was being said by these giants in behalf of their positions. There were few interruptions of the speakers, and these were of minor importance, and did not perceptibly hinder the progress of the debate. It was understood that when the hour arrived for closing general debate that a motion would be made on the part of the democrats to suspend the rules, and pass the bill without further discussion.

Monday, January 29.

SENATE.—The day was spent in the consideration of the tariff bill. Nothing of special interest characterized the proceedings save a curt speech by Senator Hoar in defense of inventors, in the course of which he declared that we still had to go to Europe for our literature.

HOUSE.—Mr. Washburn presented to the house the memorial of the Minnesota legislature praying for a more liberal appropriation for the immediate improvement of the harbor of Duluth, Minn.

Delegate Pettigrew introduced a bill in the house authorizing the quartermaster general to investigate the claims of George F. Bratt for logs used in the construction of Fort Abercrombie during the years 1863, 1864 and 1865.

Mr. Belmont, from the foreign affairs committee, presented a minority report against the abrogation of the treaty with Hawaii. He takes the ground that there are grave objections against congressional interference with the treaty-making power; that gross frauds have been perpetrated under this treaty; and he offers a resolution authorizing the president to investigate. Work was resumed on the tariff bill.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Tuesday, January 23.

Senator Sackett introduced a bill changing the fiscal year of state educational and other institutions to make it end Aug. 31. There were morning and afternoon sessions, nearly the whole time of which was taken up in discussion, in committee of the whole —in the morning to reduce interest on sales of public lands from 7 to 5 cents, and in the afternoon as the special order, upon Judge Wilson's bills forbidding subsidies or donations to corporations.

Senator Rice's bill repealing the dog law was passed on third reading.

House, Tuesday January 23.

Bills were introduced amending the act relating to the bridge across the Mississippi river at St. Paul; and authorizing Stevens county to issue $50,000 of bonds for a court house.

House bills were passed to regulate the use of copies of statues by members of the legislature; in relation to counter claims and outsets.

Senate bills passed: Attaching certain territory to Marshal county; authorizing St. Paul to issue $500,000 to purchase and improve the water works; amending the charter of Stillwater.

Senate, Thursday, January 25.

Bills were introduced: Providing for issuing duplicates for mutilated state or county bonds and warrants; amending the statutes referring to actions of ejectment; to provide for a board of railway commissioners and better regulation of rates: for the consolidation of adjoining counties; for admission to practice of attorneys to all courts on certificate and examination; to encourage timber culture, amending the present law; for the proper registration of marriage certificates.

Senator O'Brien's bill to punish careless handling of baggage was passed, as was a resolution for printing copies of the governor's message in foreign tongues.

The anti-bonus bill for a constitutional amendment was recommended for passage in committee of the whole.

House, Thursday, January 25.

Bills introduced: Amending statutes relating to election of county commissioners in Goodhue county; amending statutes relating to expurging obnoxious weeds; making rape upon a child under ten years of age punishable by death; amending statutes relating to official trust; amending statutes relating to tax sales; relating to the organization of fire insurance companies; limiting the time in which actions may be commenced to open real estate judgments; legalizing the foreclosure of mortgages in certain cases relating to the opening of judgments in certain cases; to determine the effect and application of certain acts effecting judgments and a number of incorporation bills.

House bills passed: permitting the filing of chattel mortgages in villages; requiring a schedule of times of holding courts to be placed in publication of the laws; repealing Charter 144, relating to judgments of the United States courts.

Senate, Friday, January 26.

Bills were introduced: To provide for laying out of cartways in pine timber; to allow railways to increase capital stock by vote of majority of stockholders; to regulate the licensing of sale of liquor; to constitute a state board to examine teachers; to regulate the practice of medicine in Minnesota; and to legalize the organization of the county of Cook.

The special committee on rules reported in favor of making rules of twenty-second session those of this one; adopted. House bills: Allowing Stevens county to issue bonds; amending the act for appointment of board of control for Ramsey county almshouse; repealing the act incorporating the village of Buffalo, Wright county; and senate bill reducting rate of interest on sale of public lands, and amending the constitution so as to restrict the granting of aid to railways, were passed. In committee of the whole, Senator Truax's game bill was amended, and recommended to pass, and if it should go through the house (which seems unlikely) the time for shooting chickens would be fixed on from the 15th of August to the 15th of October.

Senator Steenerson's bill provides that the counties of Kittson, Marshall, Polk, Clay, Beltrami and Becker, of the Eleventh judicial district, and Wilkin, from the Seventh, be taken therefrom and constituted into a new judicial district to be known as the Thirteenth.

The bill further provides that on the next general election after its passage a judge for such district be voted for and chosen by the legal voters of the counties named.

Senate adjourned to Tuesday, 30th inst.

House, Friday, January 26.

The Rahilly usury bill came up yesterday in its regular order upon its third reading, whereupon Mr. Childs, a friend of the bill, who evidently desired to defer action until there is a full house, moved to lay the bill over. The motion was adopted by a vote of 51 to 36. It is evident from the votes already taken upon the bill that it is likely to pass the house, but it will be by an exceedingly close vote.

Bills were introduced: Authorizing the board of education of St. Paul to issue $50,000 of bonds to complete the high school building; amending general laws relating to manufacturing corporations; authorizing the draining of a lake in Douglas county; providing for an annual appropriation of $7,000 to agricultural societies; amending the high school act; amending statues relating to county surveyors; making the Minnesota Journal of Education the organ of the state superintendent; amending the act providing for the adoption of children; to provide for the licensing of the sale of liquors, in dining room cars; proposing an amendment to constitution, prohibiting the sale of liquors in this state; and sundry bridge bills, and amendments to the acts of incorporation. The amendments to the acts of incorporation were passed. Adjourned until 11 a. m., Tuesday 30th inst.

Funny Fancies.

"If every tree is known by its fruit, what kind of fruit" asks the Boston Transcript, "does an axle-tree bear?" You had better ax it. The axle-tree under a farm wagon frequently bear various kinds of fruits—and vegetables also; and that under a buggy often bears very soft pairs.

Said the Colorado man: "Eastern people call the Atlantic Ocean 'the drink;' they know what's right, they do; they understand what the size of a drink ought to to be."—Boston Post.

One Chicago Pawnshop has loaned money on 2,200 revolvers during the past year. This will go far toward explaining why the criminal classes of Chicago now use a sand-club on their victims. They have not yet redeemed their revolvers.

Goldmark, the Viennese composer, introduced himself one day to a good looking young lady sitting opposite to him in a railroad coupe: "My name is Goldmark; I am the composer of the "Queen of Sheba." "Ah," replied the young lady, "what a remunerative position that must be."—Leipzig Signale.

One of the most popular conductors that ever ran a train out of Boston has the credit of the following bon mot. Not long since a special minister's ticket was handed to him, to which he gave careful inspection, as his duty required. The passenger quite tartly remarked that it was unnecessary to be so very particular about his ticket. The conductor quickly replied, in his quiet and ever-courteous manner: "I am only looking to see where you are going, sir. I don't care to see in the morning papers, "Another minister gone wrong!" —Traveller.

MINNESOTA SENATORSHIP.

On Tuesday 23d, one ballot was taken as follows:

Name.		Name.
WINDOM	51	DAVIS	5
WILSON	34	WAKEFIELD	2
COLE	18	STRAIT	1
DUNNELL	10	GILMAN	1
HUBBARD	11	BERRY	1
KINDRED	5	CASTLE	1
FARMER	3
START	4	Total	147

Necessary to a choice, 74.

The only notable change was the return of Senator Billeon, who has voted for Davis and Kindred, to Windom and the change of Peterson from Armstrong, to whom he has been so faithful, to Davis.

In the evening Mr. Windom's friends held a caucus at which it was resolved to continue the contest indefinitely.

On Wednesday Jan., 24, there were three ballots, all resulting about the same as before, and Windom standing 51. The changes in the first ballot form the last one, of Tuesday were Cullen, Wilson to Davis; McKusick, Cole to Davis, and White, Wilson to Cole. The other changes—and all were recognized as putting into play guerilla tactics—were Belle, Dunnell to Davis; Cullen, Davis to Wilson; Demueles, Wilson to Kindred; John Peterson, Cole to Start; Carson, Dunnell to Start and McNamara, Hubbard to Wilson.

On Thursday 25th, one ballot was taken as follows: Windom, 50; Wilson, 33; Cole, 16; Dunnell, 10; Hubbard, 9; Kindred, 6; Davis, 4; Start, 4; Farmer, 3; Wakefield, 2; Berry, Strait, Gilman, 1; Waite, 1; Castle, 1. Total, 148.

The principal changes were Crosby, Hubbard to Dunnell; Dilley, Wilson to Cole; McNamara, Hubbard to Wilson; Chisholm, Waite to Wilson; White, Cole to Wilson; and Frank, Davis to Wilson.

In the evening 47 anti-Windom members held a caucus and resolved to stand out to the last.

On Friday, 26, one ballot was taken resulting as follows: Windom, 49; Wilson, 34; Cole, 16; Dunnell, 10; Hubbard, 8; Kindred, 6; Davis, 5; Start, 4; Farmer, 3; Strait, 2; Wakefield, 2; Berry, 1; Castle, 1; Donnelly, 1 Gilman, Total, 143. Necessary to a choice, 72.

The legislature adjourned to Tuesday 30th, when it is expected there will be a break-up and an election soon thereafter.

Ballots	Windom	Wilson	Cole	Dunnell	Davis	Kindred	Hubbard	Start	Castle	C. D. Gilfillan	Dickinson	Armstrong	Gilman	Berry	Farmer	Strait	Wakefield	Totals
1	70	34	10	10	3	5	3	1	1	1	3	2	1	1	..	..	..	145
2.	63	37	11	9	4	5	3	2	1	1	3	1	1	1	1	2	..	147
3.	61	34	12	9	3	5	8	4	1	1	3	1	1	1	1	2	..	147
4.	58	35	14	11	3	5	8	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	2	2	..	147
5.	57	34	14	10	4	5	11	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	2	1	..	146
6.	55	34	16	11	4	5	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	2	1	1	146
7.	53	35	14	11	3	6	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	3	1	1	144
8.	51	34	15	11	3	6	10	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	3	1	1	144
9.	51	32	17	11	3	6	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	4	1	1	143
10	50	33	15	11	3	6	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	6	1	1	143
11	48	32	17	10	4	5	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	4	1	1	139
12	48	32	17	10	4	5	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	4	1	1	139
13	44	26	16	10	3	5	9	4	1	..	..	1	1	1	4	1	2	128
14	51	34	16	10	5	5	11	4	1	..	..	..	1	1	3	1	2	147
15	51	32	17	10	7	5	11	4	1	..	..	..	1	1	3	1	2	146
16	51	30	16	8	7	6	11	6	1	..	..	..	1	1	3	1	2	146
17	51	29	18	8	6	6	11	5	2	..	..	..	1	1	3	1	2	146
18	50	33	17	10	4	6	9	4	1	..	..	..	1	1	3	1	2	143
19	49	34	16	10	5	6	8	4	1	..	..	..	1	1	4	2	2	141

MINNESOTA SUGAR CANE.

What Col. Colman, of the Rural World, Has to Say About Its Cultivation

Col. N. J. Colman, of the Rural World, on his return to St. Louis from the recent convention of Minnesota cane growers, gave the result of his observations to a St. Louis Republican reporter as follows: The past season had been a very unfavorable one for cane growers, owing to a wet spring and a later and severer frost than was ever known for that season of the year; but all who had persevered in cultivating their cane had obtained a fair crop that yielded good syrup, which made very fine sugar. Those who raised crops said they had made more money that way than at any other kind of farming. The climate of Minnesota was not so unfavorable for the cultivation of Northern cane as that of Missouri, although it was in this State that the merits of the amber cane were first made known. But the season there was too short for most varieties to ripen. In Missouri, on the other hand, we could grow to maturity many kinds of the Northern cane that could not be grown in the States farther north. We had a longer season for manufacturing. If the business of sugar and syrup making was profitable in Minnesota it ought to be doubly so in this State. All who attended the Minnesota meeting were well statisfied with the profits they had made during past years. The interest in the Northern cane industry was rapidly increasing owing, in a great measure, to the success of the Champaign, Ill., works and the Cape May and New Jersey works, that had reaped large profits. Capitalists were now willing to to erect works for manufacturing sugar and syrup, and some of them intended to connect the manufacture of glucose from the seed, as it was better adapted for that purpose than corn.

Mr. Colman believed that the Northern cane could compete with the same product in the South, in the profitable production of sugar. He thought it would prove even more profitable, inasmuch as the crop of seed grown from Northern cane would pay the entire expense of raising the product. This being the case, it costs absolutely nothing, when ready for the mill in the North. The cane seed was as valuable as corn grown on the same area of ground for feeding all kinds of stock. There were no such compensating returns from the production of Southern cane, and the juice was about as rich in the Northern product. It was true that Southern cane would yield more sugar per acre, but two acres of the Northern cane would give as large a yield as one acre of the Southern product, and five acres of the latter could be grown at less risk and expense than one acre of the former. Then there was the seed in the Northern product, which paid for the labor required in raising it. We were certainly preparing to produce all our own sugar, and save the $100,000,000 a year to our own people which was paid at the present time to foreign nations.

Sauk Center Tribune: The United States marshal visited the Big Bend, Todd county, last week, in pursuit of the timber thieves, on the information that considerable trespassing has been going on up there. Different owners are to proceed in cases of trespass, one of whom has already commenced in the United States court at St. Paul; Sanborn & Sanborn, attorneys, W. R. Gillis, agent. The parties interested, we learn from good authority, are the Manitoba company and some ten or more men residing in Todd county.

Mr. Joel B. Bassett, who has just returned from a trip to the logging camps in Itasca county, north of Aitkin, reports considerable anxiety among the lumbermen on account of the prevalence of small pox in the camps on one branch of the Rainy Lake river, near the northern boundary of the state. Mr. Bassett was unable to obtain definite information as to the number of cases, but all the reports from the infected district pronounce the situation serious, and so far as he could learn, ten deaths from the contagion had already occurred in the locality mentioned.

Mr. C. Niel, living some four miles east of Donnell station, Kittson county, left home with oxen and sled to go about eight miles from home for wood, and did not return. The next day search was made, and the unfortunate man was found about five miles from home kneeling on some willow boughs, which he had evidently arranged as an altar, from which to offer up his last petition from this earth to the Creator. He leaves a wife and five children.

P. O. Stephens, of Wilmar has purchased the Barnes grain houses at Detroit and will erect a 30,000 bushel elevator.

At Madelia Henry Hudson was baptised on Thursday last by Mr. Stewart, a Campbellite preacher, by being immersed in the river through a hole cut in the ice.

Thomas Madden, of Wabasha, who was severely hurt last summer by a wreck on the Minneapolis & St. Louis road, has brought suit against the company to recover $25,000 damages for the injuries that he sustained.

Hanged For Many Murders.

On the 30th of November, at 10 a. m., a dreadful woman, one Kate Nagy, was hanged in Stein-an-Anger, the frontier town between Styria and Hungary. In the annals of crime she will occupy one of the first places, for, although she confessed to six murders only, she was convicted of twenty-six, and we may suppose that she committed many more. She found means of obtaining poison from chemists in small provincial towns by pretending to have a house full of rats. The small cakes which she sold in a tiny shop were so universally liked by old and young that she could sell poisoned cakes to the persons who wished to rid themselves of a superfluous relative without arousing suspicion. Her first murder was probably that of her own husband, and when this remained undiscovered she committed a succession of other murders, for which she was paid by the parties concerned. Her victims were men, women and children, old and young, and although her neighbors had long suspected her, still no one dared for sometime to accuse her of the dreadful crime. She was believed to be very pious, and it was chiefly by her aid that the Dominican friars of San-an-Anger were able to found a religious society which gained great influence in the course of years. Although she confessed to six murders, the court of justice condemned her only to hard labor for life; but the imperial council appealing to the high court, obtained a death sentence which was signed about the middle of last month. Ever since the sentence was communicated to Kate Nagy she spent her days and nights in praying and fasting with her father confessor ever by her side. On Thursday the hangman arrived from Budo-Pesth, and Kate Nagy was taken to the place of execution at the other end of the town. When she appeared in the street every every one was surprised to see a meek little woman of about fifty years of age, with a kind, motherly expression in her small face. She was escorted by a detachment of imperial dragoons and followed by thousands who had come from all parts of the country to see her. As she entered the wooden fence which conceals the gibbet from the eyes of the public she started, for her daughter came up to her and begged leave to enter with her mother. When she was refused she fainted in the arms of some women who had come with her. The hangman fulfilled his terrible task in a few seconds. In the meantime the crowd outside behaved in a most shameful manner. They surrounded the murderess's daughter and declared she must be executed also, because such a dreadful woman's entire race should be extirpated once for all. The ruffians would have lynched the girl had not a brave woman stood up in her defense, and by her undaunted courage intimidated those near her until some dragoons came to her rescue. Kate Nagy refused to name the persons for whom she prepared her poison, so that they cannot be prosecuted.—Vienna Corr., London Daily News.

Romance in the Novel.

The incidents of romance stand in relation to its descriptive and character postions as the enlivening soul to its related body. To make the descriptive and character parts effective they must be made to strike the reader like an illumination of the countenance, a glance of the eye, or an expressive movement of the hand. No novel can be great without some great and striking incident which translates the entire movement into a single circumstance, and thus wreathes, as it were, the whole body of thought that underlies the work upon a single expression, a mere movement in the entire action of the story. It is thus that Shakspeare used incident when he confronts "Hamlet" with his father's spirit upon the ramparts of Elsinore, when he brings "Macbeth" face to face with the witches on the blasted heath, when he envelops "Romeo" and Juliet" in the balcony scene with an undying halo of the purest and noblest passion of human life.—[Chicago News.

Drouth in New England.

The Boston Journal prints extended details of the effects of the prolonged drouth in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. The loss of water power is serious, and there is much domestic distress. In Manchester, N. H., some 2,000 operatives are idle on account of the mills being obliged to shut down. The lumbermen of Maine suffer severely, the product of the saw mills being reduced by some 20,000,000 feet. The rivers of Maine are lower than for half a century, and the loss on account of suspended operations reach many thousand dollars. In Vermont the flush-boards on the Connecticut have been raised two feet, and still there is not water enough to keep all the mills running on full time. It is impossible to estimate the total losses. The rainfall for 1882 throughout the region mentioned was barely half the average. There has been no January thaw, and the prospect is threatening.

Mrs. Swisshelm on Mrs. Langtry.

Mrs. Swisshelm's Letter to Pittsburg Post.

Those who pay to see her offer a premium not only to her but to the thousands of handsome women to exhibit themselves like so many kangaroos—to go on the stage simply to be seen and to sacrifice their delicacy and reputation to draw crowds. Freddy is a good advertisement. Proper people were shocked that any one should go to see and hear Sarah Bernhardt, a finished artist and one who had the apology of a French birth, life and training for her immorality. She broke no marriage obligation and was true to a life-long attachment, and not to see her was to miss a rare intellectual treat. Now those same people who turned their backs upon her are crowding to see a woman who has stained the reputation of an English matron to flirt with a stranger. Many novices argue that the talk about Mrs. Langtry is the result of the total depravity of the newspapers and is a penalty inseparable from the life of an actress.

Perfect Manhood.

Many young and middle-aged men suffer from an exhaustive drain that weakens every organic function, and is hurtful to both mind and body, ending often in extreme nervous debility. To counteract this evil influence and to strengthen the organs affected, use Dr. Guysott's Yellow Dock and Sarsaparilla. It has cured thousands.

A Prosperous Man's Beginning.

From the Oneonta (N. Y.) Herald.

A New York paper of recent date places the wealth of Mr. C. P. Huntington, of California, at very many millions. Many of the older residents of this village remember very well—way back in the forties—a young man who, as an itinerant peddler of silver-ware and trinkets, first with a small hand-bag, then with a horse and cart, used to make headquarters at Oneonta. He had little capital save keenness, frugality, and indomitable pluck and perseverance. Afterward he made a venture here in the hardware business, and finally the California fever of 1849 carried the young man of 24 or 25, with many others from this village, to the Pacific coast.

William Weise was fatally shot by J. N. Hook, at the latter's residence in Newport Ky. Weise came to Hook's house before daylight to deliver bread, but, coming in an unusual place Hook mistook him for a burglar and called to him, but Weise closely muffled, did not hear, and Hook fired inflicting a fatal wound.

COUNTY NEWS.

Fisher Foolishness.

From the Bulletin.

Charley Plumb of this place is in England.

The Keystone boys are in town every day hauling ice and wood to the farm for summer use.

The weather has been very fine during the last few days, and the farmers begin to show themselves again.

Dr. Lankester, this afternoon amputated one of the toes of Ole Hergensem, who was badly frozen in the late blizzard.

Mrs. Hanson, the mother of Ole Hanson, living about four miles north-west of town, died on Tuesday last, her remains were entered in the cemetery of this place to-day.

Elias Steenerson received his commission as post master of Fisher on Friday last. In consequence, to-day the post office material was removed from the bank to the store of Steenerson Bros., in Thompson Avenue. The new post master has made arangements to purchase the whole of the P. O., plant of Mr. Hugh Thompson, so that the change will cause the least possible inconvenience.

East Grand Forks Facts.

From the Courier.

A good many went out on their claims this week.

James Sanders is reported as not doing so well since his removal home.

Father Schirra, of Crookston, was unfortunate enough to freeze his nose and ears while in town the first of the week.

Interest in the Northwest does not abate judging from the increased supply of letters of inquiry that come daily from the Eastern States.

And still our population continues to increase, despite the cold weathor Mrs. James Sullivan presented her husband with a 10-pounder, last Sunday night.

The petition to have the name of the postoffice at this place changed from Nashville to East Grand Forks, has had the desired effect and Postmaster Howes informs us that he has received a notification from Washington that the change will occur on the first day of April next.

Mr. Franks returned from Ojata Monday, where he has been for a week or more, and expresses himself as not being very well pleased with that place, and is now more than ever convinced that there is now town in the Northwest that compares to East Grand Forks.

Grand Forks Herald.

During the blizzard last week Patrick Murray discovered a woman north of the depot on the prairie, nearly perishing with cold and unable to proceed further. Though nearly benumbed with cold himself, he unhesitatingly took her on his back and carried her home safely, though it was nearly a half-mile distance. Mr. Murray deserves much credit for his praiseworthy act.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

M. Williams claims he was bitten by a butterfly on Saturday last.

The lumber for Robbecks' bakery and restaurant is arriving daily.

The thermometer was 45 degrees below nothing on Saturday last.

Considerable claim jumping is being done in the Thief River country; and an increased demand for revolvers will be the result.

Ole Brink, our brawny armed blacksmith knows what solitary confinement means. He accidently locked himself in Crocker & Cundy's cellar where he remained for three hours before being released.

Our postmaster informs us that within the past six weeks he has received over fifty letters from different parts of the United States and Canada enquiring about St. Hilaire and the surrounding country.

A sample of Scotch Fife wheat was handed us, last week, by Mr. L. R. Bramsness, which was grown on his farm in this vicinity. The heads average five inches long and are well filled with No. 1 hard. The crop from which the sample was taken, was so heavy that the binder could not do its work and it had to be mowed down and bound by hand. Mr. B. is of the opinion that when threshed it will average thirty-five bushels to the acre.

FERTILE, P. O., Polk Co., Minn.
Editor JOURNAL.

As you have no regular correspondent from this section of the county, we propose, if agreeable to you, to send you such items of interest as may from time to time occur.

Our little burgh is in quite a prosperous condition. In the fall of '81 there were no buildings here. Now, we have a good grist mill, a well stocked general store, blacksmith shop, good hotel, and several dwelling houses.

Our mill proprietors, Messrs. Sohler & Co., are getting the timbers on the ground for constructing a new dam, some 4 feet higher than the present one which will help their power materially.

District No. 44 has the lumber on the ground for a new school house; to be erected in Fertile next spring and to cost in the neighborhood of $800.

Our school is running under the able supervision of Mr. A. S. Townsend with some 20 pupils in attendance.

La Due & Co., are preparing to put on 18 feet more front to their store for the purpose of putting in drugs &c.

If a good Scandinavian physician should locate here, he could find a first-class practice.

The blacksmiths, Messrs. Carlson & Kilen, appear to have all the work they can do in spite of the cold weather.

Messrs. Groding & Stromsmo have secured the services of Mr. O. L. Hamery to plot a townsite addition to Fertile, and they are sure of a good job as Mr. H. is a first-class surveyor and draughtsman.

The mill company are going to put in a cockle machine soon and clean seed wheat for farmers at a reasonable rate.

Our painter, Mr. E. O. Groding has done several good jobs of sign and house painting in town.

Mr. F. Barholv, the hotel keeper put up the sign of Fertile House last week. He has good accommodations for man and beast, and has a good run of custom.

La Due & Co., are doing a good trade and are preparing for heavy sales next spring. More again.

J.

PRICE OF MILK.

Major Alvord well says that the price should be fixed by the producer, and not the dealer, and it should be based upon its cost. The farmer should not receive less than four cents per quart at home, and this would not yield a profit, above actual cost, of more than three cents per gallon, or five cents per day on a cow. One and one-half cent per quart will usually pay the cost of delivery in near villages, where the farmer sells direct to his patrons. This would make five and one-half cents a living price to be paid the year round by the consumer; but six cents would only make milk production a fairly profitable business. At six cents per quart, milk is one of the cheapest forms of human food, cheaper than beef at market prices. When milk is now sold in distant markets, there is too great a tax paid for transportation. There is no reason whatever why a pound of milk should pay two or three times as much freight as a pound of sugar, when it is worth less than half as much; 25 cents per 100 pounds should pay all expenses of transportation, including ice and fixtures, from the country depot to the city terminus. This would bring the cost in the cities up to seven cents per quart, a price that city patrons would very willingly pay for a good, pure article.—[Farmers' Review.

A Very Good Thing

to have in every home, by everybody, old and young, in the country or village, and in cities as well. A marvel of condensed information, both useful and trustworthy, with a thousand or more engravings, illustrating labor-saving methods and devices in the Field, in the Garden, and in the Household, Animals, Plants, etc.—with many large beautiful Pictures; Illustrated Stories for and Instructive Talks with Boys and Girls; Plans of Houses, Barns, and Out-Buildings, with Specifications. All these, and much more, will be found in the 42d Volume of the American Agriculturist, now beginning, and at less cost than anywhere else in the world. Its exposures of Humbugs, a most valuable feature, is to be pushed with increased vigilance. To the previous staff of editors and contributors many additions are now made, including the best writers all over the country. In its prime, this journal entered its 42d volume, more vigorous than ever, with new writers, new artists, new dress, etc. Though prepared at larger expense than most $3 and $4 magazines, it is, owing to its immense circulation, supplied, post-paid, for $1 50 a year, and less to clubs —either English or German edition. Single numbers, 15 cents. One specimen, post-paid, 6 cents. A plate copy of Dupre's last great painting "IN THE MEADOW," is presented to each yearly subscriber. Address Publishers of American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

FARM NOTES.

From the American Agriculturist.

INTERESTING AND VALUABLE RESULTS.

The experiments with Indian Corn at Houghton Farm, as so far reported, show:

1st. How such a work ought to be commenced—the general uniformity of the soil proved by examination and by raising crops without manure. The land is accurately laid off into fifty-acre plots, two rods wide, underdrained by a tile-drain through the center of each and accessible at the lower end for examination of the drainage waters.

2d How it should be conducted so that all the plots and all parts of each plot should be subjected to the same influences—plowed at the same time, harrowed at the same time, planted the same day, tilled at the same time, and so on, to the harvesting, and husking, and storing, the plan being to subject each plot to precisely the same influences from first to last.

3d. They show, incidentally, a remarkable effect of damage (noted below:) they confirm the views taken at Rothamsted in regard to the relations of barn-yard manure to soils and crops, which depend not so much upon its chemical constituents as upon its physical properties, and the relations of the soil to moisture; and they indicate that the best results to be gained from commercial fertilizers will be in connection with barn-yard manure.

4th. It is clearly shown that manures affect the amount of moisture found in the grain as harvested, and that the weight of the bushel of the same kind of corn does not depend altogether upon its dryness, as usually supposed, but in a measure upon its compactness, which is influenced by the relations of the soil to moisture and manures.

The curious development of fertility by drainage alluded to, occurred in this way: Some years ago a portion of the ground now occupied by the experimental plots was used to test certain commercial fertilizers. No effect of these fertilizers was observed upon the crops of 1878, when they were applied, nor in 1879; but in 1880, after the drains were put in, a marked effect was visible, which was also noticeable in the crop of 1881. This clearly indicates, either that by means of the drainage the roots of the plants were able to penetrate deeper into the soil, and so had access to elements of fertility which had sunk beyond their reach, or that the soil through the effects of drainage was able to draw up moisture with whatever of fertility it might hold in solution, from a lower depth than before, or both of these causes might have contributed to the increased crops over this area.

AN EARLY CROP OF PEAS.

There are two distinct classes of peas, those with small round seeds, and others with much larger, irregularly shaped peas, the surface of which is wrinkled. The wrinkled seeded, or marlow peas, are as much better than the others as sweet corn is superior to field corn. The round peas, while not so good, are much hardier and earlier than the others. Unless the soil is warm, and they germinate quickly, wrinkled peas will decay before they can come up. The round peas are vastly better than no peas, and are very acceptable until the others come. To have early peas, they must be sown early—the earlier the better. After the soil has thawed for the first four inches, even if it is solid below, sow peas. If the ground was manured and plowed last autumn, all the better; if not, select the richest available spot, and open a drill four inches deep. Peas should be covered deeper than most other seeds. For varieties, the "Early Kent" is one of the best; it has almost as many names as there are dealers. "Daniel O'Rourke" is one of the names of a good strain of this pea. "Carter's First Crop" is another good variety, and every spring new extra early sorts are sent from England, which usually turn out to be the old "Early Kent," with a new name. The peas should be sown in the bottom of the drill rather thickly, at least one in every inch, and at first covered with about an inch of soil. It is well to put about four inches of coarse stable manure over the rows; this is to be left on in cold days, but when it is sunny and warm, pull it off with the rake, and let the sun strike the soil over the peas, replacing it at night. When the peas sprout, gradually cover them with fine warm soil, placing the coarse manure over them as needed, until the covering of soil reaches the level of the surface. If a ridge of soil, a few inches higher than the peas, be drawn up on each side of the row, it will greatly protect them from cold winds. When the plants are a few inches high, draw some fine soil up to them, and stick in the brush. When the soil becomes dry and warm, the main crop of wrinkled peas may be sown.

SHALL WE TRY MARKET GARDENING?

Every season furnishes its crop of unsuccessful merchants, or mechanics, who ask our agricultural editors if market gardening does not pay large profits, and if there is not a good chance in this business for an industrious man to better his condition. Judged by the high prices the average citizen pays for his vegetables in the large cities, it seems to him there must be money in raising vegetables. If he could remove to the country, say within an hour's ride, he could attend to his city business without loss of time, and by hiring a good gardner, he could have cheaper vegetables and fruits, and add something to his income by sending the surplus to market. Nothing looks more more more feasible on paper; nothing is more delusive in practice. Every business, to be successful, requires a responsible head, thoroughly acquainted with all its details, and it his personal attention. There are many points in market gardening that can only be learned by experience, and if a stranger to the business undertakes it, he will pay dearly for his education. Some three hundred dollars to the acre are needed as capital to carry on the business to advantage, even when a man is practically acquainted with it, and knows how and where to invest every dollar. The questions to be solved are location in reference to market; soil, what kind and how much; what crops to grow; what kinds of manures to apply to a given crop, and the quantity; what tools are wanted; what seed to plant; what teams are needed and what labor to carry on the business successfully and have no waste. The cultivation of a few square rods for a family supply of small fruits and vegetables might prove profitable and healthful, while market gardening in the same hands would prove disastrous. Market gardening is a remunerative business when a man understands it, but it is far from being an easy road to wealth for those who have all the details to learn.

BE READY EARLY.

A season of activity is near at hand. Spring is coming with its pressing work. Are farmers ready for sowing and planting? Every implement should be provided beforehand, that no time may be wasted in making purchases or repairs after the work should begin. We have known a half-day of plowing to be lost because the whiffletrees were not at hand. Some farmers start out with their spring plowing without a single plow point in stock, and when one is needed, the team is taken from the field and driven to to the store. Such a loss of time is a serious matter, and should be thoughtfully guarded against by ample provision of all such articles of the farm. It is a poor time to mend a harrow when it should be at work in the field. We do not favor that economy—if it may be so called—that relies upon the neighbors for many of the tools of the farm. There are certain farm implements that may be owned in partnership, as a roller or reaper, but the constant borrowing of rakes, forks, etc., is not a wise and economical practice. Be provided with all these essential farm tools, and have them in good order, and at hand when the time arrives for using them. Now is the time to look at these matters, and make all needed preparations for the busy days that will soon be here. In the peace of winter prepare for the war of spring.

KEEP THE CATTLE UNDER COVER.

Even now, in some of the newer regions of the west, the easiest way to get rid of the manure is considered the best. The English farmers have long been obliged to feed farm animals largely for the fertilizers they yield, and this has proved that covered yards are the most economical. These covers are not so expensive as might be supposed at first thought. Substantial sheds, large enough to accommodate a hundred head of cattle, may be built at a cost all the way from $1,000 to $1,500, according to the locality and price of labor and lumber. The roof may be made with three ridge poles resting upon outside walls, and two rows of pillars. There should be ample provision for ventilation and the escape of the water falling on the roof. The original cost will not be many dollars per head; and the interest on this will represent the yearly cost. If this should be placed at two dollars for each animal, it will be seen that this outlay is more than repaid by the increased value of the housed manure over that made in the open yard and exposed to the sun and drenching rains. The saving in food consequent upon the warm protection of the animals has been carefully estimated to be at least one-tenth the whole amount consumed. In the saving alone the covered yard gives a handsome return upon the investment.

S. W. MINNESOTA FOR STOCK.

From the Farmers' Review.

Whil Illinois is a great stock State, southwest Minnesota can not be excelled and in the near future will develop natural advantage which no other State in the Union can.

First of all is the health of stock. It has been my good fortune to travel through and closely observe the advantages of Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and western Indiana for stock, but I have never seen any place where stock of all kind is exceptionally good. I came to this State in 1873, have never known a hog to die of disease, not one-tenth of one per cent. of cattle die of diseases than in wet climates, and the horse does exceptionally well. While our winters are somewhat longer than in Illinois they are generally dry and cold with less wet storms. Our farmers generally provide warm shelter and in consequence do not require as much feed as in Illinois, and besides we waste five per cent. less feed than they do in Illinois. We have fine natural grass, white clover, timothy, blue grass and millet do well. Corn, oats and barley have never failed since I came to the State. Turnips, beets, etc., never fail.

While we have all these natural advantages we lack the stock, both in point of number and quality. It has been the custom with our farmers to sell their stock before maturity, especially so with cattle, thus losing the most profitable part, and native cattle are exceptionally good, and with proper care in crossing, we shall be able in the near future to compare favorably with older stock localities. Our settlers in the past have been men who expected to accumulate wealth from wheat, but this has not proved successful of late years. We are now having a large emigration from the east and also from Iowa and Illinois. Some 20 families from Illinois have located in our town since Sept. 1, 1882.

RAMBLER.

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,761,379.
German American, N. Y	3,094,030.
German, Freeport, Ill.	1,028,407.
Niagara,	1,557,487.
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,589.
Fireman's Fund, California,	1,160,017.
National, of Hartford,	1,704,803.
N. Y. Alliance,	1,627,840.
Phoenix, of Hartford	2,624,033
Union, California,	1,20,088.
British America,	1,343,909.
North British	1,939,080.

We also represent the Travelers Life and Accident Insurance Co., of Hartford.

BENDAM & UNDERHILL
Insurance Agency.

1y44

Assignees Sale!

Consisting of

A large and well selected stock of Dry Goods, Notions, Clothing, Hats and Caps, Furnishing Goods, Boots and Shoes, Crockery and Groceries,

THE STOCK OF

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY.

THESE GOODS

MUST BE SOLD

Regardless of Cost.

First Come First Served.

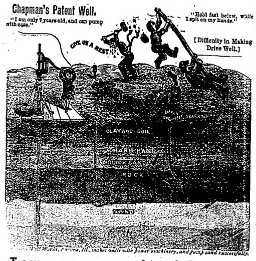
Chicago Store, Dobson's Block,

M. R. BROWN,
Assignee.

NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spring stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respeetfully,
C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.
Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!



Chapman's Patent Well.
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
GIVE US A REST!
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
CLAY AND SOIL
HARD PAN
QUICK SAND
ROCK
SAND
Well Works, Ill., makes wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.

Address R. W. RANNEY,
Carman, Polk County, Minn.

READY, FIRE!

WOOD

Is much better than kerosene and paper--cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to

LEECH & McMANUS,

OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

Wood Office and Yard on Elm Street, east of Planing Mill.

CLOSING OUT

SALE.

Our Immense Stock of

CLOTHING,
OVERCOATS,
UNDERWEAR,
CAPS,
Ladies' Cloaks,
Furs,

And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.

HACK & GALLASCHE,
Opposiet Merchants' Bank.n

LIVERY, FEED.

—AND—

SALE STABLES

Two doors north of U. S. Land Office

Main St., Crokston, Minn.

T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.

Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.

For a stylish rig, by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

—THE—

RED LAKE FALLS

FLOURING

MILL

Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.

BUSE & COLBENTSON,

PROPRIETORS,

RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos

—AND—

Organs

W. W. KIMBALL CO.

Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. [28-tf]

CrookstonNurseries.

Tree-Claim-Stock.

Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $5.00 per acre, also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.

11 ASELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT.

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL

MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all
CALL AND SEE ME
At my New Store on Main Street.
A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. D. KAUFER & SON

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

and are now prepared

[illegible] furnish everything in their line as cheaply as [illegible] can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere [illegible] in the New Northwest. Our work is [illegible]

COUNTY NEWS.

Fisher Foolishness.

From the Bulletin.

Charley Plumb of this place is in England.

The Keystone boys are in town every day hauling ice and wood to the farm for summer use.

The weather has been very fine during the last few days, and the farmers begin to show themselves again.

Dr. Lankester, this afternoon amputated one of the toes of Ole Hergensem, who was badly frozen in the late blizzard.

Mrs. Hanson, the mother of Ole Hanson, living about four miles north-west of town, died on Tuesday last, her remains were entered in the cemetery of this place to-day.

Elias Steenerson received his commission as post master of Fisher on Friday last. In consequence, to-day the post office material was removed from the bank to the store of Steenerson Bros., in Thompson Avenue. The new post master has made arangements to purchase the whole of the P.O., plant of Mr. Hugh Thompson, so that the change will cause the least possible inconvenience.

East Grand Forks Facts.

From the Courier.

A good many went out on their claims this week.

James Sanders is reported as not doing so well since his removal home.

Father Schirra, of Crookston, was unfortunate enough to freeze his nose and ears while in town the first of the week.

Interest in the Northwest does not abate judging from the increased supply of letters of inquiry that come daily from the Eastern States.

And still our population continues to increase, despite the cold weather. Mrs. James Sullivan presented her husband with a 10-pounder, last Sunday night.

The petition to have the name of the postoffice at this place changed from Nashville to East Grand Forks, has had the desired effect and Postmaster Howes informs us that he has received a notification from Washington that the change will occur on the first day of April next.

Mr. Franks returned from Ojata Monday, where he has been for a week or more, and expresses himself as not being very well pleased with that place, and is now more than ever convinced that there is now town in the Northwest that compares to East Grand Forks.

Grand Forks Herald.

During the blizzard last week Patrick Murray discovered a woman north of the depot on the prairie, nearly perishing with cold and unable to proceed further. Though nearly benumbed with cold himself, he unhesitatingly took her on his back and carried her home safely, though it was nearly a half-mile distance. Mr. Murray deserves much credit for his praiseworthy act.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

M. Williams claims he was bitten by a butterfly hn Saturday last.

The lumber for Robbecks' bakery and restaurant is arriving daily.

The thermometer was 45 degrees below nothing on Saturday last.

Considerable claim jumping is being done in the Thief River country; and an increased demand for revolvers will be the result.

Ole Brink, our brawny armed blacksmith knows what solitary confinement means. He accidently locked himself in Crocker & Cundy's cellar where he remained for three hours before being released.

Our postmaster informs us that within the past six weeks he has received over fifty letters from different parts of the United States and Canada enquiring about St. Hilaire and the surrounding country.

A sample of Scotch Fife wheat was handed us, last week, by Mr. L. R. Bramsnes, which was grown on his farm in this vicinity. The heads average five inches long and are well filled with No. 1 hard. The crop from which the sample was taken, was so heavy that the binder could not do its work and it had to be mowed down and bound by hand. Mr. B. is of the opinion that when threshed it will average thirty-five bushels to the acre.

FERTILE, P. O., Polk Co., Minn.
Editor JOURNAL.

As you have no regular correspondent from this section of the county, we propose, if agreeable to you, to send you such items of interest as may from time to time occur.

Our little burgh is in quite a prosperous condition. In the fall of '81 there were no buildings here. Now, we have a good grist mill, a well stocked general store, blacksmith shop, good hotel, and several dwelling houses.

Our mill proprietors, Messrs. Sohler & Co., are getting the timbers on the ground for constructing a new dam, some 4 feet higher than the present one which will help their power materially.

District No. 44 has the lumber on the ground for a new school house, to be erected in Fertile next spring and to cost in the neighborhood of $800.

Our school is running under the able supervision of Mr. A. S. Townsend with some 20 pupils in attendance.

La Due & Co. are [illegible] to put on 18 feet more front to their store for the purpose of putting in drugs &c.

If a good Scandinavian physician should locate here, he could find a first-class practice.

The blacksmiths, Messrs. Carlson & Kilen, appear to have all the work they can do in spite of the cold weather.

Messrs. Groding & Stronismo have secured the services of Mr. O. L. Hamery to plot a townsite addition to Fertile, and they are sure of a good job as Mr. H. is a first-class surveyor and draughtsman.

The mill company are going to put in a cockle machine soon and clean seed wheat for farmers at a reasonable rate.

Our painter, Mr. E. O. Groding has done several good jobs of sign and house painting in town.

Mr. F. Barholy, the hotel keeper put up the sign of Fertile House last week. He has good accommodations for man and beast, and has a good run of custom.

La Due & Co., are doing a good trade and are preparing for heavy sales next spring. More again.

J.

PRICE OF MILK.

Major Alvord well says that the price should be fixed by the producer, and not the dealer, and it should be based upon its cost. The farmer should no. receive less than four cents per quart at home, and this would not yield a profit, above actual cost, of more than three cents per gallon, or five cents per day on a cow. One and one-half cent per quart will usually pay the cost of delivery in near villages, where the farmer sells direct to his patrons. This would make five and one-half cents a living price to be paid the year round by the consumer; but six cents would only make milk production a fairly profitable business. At six cents per quart, milk is one of the cheapest forms of human food, cheaper than beef at market prices. When milk is now sold in distant markets, there is too great a tax paid for transportation. There is no reason whatever why a pound of milk should pay two or three times as much freight as a pound of sugar, when it is worth less than half as much; 25 cents per 100 pounds should pay all expenses of transportation, including ice and fixtures, from the country depot to the city terminus. This would bring the cost in the cities up to seven cents per quart, a price that city patrons would very willingly pay for a good, pure article.—[Farmers' Review.

A Very Good Thing

to have in every home, by everybody, old and young, in the country or village, and in cities as well. A marvel of condensed information, both useful and trustworthy, with a thousand or more engravings, illustrating labor-saving methods and devices in the Field, in the Garden, and in the Household, Animals, Plants, etc.—with many large beautiful Pictures; Illustrated Stories for and Instructive Talks with Boys and Girls; Plans of Houses, Barns, and Out-Buildings, with Specifications. All these, and much more, will be found in the 42d Volume of the American Agriculturist, now beginning, and at less cost than anywhere else in the world. Its exposures of Humbugs, a most valuable feature, is to be pushed with increased vigilance. To the previous staff of editors and contributors many additions are now made, including the best writers all over the country. In its prime, this journal entered its 42d volume, more vigorous than ever, with new writers, new artists, new dress, etc. Though prepared at larger expense than most $3 and $4 magazines, it is, owing to its immense circulation, supplied, post-paid, for $1 50 a year, and less to clubs—either English or German edition. Single numbers, 15 cents. One specimen, post-paid, 6 cents. A plate copy of Dupre's last great painting "IN THE MEADOW," is presented to each yearly subscriber. Address Publishers of American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

FARM NOTES.

From the American Agriculturist.

INTERESTING AND VALUABLE RESULTS.

The experiments with Indian Corn at Houghton Farm, as so far reported, show:

1st. How such a work ought to be commenced—the general uniformity of the soil proved by examination and by raising crops without manure. The land is accurately laid off into fifty-acre plots, two rods wide, underdrained by a tile-drain through the center of each and accessible at the lower end for examination of the drainage waters.

2d How it should be conducted so that all the plots and all parts of each plot should be subjected to the same influences—plowed at the same time, harrowed at the same time, planted the some day, tilled at the same time, and so on, to the harvesting, and husking and storing, the plan being to subject each plot to precisely the same influences from first to last.

3d. They show, incidentally, a remarkable effect of drainage (noted below;) they confirm the views taken at Rothamsted in regard to the relations of barn-yard manure to soils and crops, which depend not so much upon its chemical constituents as upon its physical properties, and the relations of the soil to moisture, and they indicate that the best results to be gained from commercial fertilizers will be in connection with barn-yard manure. [illegible] affect the amount of moisture found in the grain as harvested, and that the weight of the bushel of the same kind of corn does not depend altogether upon its dryness, as usually supposed, but in a measure upon its compactness, which is influenced by the relations of the soil to moisture and manures.

The curious development of fertility by drainage alluded to, occurred in this way: Some years ago a portion of the ground now occupied by the experimental plots was used to test certain commercial fertilizers. No effect of these fertilizers was observed upon the crops of 1878, when they were applied, nor in 1879; but in 1880, after the drains were put in, a marked effect was visible, which was also noticeable in the crop of 1881. This clearly indicates, either that by means of the drainage the roots of the plants were able to penetrate deeper into the soil, and so had access to elements of fertility which had sunk beyond their reach, or that the soil through the effects of drainage was able to draw up moisture with whatever of fertility it might hold in solution, from a lower depth than before, or both of these causes might have contributed to the increased crops over this area.

AN EARLY CROP OF PEAS.

There are two distinct classes of peas, those with small round seeds, and others with much larger, irregularly shaped peas, the surface of which is wrinkled. The wrinkled seeded, or marlow peas, are as much better than the others as sweet corn is superior to field corn. The round peas, while not so good, are much hardier and earlier than the others. Unless the soil is warm, and they germinate quickly, wrinkled peas will decay before they can come up. The round peas are vastly better than no peas, and are very acceptable until the others come. To have early peas, they must be sown early—the earlier the better. After the soil has thawed for the first four inches, even if it is solid below, sow peas. If the ground was manured and plowed last autumn, all the better; if not, select the richest available spot, and open a drill four inches deep. Peas should be covered deeper than most other seeds. For varieties, the "Early Kent" is one of the best; it has almost as many names as there are dealers. "Daniel O'Rourke" is one of the names of a good strain of this pea. "Carter's First Crop" is another good variety, and every spring new extra early sorts are sent from England, which usually turn out to be the old "Early Kent," with a new name. The peas should be sown in the bottom of the drill rather thickly, at least one in every inch, and at first covered with about an inch of soil. It is well to put about four inches of coarse stable manure over the rows; this is to be left on in cold days, but when it is sunny and warm, pull it off with the rake, and let the sun strike the soil over the peas, replacing it at night. When the peas sprout, gradually cover them with fine warm soil, placing the coarse manure over them as needed, until the covering of soil reaches the level of the surface. If a ridge of soil, a few inches higher than the peas, be drawn up on each side of the row, it will greatly protect them from cold winds. When the plants are a few inches high, draw some fine soil up to them, and stick in the brush. When the soil becomes dry and warm, the main crop of wrinkled peas may be sown.

SHALL WE TRY MARKET GARDENING?

Every season furnishes its crop of unsuccessful merchants, or mechanics, who ask our agricultural editors if market gardening does not pay large profits, and if there is not a good chance in this business for an industrious man to better his condition. Judged by the high prices the average citizen pays for his vegetables in the large cities, it seems to him there must be money in raising vegetables. If he could remove to the country, say within an hour's ride, he could attend to his city business without loss of time, and by hiring a good gardner, he could have cheaper vegetables and fruits, and add something to his income by sending the surplus to market. Nothing looks more more more feasible on paper; nothing is more delusive in practice. Every business, to be successful, requires a responsible head, thoroughly acquainted with all its details, and it his personal attention. There are many points in market gardening that can only be learned by experience, and if a stranger to the business undertakes it, he will pay dearly for his education. Some three hundred dollars to the acre are needed as capital to carry on the business to advantage, even when a man is practically acquainted with it, and knows how and where to invest every dollar. The questions to be solved are location in reference to market; soil, what kind and how much; what crops to grow; what kinds of manures to apply to a given crop, and the quantity; what tools are wanted; what seed to plant; what teams are needed and what labor to carry on the business successfully and have no waste. The cultivation of a few square rods for a family supply of small fruits and vegetables might prove profitable and healthful, while market gardening in the same hands would prove disastrous. Market gardening is a remunerative business when a man understands it, but it is far from being an easy road to wealth for those who have all the details to learn.

BE READY EARLY.

A season of activity is near at hand. Spring is coming with its pressing work. Are farmers ready for sowing and planting? [illegible] vided beforehand, that no time may be wasted in making purchases or repairs after the work should begin. We have known a half-day of plowing to be lost because the whiffletrees were not at hand. Some farmers start out with their spring plowing without a single plow point in stock, and when one is needed, the team is taken from the field and driven to to the store. Such a loss of time is a serious matter, and should be thoughtfully guarded against by ample provision of all such articles of the farm. It is a poor time to mend a harrow when it should be at work in the field. We do not favor that economy—if it may be so called—that relies upon the neighbors for many of the tools of the farm. There are certain farm implements that may be owned in partnership, as a roller or reaper, but the constant borrowing of rakes, forks, etc., is not a wise and economical practice. Be provided with all these essential farm tools, and have them in good order, and at hand when the time arrives for using them. Now is the time to look at these matters, and make all needed preparations for the busy days that will soon be here. In the peace of winter prepare for the war of spring.

KEEP THE CATTLE UNDER COVER.

Even now, in some of the newer regions of the west, the easiest way to get rid of the manure is considered the best. The English farmers have long been obliged to feed farm animals largely for the fertilizers they yield, and this has proved that covered yards are the most economical. These covers are not so expensive as might be supposed at first thought. Substantial sheds, large enough to accommodate a hundred head of cattle, may be built at a cost all the way from $1,000 to $1,500, according to the locality and price of labor and lumber. The roof may be made with three ridge poles resting upon outside walls, and two rows of pillars. There should be ample provision for ventilation and the escape of the water falling on the roof. The original cost will not be many dollars per head; and the interest on this will represent the yearly cost. If this should be placed at two dollars for each animal, it will be seen that this outlay is more than repaid by the increased value of the housed manure over that made in the open yard and exposed to the sun and drenching rains. The saving in food consequent upon the warm protection of the animals has been carefully estimated to be at least one-tenth the whole amount consumed. In the saving alone the covered yard gives a handsome return upon the investment.

S. W. MINNESOTA FOR STOCK.

From the Farmers' Review.

Whil Illinois is a great stock State, southwest Minnesota can not be excelled and in the near future will develop natural advantage which no other State in the Union can.

First of all is the health of stock. It has been my good fortune to travel through and closely observe the advantages of Illinois, Missouri, Iowa and western Indiana for stock, but I have never seen any place where stock of all kind is exceptionally good. I came to this State in 1873, have never known a hog to die of disease, not one-tenth of one per cent. of cattle die of diseases than in wet climates, and the horse does exceptionally well. While our winters are somewhat longer than in Illinois they are generally dry and cold with less wet storms. Our farmers generally provide warm shelter and in consequence do not require as much feed as in Illinois, and besides we waste five per cent. less feed than they do in Illinois. We have fine natural grass, white clover, timothy, blue grass and millet do well. Corn, oats and barley have never failed since I came to the State. Turnips, beets, etc., never fail.

While we have all these natural advantages we lack the stock, both in point of number and quality. It has been the custom with our farmers to sell their stock before maturity, especially so with cattle, thus losing the most profitable part, and native cattle are exceptionally good, and with proper care in crossing, we shall be able in the near future to compare favorably with older stock localities. Our settlers in the past have been men who expected to accumulate wealth from wheat, but this has not proved successful of late years. We are now having a large emigration from the east and also from Iowa and Illinois. Some 20 families from Illinois have located in our town since Sept. 1, 1882.

RAMBLER.

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,761,379.
German American, N. Y.	3,094,080.
German, Freeport, Ill.	1,028,407.
Niagara	1,557,487.
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,559.
Fireman's Fund, California	1,160,017.
National, of Hartford	1,704,803.
N. Y. Alliance	1,627,849.
Phoenix, of Hartford	2,624,083.
Union, California	1,20,088.
British America	1,343,909.
North British	1,353,089.

We also represent the Travelers Life and Accident Insurance Co. of Hartford.

BENHAM & UNDERHILL,
Insurance Agents.

[illegible]

Assignees Sale!

Consisting of

A large and well selected stock of Dry Goods, Notions, Clothing, Hats and Caps, Furnishing Goods, Boots and Shoes, Crockery and Groceries,

THE STOCK OF

C. A. & J. R. CHINIQUY.

THESE GOODS

MUST BE SOLD

Regardless of Cost.

First Come First Served.

Chicago Store, Dobson's Block,

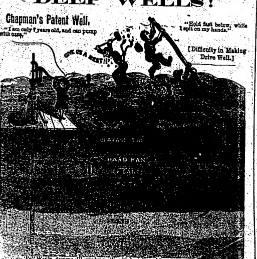
M. R. BROWN,

Assignee.

NO CLOSING Out or Closing Up business, but 10 per cent. reduction from former prices. In order to make room for our spring stock preparatory to our going East, we have concluded to give an extra inducement of 10 per cent. to all purchasers. For the next 30 days we will sell everything at 10 per cent. less than its former price. Taking into consideration that our former prices have been from 10 to 15 per ct. lower than any other house in the city. We are still lower than the lowest. It pays everybody to call on us before purchasing as you can find a better assortment and lower than anywhere else. Thanking our patrons for their liberal patronage, and hoping to receive the same in the future, we remain

Yours respectfully,
C. O. D. One Price Clothing House.
Clement's Block.

DEEP WELLS!



Chapman's Patent Well.
"I am only 7 years old, and can pump with ease."
"GIVE US A REST!"
"Hold fast below, while I spit on my hands."
[Difficulty in Making Drive Well.]
HARD PAN
SAND

...Well Works, Aurora, Ill., makes wells with power machinery, and pump sand successfully.

I am now prepared to sink wells to a depth of 200 feet or more, if water is not sooner obtained. Will work by the day, foot or job.

Address R. W. RANNEY,
Carman, Polk County, Minn.

READY, FIRE!

WOOD

Is much better than kerosene and paper—cheaper and cleaner than coal. You can get Stove Wood or Cord Wood of any kind by telephoning to

LEECH & McMANUS,

OR LEAVE ORDERS AT COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

[illegible] Office and Yard on Main Street, east of Flouring Mill.

CLOSING OUT SALE.

Our Immense Stock of

CLOTHING,
OVERCOATS,
UNDERWEAR,
CAPS,
Ladies' Cloaks,
Furs,

And all winter goods. Call early and get your pick of the stock.

HACK & GALLASCHE,
Opposiet Merchants' Bank.

LIVERY, FEED.

—AND—

SALE STABLES

Two doors north of U. S. Land Office

Main St., Crokston, Minn.

T. H. BJOIN, Proprietor.

Work horses, buggy horses, saddle horses, mules and oxen bought and sold, and traded.

For a stylish rig by day or night, call at Bjoin's Livery Stable.

—THE—

RED LAKE FALLS

FLOURING

MILL

Has lately been enlarged and is now prepared to do Custom Work without delay. Stable room free.

BUSE & COLBENTSON,

PROPRIETORS,

RED LAKE FALLS, POLK CO., MINN.

Pianos

—AND—

Organs

W. W. KIMBALL CO.

Pianos and Organs are still Minnesota's favorites Come and see the first premiums of the three last State Fairs, and examine sample goods at factory prices, at the EXPRESS OFFICE, Crookston, Minn. [36-tf]

Crookston Nurseries.

Tree-Claim-Stock.

Now is the time to procure forest trees and Seeds for claims. We will furnish trees such as Ash, Soft Maple, Cottonwood, Elm and Box Elder 1 year old, by the M., or trees sufficient to put on claims and seeds to fill requirements of law at $3.00 per acre. also have a large stock of White Willow cuttings by the M., and the hardier varieties of small fruits. Give us a call and choose for yourself.

HASELTINE BROTHERS.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by
W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT.

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL

MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all
CALL AND SEE ME
At my New Store on Main Street.
A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. B. KAUFER & SON.

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

[illegible]

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE
DEFECTIVE PAGE

TIME TABLE

Of the Arrival and Departure of Mails at the Post Office at Crookston, Minn.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART
Grand Forks, Fisher,	10:30 a. m.	10:45 a. m.
	7:30 a. m.†	4:00 p. m.*
South	11:30 a. m.‡	8:45 p. m.
North	7:30 a. m.	8:45 p. m.
Red Lake Falls, Gentilly,	2:30 p. m.†	9:00 a. m.‡

*Carries only mail to St. Paul, Minneapolis and beyond.
†Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
‡Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

RAILROAD TIME TABLE

FOR CROOKSTON.

GOING NORTH

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. Passenger,	9:55 p. m.	10:10 p. m.
" 5	10:30 a. m.	10:40 a. m.
" 11 freight.	4:30 p. m.	8:00 p. m.
" 13 "	7:20 p. m.	6:30 a. m.
" 17 "	5:45 p. m.

GOING SOUTH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 2 Passenger,	4:40 a. m.	4:10 p. m.
" 6	4:30 p. m.	11:15 a. m.
" 12 Freight,		5:55 p. m.
" 14 "	5:15 p. m.	2:05 a. m.
" 18 "	1:20 a. m.

GRAND FORKS BRANCH.

	ARRIVE.	DEPART.
No. 9 Mixed	10:00 a. m.	10:50 a. m.

No 1, daily except Sunday. No. 5 daily. No. 11 except Sunday. No. 13 except Monday. No. 17, daily

No. 2 except Sunday. No. 6 daily. No. 12 except Sunday. No. 14 daily. No. 18 except Sunday.

C. H. MIX, Agent.

NEWSPAPER LAWS.

We call the especial attention of postmasters and subscribers to the following synopsis of the newspaper laws:

1 A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning the paper does not answer the laws) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office, and states the reason for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publishers for payment.

2 Any person who takes a paper from the post-office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether a subscriber or not, is responsible for the pay.

3 If a person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and collect the whole amount, whether is be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

4 If the subscriber orders his paper to be stopped at a certain time and the publisher continues to send it, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post office. The law proceeds upon the ground that a man has to pay for what he uses.

5 The courts have decided the refusing to take a newspaper and periodical from the post office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, as "prima facie" evidence of intentional fraud [37-40.]

$25.00 for $1.00.

Don't fail to subscribe for Thomas Brothers' Musical Journal, the finest Musical Magazine published. We print from twenty to thirty dollars' worth of our best music in the same each year, besides giving you the musical news from all parts of the world. Each number is beautifully illustrated, and at the end of the year you have a complete musical library. Price $1.00 per year. Sample copy sent for 10c. The Journal one year, with premium, (your choice of the two beautiful Chromos, "On the Scent" and Christmas Morning,") for $1.35. The above are genuine Oil Chromos, 24x30, and are worth at retail $2 50 each. Agents wanted everywhere. Address

JAS H. THOMAS, Catskill, N. Y.

No sample copy sent unless 10c. is enclosed. [40-43]

Wanted at Once.

Any one having good Western land for sale and wishing to purchase a good Piano or Organ, will do well to correspond with me at once. It is now approaching the season when we are comparatively idle, and as we wish to keep our manufactories running on full time and our men employed, I will make the following proposition: I will sell 100 Pianos and 500 Organs at very low prices and take one-half my pay in land (I would prefer timber land.) Our instruments are known all over the world, not for their cheapness but for durability and honest work. The Thomas Brothers' Silver Tone Pianos and Organs stand at the head. I shall take great care to send out none but the finest goods, fully warranted, and if they do not prove just what I recommend, send them back at my expense and I will refund the money. I am also publishing Sheet Music largely, on which I will send special terms to clergymen, teachers, schools, etc. I also publish "Thomas Brothers' Musical Journal," $1.00 per year. Sample copy, 10c. Agents wanted everywhere, who can do well with a little work. Write for bottom prices on our Pianos and Organs. Address

JAS. H. THOMAS, Catskill, N. Y.

[40-43]

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their monthly for February, among which is the following: We will give $20.00 in gold to the person telling us which is the middle verse in the Old Testament. Scriptures by February 10th, 1883. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner February 15th 1883. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the March Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published. This may be worth $20.00 to you; cut it out. Address Rutledge Publishing Company, Easton Penn. [40-41.]

Notice to Owners of Real Property.

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m. for furnishing the county a tract of land not exceeding 160 acres; and also for furnishing a tract of timber lend not exceeding 20 acres, to be used as a poor farm.

Proposals must show the description and location of and improvements on said land.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners at January session, 1883.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston, Minn. [31-44]

Notice to Physicians.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m. from physicians, stating the amount for which he or they will agree to furnish medicines and medical attendance (including surgery) to the paupers of the 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th commissioner districts respectively.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

Notice to Contractors.

CO. COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Polk County, Minn.,
Crookston, Jan. 10, 1883.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the County Auditor in this city until Saturday, February 10th, at 2 o'clock p. m., for performing the following work and providing all the materials therefor, according to the plans and specifications for same now on file in the office of the County Auditor of said county, to-wit:

For putting Ice Breakers at the County bridge across Red Lake River adjacent Red Lake Falls. (as shown in plan.

For moving the county bridge at Fisher to a point to be designated by the Board.

For building a bridge across a creek on the town line between Fisher and Roame Townships at a point where the Crookston and Frog Point county road is intercepted by said creek. (See plan.)

For building a bridge across the Morais at Sec. 12, Town 151, R. 50.

For building piers (ice-breakers) at a county bridge across Red Lake River about six miles east of Crookston. (See plan.)

Bids will be received for each separately and not as a whole.

The right is reserved to reject any and all bids.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Kimball Pianos and Organs for sale at the American Express Office, Main street, Crookston. [31-44]

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
Crookston, January 10, 1883.

Proposals will be received at the County Auditor's office in this city until Saturday, February 10th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., from the proprietors of Newspapers eligible to be designated as "The Official Paper of Polk County, Minn." wherein the list of delinquent real estate taxes for the year 1884 shall be published, for publishing such list, and also for furnishing stationery, etc. to this county.

Every such proposal must be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $1,000 with at least two sureties thereon in order to receive attention.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners of Polk County.

[37-40] M. R. BROWN, Chairman.

Pianos and Organs.

At bottom prices and warranted satisfactory, at the American Express Office, Crookston, Minn.

Notice,

All persons in interest will take notice that I have purchased of N. P Stone, his undivided one-sixth interest in the Town site of Carman, South Crookston.

The above interest will be sold as a whole or in any part to suit purchasers For particulars apply to owner, or Reynolds & Watts, Attorneys.

[19-tf] J. H. KLING.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India Missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for General Debility and all nervous complaint, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it is his duty to make it known to his fellows. The recise, with full particulars directions for prepation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be sent you by return mail, free of charge, by addressed envelope.

DR. J. C. RAYMOND,
104 Washington street, Brooklyn, N. Y.
☞ Mention this paper. [6-35, tf.]

Fournet & Herron,

DEALERS IN

FLOUR,
FEED,
CORN,
OATS,
POTATOES

Robert Street,

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA

E. M. WALSH,

DEALER IN

HEAVY AND SHELF Hardware, Tinware

Of all kinds. JOB WORK a specialty.

RATHBONE, SARD & CO. ACORN STOVES & RANGES

BAR IRON, STEEL, AND Blacksmiths SUPPLIES

Building Paper, Sash Etc.

ALSO AGENT

For the Celebrated Monitor Plows.

CROOKSTON, MINN.

Farmers, do you know

☞ IT PAYS

To raise No. 1 Hard every time!

To be sure of doing this, sow nothing but the purest and best

Scotch Fife Seed.

10,000 BUSHELS

Of the finest seed wheat in the Red River Valley for sale in car load lots or smaller quantities,

AT LOW PRICES.

Samples furnished by mail on request, accompanied by 10 cents to pay postage. All orders promptly filled. Order now before price advances.

E. D. CHILDS & CO.

Carman, Minn.

MONEY TO GIVE AWAY
IN BARGAINS

at MARKHAM'S,

THE LEADING GROCERY HOUSE

AND THE LARGEST BOOT AND SHOE STORE

IN CROOKSTON.

Goods Delivered to any Part of the City

FREE OF CHARGE.

THE ONLY 5 AND 10 CENT COUNTER.

FONTAINE & ANGLIM,

MAIN STREET,

HAVE ALWAYS ON HAND A WELL SELECTED STOCK OF

Groceries, Dry Goods,

Notions, Boots and Shoes, Clothing, Hats and Caps,

And everything usually kept in a General Store. We also have on hand a full line of first-class

FARM MACHINERY.

Including the Osborne and Champion Twine Binders, Reapers and Mowers. John Deere and First and Bradley Walking, Sulkey and Gang Plows, The Pride of the West, and Buffalo Pitts Straw Burning and Horse Power Threshing Machines. Rockford and Fish Bros. Wagons, &c., &c.

Call and Examine Our Stock!

STEWART & LAWRENCE,

Dealers in

Pine Lumber.--Pine Lumber.

Windows, Doors, Mouldings, Building Paper, &c.

YARD ON OAK STREET. NORTH OF BROWN'S LIVERY STABLE.

CITY PAINT SHOP.

W. H. McCULOUGH,

HOUSE, SIGN AND GENERAL PAINTER,

Broadway, Crookston, Minn.

Great Bargains

IN

REAL ESTATE!

RESIDENCE LOTS

Are now offered in the Choicest Portion of the City,

Sletten & Cromb's

ADDITION,

AT PRICES

Within the Reach of All!

Those who invest now are sure to DOUBLE THEIR MONEY before Spring. Call early, for they are going off rapidly.

All persons are cautioned not to Cut or Remove Timber from Sletten & Cromb's Addition.

SLETTEN & CROMB,
Crookston, Min n.

REAL ESTATE AGENCY.

LANDS, LOTS, AND
PROPERTY OF ALL KINDS
Bought and Sold,
Property Rented and Rents Collected
LOANS NEGOTIATED, TAXES PAID FOR NON-RESIDENTS,

If you want to Buy, Sell or Rent, call or write to us and have your wants supplied.

JAMES W. LILLY,
ATTORNEY AND R. E. AGENT, CROOKSTON, MINN.
MAIN STREET, OPPOSITE POST OFFICE.

CROOKSTON CITY BAKERY!

EARNEST MILLER, Proprietor.

(SUCCESSORS TO THE PLUME BROTHERS.)

Takes advantage of the occasion to say that he will keep a full line of all goods that are usually found in a

FIRST-CLASS BAKERY,

And that the citizens of Polk County will find none but the best at his place of business. A fine line of

CIGARS AND TOBACCO, NUTS, FRUITS, CANDIES, PIES, CAKS, BREAD,

AND EVERY THING TO FILL OUT A HUNGRY MAN.

JOHNSON, STEPHENS & CO.,

AGENTS FOR THE

MINNESOTA CHIEF THRESHER,

CELEBRATED DEEING MARSH HARVESTER,

THE DEERING AND WARRIOR MOWERS,

Moline Plows,

Orvis Hollow Tooth Drag,

DIAMOND TOOTH DRAG, THE VAN BRUNT SEEDER.

☞ All machines purchase of us are Subject to Trial. Satisfaction guaranteed. Warehouses at Crookston and Fisher's.

Benham & Underhill

(Successors to John McLean.)

Attorneys at Law,

AND

NOTARIES PUBLIC.

LOAN, LAND

AND

Insurance Agency.

(Established in 1879.)

Money Loaned to Prove Up with!
Money Loaned on Improved Farms!
Money Loaned on City Property!

U. S. LAND OFFICE BUSINESS ATTENDED TO! ENTRIES MADE AND LAND PROVED UP!

500 City Lots in Crookston for sale!
Business and Residence Lots for sale!
Improved and Unimproved Farms in Polk County for sale on easy terms!

A Full Line of Old Reliable
Fire Insurance Companies
REPRESENTED.

CROOKSTON, POLK CO., MINN.

Merchants' Bank,

OF CROOKSTON,

CASH CAPITAL, $32,000.00.

J. KELSO, ...PRESIDENT
Bellvue, Iowa.
M. R. BROWN, ...VICE PRESIDENT.
Crookston, Minn.
H. B. MONTGOMERY, ..2D VICE PRES'T,
St. Paul, Minn.
W. M. ROSS ....CASHIER
Crookston, Minn.

WILL RECEIVE DEPOSITS, AND ALLOW INTEREST BY SPECIAL CONTRACT.

BUY AND SELL FOREIGN & DOMESTIC EXCHANGE.

Make Collections,
And do a strictly
Legitimate Business.

Agents for Foreign Passage Tickets
De skandinaviske Sprog tales her

W. M. ROSS, Cashier.

FOR A CHOICE

STEAK OR ROAST

GO TO THE CITY

Meat Market,

H. STEEGE, Proprietor.

THE CHOICEST
STEAKS,
ROASTS,
VENISONS,
PORK STEAKS,
FRESH PORK,
MUTTON CHOPS

In fact everything of the very choices in the line of

Meats, Fresh or Salt,

MAY BE FOUND AT THE

CITY MARKET,

FOR

Choice Butter

GO TO THE

City Meat Market,

Robert Street. - Crookston, Minn.

M. N. BERG,

Practical Watchmaker

AND DEALER IN

WATCHES,
CLOCKS
AND JEWELRY,

ROBERT STREET

Crookston, Minn.

First National Bank,

OF CROOKSTON,

PAID IN CAPITAL $50,000.00.

ROBT. H. BAKER, President.
M. R. BROWN, Vice President.
ANSEL BATES, Cashier

Receives Deposits, Buys and Sells Exchange on all parts of the United States and Europe. Careful attention to collections and prompt remittance. Negotiate loans, pay taxes for nonresident owners. Correspondence solicited.

DIRECTORS—Robt. H. Baker, Racine, Wis.
J. I. Case, Racine, Wis.
M. R. Brown, Crookston, Minn.
Wm. Anglim,
Ansel Bates,
E. D. Childs, Carman, Minn.

FURNITURE STORE.

OAK STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

BATAGLIA & KNACK, PROPRIETORS

Keeps constantly on hand a well selected stock of Wardrobes, Bureaus, Sofas, Lounges, Bedsteads, Bed Springs, Tables, Chairs, Rockers, Stands, Ornaments, Picture Mouldings and Picture Frames. Repairing done to order. [illegible] of all kinds kept constantly on hand.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

H. E. COOKE, Proprietor. DEVOTED TO THE WELFARE OF POLK COUNTY. TERMS----$1.50 per Annum.

VOL. VI. CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINNESOTA. THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1883. NO. 41

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY.

H. E. COOKE, Editor and Proprieor

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

One Dollar Fifty Cents, IF PAID IN ADVANCE, to any address inside of Polk County. If outside of Polk County 15 cents must be added for postage. If not paid in advance $2 per annum sent to any address.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

SPACE.	1 w.	2 w.	3 w.	1 m.	3 m.	6 m.	1 year
¼ Inch...	50	$1 00	$1 25	$1 50	$3 00	4 50	6 00
1 Inch...	75	1 25	1 75	2 00	4 50	6 00	10 00
2 Inches..	1 50	2 25	3 00	3 50	6 20	9 50	15 00
3 Inches..	1 75	2 75	3 75	4 50	9 50	13 20	20 00
4 Inches.	2 50	3 50	4 50	5 50	10 00	18 00	25 00
5 Inches..	3 00	4 00	5 00	6 00	12 50	20 00	30 00
¼ Column	3 50	4 50	5 50	6 50	15 00	25 00	35 00
½ Column	6 00	7 5.	10 00	12 00	15 00	35 00	50 00
1 Column	9 50	12 50	15 00	18 00	25 00	[illegible]	100 00

Entered at the Post Office in Crookston as Second Class Matter.

County News.

Carman Courier.

Mrs. Kimball, wife of our esteemed townsman, J. S. Kimball, arrived Tuesday from Brainerd where she has been spending the fore part of the winter, and will probably remain in our midst until spring.

Wheat is steadily advancing and will undaubtedly reach 100 cents before long. Farmers have large quantities of this article stored away and will probably keep it until their price—one dollar is reached.

Messrs. Smedes & Vance are putting down an artesian well in their yeard near Mr. A. M. Childs' residence. This is to be used as a supply to the new brick yard in course of preparation for the manufacture of brick during the summer.

Mr. D. Darby came very near having to roast out in the elements Thursday night. A flue in burning out set fire to the roof and but for the prompt action of several of his neighbors would have been consumed. By the application of water it was extinguished without much damage.

An American eagle perched high upon the pinnacle of fame—or in other words, Corser's elevator—was captured by our citizens Sunday and carried off in triumph. The supposition is that the noble bird come up here from the southern States to get warm and was enjoying the balmy breezes when this mishap befell him.

St. Hilaire Happenings.

From the Spectator.

Mr. Harris, of the St. Hilaire hotel, has been made happy by the arrival of his wife and family.

There is a movement on foot to organize a Masonic lodge in this town. A good many of our citizens are very much in favor of it and will probably get the thing started at once.

Dr. Dypvic left on Monday last, for his home in Norway. He will be gone two or three months, and on his return will bring a large number of emigrants to settle in this vicinity. We wish him a safe journey and quick return.

A large gang of men are employed putting the finishing touches on the bridges, and culverts along the line of the Red River and Lake of the Woods Railway, and the foreman is quoted as saying that the company is hurrying him up, so that they can finish laying the rails before the frost goes out of the ground. He is of the opinion that the cars will be running in here by the middle of March.

A large number of the "noble redmen" are passing through here on their way to Fort Totten. They have been up at Red Lake hunting, nearly all winter and although they got considerable small game, such as mink, fox, muskrat etc., still their winter work so far has not been very successful on account of the lack of large game. The say there are plenty of deer, bear etc., there, but snow being soft, they are hard to kill. They bring down the usual amount of snow-shoes, bows-and-arrows, gloves, and moccasins which are finding ready sale among the pale face chiefs of this town.

Norman County News.

From the Alert.

Chas Woodbury says 'tis a baby girl at his house that causes the smile.

Assemblyman Baker was in town over Sunday shaking hands with his constituents. A. H. looks as though city life agreed with him.

Charley Cragin is putting up the cigars this week on account of an infant son which made his appearance on Wednesday. Charley feels justly proud of his heir.

Ada, Norman Co., is located on the east side of the Red River, the center of the great wheat region of the Northwest, with an unquestionable financial solidity, the best of churches, schools, hotels and business generally, this offers the greatest inducements for prosperous and happy hemes of any city in the Red River Valley.

While we were in Wisconsin last week we experienced some weather. It was so cold that the schools were let out, the railroad engines froze stiff on the track, and railroad business was suspended for two or three days. Its a nice warm country down there though and folks are afraid to come up here for fear they will get frosted.

FROM NORWAY.

A LOCAL PARODY.

Fargo Republican.

The afternoon was waning fast,
As yesterday down Broadway past,
A man who slid o'er snow and ice,
On snow shoes of such strange device,
From Norway,

His nose was cold; his beard beneath
Held frost and ice like to a sheath,
As to our scribe he made reply,
In accents that none could deny.
"From Norway."

The streets was filled with happy life,
With steeds and equipages rife,
But past them all with lengtny stride,
He of the snow shoes quick did glide.—
From Norway.

"Beware of Grand Forks, highwaymen,
Oh, do not 'tempt to pass them when
The shades of night are wrapped around
Thee, oh, thou man with wonder found,
From Norway.

His coat tails stood straight out behind,
Were wildly flapping in the wind,
As block on block so quick did span,
That strange and weird appearing man,
From Norway.

At break of day doubtless we'll hear
Of that strange man with snow shoes queer,
Who passed Grand Forks at dead of night,
Still pushing on with all his might.
From Norway-

Oh, have no fear; by faithful hound
That snow shoe man will ne'er be found,
For by this time, with pole and leg,
He's certainly in Winnipeg,
From Norway.

Alexandria News: Judge R. Reynolds of Crookston remained over Sunday with his son, Geo. H. Reynolds, of this place. The Judge is just recovering from a long and severe illness.

DULUTH & WINNIPEG.

Special to the Daily News.

YANKTON, Jan. 31.—Mr. Munger, a prominent capitalists of Duluth, has arrived here from an eastern trip and states that an entire organization has been made in the management of the Duluth & Winnipeg road. The objective and western terminal point, in his estimation, will be Grand Forks. The money is forthcoming for the entire line. Work will commence in the spring. The road will cross the Mississippi at Grand Rapids. The route west of there is not determined upon. Every assurance is offered that the road will be built. The particulars of the change in the management will be divulged in two or three weeks.

A Narrow Escape.

Grand Forks Daily Herald.

Yesterday about one o'clock, dense volumes of smoke were seen emerging from the house, on upper Third Street, occupied by Mr. Whitney, a bookkeeper for Smith & Wisner and owned by J. J. Cavanagh. Mr. Larson who lives in the next house was the first to discover it. He rushed into the house and climbed through the scuttle. The stovepipe had ignited the woodwork, where it passed through the floor. Several neighbors passed up the water lively, and the flames were soon extinguished. Sam Leen climbed on the roof, and did good service. In the excitement of the moment the neighbors attempted to remove the furniture, but on sober, second thought it was deemed unnecessary. A child lay in its cradle sleeping serenely, and was not once awakened by the commotion. Just at the breaking out of the fire, two terms, each drawing three barrels of water, were driven up, and no doubt it was owing to the fact of having a copious supply of water on hand, was the principal cause of averting what might have been a ruinous disaster.

Warren Sheaf: Any good practical farmer, who is able and willing to till the soil here, can in a few years lay up a competency. It is the country for the poor man, for here, almost without money and without price, he can secure a homestead or a tree claim, that in a few years with good cultivation will be a mine of wealth to him. But here, as elsewhere no idler need apply.

Worse Than Blizzard's.

Plaindealer: A most pitiful story of disaster and death is wafted up from the sirrocco-swept field of Chapois, Mexico. First, a drough parched up the earth, and then came the locusts which devoured the last vestige of vegetation. Their decaying carcasses infested the air and cholera seized upon the starying people and relieved their suffering. The poor natives died in herds, whole families yielding to contagion in a single night. The general government has been appealed to in behalf of the few survivors. The blizzard is a delight as compared with the sirrocco charged with death.

Warren Sheaf: The temperance meeting on Friday evening at the School house was a success. The principal address of the evening was made by A. E. Flint Esq. He spoke earnestly and poured red hot shot into the enemy's camp, and showed up the evil effects of intemperance upon the individual, the community, the State and the nation. Mr. E. Slee, in a few words, showed conclusively in what light he held the liquor traffic. The readings by Mrs. J. P. Nelson and Mr. Geo. H. McCrea were appropriate to the occasion and well rendered. The music was specially prepared for the occasion and added much to the interest of the programme. During the intermission of ten minutes an opportunity was offered to all who so desired to sign the pledge. Not only did the old veterans readily fall into line, ready to march under the old temperance flag, but a goodly company of young recruits were mustered in who will yet plant the victorious bannes on ramparts now held by the enemy. 58 persons pledged themselves to abstain from that which inebriates. The president, Mr. W. W. Wood announced that the next meeting would be held two weeks from that evening at the same hour and place.

NEW DRUG STORE
IN GARFIELD.

DR. A NELSON, Prop.

The citizens of this town and vicinity are respectfully invited to call at my New Drug Store in the town of Garfield and examine my stock of fresh
DRUGS, MEDICINES,
PAINTS, OILS,
and YANKEE NOTIONS

'Tis no longer necessary to go 40 or 50 miles for anything in this line as I have a full supply at prices as reasonable as any town in the Northwest. Call and see!

PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON

I am also ready to answer all calls, by day or night, for the practice of my profession. Call, or leave ordersat my Drug Store in Garfield, Polk Co. Minn,
DR. A. NELSON,

MERCHANTS'
BILLIARD HALL!

M. L. FRETTS, Proprietor,
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

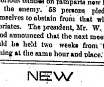
The Choicest Wines, Liquors and Cigars on hand.

C. CHURCHILL,
HOUSE AND SIGN PAINTING,
Kalsomining and Paper Hanging.

Contracts and estimates given. Orders promptly attended to. P. O. Box 214. Residence three doors north of Methodist Church. Mainstreet.

NORTHERN PACIFIC

PIONEER



THE OLD

RAILROAD.

To the Land Explorer,
To the Business Man,
To the Farmer,
To the Mechanic,
To the Laborer,
To the Sportsman,
To the Tourist
To the Miner

TO ALL CLASSES

For the Raising of Wheat,
For the Raising of Stock,
For Ready and Cash Markets,
For a Healthy Climate,
For Sure and Good Crops,
For Remunerative Investment,
For Business Opportunities,
For Wierd Scenery,

The Northern Pacific Country
HAS NO EQUAL.

Round trip tickets are sold at all ticket offices to all stations at reduced rates.

Pullman Sleepers between Moorhead and St. Paul.

Coupon tickets sold to all eastern points, and baggage checked through a Glyndon.

G. K. BARNES,
Gen'l Passenger Agent, St. Paul.

E. D. SCHRAER

LIVERY.
Feed and Sale Stable.

Best Turnouts in the city. Single or Double Rigs, with or without drivers or Saddle horses always ready at a moments notice by day or night. If you want a

NOBBY TURNOUT
—CALL AT THE—
RED BARN

E. D. SCHRADER,
Cor. Main and Third Streets, Crookston

Jas. G. McDonald,
MANUFACTURER OF
BRICK AND TILE
—ALSO—
CONTRACTOR AND BUILDER.

We are prepared to fill orders for brick in any quantity at the kiln or delivered, and to furnish estimates, plans and specifications, and to complete buildings of every description. Mason work of all kinds done promptly.

Plans and specifications of all building under our charge furnished free, executed by the best architects in the Northwest.

NEW RESTAURANT!
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

JACK CONFAIR, Proprietor.

Warm meals at all hours. First-class in every particular. TRY THE NEW RESTAURANT at Losey's Old Stand, Main street, Crookston, Minn.

P. A. DUFOUR,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELOR AT LAW
MAIN STREET,
CROOKSTON - - MINN

REYNOLDS & WATTS,
Attorneys at Law,
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN

THIS SPACE
WILL BE OCCUPIED
NEXT WEEK
—BY—
J. R. CLEMENTS
ANNOUNCING
THE SALE
OF LOTS
—IN—
Clements' 2d Addition
TO CROOKSTON,
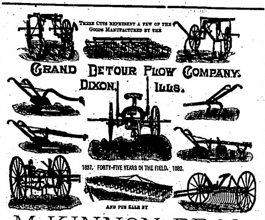
AND
NUMBER OF LOTS
TO BE
GIVEN AWAY
BY HIM TO PARTIES
WISHING TO BUILD
THIS SEASON.

AUCTION! AUCTION!
$20,000 worth of
CLOTHING,
DRY GOODS,
LADIES' and GENTS'
Furnishing Goods,
OF THE LATE CHICAGO FAILURE
WILL BE SOLD AT
AUCTION! AUCTION!
Every Afternoon and Evening.
Private Sale in the Forenoon
Opposite Cowing's Hardware Store,
Main Street.
CHEAP JOHN.



THESE CUTS REPRESENT A FEW OF THE GOODS MANUFACTURED BY THE GRAND DETOUR PLOW COMPANY.
DIXON, ILLS.
1837. FORTY-FIVE YEARS IN THE FIELD. 1882.
AND FOR SALE BY
McKINNON BROS.
MANUFACTURERS OF
CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, WAGONS,
CUTTERS, SLEDS, MILL CARTS, &C.
Axles, Springs, and all Repairs kept in stock.

DEALERS IN
FARM MACHINERY.

In Farm Machinery, we have a full line of Hoosier and Wolverine Seeders, Dixon Diamond Tooth Harrows; Davenport, Peru City and Norwegian Walking and Sulky Plows; Chieftain Hay Rake, Iron King Mower Centre Draft; St. Paul, Twine, Self-Binder. Extras for the different Machines always in stock.

MOSER & MOECKEL,
—DEALERS IN THE BEST CLASS OF—
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS,
—INCLUDING THE—
FOUNTAINE CITY AND BUCKEYE SEEDERS,
Case Wagons, Cassady, Buford and Hapgood Walking, Sulky and Gang
---PLOWS,----

Minneapolis Twine Binder, the Meadow Lark and Buckeye Mowers, the celebrated Fargo and Scotch Harrows, Nichols & Shephard Vibrators and Straw and Wood Burning Engines, the Cooper Stationery and Portable Straw and Wood Burning Engines, C. Aultman & Co's new Model Thresher and Monitor Engine. A full line of

—BUGGIES, SLEIGHS, CUTTERS—
—AND PLATFORM SPRING WAGONS.—

In fact everything usually kept in their line.

INSURANE AGENCY.—We write policies only in the best and most responsible companies, at as low rates as can be secured on the class of property insured. Our list of companies will bear inspection.

Money to Loan.

MOSER & MOECKEL.

J. ENGEL,
WHOLESALE DEALER IN
BAR GLASS,
Of all kinds and Goods used at Bars Only. full line of
LAMPS AND CHANDILIERS.
The only House in this linewest of Chicago.
No. 23 East Third Street. St. Paul, Minn.

GENERAL
Merchandise.

Call at our New Store on Main street, opposite the U. S. Land Office, when you require articles in our line. We carry a full and complete stock and invite invite inspection.

JUVE & BERGLAND

Van Dyke & Denniston,
PHYSICIANS & SURGEONS.
COR. MAIN AND SECOND STREETS,
Will attend to all professional calls promptly.

A. A. JUST, M. D.,
Homoeopathic Physician and Surgeon.
Main Street, near U. S. Land Office,
CROOKSTON, POLK COUNTY, MINN.

A. H. DUNLAP, M. D.
GRADUATE McGILL UNIVERSITY, MONTREAL.
Licensed College Physician and Surgeon, Quebec.
OFFICE OVER MERCHANTS' BANK

AIME GABOURY,
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
Graduate Doctor in Medicine Laval University Canada. Licensed Coll. Phy., Surg., Quebec Late of Michigan University, U. S.
Office over the "Arcade" Clothing Store Crookston, Minn.

DR. M. WATTS,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Office on Main Street, one door north of Star Drug store. Professional calls, by day or night attended to with promptness.

DENTISTRY.
J. H. THOMAS, D. D. S.,
ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN
Artificial teeth from one to an entire set, inserted. Gold, silver or artificial filling used as desired. Regulating children's teeth a specialty All work warranted.

C. W. BARNES, D. D. S.,
Graduate of the Ohio College of Dental Surgery.
OFFICE AT RESIDENCE ON
BROADWAY - CROOKSTON

JOHN LEO. H. STEENERSON.
LEO & STEENERSON.
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
MAIN STREET,
CROOKSTON. - - MINN

—JOHN N. IVES.— —D. E. HALTESTAD—
IVES & HATLESTAD,
ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Collection and Land Office Business made a Specialty.
Money secured for final proofs on short notice.
CROOKSTON, MINN.

CROOKSTON HOUSE,
Main Street, Crookston, Minn.
J. E. MITTEN, - PROPRIETOR.
FIRST CLASS IN EVERY PARTICULAR
Good Sample Room.

COMMERCIAL HOUSE.
W. H. TOPPING, Proprietor,
SECDON STREET CROOKSTON, MINN
—o—
Having leased this new and commodious hotel we are now prepared to supply the needs of the traveling public in first-class style. Our house is entirely new and newly furnished; we have had a long experience in the hotel business and hope to be able to meet the wants of our patrons and friends. We would respectfully invite a share of the public patronage. Call and see us.

Second Street
MEAT MARKET
STANTON & CO., Proprietors.
Choice Meats of every description. Fish and game in their seasons. Everything of the very best quality and lowest prices. Call and see us Stanton & Co., Dobson's Block, Second Street.

WINTER DE-COTE

T. L. MILLER CO.,
BREEDERS AND IMPORTERS OF
HEREFORD CATTLE
COTSWOLD SHEEP
BERKSHIRE SWINE.
BEECHER, WILL CO., ILLINOIS.

$250.00
In Gold Given Away.
$2.00 PER YEAR, POSTPAID.
1841. FORTY-SECOND YEAR. 1883
The Prairie Farmer.
The oldest, most reliable and leading Agricultural Weekly of America.
Advocates the interests of the Farmer, the Breeder and the Dairyman

It aims to educate and elevate, and to give its patrons the latest, best and freshest news pertaining to every line of industry.

The publishers aim to make THE PRAIRIE FARMER the Standard Agricultural Paper of the country. Its columns are devoted to the growing wants of farmers, treating upon all subjects relative to the farm, garden and household. Breeders of live stock will find their interests carefully and fully treated in a spirit of perfect fairness. As a family paper it is designed to place it in the front rank, and keep from its columns all that is objectionable.

Tee Prairie Farmer offers a novel list of cash prizes for the largest list of words that can be formed from the letters composing the name of "THE PRAIRIE FARMER." Every competitor howeve, must become a subscriber for one year. For full rules and regulations see The Prairie Farmer. Sample copies sent to any address on the receipt of six cents in postage stamps. Address
PRAIRIE FARMER PUBLISHING CO
183-861 150 Monroe St., Chicago, Ill.

MIDWIFERY.

Mrs. Olena Dawley, a graduate of the mid-wife College, of Christiania, Norway, has opened an office on Fletcher Avenue. Having had an experience of 18 years in Norway and six years in America, she is fully competent to treat all cases entrusted to her. All diseases of women or children carefully and scientifically treated.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

Official Paper of City and County.

CROOKSTON, THURSDAY, FEB. 8.

Lovely weather for a few days.

Apples by the barrel at Fontaine & Anglim's.

McKinnon Brothers are expecting a carload of wagons shortly.

K. D. Chase has gone to New York Expects to be away until March 1st.

J. W. Ranney has completed the Corser well, which is 105 feet deep.

Ben McKinney, who has been under the weather for a while is about again.

McKinnon Brothers have received a carload of drags, ready for the coming seed time.

Fontaine & Anglim have a large supply of choice apples for sale at reasonable prices. Call and order a barrel.

Geo. Jones has a slate at the P. O., whereon orders for water may be left. All orders left upon the slate will be promptly filled.

Fontaine & Anglim are expecting a large stock of carpets in a few days and are getting their carpet room ready to receive them.

Wm. Wylia, from Black River was in the city on Tuesday. He reports matters thriving in that locality. Everybody contented and happy.

J. W. Ranney has completed the well at the Carman brickyard. It is 163 feet deep and flows at the rate of 40 barrels per day, three feet above the ground.

Mr. Carl Kretzschmar was in from Red Lake Falls this week. He reports business good at the "Second Minneapolis" and the sales of real estate brisk.

The opposition cry was "away with bossism." In order to effectually do away with bossism D. M. Sabin was elected. There is civil service reform for you!

Mr. D. L. Bryson has been heard from. He is located at Sprague, Washington Territory and is enjoying life hugely. He says that the snow is about one inch deep and the thermometer hardly ever gets below zero.

Parties in from Belmont report that on Friday night of last week Chris Steenerson froze his hands very badly. They say that it is thought that he will have to suffer amputation of one of them.

A carload of Champion Seeders just received by McKinnon Brothers. The Champion is said to be the best seeder in the market and farmers would do well to call and examine these seeders before purchasing.

Bond & Steenerson, whose broad gauge advertisement appears elsewhere in this issue are wide awake and on deck for business. They have a large amount of property in their hands to sell at reasonable rates. Call on 'em.

The deadlock was broken and Windom was not elected. While we have no fault to find with Mr. Sabin on general principles yet we fear that our Legislation has made a bad mistake which is to be seriously regretted.

Congregrtional church service morning service 11 evening render changed from 7 to 7:30. Preaching next sabbath by the Pastor Rev. C. E. Page morning and evening. Evening subject, "Difference between morality and christianity."

Ira De Camp returned on Tuesday from a visit to Iowa. He reports cold and dull times down there. Was 21 days trying to get back to civilization. He thinks the Red River Valley the boss country, and would not live in Iowa for love nor money.

Mr. J. J. Walker, general agent for the Kimball Organ Company is in the city and gave the JOURNAL a pleasant call. The Kimball Organs, if not the best, are among the best organs made and Mr. Walker does not hesitate to warrant them fully. They are highly spoken of wherever known.

A very newsy letter from Beltrami, reached us too late for this issue as the edition had already gone to press. Our correspondent will please accept our thanks and allow us to suggest that letters should reach us not later than Wednesday noon. The letter will appear in our next and we trust it will be but the beginning of an interesting series.

D. La Duc, recently from St. Boniface, Manitoba, has rented the boarding house on Broadway formerly conducted by Ben Le Duc, and will conduct a first-class hotel, to be called the Montreal House. Mr. La Duc is an experienced landlord who will keep a first-class house and will spare no pains to entertain his guests. Good stabling in connection with the house.

A short time ago Mr. J. L. Bailey's clerk took in a number of rolls of splendid butter. It looked so very nice that the clerk felt justified in bragging over it a little to his customers, one of which secured a quantity of the nice butter for family use. He had not been gone long ere he returned with that choice lot of butter remarking that he did not like that kind. Upon examination it was found that about one inch on the out side of each roll was fine looking butter while the balance was lard and tallow. Mr. Bailey will interview the thrifty granger whose brilliant genius produced such fine butter and try to arrive at some definite understanding. [illegible]

Cold Weather.

The winter of 1882-3 will compare favorably with any we have ever experienced in the State, in fact it has been the coldest and the quantity of snow as great if not greater. So far the cases of freezing have been comparatively few. Notwithstanding the weather has been unusually cold, farmers have been able to work out of doors nearly every day hauling wood and hay and carpenters have been building right along all winter.

OATS

In any quantity, at

FONTAINE & ANGLIM'S.

Tastes Differ.

There are a few tenderfeet in this country who are so thoroughly tender that they can not bear to hear a good word spoken in favor of the country. All such had better go south where there is plenty of fever and ague. We had rather shake with the cold for a few days in winter than all the year round with ague.

BUY

The new and improved American Sewing Machine. For sale on easy terms, at

FONTAINE & ANGLIM'S.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

COUNCIL CHAMBERS,
Crookston, Feb. 5th, 1883.

Convened at 8 o'clock. All present. Petition for a bridge at the east end of Robert street taken up and discussed. A remonstrance, containing 52 names, was presented. Alderman Stuart moved that the petition be rejected. Seconded by Alderman Morris. When the vote was called Ald. Stuart voted to reject on the ground that he considered that the Council had no power to make the appropriation. The vote being taken the petition was declared rejected. License of N. Dilude was transferred to T. Thebeault.

BILLS ALLOWED.

Wm. Wakelin, $80; J. R. Holten, $120; E. B. Preston & Co., $02.25; Hack & Gallasch, $12.28; Geo. Crolver, $8 50; D. F. McDonald, $5.75; B. McKenney, $10.50.

On motion a committee consisting of the Mayor and City Recorder was appointed to draft a new charter.

Adjourned till Monday, Feb. 12th.

The M. E. Lyceum met according to adjournment. The regular programme was not filled, owing to the absence of several members, but voluntary readings and recitations being offered, abundant entertainment was furnished. The music by the choir was particularly entertaining. It was decided to have a debate every two weeks. Subject for next Tuesday—Resolved, "That reading is more beneficial than traveling." Affirmative, Mr. John Watts, Mr. Stanton and Mrs. A. W. Edwards. Negative, Wm. Watts, Miss Carrie Weaver and Mr. Smith.

Argyle Banner: Last week we announced the burning of Amedee Beaudry's residence and the finding of his remains in the debris, under circumstances which created strong suspicions that he had been murdered, and the building burned to cover up the horrible deed. Last Sunday night, on complaint of Peter Kirsch, Esq., Camile Roy, a Canadian Frenchman, who was stopping at Beaudry's house when the fire occurd, was arrested and brought before esquire Barker, charged with having murdered Beaudry. The examination so far, has not developed any thing of serious importance, but future developments may be otherwise. At the request of Mr. Kirsch, attorney for the State, the examination was continued from Friday afterneen until one o'clock Monday.

Notice to Taxpayers.

Remember that the PERSONAL PROPERTY TAXES for 1882 must be paid THIS MONTH to save the FIVE PER CENT. penalty. If you all wait to the last day, it may be impossible to accommodate you.

Crookston, Feb. 6, 1883.

O. H. LUCKEN,
[41-43] County Treasurer,

Notice.

There will be a meeting of the Agricultural Society, Feb. 15th 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m., at the City Hall, for the purpose of transacting business of importance to the society, members, and all others interested in the advancement of the society are hereby notified and requested to be in attendance.

K. D. CHASE, President,
JNO. LEO, Secretary.

NOTICE.

Whereas my wife Ellen has left my bed and board, this is to give notice to all concerned not to trust her on my account, as I will pay no bill of her contracting. W. H. STUART.

Crookston, Feb. 8, 1883.

Pianos and Organs.

At bottom prices and warranted satisfactory, at the American Express Office, Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

On Eighth Street, between Ash and Broadway, two lots with good house and good barn, also house and lot on Ash Street, between Eighth and Ninth Streets, also lots 3 and 4, block 12 on Main Street. Terms easy.

CALVIN D. PALMER,
[illegible]-tf Crookston, Minn.

[illegible]

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS to loan on improved farms from [illegible] years time at very reasonable rates. Apply at my office on Main street, opposite U. S. Land Office.

[illegible] E. STEENERSON.

A. P. BOND. A. STEENERSON.

BOND & STEENERSON,

REAL ESTATE DEALERS

We are now prepared to sell property in the choicest portion of the City of Crookston. We have

Business Lots,
Residence Lots,
Timber Lots,
And Lots with or
Or without houses.

WE HAVE ALSO A LARGE NUMBER OF

CHOICE FARMS

Improved and unimproved in nearly every part of the County. "The first to come is the first to be served," is our motto.

Correspondence solicited and promptly attended to by addressing BOND & STEENERSON, Crookston, Minnesota,

Main Street, Opposite Old U. S. Land Office.

Hair Dressing.

For particulars call at Mrs. I. U. Jennings Millinery Rooms, on Main St., Crookston, Minn.
[30-tf]

So far, Crookston has fortunately escaped the ravages of that dreaded monster the Fire Fiend, but we know not at what hour he may appear in our midst. The only way to meet this terrible foe is by good, reliable Insurance. Look over our Million List of staunch, fire-tested companies and make your selection before you have cause to regret a loss.

Hartford	$3,701,370.
German American, N. Y.	3,094,030.
German, Freeport, Ill.	1,028,407
Niagara,	1,557,487.
Liverpool London, Globe	4,777,589.
Fireman's Fund, California,	1,160,017.
National, of Hartford.	1,704,803.
N. Y. Alliance,	1,627,840.
Phoenix, of Hartford	2,624,083
Union, California,	1,20,038.
British America,	1,343,900.
North British	1,958,089.

We also represent the Travelers Life and Accident Insurance Co., of Hartford.

BENHAM & UNDERHILL
Insurance Agency
17-tf.

DIED.

MISGEN.—In Crookston, Minnesota, January 31st, 1883, at 8:30 a. m., STELLA MAY, daughter of Peter E. and Annie R. Misgen, aged 5 years, 4 months and 9 days.

And so has passed away the light and joy of another home; so in the early morning of her sweet young life hath it pleased the Heavenly Father to take to His bosom another of His children. The cold hand of death was laid upon the loving heart of little Stella, and as the flowers fade and die at the touch of the chilling frosts, so faded away the life of our darling. Her fond heart was forever stilled and forever departed the light of eyes that were wont to sparkle with joy and gladness at the sight of parent, relative or friend, and to know her was to be her friend, as her sunny disposition and fond heart never failed to gain love and kindly interest in return. Though our hearts bleed with bitter sorrow in our sad affliction, though we feel lonely and dreary thinking of our little Stella sleeping her long, last sleep on the wintry hillside, and knowing that never again on this side of the dark river shall we behold the light of her loving eyes, feel the clinging clasp of her loving hand or hear the music of her laughing voice. Still we meekly bow to the chastening rod, and, in the spirit of Christian hope, look forward to that other day when for us life's journey being ended we shall meet our little darling and by her be welcomed to that beautiful shore whither faith points and teaches we will again and forever be united with the loved ones gone before. Although for us 'tis dark and dreary, we know 'tis well with the loved one and that her pure and sinless soul, borne to heaven on angel's wings, enjoys the fruition of a happiness from which, much as we loved her, we would be loth to beckon her away, though it were in our power.

[illegible]

Four thousand acres of cultivated and timber lands at the mouth of the [illegible] on the Red River, for sale. Also farms to rent. [illegible]

STEENERSON BROS.
[30-tf] Crookston [illegible]

School Desks.

Districts wanting the best desk manufactured, and warranted to be so will do well to call on W. H. Jennings, Sherman House, Crookston. He represents the Racine School Furniture Co., and warrants from five to ten years. [4-tf]

Notice.

All parties indebted to us are requested to call and settle by note or cash at our place, do not ask for further credit till settlement is made.

[34-t-f] FONTAINE & ANGLIM.

$100,000 to Loan.

Prove up you claim. Cash paid for School Bonds and County Orders. Call on or address,

BROWER & McLEAN,
[24-tf] Crookston, Minn.

For Sale.

A fine farm of 183 acres only a short distance from the city. Twenty-three acres timber, 120 acres under cultivation; good house and barn. Apply at JOURNAL office. 21-tf.

First Publication February 8th, 1883.

Mortgage Sale.

Notice is hereby given that a mortgage made by Andrew Kelley, (a single man) mortgagor, to Ole Rear, mortgagee, dated August 8th, 1882, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Polk County, Minnesota, on the 8th day of August, A. D. 1882, at forty-five minutes after eleven o'clock in the forenoon, in book "H" of mortgages, on page 18, will be for closed by sale of the mortgaged premises hereinafter described, for default in the payment of the sum of three hundred thirteen and 83-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due, and is due thereon at the date of this notice. The said mortgaged premises so to be sold are the west half of the northeast quarter and the east one-half of the northwest quarter of Section number thirty-two (32) in Township one hundred and forty-nine (149) north, of Range forty-six (46) west, situate in said Polk County, and containing one hundred and sixty acres of land according to government survey. Said sale will be made on Saturday, the 31st day of March, A. D. 1883, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at the front door of the Court House in Crookston, in said county, to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage, and twenty-five dollars attorneys fees, as stipulated in said mortgage, and the disbursements allowed by law.

Dated January 18, 1883.

OLE REAR, Mortgagee.

FORBES & SEWARD,
Attorneys for Mortgagee. [41-47]

THE PIONEER

HARNESS SHOP.

M. RAUENBUEHLER, Proprietor,

CORNER OAK AND THIRD STS., CROOKSTON MINN.,

Is ready for the Spring Trade with a full supply of Work and Light Harness, Single and Double, Saddles, Bridles, Whips, Blankets, etc., etc. Give me a call before you purchase.

GOLDEN STAR
WHEAT

The Best Wheat in the Market!

Yields from 35 to 40 bushels per acre and weighs 64 pounds per bushel.

Price $2.50 per Bushel

☞ Leave orders at Jore & Bergland's, or Eiken Bros., where samples may be seen.

T. O. BERGLAND.

WM. WATTS,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
AND DEALER IN
REAL ESTATE,
MAIN STREET, CROOKSTON, MINN.

NEW HARNESS SHOP

H. B. KAUFER & SON

Would respectfully inform the citizens of

Red Lake Falls

and vicinity that they have opened a

Harness Shop at the Falls,

and are now prepared to furnish everything in their line as cheaply as they can get the same in Crookston, or anywhere else in the New Northwest. Our work is guaranteed to be as good as any and our prices as reasonable. Call and see! H. KAUFER & SON.

Red Lake Falls, Minn

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Feb. 6th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 15th, 1883, viz: WILLIAM SAUL, H'd No. 1097, for the ne¼ S. 34, T. 143, R. 46. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Andrew Kelley, William Hemmelbeck, Peter Nolsen and James Moore, all of Crookston, Polk Co., Minn.

[41-45] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 25th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 6th, 1883, viz: ANDERS BAKKEN, Pre. D. S. No. 5435, for the w½ se¼ sw¼ ne¼ se¼ nw¼ S. 30, T. 143, R. 44. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Andrew Anderson, Albert Anderson, Hans Knuddon and Nels S. Kaar, all of Fertile, P. O., Polk Co., Minn.

[40-44] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 30th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office, at Crookston, Minn., on March 5th, 1883, viz: OUTAVIENNE JOLY, Pre. D. S. No. 6,870, for the n½ se¼ ne¼ sw¼ and lot 3, Sec. 7, T. 149 R. 48. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: John Quesnelle, C. Fosget, E Quesnelle, V. Robillard, all of Red Lake Falls Polk County, Minn.

[40-44] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 22d, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land office, at Crookston, Minn., on March 2d, 1883, for the ne¼ Sec. 20, T. 147, R. 48, viz: OTTO P. ENGLESTAD, Hd. No. 4,401. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: Peder Johnson, Martin Paulson, Hans P. Englestad, Ole P. Englestad, all of Caledonia P. O., D.

[36-43] JOHN CROMB, Register.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan. 11th, 1883.

Complaint having been entered at this office by William Schumaker against Oscar Bernard for abandoning his Homestead Entry, No. 7,467, dated June 12th, 1882, upon the se¼ Sec. 18, T. 153, R. 46, in Polk County, Minnesota, with a view to the cancellation of said entry; the said parties are hereby summoned to appear at this office on the 1st day of March, 1883, at 10 o'clock a. m., to respond and furnish testimony concerning said alleged abandonment.

JOHN CROMB, Register
[38-41] P. C. SLETTEN, Receiver.

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Jan 4th, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on Feb 10th, 1883, viz: FRANK PELKEY, Hd. No. 969, for the sw¼ Sec. 12, T. 150, R 46. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of, said land, viz: Felix Fournet, Hippolyte Parle, Bartime Kertson, Benjamin Dolbeck, all of Crookston, Polk County, Minn. [37-41]

U. S. LAND OFFICE,
Crookston, Minn., Feb 3d, 1883.

Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before U. S. Land Office at Crookston, Minn., on March 13th, 1883, viz: ELIE CYR, H'd No. 1797, for the [illegible] and lots 9 and 10, S. 25, T. 151, R. 45. He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz: E. M. Trembly, Anthony Garceau, Benjamin Cyr, J. Jarvis, all of Red Lake Falls, Polk Co., Minn.

[41-45] JOHN CROMB, Register.

Mortgage Sale.

WHEREAS DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed by L. A. Michaud and Philomene Michaud his wife, Mortgagors, to Duncan Campbell, of Polk County, Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 28th day of November 1881, and regularly acknowledged and delivered on that day, whereby said Mortgagors did grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto the said Mortgagee, his heirs and assigns forever, the following described real estate situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, to-wit: All of the northwest quarter of Section numbered ten (10) in Township numbered one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of Range numbered forty-seven (47) west, according to the government survey thereof. And also the following described portion of lot fifteen (15) in block five (5) in L. Fletcher's addition to the original Townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat of said addition, on file in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, to-wit: forty-one feet (41) fronting on Oak Street, and twenty five feet (25) wide at the rear end, and extending eastward from said Oak Street, one hundred and fifty feet (150). To secure the payment of nine hundred dollars ($900.00), and interest thereon from the date of said Mortgage at the rate of six per cent per annum until fully paid according to the terms of two certain promissory notes in said Mortgage set forth, executed and delivered by said Mortgagor to said Mortgagee, both of which notes are over due, and have not been paid and which said Mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the said County of Polk on the 28th day of November 1881 at 2 o'clock p. m. in book "B" of Mortgages on page 654.

And whereas the said Mortgage and the said notes were heretofore duly assigned by said Duncan Campbell Mortgagee to Louis Fontaine and William Anglim co-partners as Fontaine & Anglim, of said Polk County, in the State of Minnesota, by deed of assignment duly executed and delivered, bearing date the 16th day of January A. D., 1882, and duly filed and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 16th day of January A. D. 1882, at 11:20 o'clock a. m., in book "G" of Mortgages on pages 59 and 60, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the said premises so described in and conveyed by said Mortgage with the hereditaments and appurtenances and the same will be sold in separate tracts, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said Polk County, and State of Minnesota, on the 20th day of March 1883 at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest thereon, and taxes if any on said premises and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject nevertheless, to redemption at any time within one year from the date of sale as provided by law.

Dated January 31st 1883.

Louis Fontaine and William Anglim as co-partners, Assignees of the Mortgagee.

BROWER & McLEAN,
[40-46] Attorneys for the Assignees.

REMOVAL!

Having purchased the store formerly owned and occupied by
W. T. Dickey,

I HAVE MOVED MY

Entire Stock

INTO IT,

And am now prepared to welcome my friends at the new stand. I have a full and complete stock of

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

To which I invite the attention of all.

CALL AND SEE ME

At my New Store on Main Street.

A. YVERNAULT,
Crookston, Minn

HARDWARE!

EIKEN BROS.,

ARE JUST RECEIVING THEIR LARGE STOCK OF

Hardware
Tinware,
Stoves
and Shelfware

WE SHALL KEEP A

FULL and COMPLETE

STOCK OF GOODS.

In our line and Invite the Patronage all.

COME AND EXAMINE OUR STYLES AND PRICES.

One door south of U. S. Land Office Crookston, Minn, (Overland's old stand.) EIKEN BROS.

Extraordinary Offers.

FOR ONE MONTH!

The Farmers' Union

AND

Minneapolis Weekly Tribune

One of the Largest, Ablest, Brightest and Best News and Family Papers in the United States.

FREE! FREE! FREE!

For one year to any subscriber to the

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

ANY SUBSCRIBER to the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL who is in arrears on subscription one year or more, and who will pay his account in full to date and one year in advance, will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMERS' UNION free.

ANY PERSON who will subscribe for the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and pay in advance for not less than twenty-four months will be presented with one year's subscription to the FARMER'S UNION free.

THE FARMERS' UNION

Is a weekly journal of eight large pages of seven columns to the page, and in all the features of a pure, bright, able, interesting news and family paper it is not surpassed by any journal in the country.

RECOGNIZING the demand of the intelligent progressive people of the Great Northwest for a newspaper that in all its departments shall not only fully up with the times, but shall keep pace with the wonderful development of the region in which it is published, the FARMERS' UNION has perfected such arrangements as will meet all the requirements of a first-class newspaper.

MOST COMPLETE.—It contains the most complete commercial and market reports received by telegraph up to the hour of going to press, a large amount of matter specially prepared for farmers and their families on the very best methods of tillage of crops of all kinds, stock growing, fruit culture, and every subject in which farmers are specially interested.

A HOUSEHOLD DEPARTMENT is devoted specially to the work of the homes of the land brighter and happier, and of lightening the labor of women in making them so.

BESIDES these popular and valuable features the FARMERS' UNION contains choice stories and sketches, interesting and instructive to old and young; poetry, choice miscellany, the news of the week from all parts of the world, and, in brief, the constant aim is to make it as nearly as possible a perfect news and home paper.

WE HAVE great pleasure in offering such a paper as this FREE to our subscribers on the terms named above. Orders should be sent in promptly, as the offer will remain open only for a limited time. Address,

H. E. COOKE,
Ed. and prop. POLK COUNTY JOURNAL.

CROOKSTON TONSORIAL PARLORS.

PROF. THOMPSON, Proprietor.

ROBERT STREET, CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA

Shaving, Hair Dressing, and all work in my line promptly attended to in the latest styles of the art. Give me a trial. PROF. THOMPSON.

A. Allen,

AGENT

—FOR THE—

HOWE
SCALE
COMPANY.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

A SMALL BEGINNING.

A little ground floor room, a little fire in a small stove, burning dully as fires are apt to do at times when their blaze may be worth something in the way of cheer; out doors, the raw gray of a spring thaw; on the window-seat two girls crouched together, and looking out with faces as disconsolate as the weather. Such was the picture presented at No. 18 Farewell street, three years ago last March.

Farewell street was so named because of its being the customary route of exit from the old cemetery; the point where mourners were supposed to turn for a last look at the gates which had just shut in the newly buried friend; and this association, as well as the glimpse of the tall cemetery fence, topped with mournful evergreens which bounded the view, did not tend to make the sad outlook any the less sad on that dismal day. For it was only a fortnight since Delia and Hetty Willett, the girls on the window-seat, had left within those gates the kind old grand-mother who for years had stood to them in the stead of father and mother both.

"The Willetts," as the neighbors called them, using the collective phrase always, were twins, and just 18 years old. Bearing to each other even a stronger personal likeness than twins customarily possess, they were in other points curiously unlike. Delia was soft and clinging, Hetty vigorous and self-reliant. Delia loved to be guided, Hetty to guide; the former had few independent views and opinions, the latter was brimful of ideas and fancies, plans and purposes, some crude, some foolish, but all her own. Yet, oddly enough, it was Delia, very often, who gave the casting vote in their decisions, for Hetty's love for her slender twin was a sentiment so deep and intense, that she often yielded against her own better sense and judgment, simply for the pleasure of yielding to what Delia wished. Delia in return adored her sister, waited on her, petted, consoled, "exactly as if she were Hetty's wife," Aunt Polly said, "and the worst was they suited each other so well that no one else would ever suit either of them, and they were bound to die old maids in consequence!"

But 18 can laugh at such auguries, and there was no thought or question of marriage in the minds of the sisters, as they crouched that afternoon close together on the old window seat.

A very different question absorbed them and a perplexing one; how they were to live, and keep together while doing so, which meant pretty much the same to them both. Grandmother's death had left them so very, very little—her annuity died with her. There was the old house, the plain, worn furniture to which they had become accustomed all their lives, and about a hundred dollars a year. What could they do with that?"

"If only one of us happened to be clever," sighed Delia. "If I could paint pictures, or you had a talent for writing, how easy it would be."

"I don't know as to to that," responded Hetty. "Seems to me I've heard of people who did those things and yet didn't find it so mighty easy to get along. Somebody's got to buy the pictures after they're painted, and read the books, and pay for them." She spoke in an absent tone, and her brow was knitted into the little frown which Delia knew betokened that her twin was puzzling hard over something.

"Don't scowl, it'll spoil your forehead," she said, smoothing out the objectionable frown with her fingers.

"Was I scowling? Well, never mind; I'm trying to think, Dely. You can't paint and I can't write. The question is, what can we do?"

"That is the question," said a voice at the door. It was Aunt Polly's voice. She managed on most days to drop in and give a look to them, the lonely "little creeturs," as she would have expressed it.

"You're consultin', I see," she said, taking in the situation at a glance; the dismal room, the depressed and tearful cheeks of the two girls; the lack of comfort and cheer. She twitched open the stove door as she passed, threw in a stick of wood, twirled the damper, and gave a brisk, ranting shake to the ashes—all with a turn of the hand, as it were—attentions to which the stove presently responded with a brisk roar. "Well, its time you did. I was planning to have a talk with you before long, for you ought to settle to something. Pull the blind down, Dely, and Hetty, you light the lamp, and come to the fire both of you, and let's see what we can make of it. It's a tangled skein enough, I don't deny it; but most skeins are that, and there's always a right end somewhere, if the Lord'll give us sense enough to get hold of it and keep on pulling out and winding up."

Presently the girls were seated close to Aunt Polly's rocking chair. The room looked more cheerful now, with the lamp-light and the yellow glow from the stove, and both were conscious of a sense of hopefulness.

"Now—what can you do?" demanded Aunt Polly, whirling round in her chair so as to face them.

"We hadn't got so far as that when you came in," replied Hetty; "I suppose we must do what other people do in the same circumstances."

"What is that?"

"Teach something, or sew, I suppose."

"Sewing's slow starvation, in my opinion, unless you've got a machine, which you haven't, and not much better then. What do you know that you can teach?"

"Not much," replied Hetty, humbly, while Delia added, hesitatingly: "We could teach children their letters, perhaps."

"I presume you could," responded Aunt Polly, dryly. "But though you may'nt know it, perhaps there are about fifty women in this town can do the same, and who mean to do it. And most of them have got the start of you in one way or another, so what's your chance worth? No, girls, sewing and teaching are played out. They are good things in their way, but every woman who's got her living to earn thinks of them the first thing and nothing else, and the market is always overstocked. My advice to you is to take up something you can do better than other people—that's what gives folks a real chance. Now, what is there?"

"There isn't anything I can do better than other people," cried the dismayed Delia. "Nor Hetty either—except make gingerbread," she added, with a faint little laugh. "Hetty beats everybody at that, grandmother always said."

"Very well, make gingerbread then. That's your thing to do," said Aunt Polly.

Hetty looked at her with incredulous eyes.

"You are not in earnest, are you?" she said.

"I am; in dead earnest."

"But, Aunt Polly, gingerbread! Such a little thing as that! [illegible] of a girl's doing such a thing?"

"All the better if they never did. [illegible] new trade has a double chance. [illegible] [illegible] gingerbread before now; I'll [illegible] thing no bigger. No, Hetty, depend upon it, if your gingerbread is best, folks will want it. And if your teaching or sewing is only second best, they won't. It's the law of human nature, and a very good law, too, though it cuts the wrong way sometimes, like all laws."

"Aunt Polly, you're a genius," cried Hetty, warmed into sudden glow by this vigorous common sense. "I can make good gingerbread, and it's just as you say, neither of us know enough to teach well, and we are both poor hands at sewing, and we should have a much better chance if we tried to do what we can and not what we can't. Why shouldn't I make gingerbread? Dely'd help me, and if folks liked our things and bought them, we could live and keep together. We could make a kind of shop of this room, couldn't we? What do you think?"

"I isn't a bit bad place for such a trade," said Aunt Polly, slowly measuring the room with her eyes. "Being on a corner is an advantage, you see; and there's that double winder on the street gives a first-rate chance to show what you've got to sell. I never did see no use in that winder before. My father he had it cut for a kind of whim like, and we all thought it was notional in him; but, as they say, keep a thing long enough and a use'll turn up. It's a sort of gain for you, too, having the house so old-fashioned. Folks has a hankering for such things, nowadays—the Lord knows why. I hear 'em going on about it when I'm out tailorin'; calling ugly things 'quaint!' and lovely, because they're old. Hetty,"—with sudden inspiration—"here's an idea for you, be 'quaint!' Don't try for a shop; keep the room a room, and make it as old-fashioned looking as you can, and I'll bet a cookie that your gingerbread'll be twice as popular with one set of folks, and if it's first-rate gingerbread, the other set who don't care for old things will like it just as well."

What a bracing thing is a word in season. Aunt Polly's little seed of suggestion grew and spread like Jack's fabled bean-stalk.

"Your light biscuits always turn out well," said Delia.

"And my snaps. Grandmother always liked them so much. And you're a good hand at loaf bread, you know. Aunt Polly, I seem to smell a fortune in the air. We will begin at once, just as soon as I can get a half barrel of flour and put an advertisement in the paper."

Hetty had a ready wit, and Aunt Polly's hint as to "quaintness" was not lost upon her. The advertisement, when it appeared the next day but one, ran thus: "After Monday next, the Old Time Bakery, corner of Farewell and Martin streets, will be prepared to furnish, to order, fresh bread, buns, biscuits and grandmother's gingerbread, all home-made."

People smiled over the little notice, but the odd wording stuck in their memories as odd things will, and more than one person went out of his way during the next week to take a look into the low, wide window, within which, on a broad, napkin-covered shelf stood rows of biscuits light, and white, but which glazed with shining, umber brown, and loaves of gingerbread, whose complexion and smell were enough to vouch for their excellence. Acting on Aunt Polly's suggestion, Hetty had set forth her wares on plates of the oldest and oddest pattern which could be found in grandmother's closet. A queer, tall pitcher flanked them on either side, and round the window frame she had twined the long, luxuriant shoots of a potted ivy. Altogether the effect was pretty, and no one need be told that the pitchers had for years been constructed to the reception of yeast and corks, or that the plates had long since been regulated to kitchen use as too shabby for better occasions.

"Hain't ye no white chany?" remarked their first customer, an old woman, as she counted out the pennies for a half dozen biscuit. "It would kind of set your cakes off."

"We used what we had," replied Hetty, diplomatically, "But I hope your biscuits will taste just as good as if they came off a white plate."

This old woman, two others, and a little boy, were the only customers the first day.

"Tisn't a bit a good beginning," declared Delia, pouring the money recieved out of an old-fashioned china teacaddy, which Hetty had unearthed in an up-stair closet and brought down to serve as a till. "Two dozen biscuits, that's 24 cents, a loaf of gingerbread, and about half the buns. That's 53 cents in all. What did you say the material cost?"

"About 70 cents. But then we have our supper and breakfast out of them, and nearly half the stock to sell at reduced rate to-morrow. We shan't lose anything I reckon, but we shan't gain much either."

"Rome wasn't built all in a minute. You will do yet," remarked Aunt Polly, who had dropped in to hear the result of the first day's sales.

But two days—three—a week went by and still trade did not materially improve, and it took all Aunt Polly's wise laws and hopeful auguries to keep their spirits up. Each day showed the same record, no loss, but almost no gain. Toward the end of the second week, matters mended. Mrs. Corliss, the wife of a wealthy manufacturer, having an errand in Farewell street, happened to pass the little window, and her bric-a-brac-loving eyes were caught at once by its unusual appearance. She stopped, studied the whole arrangement, from the ivy wreath to the old pitchers; a recollection of the droll little advertisement over which she had laughed a few days previously came over her. "I declare, this is the very place," she said to herself, and opening the door she entered, precisely as Hetty came from the kitchen, through the opposite door, a handkerchief tied over her shiny hair, a white apron with a little ruffled waist protecting her print gown, her cheeks flushed rosy pink with heat, and in her hand a tray full of crisp, delectably smelling ginger-snaps.

"A real study—like a Flemish picture," Mrs. Corliss said afterward. She fell in love, at once, with the quaint room, the pretty sisters, the old china, stayed twenty minutes nibbling ginger-snaps, and looking about her, bought a dollar's worth of everything "on trial" as she said, and swept out leaving a wake of rose-colored hope in the air—and Delia and Hetty executing a wild waltz behind her back, for joy and congratulation.

"Luck has turned—I know, I feel it," declared Hetty.

Luck had turned. Mrs. Corliss raved to everybody she knew about the room, the twin sisters, and the excellence of the gingerbread. It became a fashion to go to Farwell street for buns and biscuits. Hetty and Delia had to work early and late to fill their orders, but what was [illegible]

"I've been expecting that would be the next step," remarked Aunt Polly, "and I guess I've got just the boy you want in my eye. It's widow McCullen's lad—Sandy, as they call him. He's a good little chap, and it'll be a real help to his mother to have him earning a trifle."

So Sandy McCullen was regularly engaged as "bread boy," and business grew brisker still.

"Aunt Polly, we've got to another notch," said Hetty at the end of the first year. "You don't happen to know of a girl, do you, who could help us in the baking? Delia and I can't keep up with the orders. She gets so tired every now and then that she can't sleep, and that worries me so that I lie awake too."

"That'll never answer; no, I don't know of any girl, but there's a nice kind of an oldish woman, if she'll do, that I'd like to recommend. Yes—I mean myself"—she went on chuckling at Hetty's amazed look. "It's come to me more than once lately, that it'd be kind of good and restful to make a change, and not go on tailorin' forever, all the rest of my days. I used to be a master hand at bread and pie-crust, too, when I was your age, and I've a little saved up which can go with the business, if it is needed; and if you girls say so, we'll make a kind of a family firm of the thing. How does it strike you?"

"Oh, Aunt Polly, the very thing, only it seems too good to be true. Do you really mean it? We did so hate the idea of a raw girl to whom we should have to teach everything, and who would spoil half she made for the first month, and I've fought it off as long as I could; why, it will be like grandmother coming back to have you living with us. There's the west room all ready. Dear me! How delightful things seem to turn out for us always!"

"That wasn't your view always, it seems to me," rejoined Aunt Polly. "A year ago you was pretty down in the mouth, if I don't mistake. Gingerbread is good for something, you see."

"The Old Time Bakery" still goes in Farewell street, but it has grown far beyond its original proportions. If you were to visit it to-day you would find a room double the size of the former, and which has been made by taking down a partition wall between the sitting-room and a spare bed-room, and throwing them into one. There are two windows on the street now, one full of bread, biscuits and buns, the other stored with Hetty's now favorite gingerbread and with delicious-looking pumpkin pies and apple tarts, with old-fashioned flaky crusts, which are Aunt Polly's specialty, and have added greatly to the reputation of the establishment.

Still it is not a shop. Hetty, with very good taste, has scrupulously preserved the "quaint" look which first gave character in the little enterprise, and by judicious rummaging in neighbors' garrets, has acquired sundry old time chairs, bottles, jugs and platters, which help in the effect. Everything is scrupulously clean and bright, as all things must be where Aunt Polly supervises, but the brightest things in the room are the faces of the twin sisters. They have tested and proved their powers; they know now what they can do, and they taste the happiness of success.

I tell their little story, in which is nothing remarkable or out of the way, for the sake of other girls, who, perhaps, are sitting to day with folded hands, and puzzling and wondering, just as Hetty and Delia did, over what they are to do and how to set about it. I do not mean at all that these girls should all make gingerbread—that indeed would be "over-stocking the market," as Aunt Polly would say, but only that they should hearken to a word of wisdom, "find out what they can do best, and do that," whatever it is. Secure that good work, and hearty striving will win some measure of success soon or late, even if its beginnings are small and insignificant as a gingerbread loaf or a patch of biscuit.—Congregationist.

Bless His Heart.

Poverty found out of place is a pathetic sight; but the kindness that relieves its mortification and its wants is never out of place—and never so sweet as when seen in a child. An Illinois paper furnishes this little incident and scene, all the more pleasing and illustrative of fine feeling because it happened on a rail-way train.

In a very elegant palace-car entered a weary-faced, poorly-dressed woman with three little children—one a babe in her arms. A look of joy crept into her face as she settled down into one of the luxurious chairs; but it was quickly dispelled as she was asked rudely for her ticket, and then told she had no business here, but must go into the next car.

A smile of amusement was seen on several faces as the frightened group hurried out to enter one of the common cars. Upon one young face, however, there was a look of distress.

"Auntie," said a boy to the lady beside him, "I want to carry my basket of fruit and this box of sandwiches to the poor woman in the next car. Are you willing?"

He spoke eagerly, but she answered. "Don't be foolish, dear; you will need them yourself."

"No, I'll not need them," he answered decidedly, but in a very low tone. "You know I had a hearty breakfast and don't need a lunch. The woman looked hungry, auntie, and so tired, too, with those three little babies clinging to her. I'll be back in a minute, auntie; I know mother wouldn't like it if I didn't speak a kind word to them."

The worldly aunt looked after him with a tender expression on her face and said audibly, "Just like his dear mother!"

Later, as the lady passed the mother and the three children, she saw a pretty sight—the family feasting; the dainty sandwiches eagerly eaten, and the fruit-basket open.

The eldest child, with her mouth filled with bread, said; "Was the pretty boy an angel, mamma?"

"No," answered the mother, and a grateful look brightened her faded eyes, "but he is doing angels' work, bless his dear heart!"

And we, too, said, "Bless his dear heart!"—Peoria Call.

The best medicine of the age for quickly curing indigestion, nervousness, etc., is Brown's Iron Bitters.

Truth and Honor.

Query.—What is the best family medicine in the world to regulate the bowels, purify the blood, remove costiveness and billiousness, aid digestion and tone up the whole system? Truth and honor compels us to answer, Hop Bitters, being pure, perfect and harmless. See another column.—Toledo Blade.

Free to all Ministers of Churches.

I will send one bottle of the White Wine of Tar Syrup, gratis, to any minister that will recommend it to friends, after giving it a fair test, and it proves satisfactory for coughs, colds, throat or lung diseases. Sold by all Druggists.

Dr. C. D. Warner, Reading, Mich.

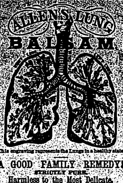
Rheumatism quickly cured! Send stamp [illegible] Washington, D. C.

Try the New brand Spring Tobacco.

Correct your habits of crooked walking by using Lyon's Patent Heel Stiffeners. [illegible]

[illegible]

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM



This engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
Harmless to the Most Delicate.

By its faithful use Consumption has been Cured when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

Wm. C. Digges, Merchant of Bowling Green, Va., writes April 4, 1881, that he wants us to know that the Lung Balsam has cured his mother of consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says, others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

Wm. A. Graham & Co., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of Mathias Freeman, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The Lung Balsam cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

As an Expectorant it has No Equal!

FOR SALE by all MEDICINE DEALERS.

KIDNEY-WORT
FOR THE PERMANENT CURE OF CONSTIPATION.
No other disease is so prevalent in this country as Constipation, and no remedy has ever equalled the celebrated Kidney-Wort as a cure. Whatever the cause, however obstinate the case, this remedy will overcome it.
PILES. This distressing complaint is very apt to be complicated with constipation. Kidney-Wort strengthens the weakened parts and quickly cures all kinds of Piles even when physicians and medicines have before failed.
If you have either of these troubles
PRICE $1. USE Druggists Sell
KIDNEY-WORT
Acts at the Same Time on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels.

A NOTED BUT UNTITLED WOMAN.
From the Boston Globe.]

Messrs. Editors:—
The above is a good likeness of Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., who above all other human beings may be truthfully called the "Dear Friend of Woman," as some of her correspondents love to call her. She is zealously devoted to her work, which is the outcome of a life-study, and is obliged to keep six lady assistants, to help her answer the large correspondence which daily pours in upon her, each bearing its special burden of suffering, or joy at release from it. Her Vegetable Compound is a medicine for good and not evil purposes. I have personally investigated it and am satisfied of the truth of this.

On account of its proven merits, it is recommended and prescribed by the best physicians in the country. One says: "It works like a charm and saves much pain. It will cure entirely the worst form of falling of the uterus, Leucorrhœa, irregular and painful Menstruation, all Ovarian Troubles, Inflammation and Ulceration, Floodings, all Displacements and the consequent spinal weakness, and is especially adapted to the Change of Life."

It permeates every portion of the system, and gives new life and vigor. It removes faintness, flatulency, destroys all craving for stimulants, and relieves weakness of the stomach. It cures Bloating, Headaches, Nervous Prostration, General Debility, Sleeplessness, Depression and Indigestion. That feeling of bearing down, causing pain, weight and backache, is always permanently cured by its use. It will at all times, and under all circumstances, act in harmony with the law that governs the female system.

It costs only $1. per bottle or six for $5., and is sold by druggists. Any advice required as to special cases, and the names of many who have been restored to perfect health by the use of the Vegetable Compound, can be obtained by addressing Mrs. P., with stamp for reply, at her home in Lynn, Mass.

For Kidney Complaint of either sex this compound is unsurpassed as abundant testimonials show.

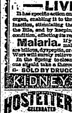
"Mrs. Pinkham's Liver Pills," says one writer, "are the best in the world for the cure of Constipation, Biliousness and Torpidity of the liver. Her Blood Purifier works wonders in its special line and bids fair to equal the Compound in its popularity.

All must respect her as an Angel of Mercy whose sole ambition is to do good to others.

Philadelphia, Pa. (3) Mrs. A. M. D.

KIDNEY-WORT
IS A SURE CURE
for all diseases of the Kidneys and
LIVER
It has specific action on this most important organ, enabling it to throw off torpidity and inaction, stimulating the healthy secretion of the Bile, and by keeping the bowels in free condition, effecting its regular discharge.
Malaria. If you are suffering from malaria, have the chills, are bilious, dyspeptic, or constipated, Kidney-Wort will surely relieve and quickly cure.
In the Spring to cleanse the System, every one should take a thorough course of it.
SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Price $1.
KIDNEY-WORT

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS



Invalids, broken down in health and spirits by chronic dyspepsia, or suffering from the terrible exhaustion that follows the attacks of acute disease, the testimony of thousands who have been raised as by a miracle from a similar state of prostration by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is a sure guarantee that by the same means you, too, may be strengthened and restored.
For sale by all Druggists and Dealers generally.

TUTT'S EXPECTORANT
Is composed of Herbal and Mucilaginous products, which permeate the substance of the Lungs, expectorates the acrid matter that collects in the Bronchial Tubes, and forms a soothing coating, which relieves the irritation that causes the cough. It cleanses the lungs of all impurities, strengthens them when enfeebled by disease, invigorates the circulation of the blood, and braces the nervous system. Slight colds often end in consumption. It is dangerous to neglect them. Apply the remedy promptly. A test of twenty years warrants the assertion that [illegible]

TUTT'S PILLS
ACT DIRECTLY ON THE LIVER.
[illegible]

Buchupaiba.
Quick, complete cure, all annoying Kidney, Bladder and Urinary Diseases. $1. Druggists.

Dallas, Tex. is said to be built over a grave-yard of mastodons.

No lady of refinement likes to resort to superficial devices to supply a becoming semblance of her former beauty. It is health alone that kindles the fire that lights the countenance and brings back the fresh tints of the apple blossoms to the faded cheek. If anything on earth will do this it is Mrs. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which has already brought health to multitudes with whom all other means had failed.

The next republican national convention will be composed of 820 delegates.

"Old birds are not caught with chaff." Therefore seek and find the pure golden grains of health in Kidney-Wort. Women, young or old, married or single, if out of health will be greatly benefited by taking Kidney-Wort.

Fifty thousand people predicted that this would be a year of fires.

Hoods, scarfs, ribbons and any fancy articles can be made any color wanted with the Diamond Dye. All the popular colors.

Women physicians have been refused permission to practice in Austria.

"Rough on Rats."
Clears out rats, mice, roaches, flies, ants, bed-bugs, skunks, chipmunks, gophers. 15c Druggists.

The Bartholdi pedestal fund in New York now amounts to $75,000.

When fashionable lassitude is established to the destruction of healthful emotion, and the sufferer longs for death, rather than life, there is no better remedy than Dr. Benson's Celery and Chamomile Pills, which brace up the system and give to sleep its blessed reposefulness.

Arabi's wife has not gone with him to Ceylon, but is living in Paris.

In another column will be found the advertisement of Allen's Lung Balsam. We do not often speak of any proprietary medecine, but from what we have seen and heard of this great family medicine, we would say to those suffering with any throat or lung disease, to take it and be cured.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes denies the report that he is going to Europe.

Skinny Men.
"Wells' Health Renewer" restores health and vigor, cures Dyspepsia, Impotence, Sexual Debility. $1.

Baby Saved?
We are so thankful to say that our baby was permanently cured of a dangerous and protracted irregularity of the bowels by the use of Hop Bitters by its mother, which at the same time restored her to perfect health and strength.—The Parents, Rochester, N. Y. See another column.—Buffalo Express.

Physicians prescribe Brown's Iron Bitters for indigestion, weakness, low spirits, etc,

Petrolia, Pa., Jan. 5, 1879
Messrs. Kennedy & Co.:—My hair is growing out so fast that I can almost see it grow myself, through the use of your Carboline.
D. Nixon.

A Suffocating Cough.
In a letter from Mrs. Charlotte Lisle of Chicago, a lady well known as a contributor to the Western press, she ascribes the cure of a dangerous cough, accompanied by bleeding at the lungs, to Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar. "My cough," she says, "threatened to suffocate me, but the Honey of Horehound and Tar, has removed every trace of it."

Pike's Toothache Drops cure in one minute.

Scalps tormented with dandruff or scald head are made healthy with Glenn's Sulphur Soap. Of all druggists.

Hill's Hair and Whisker Dye, black or brown, fifty cents.

Colden's Liquid Beef Tonic, for adults traveling, a wine-glass full may be taken three times a day with great advantage. Its tonic and nutritive qualities are sufficient to sustain the body without the addition of solid food. It is now recommended by the faculty, as the best remedy for consumption, debility, loss of appetite, weakness, indigestion, dyspepsia, fever, ague, malaria, and all female and children's maladies. Caution—See that the signature of T. Colden is on each bottle, as imitations are on the market.

Redding's Russia Salve meets with wonderful success in all cases of skin disease. Try it.

Husband and Wife in England.

On the first day of this year the relations of husband and wife in England underwent a complete change. The Married Woman's Property act of 1882 is the last in a series of legislation entirely superseding the old common law rule that the rights of a wife are merged in her husband. The result is that there are four classes of married women in England having distinct rights and liabilities. First, those married before August 9, 1870 are entitled to their wages and earnings and to any property the title to which accrues as from to-day. But their husbands are liable for their debts before and after marriage. Those married between 1870 and 1874 are entitled to in addition to the above, to all sums coming to them as next of kin under intestacy, to sums coming by will or deed up to $1,000, and to rents of freeholds descending to them as heiresses. Husbands of these women are not liable for debts contracted before marriage. Women married between 1874 and 1883 can make their husbands liable for debts only to the extent of the assets which the latter have received from their wives. Women married after January 1, of this year, may acquire, hold and dispose of real estate and personal property in the same manner as if unmarried, without the intervention of trustees. A wife may now sue her husband, prosecute him criminally and even make him a bankrupt. It remains to be seen whether or not this change in the law will increase the business of the divorce courts.

Death of a Fighting Parson.

The Rev. Dr. (and General) William N. Pendleton, who died last week, at Lexington, Va., was the Chief of Artillery of the Army of Northern Virginia, and as such was chosen to break to General Lee, of whom he was a close personal friend, the opinion of the corps commanders that the time had come, at Appomattox, for negotiation with General Grant. Early in the war he had commanded a battery in "Stonewall" Jackson's brigade, and at Manassas is said to have cried out to his men: "Steady, men! sight your pieces well!" and then, himself aiming the heaviest gun: "May this shot kill a thousand, and may the Lord have mercy on their souls!" Both before and after the war he was a popular preacher and president of Washington College, Lexington.

Warren Leland says that "competent, sober watchmen are the best protection any building can have."

SEEDS.
E. W. WOODVILLE, Northfield, Minn. [illegible] Catalogue free.

FREE For Information & Maps of Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas [illegible]
WHITE RUSSIAN OATS [illegible] SEEDS.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES [illegible] ASTHMA

For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Depression of Spirits and General Debility, in their various forms; also as a preventive against Fever and Ague, and other Intermittent Fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from Fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure.
This powder never varies. A marvel of purity, strength and wholesomeness. More economical than the ordinary kinds, and cannot be sold in competition with the multitude of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate powders. Sold only in cans.
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., New York.

STRONG FACTS!
A great many people are asking what particular troubles Brown's Iron Bitters is good for.
It will cure Heart Disease, Paralysis, Dropsy, Kidney Disease, Consumption, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, and all similar diseases.
Its wonderful curative power is simply because it purifies and enriches the blood, thus beginning at the foundation, and by building up the system, drives out all disease.

A Lady Cured of Rheumatism.
Baltimore, Md., May 7, 1880.
My health was much broken by Rheumatism when I commenced taking Brown's Iron Bitters, and I scarcely had strength enough to attend to my daily household duties. I am now using the third bottle and I am regaining strength daily, and I cheerfully recommend it to all. I cannot say too much in praise of it. Mrs. Mary E. Brashear, 173 Prestman St.

Kidney Disease Cured.
Christiansburg, Va., 1881.
Suffering from kidney disease, from which I could get no relief, I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, which cured me completely. A child of mine, recovering from scarlet fever, had no appetite and did not seem to be able to eat at all. I gave him Iron Bitters with the happiest results. J. Kyle Montague.

Heart Disease.
Vine St., Harrisburg, Pa. Dec. 2, 1881.
After trying different physicians and many remedies for palpitation of the heart without receiving any benefit, I was advised to try Brown's Iron Bitters. I have used two bottles and never found anything that gave me so much relief. Mrs. Jennie Hess.

For the peculiar troubles to which ladies are subject, Brown's Iron Bitters is invaluable. Try it.

Be sure and get the Genuine.

YOUNG MEN learn Telegraphy here and we will give you a situation. Circulars free. Valentine Bros., Janesville, Wis.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

Educate for Business at the Oldest & Best Commercial College. Circulars free. Address C. Bayliss, Dubuque, Ia.

TWO Photos of Beautiful Ladies, 10c. Illustrated Catalogue free. J. Dietz, Reading, Pa.

OPIUM Morphine Habit Cured in 10 to 20 days. No pay till Cured. Dr. J. Stephens, Lebanon, Ohio.

HEADACHE
Nervous, Sick, Bilious or Congestive, CURED.
"I had sick headache for 40 years, your pills cured me." Lucy A. Warren, Deerfield, N. Y.

Dr. C. W. Benson's Celery & Chamomile Pills [illegible] Neuralgia, Nervousness and Dyspepsia.
Dr. C. W. Benson
Fac-simile signature on every box.

Piles Piles Piles.
A sure cure for Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles. A single box of Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment has cured the worst chronic cases of Thirty Years standing. [illegible] Price $1.00.
NOYES BROS. & CUTLER, St. Paul, Agents.

SEEDS
I will give [illegible] E. H. Shumway, Rockford, Ill.

Rochester Seed. [illegible] H. Glass, Seed Grower, Rochester, N. Y.

ADD TO YOUR INCOME
GRAIN, PROVISIONS & STOCKS
[illegible]

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS
Sold by ALL DEALERS Throughout the WORLD
GOLD MEDAL PARIS EXPOSITION—1878.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

WHEAT GROWERS!
Why will it pay you to get some of the Saskatchewan Fife Wheat
For next spring's seeding? Because it is the PURE SCOTCH FIFE. Because it is nearly twice as prolific as the Wheat now grown here. Because it is a week earlier. Because it is healthy. Because leading millers and wheat men have pronounced it the best milling wheat to-day in the Northwest.
Write to Abernethy & Wellman, of Minneapolis, for Circulars, giving full description.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

HAIR Send postal for Hair catalog. Hull's Hair Store, [illegible] Monroe, Chicago

THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST!
Oregon, Washington & Idaho.
Offers the best field for Emigrants—viz.: a mild, equable, and healthy climate; cheap lands of great fertility, producing all varieties of Grain, Fruit, and Grasses, in wonderful abundance; an inexhaustible supply of Timber; vast Coal Fields, and other mineral deposits; cheap and quick transportation by railroads and river navigation; direct commerce with all parts of the world, owing to its proximity to the Pacific Ocean.
NO DROUTHS, NO INSECT PESTS, NO HURRICANES, WHIRLWINDS, OR OTHER DESTRUCTIVE PHENOMENA.
The Lands of the Pacific Northwest show an average yield of wheat per acre largely in excess of that of any other section of the United States.
No failure of crops has ever occurred.
Oregon Wheat commands a higher price than that of any other country in the Liverpool market.
An immense area of very fertile Railroad and Government Lands, within easy reach of the trunk lines of the Northern Pacific R. R., the Oregon Railway & Navigation, and the Oregon & California R. R. Co.'s and their numerous branches in the great Valleys of the Columbia and its tributaries, are now offered for sale at Low Prices, and on Easy Terms, or open to pre-emption and Homestead Entry.
The great movement of population to the Columbia region now in progress will be enormously increased by the completion of the Northern Pacific R. R. and the Oregon Railway & Navigation Co.'s system. This opens a vast and rich area of [illegible] under the United States Land Laws.
For Pamphlets and Maps, descriptive of the country, its resources, climate, routes of travel, rates and full information, address
A. L. STOKES,
General Eastern Agent,
53 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER
FREE WITH EACH WHITE
EVERY BOBBIN SMOOTH AS A SPOOL OF SILK
A THIRD MORE THREAD ON EVERY BOBBIN
SEWING MACHINE
ADDRESS WHITE SEWING MACHINE CO. CLEVELAND, O.

PATENTS Procured, or NO PAY.
[illegible] N. W. FITZGERALD & CO., Patent Attorneys, Washington, D. C.

CONSUMPTION.
I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. [illegible] DR. T. A. SLOCUM, 181 Pearl St., New York.

WISE'S
AXLE GREASE
Never Gums.
IT KEEPS MOIST, OILY AND CLEAN.
Those who use it once always use it.
Ask for "WISE'S" where you trade.

VEGETABLE FLOWER SEEDS
[illegible]

SAMARITAN NERVINE
CURES AND NEVER FAILS.
[illegible]

Health is Wealth!
Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment, [illegible]

THE DINGEE & CONARD CO'S BEAUTIFUL EVER-BLOOMING
ROSES
[illegible]
THE DINGEE & CONARD CO.
Rose Growers, West Grove, Chester Co., Pa.

N. W. N. U. No.

When writing to advertisers please say you saw this advertisement in this paper.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

General Brevities.

Professor A. Winchell, the scientist, has an article in the current number of the North American Review, in which he takes a discouraging view of the American Republic, deeming universal suffrage a failure.

Prof. E. W. Gilliam has been calculating on the basis of the last five census and finds that in 1985 the North will have 240,000,000 whites and the South 96,000,000 whites and 192,000,000 blacks. This will be serious business for anybody who intends to live to 1985. It is of more consequence that at the present rate the whites and blacks will be equal in the South in forty years.

A train which should have reached San Francisco on the afternoon of New Year's Day delayed for more than a day by a terrific simoom on the Mojave Desert, which piled up the sand in about the manner as snowdrifts are formed. The vast plain moved like the sea, and the air was filled with sand scattered like spray, and even breathing was difficult and painful.

In a description of the ladies of Salt Lake City, a writer to Lippincott's Magazine says that many of the Mormon women are highly educated and accomplished, and that poetesses are common. Many of the young ladies are Sunday school teachers in the Mormon church, and the children sing sweetly to absurd words, such as:

A loving band of children, we're all to Zion bound,
For our father loves our mothers every one and all around.

It is calculated that the state of New York has earned from the canal systems over and above the cost of construction, enlargement and maintenance, $8,333,457; and that in addition it has drawn from the canal revenues for general purposes a balance of more than $6,500,000, not included in the excess above named. It appears, then, that the state has realized some $150,000,000 from its investments in canals.

Henry Gaillieur, a French gentleman who accompanied Secretary Schurz among the Indians in 1879, has just published his views in Paris. He confirms the impression held by the average man that Indian agents are generally dishonest, what the Indians are cheated out of in quantity and quality being offset by charging double to the government. He regards the frequent breaches of solemn treaties, made by the United States with the Indians, as a stain upon our government.

A constable's life in Nevada is not always a happy one. One of them who is the editor of the Ruby Hill Mining News, in retiring from office says in his paper: "We step down and out with a feeling of relief. We are a few grains heavier than when we assumed the responsibilities of keeping the peace of this neighborhood, having during that time acquired what might be termed lead poisoning. Weyburn's bullet we continually carry in our lung, and it is a constant reminder to us that life is uncertain. Since we have been constable of this town our receipts from that office have been $300 less than what it cost us to get partially cured of our bullet wound.

The venerable mansion on Clinton st., Albany, built for General Philip Schuyler in 1706, will soon be sold at auction and given over to business purposes unless a public sentiment sufficiently strong to save it from that fate is immediately aroused. Few buildings of so much historical and social interest remain in the country, but the heirs are not satisfied with the rental and have put the property on the market. Says the Albany Evening Journal: "If the city authorities do not think enough of this mansion, the Legislature surely ought to see the propriety of making a suitable appropriation for its purchase and saving it forever to the State. It is well preserved and will stand for ages yet."

The editor of a well-known newspaper in New York recently lost a young daughter, to whom he was devotedly attached. The day following her death, a respectably-dressed man called at the house and inquired for the griefstricken parent stating that he must see him. When the father appeared, the stranger produced a wreath made of cheap immortells, on which the dead child's name was worked, and importuned him to purchase it. The father was so appalled at the audacious intrusion that he was powerless, but a relative who was present, led the fellow to the door and kicked him off the steps. These human vultures make a business of scanning the death lists' published daily, and hawking their tawdry wares where they think they can find a purchaser.

The Substitute for Genius.

A young man who wishes to rise sometimes finds himself weighed down by the consciousness that he is not a genius. Such a one may be encouraged by an anecdote of an eminent Scottish artist, David Wilkie. While he was a student of art, his instructor quoted a remark of Sir Joshua Reynolds, one of the foremost of English painters:

"If you have genius, industry will improve it; if you have none, industry will supply its place."

Wilkie treasured up the words. "I will be very industrious," he said to himself, "for I know I have not genius." Acting upon this resolution, he gave himself to his art, and in a few years the public recognized that he had both genius and industry.

Another anecdote shows how thoroughly he carried his habit of industry even in those things which are considered trifles. His pictures brought him into notice, and he was invited to London parties.

When a lad he had danced reels and country dances, but he was ignorant as to the quadrilles just then introduced. With characteristic energy he set himself to study them under the instruction of a dancing-master.

Knowing that his mind was not quick in learning, he drew ground-plans and elevations of the new dances to aid his memory in retaining the lessons of the master. He acted on the wise maxim, that what was worth doing at all was worth doing well.

Perhaps some youth may be encouraged by these anecdotes to form those habits of industry which are the best substitute for genius, and without which genius often proves a Jack o' Lantern.

The late T. W. Park, of Boston, left no will, but by ante-nuptial contract his widow receives $200,000 in cash and a life annuity of $15,000.

Summaries of the reports of the institutes of the deaf, dumb and blind, and the institute for imbeciles, are printed. The directors report that the department for the blind is overcrowded. A total appropriation of $170,000 is recommended for improvements and current expenses for the next two years. A very satisfactory showing of present conditions is made.

Arabi's wife does not accompany him to Ceylon, but is living at a [illegible] and intends soon to change her residence permanently in the [illegible]

LIVING AND DYING.

From the Denver Tribune.

John Smith was eke a goodly man
As ever lived on earth,
The world admired and loudly praised
His truly pious worth;
His life was full of charity
And free from sinful pride,
But scarce had reached to thirty-four
When one dim eventide
A mule kicked at him playfully,
And Smith soon after died.

John Brown, a knave of deepest hue,
Dwelt in the self-same town;
A grosser, meaner, viler scamp
There never lived than Brown.
He cursed, he swore, he smoked, he chewed,
He even keno played,
And down in Texas years ago
They say a man he slayed.

Yet he lived on contentedly
And lots of money made,
Till, finally, a gray-haired man,
John Brown to die was laid—
His wife and children gathered 'round,
A preacher lingered nigh—
And the only token of his death
Was a quiet, gentle sigh.

We'd like to live as did John Smith,
Revered by all the town,
But when it comes to dying, we'd
Prefer to die like Brown.

THE STORY OF A LITTLE PIG.

By the Author of "John Halifax, Gentlemen."

He was the sweetest little lamb—no pig—that ever perished in infant bloom. As he lay on my kitchen table, white as milk from head to tail, his poor little pink eyes half open, and his tiny feet—let us say at once his petitoes—stretched out as if in helpless submission to destiny, my heart melted. So did the hearts of all the women servants, who gathered round him, contemplating him with an air of mild melancholy.

"He does so look like a baby!" said one. (So he did—the duchesse's baby in "Alice's Adventures," which is by turns an infant and a little pig.)

"I don't think I could cook him," remarked the cook, a matronly and tender-hearted person who had had a great deal to do with babies.

"And I'm sure I couldn't eat him," added, with dignity the parlor maid.

"We none of us could eat him," was the general chorus. And they all looked at me as if I was sort of female Herod. Evidently they had never read Charles Lamb, and were unappreciative of their blessings.

As for me, I slowly took in the difficulties of the position; and as I gazed down on the martyred innocent lying on the table—to quote a line from an old drama—I "knew how murderers feel."

Yet I was only an accessory after the fact. Thus it happened: A much valued old friend who is always ready to do a kindness to anybody, one day offered my husband a sucking-pig, which was refused to be given to somebody else. Immediately afterwards, I happened to say I was sorry for this, as I liked pig.

"Then," answered my friend, "you shall have one—the very next that arrives. I shall not forget. It is a promise." Which, after an interval of several months, during which I myself had entirely forgotten it, was thus faithfully kept.

A special messenger brought the present to my door, with the injunction that he was to be cooked that day for dinner—the pig, not the messenger. And there he lay! with the sympathetic domestic circle at once admiring and lamenting him.

I went out and gathered the collective opinion of the drawing-room. It was much the same as that of the kitchen. Several other members of the family protested that they "didn't care for the pig," and one even went so far as to say that if poor piggie-wiggie appeared on the table, she would be obliged to dine out.

Was ever a luckless house-mother in such a quandary! What was I to do? Even though—(in common with Ella—I must own to the soft impeachment!)—even though I like pig—how could I have one cooked exclusively for my own eating? and, further, how could I eat him up all myself? And he required, like all sucking-pigs, to be cooked and eaten immediately.

Between the dread of annoying my whole family, or the kindly friend who had wished to give me pleasure, I was in despair, till a bright idea struck me. Near at hand was a household of mutual friends—a large household, who could easily consume even two pigs, and to whom my friend would, I knew, have been as glad to give pleasure as to myself.

"Pack the pig up again very carefully," said I, "and let him be taken at once to Eden Cottage. They are sure to enjoy him."

"Oh yes, ma'am." And a smile of relief overspread the countenances of my domestics, especially the cook, as piggy disappeared in great dignity, for, to save time, I sent him in the carriage. So he departed, followed by much admiration but no regrets—save mine. But I had reckoned without my host. Half an hour afterwards, my parlor-maid, presented herself with a long face.

"He has come back, ma'am."

"Who?"

"The little pig. They say they are very much obliged, but none of the family like pork."

"He is not pork," I cried indignantly. A sweet, tender, loving, sucking pig, embalmed in all classic memories, to call him common "pork!" It was profanity. Still, nothing could be done, and the moments were flying. I turned to a benevolent lady visitor, and told her my grief. She laughed, but sympathized.

"Will you take him?" I said, thoughtfully. "Indeed he is a great beauty, and I am very sorry to part with him; but if you would take him—"

"I don't think my brother cares for pig, but some of the rest might like it," answered the benign woman. "So if you are quite sure you don't want him—"

"If I wanted him ever so much, I couldn't keep him. Do take him. And I hope that at least your visitors will enjoy him."

Not until they had departed—little pig and all—did I recollect, and felt hot to the ends of my fingers, that to remote ancestors of these my dear and excellent friends, the ancestors of my little pig must have been the most obnoxious of food! But when one has put one's foot into it, the best thing is to let it out. So I rested content. My pig was safely disposed of.

At his usual hour my husband entered looking pleased and amused. "So you've got your little pig at last. M—— was so delighted about it, and so kind. It was kept on purpose for you till we came home from the north. He put it in his carriage, drove to town with it himself, and sent it by messenger in full time to be cooked for dinner to-day. And the last word he said to me was: 'Now be sure there's plenty of apple sauce, and tell me to-morrow morning how you all liked your pig.'"

I listened in blank dismay. Then I told the whole story. [illegible] my husband's countenance was a sight. "[illegible] Given him away! Given away your little pig! What will M—— say after the kindness and the trouble he took! How shall I ever face him to-morrow morning!"

In truth it was a most perplexing position.

"There was only one thing to be done," said my husband decisively. "You must send and fetch the pig back immediately."

I explained with great contrition that this was difficult, if not impossible, as he was probably just then in the very act of being roasted, six miles off.

"But we must have him, somehow or other. We must eat him—or at least be able to say we have eaten him. M—— will be so disappointed—quite hurt in his feelings and no wonder. How could you do such a thing?"

I felt very guilty; but still if I had had to do it all over again, I did not see I could have done differently. And the pig was safe to be eaten and enjoyed—by somebody.

"But not by you; which was what M—— wished. Couldn't you manage it somehow? Why not invite yourself to dine with your friends—and the pig?"

Alas! it was, as I said, six miles off, and there was only half an hour to spare, and we had a houseful of friends ourselves that day.

"But the day after? Couldn't we drive over, fetch him back—at least what remains of him—and eat him cold the day after?"

This was too bright an idea to lose. But still one difficulty remained. What was to be said to our kindly friend when he asked "How we had enjoyed our pig?" to-morrow morning.

"I declare I don't know how to face him," said my husband, mournfully. "After all the kindness, and trouble he took and the pleasure he had in pleasing you. The first question he is sure to ask is, 'How did your wife like her pig?' What in the world am I to say to him?"

Crushed with remorse, I yet suggested that "the plain truth," as people call it, is usually found not only the right thing but the most convenient. However, this merely feminine wisdom was negavtied by the higher powers, and it was agreed that the donor should only be told that the pig was not to be eaten until to-morrow; on which to-morrow we should drive out and fetch what remained of him, so as to be able to say, with accuracy, that we had eaten him and found him good.

This was accordingly done. The fatal moment passed—how, I did not venture to inquire—my husband reappeared home, and we took a pleasant drive, and presented ourselves for afternoon tea at our friends' house. They were too hospitable to look surprised or to wonder what we had come for.

After a few minutes polite conversation, we looked at each other to see which should make the confession and put the request.

"The—the little pig?" said I, at last, in great humility.

"Oh, the little pig has been cooked and eaten. He turned out a great success. Some of the family enjoyed him immensely."

"Then—is he quite finished?" I asked, with meek despondency.

"I will ring and inquire. No, I think there is a fragment left of him, because my brother thought you had ought to be asked to dinner to-day to eat it."

"Well, I might take it home with me, were it only a few mouthfuls. We have a special reason. My husband will explain."

Which he did, pouring out the whole story of my sins—first, in being so foolish as to say I liked pig, then in accepting it, and lastly in giving it away.

"And if you had seen how pleased M—was, and the trouble he took about it all," was always the burthen of my story, till I felt as if I could never lift my head again.

But my friends only saw the comic phase of the thing. They burst into a chorus of laughter.

"It is as good as a play. You ought to write a second 'Essay on Roast Pig,' to transcend Ella's. Comfort yourself. You shall still have your pig, or, at least, what is left of him."

She rang the bell, and gave her orders to the politely astonished footman, who, after a few minutes, brought back, a most Medea-like message:

"Please ma'am, cook says there's his head left, and one of his legs, and a small portion of him still remains uncooked, if the lady would like to take that home—"

"No, no, no," said my husband, hastily, "The least little bit will do—a mere fragment, just to enable her to say she has eaten it. She likes it; she was once heard to say that a little pig tasted exactly like a baby!"

Under the shout of laughter which followed this unlucky communication (which was, also, quite true), I made my retreat. But just as I was getting into the carriage, one of the family came running hastily out.

"Stop a minute; you have forgotten something. You have left behind you your little pig."

What a narrow escape! Not until the basket was safely deposited at my feet did I feel that I had conquered fate, gained my end—and my pig; and, what was the most important element in the matter, had avoided wounding the feelings of my friend.

So we ate him—the pig I mean—at least one of his members. Very delicious he was, fully justifying Ella's commendation of him, or rather of his race. He was also fully appreciated by a mutual friend of the donor and ourselves, who happened to dine with us that day, and upon whom we impressed the necessity of stating publicly that she had eaten this identical pig in our house.

Peace to his manes! Let him not perish unchronicled, for he was a beauty; but let his history be recorded here—a story without a plot, or a purpose, or a moral. Except, perhaps, the trite one, and truth is best. How much or how little of it has reached my friend I know not; but when he reads this in print, perhaps he will feel that his kindly gift was not altogether thrown away.

Gold of the Ancients.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

Gold was in excess in ancient times and mostly taken from the rivers in Asia. The fables of Pactolus, of the golden fleece of the Argonauts, of the gold from Ophir, the history of King Midas, etc., all point to an eastern origin of this metal. According to Pliny, Cyrus returned with 34,000 Roman pounds of gold (about $10,000,000). The treasures exacted from Persia by Alexander the Great amounted to 351,000 talents or $400,000,000. Gold also came from Arabia and upon the Nile, from the interior of Africa. Pliny calls Asturias the country in which the most gold is found. A tablet bearing the following inscription was found in Idanha Velha, Portugal: "Claudius Rufus returns his thanks to Jupiter for having permitted him 130 pounds of gold." These sources of wealth have ceased to flow and the endeavor of several Englishman to reopen them have been unsuccessful. Bohemia, Mahren, Silesia and Tyrol all have produced gold, and the receding of the glaciers have caused old mines to be uncovered, while upon the Italian side, at Monte Rosa, Val Sesia, and Val Anzasca, gold mines are still worked to-day, although with indifferent success. The only works of any note are those of Kremnitz, Hungary. It may, therefore, be safely asserted that Europe is completely exhausted in this respect.

Harvey M. Watterson, father of the editor, is passing the winter in Washington.

FIELD AND FARM.

Household Notes.

Care of Poultry.—Dressed poultry which is to be kept in cold weather should be thoroughly cleansed, then be wiped dry with a cloth and have flour rubbed all over the inner part; then it should be hung in a cool, dry place.

Cream Cookies are made of one cup of butter, one cup of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of sweet cream, half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and half a teaspoonful of soda; flavor with cinnamon or nutmeg, or, if you wish to have them very delicate, flavor with extract of lemon or with rose water.

If the Bars of your wire gridiron are too far apart to hold oysters, you can remedy the matter by getting two pieces of the wire netting found at hardware stores or tin shops. Have them cut the exact size of the gridiron. Lay the oysters on one and cover them with the other, and place between the double gridiron.

If the Arnica with which bruised limbs are bathed is heated, its good effects are perceptible much earlier than if it is applied while cold. If arnica is to be taken as a remedy, as so many physicians recommend in cases of severe sprains, it should be prepared with water in this proportion—a teaspoonful of arnica in a goblet two-thirds full of water, and of this a teaspoonful is to be taken once an hour or once in two hours as the severity of the case determines.

How to Remove a Glass Stopper.—When, says Dr. Squib, the fixed stopper of a glass bottle resists all management such as warming the neck with a cloth wet with warm water, by tapping, and by the wrench or by all these in combination, there is another means which will almost always succeed. Let the bottle be inverted so as to stand on the stopper in a vessel of water so filled that the water reaches up to the shoulder of the bottle, but not to the label. Two or three nights of this treatment may be required sometimes before the stopper will yield.

A Dutch Farm.

An English traveler describes a Dutch farm near Haarlem, and the family working it. He declares that he never before saw anything so excessively clean, neat, pretty, and well arranged; the kitchen and the kitchen-stove a perfect picture of polished steel and spotless plaques; all the pails painted a bright blue with hoop of silvery brightness; the dairy, a scene of red tiles and gleaming milk-pans, pleasing to every sense; the barn, more like cabinet work than carpentry.

The railings of the out-door staircase to the hay-lofts are handsome enough for any mansion; the ladders are nicely finished; the gates highly ornamental; the fences all elegant and tasteful.

There is no litter anywhere; no neglected corners; no ill-kept patches of grass; no waste places overgrown with weeds, and this farm is not a rich man's plaything, but a real farm worked chiefly by the occupant and his sons and daughters, who derive from it their whole revenue.

Such farms, our traveler says, are common in Holland. We hope the fashion will spread to other lands, not omitting one that shall be nameless. We have seen such farms—at the opera.

Merino Sheep.

Probably the best type of the Merino sheep is found in the Rambouillet flock belonging to the French government. This flock was founded in 1786 and has been carefully bred and improved for the purpose of supplying breeding animals to the French farmers. The best blood of our American Merino has been derived from this flock and it is worthy of note that fifty-three choice animals from it arrived here from France a week or two ago. This is the largest importation ever made of French Merinos, and the first since 1840, when Mr. Taintor, of Connecticut, imported some of them. The present importation is made by a Texas sheep owner. This class of Merinos produce wool three inches long used for combing and known as "delaine" wool, and the fleece contains very little yolk.—Rural New Yorker.

Slurs on Female Poets.

The female poet who "babbles o' green fields," flowers, birds, babies, and other innocent and harmless matters, is all right as long as she sticks to these things; but when she sings of the passion of love she is apt to become as warm and sensuous, if not as musical, as the naughty Swinburne. The New York Sun, after quoting some exceedingly passionate lines from contemporary female verse-makers, says:

"There are some young women among the contemporary poets who appear to feel a sort of professional pride in their ability to go very near the line that separates the questionable from the positively indecent. Not infrequently, we are sorry to add, they manage to get over the line, and away beyond it. We are happy to believe that all the poets of this category are excellent persons in private, and that they rejoice in the esteem of their mothers, sisters, and friends; yet they try to persuade the general public that they are very loose fish, indeed."

Economy in Dress.

In the following article the Philadelphia Press comes to the aid of those who must appear to be well dressed on a small allowance of money:

It is a mistake to suppose that the women who spend most on dress are those who think most of it. The human lilies "who toil not," and who need only wish in order to have, leave the burden of planning, as well as execution, to their dressmaker; it is the woman who must maintain a decent appearance on a small allowance, and by taste and ingenuity make one dollar do the work of five, who gives her whole mind to the subject. She it is who studies the shifts and plaitings of her neighbor's costume from Worth over the edge of her prayer book while apparently absorbed in her prayers, and lies awake into the small hours contriving how to make over her old silk so that it shall pass muster among the stylish new toilets of her wealthier friends.

Fortunately, taste and ingenuity can do a great deal, but even they must have some material wherewith to work. The woman who dresses, not handsomely—that is impossible—but well, on a small allowance, must be a genius in her way. She must make her own dresses, with at most the occasional aid of a dressmaker at $2 a day; must do her own embroideries, trim her own bonnets, have an artist's eye for color, and a Frenchwoman's knack at picturesque combinations; in short, she must be able to make the most of all she has, however little it may be.

In the first place every purchase, no matter how trifling, must be made with reference to future as well as present use. Her best dress for this winter, for instance, must be such that it will make over advantageously next year for second best, and the year after do for afternoon wear at home. Conspicuous colors, however tempting, unless, indeed, they be wonderfully becoming, must be avoided if she would not be known by her dress. Black and neutral shades are her safest choice, and the material should be as good as she can possibly afford. "The destruction of the poor is his poverty," and there is such a thing as being too poor to be economical, paradoxical as the statement may seem; that is, one may be forced to buy an inferior article for lack of money necessary to purchase a good one. Still it is far better to have but one suit a season and have that handsome than to buy half a dozen cheap suits with the same money unless, indeed, in summer, when a variety of light and airy toilets are to be preferred to one rich dress.

The question about gloves is a difficult one for the practical economist in dress. To be well gloved is absolutely necessary to a good appearance, and even with the greatest care kid gloves soon become shabby. Cheap gloves are apt to prove a snare and delusion, and when these are used it is well to find some place where they keep a make which is to be relied upon, and buy always at that one place. It is a clever expedient to take the long tops of gloves, the fingers of which are past wearing, and match them in two or three button gloves, which, being out of fashion, may be bought very cheap, and to which the tops may easily be sewed, the joint being hidden under a bracelet when the gloves are worn.

In taking off gloves they should never be pulled by the ends of the fingers. Instead turn the top of the glove down over the hand and take care of the fingers through the kid. By this means the fingers will not be robbed in taking off. When purchasing the gloves match the color in a five cent spool of sewing silk, and mend each tiny rip as it appears—"a stitch in time saves nine," there as elsewhere. If the glove tears, the edge of the rent should be closely button-holed, stitched and then button-holed together.

Neatness is, however, the great desideratum to economy in dress. If the toilet is carefully made, the dress tidy, well-fitting and neatly put on, and the collar or frill spotless, the effect can scarcely fail to be attractive. To keep garments fresh and neat much pains is necessary. The dress must be brushed, or at least shaken when taken off, and be carefully hung up, not tossed down on a chair or the bed in a crumpled heap. Gloves should be tenderly smoothed out, frills to led up and straightened and ribbons smoothed over the fingers, tightly rolled up and pinned with a fine needle; a pin is apt to leave its mark behind it in unsightly holes.

It is an excellent plan to keep a large box in which all odds and ends of velvet, ribbons, etc., are kept. Such an omnium gatherum will prove a mine from which bindings, bonnet trimmings and other minor necessaries may frequently be extracted at need, and thus save many a dime or 25-cent piece.

The Diet Cure.

Referring to recently published accounts in medical journals of the diet cure for various ills generally the painful fruit of over-eating and other indulgence, a correspondent of the Orange County Farmer remarks that hygienists have long known and prescribed this rational treatment: "Twenty years ago any regular physician would have said that a fast of eight or ten days would be likely to endanger one's life, and many think so yet. That is known to be false now to all who have investigated. Biliousness, erysipelas, scrofula, coughs and many other difficulties are cured or relieved by fasting alone, but we have other and powerful aids in our treatment of such troubles. If sufferers crave lemonade we should give them lemon juice and water without any sugar, knowing that sugar is one of the worst articles for persons suffering from rheumatism.

Burning the Candle at Both Ends.

It is a mistake to both rise early and sit up late. The rising early is good as a habit of life, if it does not mean robbing nature of her opportunity to recruit the exhausted strength of brain and body by prolonging sleep when that necessary luxury is at length enjoyed. There would appear to be some need of remonstrance on this score. The fashion of the day favors early rising and the manly "tub;" but those who rise early have, for the most part, sat up late, and the tub is chiefly appreciated because it rouses the system, and makes it feel—and feelings are very deceptive—strong and vigorous. This is burning the candle at both ends. If we must sit up half the night, it would be better to sleep half the day than to rise betimes and go in for arduous labor after insufficient rest. Early rising is not good, but harmful, without early resting.—Lancet.

In a Blizzard.

If poor, infirm, weak Lear had ever encountered a Nebraska blizzard, he would not have defied it with, "Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks! Rage! Blow!" A reader gains but a faint idea of such a storm even from the following sketch of one, which a correspondent of the Ohio State Journal experienced:

Our road was a mere track acros the wild prairie. At long intervals was a dug out, or sod-house, which if not abandoned, gave evidence of habitation.

The wind soon increased to a fearful gale, and was laden with pellets of ice and snow that, striking the face, could hardly be endured.

"What do you think of this storm, driver?" I asked.

"I have seen them before, and as long as I know where we are, I am not afraid," he replied.

The fury of the storm increased, and the horses that struggled bravely forward now stopped and turned around.

"I don't know where I am," shouted the driver.

What? Merciful heavens! Are we lost in this storm? My breath grew short and my heart beat loud.

Written in ink in a memoranda book in my pocket, was my name and address. Some one would likely find it; and the clue to fate and idenity would be established.

There comes a snow-cloud swift as a shadow. The wagon top that we held by united strength for protection was wrenched from our hold and carried away as a plaything.

A rick of prairie hay, standing leeward, was blown on us and over us and away with the storm.

"Whip the horses for life, driver," we shouted, and we turned to go with the storm. In less distance than a mile we reached a dug-out. Thank heaven! It was a refuge, and more dead than alive, we staggered in at the door.

Fortunately it was inhabited, and the hospitable inmates did everything in their power for our relief. The driver's face and my own were badly frosted, and the ears of my companion frozen hard.

Self-Denial in Education.

Scotland surpasses all other countries in the number of her educated men. Less help is given to her students in the way of scholarships or by educational societies than is given in England or in America. The young men make their own way through many difficulties, and submit to stern self-denials to maintain their place in the universities. Dr. Guthrie tells some pathetic stories of his fellow-students whose parents were too poor to help them, and who had no other friends to furnish aid.

One student, a hard-worker, brought a large chest to his boarding-place. He took no meals outside of his chamber for three months, and asked nothing of his landlady but hot water. His chest was full of oatmeal, and this was his only diet.

For three months he lived on "brose," as the Scotch call it, oatmeal-gruel enriched with a little butter and seasoned with salt. Such hard fare has some compensations. It teaches the worth of education, and gives no place for idleness or dissipation.

Popular Personals.

Henry Van der Wyde, court photographer of the royal household of Great Britian, is a native of Rondout, in New York state. He was once the assistant of the late Professor Henry Draper. During the war he served with distinguished gallantry in the Sixty-fifth New York Volunteers. Afterward he went to England and was soon sent for by the queen and appointed royal photographer.

Ruth Humphrey, widow of Eber Humphrey of Canton village, is now living with her adopted daughter in East Granville, Mass., at the age of one hundred and three years and six months. She was born in Southwick, Mass., July 25, 1770. Her one hundredth birthday was celebrated July 22, 1879, by a large assemblage of friends and relatives. She is quite feeble the present winter, and her mental powers seem to suffer with her physical waste.

One of the recent sights of St. Louis was an old man, fully 70 years of age, over six feet in height, with flowing gray hair, and a girl just 14 years old, who in height would reach about to the old man's vest pocket. They were husband and wife, from some point in Alabama, on their wedding tour, and bound for Oregon. The man was a Methodist minister, and was taking along to his new conference a living Christmas present. Their childlike lovingness made them the centre of observation.

The election of Gov. Cullom, from Illinois, made nine Kentucky-born men in the senate. The seven besides the Kentucky Senators are Cullom; Vest, of Missouri; Jonas, of Louisiana; Sanderson, of Nebraska; Maxey, of Texas; Walker, of Arkansas; Randall Gibson, of Louisiana, while Voorhees' father was a Kentuckian.

A marriage ceremony came to an abrupt and ludicrous conclusion the other day in Atlanta, Ga. A prominent clergyman of that city having consented to unite a colored couple, had just asked the solemn question, "Wilt thou take this woman?" etc., when an old flame of the bridegroom poked her head into the room and said: "Henry, I jes dar you to say yes." Henry sank into the nearest chair without a word, and the company thoughtfully withdrew.

A former clergyman of Methuen, Mass., now of Chicago, lately wrote to a paper in the former town that "he is a man of means," and added: "I do not care for $10 or $100. I have a good bank account, and I loaned $4,000 this week on 7 per cent., so that I am not as I was was in Methuen—a poor clergyman, preaching on a stingy salary to men worth over $25,000."

A son of Mme. Loyson, the wife of Pere Hyacinthe, resides in Washington and occupies a position in the architect's office at the treasury department. The gentleman is tall and blonde, greatly resembling Capoul, the tenor, and, being educated in the best professional schools of Paris and Munich, is highly accomplished as a linguist, architect, and draughtsman.

Mrs. Isabella Whitehead and Mrs. Sophia L. D. Marshall, two members of the Salvation Army, at Paterson, N. J., have brought suit against the Reverend Charles Pelletreau, rector of the Protestant Episcopal church of the Holy Communion of that city, for alleged slander. Each of the plaintiffs claim $5,000 damages. The alleged slanderous utterances were made in a sermon which Mr. Pelletreau preached to his congregation last Sunday, in which he severely denounced the Salvation Army and its methods.

Sergeant Ballentine, the eminent English barrister, who is now in this country, says the $75,000 awarded Miss Livingston in her breach of promise suit in New York last week is larger than any damages ever awarded in an English suit. Mr. Ballentine then goes on to quote from a work of his own showing the impossibility of persuading juries against the tears of a pretty woman, especially when to the tears be added the infantile evidences of a love that was not wise, but too confiding.

Foreign Born Congressmen.

The New York Graphic has been figuring up the places that foreign-born citizens occupy in the councils of our nation. The Irish-born members of the next House of Representatives are twenty in number, while the German born are but seven, although the German born population of the United States considerably exceed the Irish born. Of the twenty Irish members four are from Missouri; New Jersey and Pennsylvania have three each; New York and Indiana, two each, and Massachusetts, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nevada and California, one each. Out of the twenty only three are republicans. The seven Germans are credited one each to New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts, and two each to Michigan and Wisconsin. Two of the seven are republicans. The only state majority of whose delegation of the next House is foreign born is New Jersey.

OIL "MYSTERIES."

A Peculiarity of the Petroleum Speculation.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, writing from the oil regions on the fabulous fortunes made and lost in the petroleum speculation, says: The country has again gone mad with oil on the brain. But the great bull movement and advancing prices last week received a set-back by the striking of a large well in new territory. The new well is located in Forest county and is owned by the Anchor oil company. The first reports sent out from it reported it flowing at 1,000 barrel per diem. Since then, however, the best reports rate the daily production of the well at 300 barrels. It has been the custom for several years back to board up the derricks of "wild-cat" test wells in important locations and place an armed guard around them to prevent trespassers from gaining access. In order to keep the result of the wells a secret from the public until the oweners have had time to buy or sell adjoining lands and prepare for the effect of the well on the market. Such a well, in oil region parlance, is termed a "mystery," and the frequent occurence of "mysteries" has resulted in the employment by leading brokers and large producing firms of men throughly versed in all matters pertaining to the petroleum industry, who are aptly termed scouts, as it is their duty to learn the condition of such wells by strategy or force. This new well is no exception to the rule. As soon as it began flowing heavily the owners secured the service of fifty Swedes, employed in peeling hemlock tanbark in the vicinity, and set them to felling trees around the well, which is located in the midst of a vast forest. A plot 800 feet square was marked out and the logs and brush cut were piled upon the line of this square, forming a high palisade around the well, which was located in the center of the square, and then the Swedes were put on guard within the inclosure to prevent any one gaining admittance. The scouts arrived in due time, and began skirmishing around outside the fort, trying to gain an entrance, but while daylight lasted they were unsuccessful. When the friendly shades of night had fallen, through, three of the most daring ones silently scaled the wall and cautiously crept through the trees and bushes, inside the inclosure, to the tanks into which the well was flowing, where they remained several hours, listening to the flows, and measuring the contents of the tanks, after which they silently stole away again. While the three were in the tanks, two others drilled a hole in the pipe line laid to convey the oil away from the well, and on which a pump was passing through the pipe. On Saturday night they again gauged the tanks, 24 hours after the first measurement, and as no oil was pumped away, they knew the exact output of the well for that day. Luckily, the scouts were not detected at this work, or they would have been roughly handled.

Perhaps the most notable of oil "mysteries" was the well on lot 646, Cherry Grove township, in Warren county, which was drilled to the sand last March. The well was a rank "wildcat" of great interest to the trade, and as it was generally understood it would be made a mystery scouts were detailed to watch it some time before it reached the oil-bearing level. None of them succeeded in getting any reliable information from it, though, except one, "Si" Hughes, who had made his way through the picket line and lay under the derrick floor for 49 hours without food, in freezing weather, and in a position where he was deluged with water every time the sand pump was used. The result of the well, which started in May with a production of 1,000 barrels a day, is well known, and Mr. Hughes received from various parties $50,000 for the information he suffered such hardships to gain. He also was given an interest in an oil company, which purchased lands adjacent to the well from which he realized a handsome sum. This company was the Anchor oil company, which owns the new Forest county mystery. The scouts are men chosen on account of their thorough knowledge of the oil business, their activity, their daring, and their training to close observation of minute details. They are not only employed to watch "mysteries," but also to compile statistics of the production of the oil fields and report the capacities of new wells which are not guarded, and among them are found most of the oil reporters of the oil region news papers. Their pay is various. Some of them work for salaries ranging from $100 to $200 per month and expenses, while others work for brokers and receive one-half the profits made on all transactions made on the strength of their information. Some of these have made snug fortunes during the past two months. Taken as a class they represent some of the best intellects in the region.

A MODERN SAMPSON.

A Man Who Easily Lifted Nineteen Hundred Pounds.

Letter to the Troy Times.

In the Troy Times recently appeared an article giving a short history of the life and doings of Abner McIlrath, of Euclid, Ohio, and in that article he was represented as the strongest man in America while living, with the exception of that famous strong man of Northern New York, Joseph Call. The greatest feat of strength claimed for McIlrath was the lifting of an iron shaft which weighed 1,700 pounds, and it is also stated that he lifted it by grasping it with his hands, which, it is claimed, would be equal to lifting twice that weight in harness. It would be useless to deny the fact that Abner McIlrath was a mighty man. But I propose to give a short sketch of the life of a man who was but little known outside of the village of Granville Corners in Washington county, where he was born and spent the most of a long life. It is known of him, and can be proved, that he has performed feats of strength unsurpassed by any man that has lived in ancient or modern times, excepting, of course, the biblical Sampson. His name is Stearn Carpenter; his occupation was that of a farmer. Being naturally of a very quiet, peaceable disposition and a member of a society of Friends, he never did anything for display to attract attention, but the feats of strength which he performed were done more to satisfy himself and to see how much he could lift than for anything else. All of his lifting was done by main strength, without any harness of any kind. One of his greatest feats was lifting a box filled with iron, which weighed 1,900 pounds, which is equal to lifting 3,800 pounds in harness. He lifted it with ease with his hands by grasping a rope or chain which was bound around the box to secure it. He did not know the weight of the box of iron at the time, and was afterward heard to say that had he known it weighed so near a ton he would have put on the other hundred pounds and lifted the whole. At another time he lifted a cannon that weighed 1,400 pounds and shouldered it. At Comstock's Landing, on the Champlain canal, near Whitehall, one day while waiting for a load of merchandise, he lifted a barrel of white lead with ease. The writer of this article was an eye-witness of this feat, besides a number of others. His neighbors when killing hogs if Stearns happened to be around, would ask him to guess the weight of a hog just killed. If it happened to be a big one weighing 400 or 500 pounds he would stoop down and twist his fingers into the bristles, and in that way would lift the carcass clear from the ground and guess its weight. He performed one of the greatest feats of strength on record after he had reached the age of seventy-five years. He lifted two twenty-four foot iron rails by grasping one in each hand, and walked off with them. The rails were resting on wooden horses, so he did not stoop down to lift them. One day in haying-time he was going from the field with his men to the house for dinner. They were walking along the road together, when one of his men for mischief, came up behind him and by a skilful trip threw Carpenter down. He gathered himself up and said nothing about it. He walked to the house, and after dinner, when returning to the field with his men, they came along to the place where the man gave him the fall. He suddenly turned upon the man, and grasping him by the shoulder and the seat of his trousers, lifted him and hurled him high in the air above him, and over a seven-rail fence, by the side of which they happened to be walking. The man came down in the meadow a rod or more from the fence, considerably shaken up but not badly hurt. Mr. Carpenter was not a gigantic man in size. He was about six feet tall, and appeared much less than that owing to his massive build. There was no superfluous flesh upon him, but the muscles of his arms, shoulders and neck seemed to be piled upon him, so great was their size. This gave him a stooping appearance. In a crowd a casual observer would not be likely to pick him out for one of the strongest men that ever lived. His strength would equal if not surpass that of the great Roman gladiator Milo. Mr. Carpenter is living at the present time at Granville Corners, Washington county, N. Y., his old home, or was living the last I heard of him. He must be over eighty years of age.

Western Iowa is again infested with gang of horse thieves.

A SONG OF TIME.

How worn a theme is that of time!
Then why do I begin to rhyme
Upon it now?

Because to-night the air is filled
With voices that will not be stilled—
They will not cease.

And always sing the same refrain
Of Time that ne'er will come again,
Of Time that flies.

Of all that Time sweeps in his flight
The voices sing to me to-night:
Time cures all care.

That is what I would fain believe,
My heart therewith I do deceive,
With faith in Time.

O voices singing, be you mute,
You touch a chord on my heart's lute
But seldom played;

Yet filling all the air around
With a sweet melancholy sound,
A song of Time!

Of Time that was, of days so fair
When all was young, and love was there—
Long days ago?

Be still! be still! that sad refrain!
I dare not listen once again
To that same song

Maybe I hold those days too high,
And yield them far too oft a sigh,
Those days long since!

Yet as they were the fairest yet
Of all my days, then why forget
That happy time?

Though it it still should be my fate
To live yet happier days, the date
Of that sweet time

I'll bury, then, within the grave
Which holds all things forgotten, save
The present time.

Nor heed a voice which whispers low,
"The sweetest song is that you know
Of long ago."

So with the voices in the air
I mingled mine, and, lo, was there
A song of Time!

—London Society.

A COSTLY BRACELET.

Mr. Maurice carried on a snug business as a silversmith and dealer in antique silver in a little triangular shaped shop not much larger than a cupboard, situated in a turning out of Bond street. Oddly enough, his chief occupation seemed to be buying rather than selling; for the majority of his customers came to him to dispose of family plate or to raise money on the security of jewelry and other valuables. This branch of his business Mr. Maurice found so highly remunerative that he was occasionally tempted to be rather reckless in his dealings with strangers. The fact was, that when he saw a prospect of making a good bargain he never had the heart to ask disagreeable questions, and, consequently, it sometimes happened that Mr. Maurice had in the recesses of his strong room valuable articles which were being anxiously sought after by their rightful owners. A dubious transaction of this nature, however, was by no means an every day occurrence; for Maurice had a large and aristocratic connection, chiefly among fashionable ladies with a mania for extravagance, and he was generally regarded as a most respectable tradesman. He was a little elderly man, with a bald head, strongly marked features of a Jewish type, sleek in person, affable and insinuating in manner, and so susceptible by disposition that it was notorious that a pretty woman could obtain much better terms from him than a plain one.

This was certainly the case regarding little Mrs. Briscoe, the wife of an impecunious younger son of Lord Asterisk. Mrs. Briscoe was an American, and when she ran away with handsome Bob Briscoe she was a considerable heiress. Unfortunately her property had not been protected by a marriage settlement, and, consequently, she and her husband between them contrived to run through it in a remarkably short space of time. To do the lady justice, she made no pretense of blaming her husband for his imprudence and extravagance, having congenial tastes in the same direction. In fact, she had squandered quite as much of her fortune as he had, without the excuse of having a large accumulation of debts to clear off. Being possessed of handsome jewelry and a profusion of wedding gifts of a costly nature, Mrs. Briscoe had frequent transactions with Mr. Maurice, with whose assistance, and by the aid of very favorable luck and skill at ecarte, the little lady contrived to maintain an appearance of prosperity.

Mr. Maurice found it no easy task to hold his own with Mrs. Briscoe, who, besides being piquant and pretty, was a past mistress in the dangerous arts of coaxing and cajolery. She was as clever and shrewd as she was fascinating, and Mr. Maurice's admiration for her was not diminished by the fact that she was by no means addicted to conscientious scruples. She could romance with charming effrontery, and would have cheated him without the slightest compunction if he had ever given her a chance. He felt a sort of professional pride in getting the better of Mrs. Briscoe, which added a singular zest to their numerous transactions, and rendered her an honored customer in his eyes.

One of his hardest fought battles with the lady in question related to an old-fashioned tiara of diamonds set in silver, which had been presented to her by her husband's grandmother, the dowager countess of Asterisk. Mrs. Briscoe, being driven by adverse circumstances to part with this treasure, naturally brought it to Mr. Maurice and demanded a price which took the worthy man's breath away. He perceived, however, that the stones were of excellent quality, and was as eager to acquire them at his own price as his customer was to sell at hers. A long wrangling discussion ensued, which resulted in Mr. Maurice naming a price considerably nearer to the sum demanded than that which he had originally offered. But he resolutely declined to increase his last bid, and Mrs. Briscoe, finding that he was proof against her persuasive eloquence, said, rather crossly:

"Very well. I see we are not likely to come to terms, so I will trouble you to wrap the case up, Mr. Maurice, and I will take it back."

"You won't get a better offer anywhere," said Mr. Maurice, looking at the diamonds with evident longing. "I tell you what I'll do," he added, as though struck by a sudden thought. "I don't mind presenting you with a piece of modern jewelry in addition to what I've offered, and that must be my ultimatum."

"Thank you for nothing," said Mrs. Briscoe, pouting. "However, I may as well see what you have to offer."

Mr. Maurice secretly elated, shuffled off with his keys to his strong room, and after a short absence returned with half a dozen small leather cases in his hand. Mrs. Briscoe inspected the contents with the air of a connoisseur, and put each contemptuously on one side until she came to the last, which contained a diamond bracelet of chaste and peculiar design.

"That is rather pretty," she said carelessly.

"Pretty! It's handsome!" rejoined Mr. Maurice, holding it at arm's length; "it's worth $150 at least. No, ma'am, I didn't mean to offer that. I can't do it," he added, closing the case abruptly.

"I will take it," said Mrs. Briscoe, coolly. "I would sooner sell the diamonds to you than to a friend, to avoid scandal, and I rather want a new bracelet."

Mr. Maurice hesitated a moment, and inspected the ornament carefully, with a puzzled expression. His reflections were brought to a premature conclusion by an impatient movement on the part of his customer, which caused him to say, hurriedly:

"Well, well, ma'am, I suppose I must give way. But you have got the better of me this time; you have, indeed."

Mrs. Briscoe gave a little scornful laugh, and the dealer proceeded to write out a check for the amount agreed upon. He then prepared a formal receipt for their joint signature, stating that he had purchased the tiara for such and such a sum, and a diamond bracelet estimated to be worth so much. This formality was always insisted upon by Mrs. Briscoe, who had feminine notions of being strictly business-like, and Mr. Maurice knew from experience that he must humor her. He wrote out the receipt, as usual, in duplicate, handing one copy to the lady, and keeping the other himself. This terminated the transaction, and Mrs. Briscoe presently took her departure in high good humor.

Mr. Maurice was by no means dissatisfied with his bargain when he came to think it over. He had given a large sum for the diamonds, but they were clearly worth the money; in fact, he saw his way to making a handsome profit out of them. But he felt a little uneasy about the bracelet, for he could not for the life of him remember how he had come by it. His books showed no record of it, and this rather increased his uneasiness, for whenever he made a purchase under suspicious circumstances he was always careful not to make any entry [illegible] to avoid accidents. [illegible] mystery attached to it [illegible] awkward, not to say dangerous, to his reputation if the bracelet should be recognized by any of her friends.

This disagreeable possibility aroused Mr. Maurice's apprehensions to such a pitch that he was strongly inclined to call upon the lady immediately and purchase the bracelet back again at any price. Upon reflection, however, he abandoned the idea, partly from fear of exciting Mrs. Briscoe's suspicions, and partly because it was highly probable that he would have an opportunity of acquiring the bracelet upon his own terms before many weeks had elapsed. This last consideration quite reconciled him to the risk he ran in the meantime, and, although his expectations were not realized as soon as he anticipated, he did not suffer his anxiety to prey upon his mind.

At length he received another visit from Mrs. Briscoe, who was exceedingly gracious and affable. She made particular inquiries about his health, and, after chatting pleasantly for a few minutes on general topics, said, confidentially:

"Mr. Maurice, I have had such a dreadful upset. I don't know when I have been so much distressed in my mind!"

"Indeed! What is the matter, Mrs. Briscoe?" inquired Mr. Maurice, with solicitude.

"My maid—a girl whom I implicitly trusted, and whom I have treated with every kindness and indulgence—has been robbing me shamefully," said Mrs. Briscoe.

"I'm very sorry to hear that," returned Mr. Maurice, sympathetically. "Is your loss serious?"

"It is not that so much," said the lady, shrugging her shoulders. "What chiefly grieves me is her base ingratitude and wickedness."

"Very sad—very sad, indeed!" acquiesced Mr. Maurice, shaking his head. "Shall you prosecute?"

"I am afraid I have no alternative," said Mrs. Briscoe, with an air of reluctance. "You see, the wretched girl is actually in custody. She attempted to pawn something and was given in charge by the pawnbroker."

"What did she attempt to pawn?" inquired Mr. Maurice, with a sudden misgiving, as the lady glanced up at him significantly.

"That bracelet of mine which I purchased from you," said Mrs. Briscoe, in an innocent tone. "It is said—but, of course, this must be a mistake—that it formed part of the proceeds of some burglary or other, and that it is described in the police list."

Mr. Maurice gave an involuntary start, and turned very white. Up to that moment he had not suspected the drift of Mrs. Briscoe's artless remarks, but he now realized that they had an unpleasantly personal bearing. If it was true that the bracelet had been recognized by the police he was placed in a most awkward predicament. Inquiries would be made about him which might lead to damaging disclosures—even form the subject of a criminal charge. Mr. Maurice was so utterly disconcerted that he did not attempt to conceal his agitation.

"Good Lord!" he exclaimed, wiping away the beads of perspiration that had gathered on his brow. "You are joking, Mrs. Briscoe. I don't remember ever selling you a bracelet," he added, in desperation.

"Dear me! What a short memory you have, Mr. Maurice," said Mrs. Briscoe, with a wicked little laugh. "Here is your own receipt, in which the bracelet is especially mentioned. There is no doubt about its having come from you, and I thought I would warn you of what has happened, because I shall have to mention your name."

"Why should you, Mrs. Briscoe?" faltered Mr. Maurice. "Of course the police are mistaken about the bracelet, but still it is most unpleasant for a respectable tradesman to have his name mentioned in connection with an accusation of that kind. Is it absolutely necessary that you should mention my name, Mrs. Briscoe?" he added eagerly.

"How can I do otherwise?" said Mrs. Briscoe. "I am sure to be asked how I came by the bracelet, and I certainly shall be bound to tell the truth about it; besides, why should I not? You may be put to a little inconvenience, but that is unavoidable. No doubt the police will institute searching inquiries about you, and investigate your antecedents, and so forth. But, after all, Mr. Maurice, you have nothing to fear."

"Of course not; I never said I had," replied Mr. Maurice, trying to look unconcerned, but in reality trembling at the lady's words. "Still, I wish you had—had consulted me before you identified the bracelet."

"That is precisely what I am doing," returned Mrs. Briscoe, lifting her pretty eyebrows. "How dull you are, Mr. Maurice. I ought, perhaps, to have mentioned that I was out when the inspector of police called to see me this morning, and I only heard what he came about from the servants. It appears the wretched girl declares she found the bracelet, and unless I come forward and claim it as my property, she will probably be acquitted, the police will impound the bracelet, and the whole affair will be shut up."

"If you had only mentioned that before," said Mr. Maurice, feeling inexpressibly relieved, and beginning to breathe more freely.

"Well, I never imagined you would be so much disturbed by what has taken place," returned Mrs. Briscoe, smiling. "It was the merest chance that I thought of coming. Of course, if, for some reason or other, you would rather I did not claim the bracelet—"

"For the reasons I have stated, I would rather you did not, ma'am," interposed Mr. Maurice, with involuntary earnestness. "I am sure you do not wish to be hard upon the girl, and would be willing to give her an opportunity to mend her ways."

"I have no consideration whatever for the girl," said Mrs. Briscoe, frankly. "She deserves to be punished, and if she gets off it will be entirely on your account. Of course, I must be compensated for the loss of the bracelet."

"Certainly, ma'am, certainly," replied Mr. Maurice, with alacrity.

"That is the whole question. What do you consider is the value of—shall we say of the bracelet, Mr. Maurice?" said Mrs. Briscoe, with her most bewitching smile.

"I will either give you a hundred pounds in cash or another bracelet of the same description," returned Mr. Maurice. "Of course, I don't wish you to be a loser by your consideration for me."

"A hundred pounds!" repeated little Mrs. Briscoe, turning up her nose disdainfully. "If that is the value you set upon your reputation and your good name I am sorry I have wasted time in coming here to assist you to preserve it."

"I don't understand what you mean, ma'am," said Mr. Maurice, rather faintly. "If you don't think £100 is enough, perhaps you will prefer to select something from my stock."

"Upon my word, Mr. Maurice, your offer is simply contemptible!" exclaimed Mrs. Briscoe, rising from her seat indignantly. "As you evidently don't object to acquiring notoriety as a receiver of stolen property, I shall give evidence against the girl without the smallest compunction. Good morning!"

"Stay, ma'am, stay!" exclaimed Mr. Maurice, fairly startled out of his senses. "I—I am open to any reasonable suggestion you may have to make. Shall we say another fifty?"

"Another fifty, indeed! Look here, Mr. Maurice! I am not going to waste any more time talking to you," said Mrs. Briscoe, confronting him and looking him straight in the face. "Unless I receive from you £2,000 in bank notes within an hour I will set the police on your track, and you will be very rightly served. The inspector left word that he would call at my house again at 2 o'clock, and if I have not heard from you by that time I shall identify the bracelet and tell where I got it from."

"It's an awful price to ask for—for a bracelet," gasped Mr. Maurice. Nevertheless, when the inspector of police called upon Mrs. Briscoe at the appointed time he was smilingly informed by that lady that she had never possessed a diamond bracelet in her life.—[London Truth.

Gold in Alaska.

Private dispatches have been received in Washington of a reliable character with reference to the nature of the gold deposits in Alaska. Much discredit has been thrown over the reports of gold discovered in our northwestern Territory from time to time, until the impression has become pretty general that as a gold field Mr. Seward's purchase was not particularly valuable. The information alluded to is of such a character that as soon as it becomes known it will result in such a rush to the gold fields as has not been seen since the days of '49. It is stated that a quartz vein, which will yield from $5 to $8 net to the ton has been discovered on the mainland in Southern Alaska, 200 feet in width. Many others equally rich in the same district are reported, and preparations are being made quietly, it is said, by a combination of New York and San Francisco capitalists to start early in the spring with mills and machinery to take possession of the mines and mill the quartz. Plenty of coal and lumber are reported at no great distance from the mines, so that the fuel supply will be abundant. A [illegible] gentleman in conversation on this subject to-day said there would be 10,000 men from Nevada and California on the way to Alaska within three months, and that before a year the mining population of the Pacific Slope would be thoroughly drained of all surplus labor to supply the new field, unless some extraordinary excitement should be created by new discoveries [illegible]

THE HEAVENLY WORLD.

Oh, where is that heaven of glory,
That beautiful home of the blest,
Where hearts that are sad with life's story,
Find peace and the sweetness of rest?

Do stars that smile on us at even
Hold loved ones who wait for us there?
Will that be the precious home given
When we in their blessedness share?

We look on the sky's perfect azure,
And long with great longing to know
Just where it will be our Lord's pleasure
Our freed, happy spirits shall go.

Sometimes there comes o'er us a shrinking
At thought of the changing of place,
Of breaking the bonds that are linking
Our souls to this narrow earth space.

If only we knew where the spirit
Would dwell when the body doth sleep!
What place in the vastness inherit!
Where God his beloved will keep!

The babe that is peacefully sleeping
The sleep that no waking can know,
In heaven has gained and is keeping
The knowledge we pant for below.

Oh, poor, troubled heart that is fretting
To know what has not been revealed,
Have faith that our lord, not forgetting
Keeps part of the future concealed.

But surely enough has been told thee
To give to the soul perfect peace,
For Christ's arms of love will enfold thee,
And sorrow forever shall cease.

No tears will there darken thy vision;
The parting of friends will be o'er;
While all, in that region elysian,
Shall dwell with the God they adore.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

M. Ollivier and the Papal Question.

New York Tribune: M. Emile Ollivier's pamphlet, entitled The Pope: Is He Free in Rome? has just been published in Paris. The last minister of the empire admits that his holiness does not languish on a bed of straw and in irons in the depths of the Mamertine prisons. On the contrary, he inhabits the most beautiful palace in the universe, where dwell in glory Bramante, Michael Angelo and Raphael. If that constitutes the liberty of the pontiff, he is free. But—"The pope is not pope to be shut up in the Vatican, write encyclicals, keep a little court, and be surrounded by a few Swiss guards. No, he is pope to celebrate publicly the grand mysteries and august fetes in the temple elevated by the papacy with the gold of all nations. He is pope to send to the loggia, at the consecrated dates, in the light of the sun, and before the prostrate multitudes, his benediction urbi et orbi. Can he now fulfill the duties of his charge?" M. Ollivier thinks not. Recent occurrences have demonstrated the certainty of the fate that would await the pontiff were he to show himself to the inhabitants of the capital: "The least that could happen to him would be to be insulted and hissed. Beside, at Rome, in the present state of things, the pope has a superior; and if the pope has any-one above him he is not free. It is, in fact, a dogma that the sovereign pontiff has received, by right divine, exemption from all sorts of secular jurisdiction. This privilege is perpetual, and its prerogative cannot be abandoned, seeing that it was conferred on the order, and not on a mere person. According to the law of guarantees, passed on May 13, 1871, the person of the pope is declared sacred and inviolable; the honors and protection due to a sovereign are assured to him, and besides an annual payment of 5,225,000 francs, he has enjoyment of the apostolic palaces of the Vatican, St. John de Lateran, and the Villa Castel Gandolfo. But these guarantees have a false air of immunities. To begin with, they are not perpetual, as what the law has given the law may take away. It was the Right who established them, it is the Left who apply them, and it may be that the Mountain (Radicals) will abolish them. True, the Italian government does not dream of so doing; but what confidence does such an ephemeral engagement inspire? The unfortunate experience of this same law of guarantee is not of a nature to give much encouragement on that head. The nomination of the bishops had been conceded to the pope in the name of the principle proclaimed by Cavour of a free church in a free state. But in a great number of cases this has been a mystification, the facility of the pretexts invoked for withholding the exequatur indicating the degree of confidence due to these guardians of the papacy, and presaging the fate in store for that institution. Italy decides alone and without appeal—pro lege voluntas. * * * Instead of allowing himself to be consumed in the Vatican, like a widow who has lost her husband, why should not the pontiff repair at times to the basilica of St. Peter, escorted by his court, to receive pilgrims? Let him visit the sick, and show himself in the Corso in his gala coach, and traverse Rome in all the majesty of father, bishop and priest. A crisis might break out, but it would do good. Even a crisis is better than continual enervating expectation. More prudent voices condemn these counsels as excessive, or at least premature. In their opinion the crisis should be waited for, but not sought. Humanly speaking, there is no hope, although there are some reassuring signs, such as the comparative abstention shown by Italy in the anti-clerical legislation of recent years. She has not prevented these attacks, but has not been associated with them; sometimes even has cursed them. Italy loves her religion; she is proud of her papacy, and does not believe all the rubbish that its enemies say of it."

Rev. Heber Newton's Discoveries.

New York Observer: The Rev. Heber Newton has capped the climax of discoveries in theology. It is one of the notions of a modern school of religious thought that the process of evolution by which man was developed from the ape is going on in the moral world, and what we know now is a natural outgrowth of what we knew ten years ago. Dr. Newton has just evolved a novelty in Biblical science which has not been exceeded in its way since the apple did not fall on the head of the great philosopher whose name the rector bears. Since the art of writing was invented there was never written a more curious and unlearned dissertation on inspiration than this sermon on the Bible. The preacher has, since its delivery, stated his views more fully to a newspaper interviewer, and brings out what we inferred, that he has been stirred to follow in the wake of Dr. Ellis, the Unitarian divine who recently admitted that the Bible is an orthodox book, and supports the evangelical theology. Therefore there must be an expurgated Bible, or the so-called "liberal" school will be left out in the cold. The year 1882 was a bad year for the teachers of that school, and the new year will be worse.

Christian Register: Mr. Newton believes almost passionately in the inspiration of God flowing down into humanity, not confined to any book or age, but given to the world as an eternal source of joy, help and guidance. The Bible he cannot accept as a manual of science, or even an exact record of the history of past ages of the world. Reason, the Logos, must come in everywhere to separate the probable from the improbable. He deplores the use of the Bible as an oracle, as the diviners of old studied the entrails of birds to discover future events. He rejects the claim that the prophets foretold future or even thought they did. As far as there was prophecy of a Messiah, it sprang from the longing and travailing of the race which pointed

"To one far-off divine event."

No one has ever given brighter, more glowing testimony to the value of the poetry, the ethics and religion of the Bible, cleared from the archaic limitations of past ages. He would put into the hands of the young an expurgated Bible, for manifestly it is impossible for modern youth to read a good deal of the Bible as it now stands. As this great champion has now come boldly into the field, is it not the duty of liberals to hold up his hands?

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

Oh thanks that from our daily need
The joy of simple faith is born,
And he who sows the spring-time seed,
May wait in hope the autumn corn.

Fill every part with praise,
Let all my being speak
Of thee and of thy love, O Lord,
Poor though I be, and weak.

The Rev. Dr. J. M. Reid of the Methodist Missionary society tells this good story about himself: While he was engaged in editorial work, some time ago, he was invited to preach in Chicago. As he took a seat early in a pew to meditate on his sermon, he discovered that a prayer-meeting was going on in the adjacent room, and that he could overhear what was said. Presently a loud and lusty brother engaged in prayer, and the bulk of the petition was for the preacher of the evening, who was listening. After touching on various matters in which he thought the Lord needed information, he said: "O Lord, bless him who is to speak to us this evening. He is a poor, weak man, but make him a power. Bless his message. We know that he is only an editor, and that he is rusty, but do Thou rub the rust off."

According to the existing [illegible] law, apostasy from the state religion entails severer penalties than [illegible] murder. A Russian subject who abandons the orthodox faith for any other whatever is deprived of his children, his estate is handed over to guardians appointed by the state, and he himself is liable to prosecution by the holy synod until he abjures. The Golos now remarks that this severity defeats its own object, and it advises that this antiquated legislation should be abolished in favor of full religious toleration, and liberty of conscience, after the example of the states of Western Europe.

The decision of the following case will doubtless interest the Catholics in all parts of the world as to the stability of their future prospects: "The truth of the doctrine of purgatory as held by the Roman Catholics is about to be tested in the courts. A man in Australia left $7,000, to be used to deliver his soul from that alleged state of existence, and the executor declines to pay the money without legal proof that it has been really earned."

Over the grave of a Springfield, Mass., man in the old Methodist grounds, who died from the kick of a horse, is the following quaint epitaph cut in cold marble: "Blame not the beast who sent me to dust, For the God of nature said he must."

An amusing typographical error occurs in the Church Union. Speaking of the Center Congregational church of New Haven, it says that a moral tablet to his memory has recently been erected there, meaning, of course, a mural tablet.

The Rev. Joseph Richter, D. D., of Cincinnati, has been appointed the first bishop of the new Catholic diocese of Grand Rapids. He is thirty-seven years of age, and is the youngest bishop in the United States.

The proceeds of Bishop Ireland's temperance lecture in Chicago, which are to be donated to the Little Sisters of the Poor and St. Vincent's Foundlings' home, will probably amount to about $1,000.

The State Missionary society of Connecticut has made arrangements for holding thirty-three missionary conventions in the State. They will be held in different towns and at regular intervals.

The synod of the Reformed church in France, which recently met in Paris, appointed committees to prepare a new liturgy and catechism.

The archbishop of Quebec has warned the faithful not to participate in a Masonic ball to be given by the grand lodge next month in that city.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Flowers in Winter.

New England Farmer: In the cultivation of flowers in winter in our sitting rooms the same laws must be observed as in the cultivation of flowers in the open ground. There must not be too much heat nor too little sunshine. The soil must be rich and sufficiently mellow. Moisture must be controlled, and insects must be kept from doing harm. As blooming plants can not thrive even in summer in a dense shade, so in winter they will look weak and puny if kept in a north window. An east or west window will do, but a southern exposure will give best results. During the short days of winter, a south window will let in none too much sunshine. The number of plants must be governed by the amount of sunlight one can afford to give up to the flowers. Too many may darken the room and render it unpleasant or unhealthful for the inmates for whose pleasure they are grown. A few choice plants, well cared for, will give much greater satisfaction than a mass of sickly leaves and vines, so crowded as to darken the room in which they are kept, for our window panes should add to rather than take from the attractiveness and comfort of our rooms in winter. A single pot on either side of a window, and containing a bright flower, or a single vine or two trained around it, with plenty of warm sunshine flowing back and giving cheer to the whole room, gives a charm like a single rosebud to an otherwise plainly dressed person. So in attempting the cultivation of flowering plants in winter, do not attempt to do too much. If you want a greenhouse, then build a greenhouse, but do not attempt to turn your parlor into a winter garden. There is no cheaper nor perhaps better way to stock up a window garden than to start slips or cuttings from the plants in one's own grounds. The purchased flowers are often grown to sell, and do not improve very readily in new quarters. A purchased plant never gives half the pleasure and satisfaction of one equally good specimen grown under one's own care. In selecting varieties one should choose such as will bear a considerable variation in temperature, for it is next to impossible to keep a living room or parlor at a hothouse heat all the time during the twenty-four hours. We should select, then, such plants as will do well in the temperature we can easily maintain. A coal fire burning day and night will enable us to select from a wider range than if we must depend upon wood fires and old newspapers and shawls for protection at night. Outside windows screwed to the window frames, leaving a dead air space between the sashes, are a great protection against frost. We have seen the finest show of winter blooming plants in Northern Vermont farm houses, thus protected, that we have ever seen anywhere, and it was less work to take care of them than it would have been in rooms single glazed 200 or 300 miles further south. It is very desirable to have as even a temperature as may be, day and night, though it should be a little lower at night, or when the sun does not shine. Watering is a very important part of winter gardening. Some water too often and too freely, while others give too little, but the most common failing is in watering too irregularly. Some plants need a great deal of water, while others should have but little. Self-draining pots, with loose gravel or something of the kind at the bottom, are the best, as they will let a surplus through. Standing water will rot the roots of any, but aquatic plants. The calla lily and some others will live in it. Watering is best done at night, but early in the day will do. Nature never waters plants while the sun is shining. We should learn a lesson from her. Neither does she often sprinkle with ice cold water. We should never forget to temper that which we pour upon ours in pots. Finally, we must love our flowers, and expect to give them some of our time. A successful feeder of hogs is reported to have said that the hog will always do a little better if the feeder will stay and look at him a little while every time he gives the swill, which is doubtless in a measure true. Flowers will certainly do much better in houses where the inmates love their pets, and like to give them a little time and attention not absolutely called for.

Corner Shelves.

A convenient arrangement of shelves in one corner of your room is easily made. Have a carpenter or some other competent person nail or screw cleats to the wall, on which the three-cornered shelves may rest; have them fastened securely to it, and see that they are level. These shelves may be three in number, and it is a good idea to have the lowest one about the height of an ordinary table—a trifle lower, perhaps; the reason for this is that it is more easily taken care of and kept free from dust than if it is so low as to oblige one to stoop or kneel down. These shelves may be made of common pine (well seasoned, of course), or of black walnut. They may be finished with narrow lambrequins, scalloped at the bottom; fringe is not desirable in a common room, as it catches dust. A shelf similar to one of these is especially convenient in the dining room. I saw one placed about as high as the top of a side-table; it held a pretty tete-a-tete set, and was an ornament to the room. This was covered with cretonne, and had a band of the same for a lambrequin.

Kitchen Keramics.

An old-fashioned "plum cake" is made of one pound each of butter, sugar and flour, ten eggs, one pound of raisins, half a pound each of currants and of sliced citron, a teaspoonful of ground cloves, one of mace, one nutmeg, the juice and grated peel of a lemon, half of a coffee cup of New Orleans molasses. Beat the butter until it is soft and creamy, then add the sugar. Beat the whites and yolks of the eggs separately; stir the yolks in with the butter and sugar; stir the flour in gradually (having first mixed one heaping teaspoonful of cream of tartar with it). When the flour is about half worked in, put in a half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in as little water as it is possible to use; then add the whites of the eggs, and lastly the fruit, which is well covered with the rest of the flour. Bake in a large tin, with a buttered paper on the sides as well as on the bottom; it will need to bake slowly for five hours. Then do not attempt to lift from the tin until it is perfectly cold. This should be made several days before it is used.

A pretty ornament for a desk is made by taking three penholders with pens in them and painting or gilding them; then tie them together with a narrow ribbon and arrange them so that they will stand upright like an easel; to this may be attached one of the pretty little gilt or silver buckets which can be bought at almost any store where fancy goods are kept; if a tiny chain is not already fastened to the bucket, it can be tied to the easel with ribbon. This is intended to hold pens. The little easel may be used as a frame for a Christmas card if you choose; the card can be fastened by means of a cord matching in color the fringed edge of the card.

This is the way the Massachusetts cook makes her lemon pies: One lemon, seventeen tablespoonfuls of sugar and three eggs; grate the yellow rind of the lemon and squeeze the juice of the lemon on the sugar; to this add the yolks of the eggs, which should be beaten till light; cover a plate with a rich paste, putting a ring around the edge; fill with the above mixture, and bake till the crust is done. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff broth, beating in a little powdered sugar; spread this on the top of the pie when it is done, and let it brown.

Browned kidneys make an excellent dish for the breakfast table. Melt some butter in a sauce pan, and when brown put in slices of kidney, cut thin and rolled in flour; if you do not cut the slices thin they should be cooked for five minutes before they are rolled in flour. One reason why kidneys in the various ways they may be cooked are not generally liked, is simply because they are frequently served when about half cooked, and there are few stomachs capable of digesting a raw kidney. If onion is an agreeable flavor, put a few bits in the melted butter.

Nice salad can be made by using veal, and the inexperienced housewife may be reminded that there is as much difference in veal as in beef or chickens. For the salad choose a firm and lean piece, boil it until it is tender, and then proceed as if you are making chicken salad. It is a good plan to prepare this some day when you are to have chicken for dinner; then the veal can be boiled in the same kettle and will be flavored with the chicken broth. Reserve some of the broth when making gravy for the chicken to moisten the salad with.

An Indian pudding made after this recipe, although unlike the Indian pudding of our fathers, is delicious: Take four eggs, and the weight of three of them in meal, half a pound of sugar and a quarter of a pound of butter, and the juice and grated rind of one lemon. Beat the sugar and butter together till light, then break the eggs in the dish with them and beat briskly; then stir in the meal. Bake in a quick oven; serve in saucers, and pour over it some thin jelly or jam, or wine sauce.

In place of any known preparation sold under the name of "baby powder," use some fine starch. Put a few lumps in a cup and pour over it enough cold water to dissolve it. After you are sure it is dissolved, let it stand until the starch has all settled and the water is clear; then turn the water off. Let the starch dry, and then powder it and put it in a soft muslin bag, through which it will sift out. This is very healing and answers admirably any purpose the powder is supposed to do.

Port wine jelly is very nourishing and refreshing for an invalid. Put one ounce or one package of gelatine and an equal quantity of white sugar in about a gill of cold water; let this heat gradually, and stand on the back of the stove until the gelatine is entirely dissolved; then take it from the fire and add one pint of port wine; strain through a flannel jelly bag. When cold it will be found to be of the right consistency.

It is a good plan when making dresses for a very small boy to make two pairs of sleeves. Jonah's gourd did not grow faster than do the arms of a healthy infant, and it is frequently a cause of dismay when dresses that should be worn for six months answer only for three. It is a simple matter to rip out the small sleeves and sew in the large ones if they are already made.

Do not throw away the bones of turkey or chicken. Crack them and let them boil for two or three hours in a little water; put in also any nice bits of the fowl that are left, particularly the neck, which is never eaten. To this add any soup stock you have, and with a little barley or sago, you will have a nourishing soup. Season with pepper, salt, and any herbs you choose.

The housewife who made her first attempt at making "home made" wine this year, and who, while unwilling to acknowledge defeat, still does not exhibit it with any degree of pride, may still triumph over disaster, for unless there is something radically wrong about them, these wines can be used with excellent effect in pudding sauces and in the cheaper kinds of fruit cakes.

Soft gingerbread, if eaten while fresh and warm, may well take the place of more expensive cake. One egg, one cup of molasses, one-third of a cup of melted butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one tablespoonful of ginger, two and one-half cups of flour and a little salt; dissolve the soda in a very little hot water. Bake in a buttered tin.

A good way to remove dust from a carpet is to fasten a damp cloth over the broom; with this the dust may be literally taken up. This will be found useful in the sick room, and also in any room where there are many small articles to catch dust. It brightens a carpet to wipe it off in this way even after the usual sweeping has been done.

Corn pone is highly recommended as a breakfast dish. Take one heaping coffeecup of boiled hominy, heat it, and stir in a tablespoonful of butter, three eggs, and nearly one pint of sweet milk; as much corn meal may be added as will serve to thicken this till it is like the batter for "johnnycake." Bake this in a quick oven and serve hot.

Here is a suggestion which should be borne in mind: When you have the woodwork in a room painted, it is a good plan to have about two inches of the floor painted also; have the paint the same color as that of the baseboard; then if, when changing carpets, the carpet will not come close to the wall, the little space left will not be so unsightly.

Oilcloth may be kept bright when almost worn out if, after washing it, you take a flannel cloth and dip a corner of it in kerosene and rub the oilcloth with it. Of course, a very little oil goes a great way, and care must be taken not to use too much.

To keep pudding sauce warm, if prepared too long before dinner is served, set the basin containing it in a pan or pail of boiling water; do not let the water boil after the sauce-dish is set in it, but keep it hot.

If before you put rolls in the tin to bake them you rub the edges with a little melted butter, you will not be troubled by their sticking together when baked, and the edges will be smooth.

A simple but delicious dish for dessert is made by cutting up oranges in small pieces and then pouring over them some rich boiled custard. Serve with cake.

When boiling cabbage, put a slice of salt pork in the water; and an agreeable flavor, with no objectionable grease or fat, will be given to the cabbage.

Household Hints.

To extract ink from cotton, silk, or woolen goods, dip the spots in spirits of turpentine and let it remain for several hours; then rub thoroughly between the hands, and it will disappear without changing either the color or texture of the fabric.

To remove claret stains, spread a little salt over the stain while fresh; if the stain is an old one, wet it and rub on the spot pulverized chalk and salt, and lay it in the sun. Repeat this process, keeping it damp, until it is all out.

A strong solution of alum and lye water, applied with a paint brush to furniture or cracks in the wall where moths, bedbugs, or other vermin have found a hiding place, is said to destroy them.

An ounce of sugar of lead, dissolved in a pail of water, will set the color of goods liable to fade, if soaked in it. It is a poison, however, and should be used with care.

Ivory is best cleaned with alcohol. Piano keys should never be washed with soap suds. Hot water and soap are also ruinous to handsome ivory-handled knives.

One tablespoonful of bromo-chloralum to eight of soft water makes an excellent deodorizer, and will purify the room of any offensive smells.

Hair brushes and combs may be cleansed nicely by using a little borax in water. Spirits of ammonia is also good for the same purpose.

Ink stains may be removed from linen by applying melted tallow to the stained part, and then washing.

Ocean Steamers Overdue.

New York Special, 31st: The following steamships are overdue: The St. Olaf, which left Newcastle for this port on Dec. 26, 1882; the Rhodora, from Marseilles, Jan. 6; the Amaryllis, from Gibraltar, Jan. 7; the Crane, from Leith, Jan. 8; the Argosy, from Liverpool, Jan. 8; the Macedonia, from Newcastle, Jan. 9; the Frija, from Havre, Jan. 11; the Marengo, from Hull, Jan. 11; the Otranto, from Hull, Jan. 11; the Castor, from Amsterdam, Jan. 11; the Rotterdam, from Rotterdam, Jan. 13; the Laardam, from Plymouth, Jan. 15. The agents of these vessels do not feel alarmed, as they think bad weather has been the only cause of delay. The Alaska, of the Guion line, which arrived to-day, was due here last Monday. She encountered a series of very severe gales, which prevented her from making her usual progress.

Croup, diphtheria and whooping cough get prompt relief and rapid cure by the use of Kurakoff, the wonderful pine remedy.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

I have met her many mornings
With her basket on her arm,
And a certain subtle charm,
Coming not from her adornings,
But the modest light that lies
Deep within her shaded eyes.

And she carries naught but blessing,
As she journeys up and down
Through the never-needing town,
With her looks the ground caressing,
Yet I know her steps are bent
On some task of good intent.

Maiden, though you do not ask it,
And your modest eyes may wink,
I will tell you what I think:
Queens might gladly bear your basket,
If they could appear as true
And as good and sweet as you.

ALES FOR TODDLERS.

What Once Happened in a Garden.

Many hundred years ago there was a king who owned a beautiful garden, in which all sorts of beautiful flowers grew. The queen and her little princes used to walk in this garden every pleasant day. There was a high wall around it, and in one corner, close to the wall, there sprang up a plain little plant, which looked like a common weed. For a long time no one in the place knew that the weed was in the garden.

The flowers were not kind to it; the bright red roses would not look at it, and the tall white lilies felt that it had no right in a king's garden. But the little plant stayed there and grew, and one day, when it had grown quite large, a little ugly worm crawled up its stem.

"The rose and the lily both shook me off," said the worm, "so I have come to you."

"What do you want of me?" said the weed, in a kind voice.

"A place to rest and something to eat," said the worm, "I feel as though I must have something to eat."

"Poor thing," said the weed, "I am sorry for you. See, I have plenty of leaves. Take just as many as you want."

So the hungry worm began to nibble the fresh, green leaves. How good they tasted! It ate and ate. By and by the worm grew sleepy, but the kind weed did not try to shake the tired creature off. The worm stayed many days, for the kind weed did not like to send it away. It grew very plump and round, as it ate all the time. It was also a pretty color; one could almost see through it.

At last the worm began to spin a web around itself and from leaf to leaf. The weed wondered what that strange visitor would do next. The worm spun round and round without stopping, the threads coming out of its mouth. They grew finer and whiter and the web grew thicker and thicker. In shape this web began to look like a bird's egg.

"I do believe it is building itself a little house," said the weed, "and means to stay here always."

By and by the worm was shut up in the soft little house it had spun for itself.

There was no door, no window, and the worm came out no more.

A few days after this the queen was walking up and down the garden in the shade of the high wall. One of the little princes was with her. He saw the weed in the corner and ran to pull it up. There must be no tall weed like that in his father's beautiful garden. But, as he put out his hand to pull it up, he saw a curious white ball among the leaves. What could be? He picked it of carefully and carried it to the queen, but she had never seen anything like it. She shook it up and down in her hands, and something seemed to rattle inside the ball.

She was standing on one of the pretty bridges of the garden, and as she turned to go back to the palace, the soft little ball rolled out of her hand and dropped into the stream below. The little prince ran down the bank to find his pretty plaything. He waded into the water and caught the tiny ball before it floated out of sight. But something had happened to it. Had the water opened it? There was a hole in one end, and a long fine thread hanging out at the other end. This thread began to unwind just like a kite string, and then a pretty little butterfly came out. It brushed against his hand. It must have been fast asleep inside the ball. The little prince ran up the bank and told his mother. They took the wonderful ball to the palace, and wise men came from far and near to see it. It was the first silk worm's cocoon that had ever been unrolled. This worm was a little silk worm, and the thread it spun into the web was a silk thread. Such a web is called a cocoon. There are about 13,000 yards or nearly seven and a half miles of silk in one cocoon.

In a few years the whole garden was planted full of weeds, like the one that had fed the hungry silk worm. This weed was a young mulberry bush. It had no beauty like the rose and lily; its fruit was not worth much; but its leaves were the right kind of food for the precious spinners; so the proud roses and lilies had to move out and make room for the useful weed.

Norwegian Snowshoe Racing.

One of the most popular winter sports in Norway is skee racing. A steep hill is selected by the committee which is to have charge of the race, and all the best skee runners in the district enter their names, eager to engage in the contest. The track is cleared of all accidental obstructions, but if there happens to be a stone or wooden fence crossing it the snow is dug away on the lower side of it and piled up above it. The object is to obtain what is called a "jump." The skee runner, of course, coming at full speed down the slope will glide over this "jump," shooting right out into the air and coming down either on his feet or any other convenient portion of his anatomy, as the case may be. To keep one's footing and, particularly, to prevent the skees from becoming crossed while in the air are the most difficult feats connected with skee racing; and it is no unusual thing to see even an excellent skee runner plunging headlong into the snow, while his skees pursue an independent race down the track and tell the spectators of his failure. Properly speaking, a skee race is not a race—not a test of speed, but a test of skill; for two runners rarely start simultaneously, as in the case one of them should fall the other could not possibly stop, and might not even have the time to change his course. He would thus be in danger of running into his competitor, and could hardly avoid maiming him seriously. If there were several parallel tracks, at a distance from twenty to thirty feet from each other, there would, of course, be less risk in having the runners start together. Usually, a number fall in the first run, and those who have not fallen then continue the contest until one gains the palm. If, as occasionally happens, the competition is narrowed down to two, who are about evenly matched, a proposal to run without staves is apt to result in a decisive victory for one or the other. It can be conceived how exciting these contests are, not only to the skee runners themselves, but, also, to the spectators, male and female, who gather in groups along the track and cheer their friends as they pass, waving their handkerchiefs and greeting with derisive cries the mishaps which are inseperable from this sport.

Champion Pige[illegible]hooters Matched.

The arrangements for the great pigeon match between Capt. A. H. Bogardus and Dr. W. I. Carver have been completed, and it will be shot at Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, Feb. 22. The match is for $500 a side, and Bogardus has already deposited that amount with Dr. N. Rowe, editor of the American Field, who has notified Carver of the fact. The Field of next Saturday will contain the articles of agreement, duly signed, fifteen in number, and which may be summarized as follows: The match will be at 100 pigeons each, on Feb. 23, at Louisville, for $500 a side, the winner to receive the $1,000 from Dr. N. Rowe as soon as the match is decided. The admission to the ground will be from $1 to $5, the winner to receive the whole. Two hundred and twenty-five birds will be furnished by a man mutually agreed upon, and the expense will be evenly divided. The traps will be ground traps, five in number, thirty yards from the shooter, and five yards apart, the puller or pullers of the traps to be appointed by the referee. The birds must be retrived by a dog or man mutually agreed upon, and the audience shall be kept twenty-five yards behind the shooters. The shooting is to begin at 1 o'clock, and the match will be finished in one day if possible. In case of a tie the referee must determine the time and place of finishing, but there must be no draw. The forfeit will be $250, independent of the stake money. The stakes, $1,000 each, must be in the hands of the stakeholder on Feb. 19. The boundary is to be eighty yards unless the match takes place in a regular shooting ground, when the fence is to be the boundary. The weight of the gun must not exceed eight pounds, the charge of powder [illegible] drams, and the charge of shot one and a quarter ounces, by actual weight. All qu[illegible] arising not provided for in the articles, will be decided by the referee according to London Gun Club rules.

THE FARMERS' COURSE.

Prof. Arnold Dispels Popular Delusions on the Butter and Cheese Question, and Gives the People a Few Points.

The third week of the Farmers' Lecture course at the Agricultural college, Minneapolis, was brought to a close yesterday. Prof. L. B. Arnold lectured in the morning, taking for his topic, Cheese; Its Nature and Value as Food.

Before taking up the subject of cheese, Prof. Arnold referred to the matter of artificial coloring of butter, which he said might be done without injuring its quality. Butter was at one time colored with carrot juice, but it was found that the organic matter carried into the butter would soon decompose and the butter was spoiled. Then a preparation of annatto, with sal-soda and potash, was used; this was put into the cream when the churning was done, and it would color the butter, but it would also color the buttermilk. That was used very extensively and is to a considerable extent now, but it never should be. A preparation is now used, made by dissolving the coloring matter, usually the pure extract of annatto, or tumeric or saffron, in water, then some pure oil is mixed with it and the whole boiled until the water is evaporated, leaving the coloring in the oil. Lard oil is very commonly used and makes an excellent coloring. He also said that to make a success in dairying the creamery system should by all means be adopted.

The lecturer then proceeded to discuss the subject of cheese-making. In this country, he said, the manufacture of cheese is small compared with that of butter. We make annually over 800,000 pounds of butter, and only about 270,000 pounds of cheese. The manufacture of cheese has never flourished, and probably never will until some change of method is made from that which is now pursued. As now made, cheese is not so wholesome as most other food. It is extremely concentrated, and contains both the fats and the albumenoids of the milk. One of the first things in the manufacture of cheese is the rennet, the importance of which has never been properly recognized. Cheese makers, as a rule, seem to hold the opinion that it is used simply to

REGULATE THE MILK.

But this is one of its smallest functions. Cheese-making is a process of digestion, and rennet is necessary to do the digesting. After we get the albuminous matter into the curd and the water separated from it, and it is seasoned and ready for the press and put into the curing room, it is then to undergo a change, and that change is produced by rennet. It acts as a digestive agent to render soluble the curd, which would otherwise be insoluble. Curd as first formed, especially curd made by alum or alcohol, or by any acid, is very difficult of digestion. The modes of making cheese have been entirely empiric. Scarcely a single cheese-maker can tell why he does a single thing in the whole process of cheese-making. Prof. Arnold then proceeded to describe his method. The process is one of digestion. We start, said he, with the idea that the action of digestion is most rapid at blood heat; the gastric juice is made to act with its greatest efficiency at the natural temperature of the animal body. If the temperature raises above or sinks below this point it acts feebly. I use rennet enough to produce coagulation in night and morning's milk mixed, at 90 deg., in fifteen minutes. Ninety deg. is about the proper temperature. After it has got quite hard, cut it so that the whey will separate rapidly. By cutting it very fine while it is soft, the whey separates much more rapidly and thoroughly. By leaving it as long as you can before cutting it, the curd and whey will separate so imperfectly that you will get a very soft, dauby cheese. There is a medium time in which to cut to expel the right proportion of whey. After cutting it, and getting out the right proportion of whey, the temperature is raised to blood heat. The common practice is to let it lie in the whey until the whey becomes sour. This is wrong. It should be taken out of the whey before there is any sensible acidity developed in it. One of the most important agents in the maturing and flavoring of cheese is the free oxygen of the air.

THE CURING OF CHEESE

is not only a digesting, but an oxidizing process. Cured in the usual way, cheese requires thirty days to three months before it is fit to eat. Ordinarily, when taken from the press, it is covered with a coat of grease, and that shuts out the oxygen pretty effectually. The curing is retarded, it becomes covered with a hard rind and the flavor is developed very slowly. [The lecturer said his method is as follows:] Instead of taking the curd when it had reached the proper degree of firmness and immediately pressing it, it is finely pulverized, salted ready for the press, but instead of pressing, it is kept warm by exposure to the air and constantly stirring, and it will be ready for use in about forty-eight hours. It will do as much in forty-eight hours by this method as in forty-eight days by the usual process, and will be in the same condition for future preservation. There is some difficulty, however, in this process in deciding when the curd is in the best condition for pressing. It is best, after taking the curd out of the whey, to stir it fifteen or twenty minutes and allow it to ferment somewhat; let it air three hours and then press it. Lard is now much used to replace the butter contained in cheese, which, Prof. Arnold said, is a great saving and is very commendable, although there is now a prejudice against it. If the prejudice could be removed so that it could stand on its own merits it would make dairy farming "boom" right up. It would give two products from the milk instead of one. It is, however, not generally practiced, although those who do it are coining money.

The manufacture of sugar from the saccharine matter in the milk is carried on in Ohio on a large scale and is very profitable.

Prof. Arnold spoke at some length upon the preparation of rennets, and remarked that out of eighty factories which he examined only thirteen had rennet that was fit to use; they were unclean, sour and full of ferments.

He said that he used Bavarian re[illegible]. The ends by which they are tied up should be [illegible]med off, the rennets split open and soaked in [illegible]ickle made by dissolving one pound of salt in [illegible]ty pounds of pure water.

In the afternoon Prof. Grange repeated his lecture on the Examination of the Horse for Soundness, illustrated with a living horse brought in before the audience. An outline of the lecture has already been published. The lectures will be continued next week, lectures and subjects to be announced.

Arthur Predicts a Lively Time.

Washington Special to the Chicago Herald: A politician who is on good terms at the White House said to the Herald correspondent to-night: "President Arthur is satisfied with the way things are shaping. There will be no change of policy, either one way or the other. The president believes that rest and quiet is all that is needed to restore the Republican party to perfect health. He recognizes that it was very sick a few months ago, but convalescence has set in, and it will be steady on its pins again before long. The president told me yesterday that the factional sores will be healed before 1884, and the party will sink all differences and wheel solidly into line for the presidential campaign. This feeling is taking possession of the leaders, and Democrats will be grievously mistaken if they imagine they have an easy victory before them. As to cabinet changes, nothing is contemplated at present, but I would not be surprised if the treasury and state departments have fresh and more vigorous heads before many months pass. Brewster is not as firm in his seat as he was. He cannot help making an occasional exhibition of himself, and will undoubtedly make one too many."

She Wouldn't Leave John.

Milwaukee Paper: The father of Ida Dean, who tried to get married on Sunday last to John Starr, with whom she eloped, arrived in Milwaukee from Belvidere, Ill., yesterday afternoon. He says that his daughter is only thirteen years of age, and that Starr betrayed the confidence placed in him in a shameful manner. Mr. Dean, however, admits that Starr was a faithful and efficient worker, and says that the story that Starr robbed him of a large sum previous to the elopement is false. Mr. Dean had a long interview with his daughter in the office of the Humane society, and the result was that Ida positively refuses to return to the parental home unless John accompanies her. The father is in a quandary what to do, because the girl is evidently too young to enter upon marital happiness. Chief Watson has advised the father not to blight the girl's whole life by prosecuting Starr, for whom she manifests so strong an affection.

Sharks of Whom Soldiers Should Beware.

Washington Special to the Chicago Herald: The postmaster has directed that money orders and registered letters be not delivered to Gazzan & Co., 2250 Third avenue, New York, and Gilmore & Gilmore, 629 F street, Washington, D. C. The former firm issued circulars stating that soldiers and other persons could by an agent as well as in person enter lands upon the bounty act, etc. They also purported to have special facilities in securing arrearages of pensions. The latter firm held out the same inducements, and it is evident that the firms are connected. Both require payment in advance, and are declared frauds because they hold out inducements not offered by the government and State, and what is expressly prohibited by the land laws.

Why run any risk with your cough, cold, hoarseness, or indeed any pulmonary or bronchial complaint, when a remedy safe, thorough, and so easily obtained as Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant can be had? If you have contracted a severe cold, save your lungs from the dangerous irritation and inflammation, which frequently brings about consumption, by promptly resorting to the Expectorant; and if troubled with any affection of the throat, you will find this remedy equally effectual in affording relief from obstructing phlegm, and in healing the inflamed parts.

A SONG OF TIME.

How worn a theme is that of time!
Then why do I begin to rhyme
Upon it now?

Because to-night the air is filled—
With voices that will not be stilled—
They will not cease.

And always sing the same refrain
Of Time that ne'er will come again,
Of Time that flies.

Of all that Time sweeps in his flight
The voices sing to me to-night.
Time cures all care.

That is what I would fain believe,
My heart therewith I do deceive,
With faith in Time.

O voices singing, be you mute,
You touch a chord on my heart's lute
But seldom played;

Yet filling all the air around
With a sweet melancholy sound,
A song of Time!

Of Time that was, of days so fair
When all was young, and love was there—
Long days ago?

Be still! be still! that sad refrain!
I dare not listen once again
To that same song

Maybe I hold those days too high,
And yield them far too oft a sigh,
Those days long since!

Yet as they were the fairest yet
Of all my days, then why forget
That happy time?

Though it it still should be my fate
To live yet happier days, the date
Of that sweet time

I'll bury, then, within the grave
Which holds all things forgotten, save
The present time.

Nor heed a voice which whispers low,
"The sweetest song is that you know
Of long ago."

So with the voices in the air
I mingled mine, and, lo, was there
A song of Time!
—London Society.

A COSTLY BRACELET.

Mr. Maurice carried on a snug business as a silversmith and dealer in antique silver in a little triangular shaped shop not much larger than a cupboard, situated in a turning out of Bond street. Oddly enough, his chief occupation seemed to be buying rather than selling; for the majority of his customers came to him to dispose of family plate or to raise money on the security of jewelry and other valuables. This branch of his business Mr. Maurice found so highly remunerative that he was occasionally tempted to be rather reckless in his dealings with strangers. The fact was, that when he saw a prospect of making a good bargain he never had the heart to ask disagreeable questions, and, consequently, it sometimes happened that Mr. Maurice had in the recesses of his strong room valuable articles which were being anxiously sought after by their rightful owners. A dubious transaction of this nature, however, was by no means an every day occurrence; for Maurice had a large and aristocratic connection, chiefly among fashionable ladies with a mania for extravagance, and he was generally regarded as a most respectable tradesman. He was a little elderly man, with a bald head, strongly marked features of a Jewish type, sleek in person, affable and insinuating in manner, and so susceptible by disposition that it was notorious that a pretty woman could obtain much better terms from him than a plain one.

This was certainly the case regarding little Mrs. Briscoe, the wife of an impecunious younger son of Lord Asterisk. Mrs. Briscoe was an American, and when she ran away with handsome Bob Briscoe she was a considerable heiress. Unfortunately her property had not been protected by a marriage settlement, and, consequently, she and her husband between them contrived to run through it in a remarkably short space of time. To do the lady justice, she made no pretense of blaming her husband for his imprudence and extravagance, having congenial tastes in the same direction. In fact, she had squandered quite as much of her fortune as he had, without the excuse of having a large accumulation of debts to clear off. Being possessed of handsome jewelry and a profusion of wedding gifts of a costly nature, Mrs. Briscoe had frequent transactions with Mr. Maurice, with whose assistance, and by the aid of very tolerable luck and skill at ecarte, the little lady contrived to maintain an appearance of prosperity.

Mr. Maurice found it no easy task to hold his own with Mrs. Briscoe, who, besides being piquant and pretty, was a past mistress in the dangerous arts of coaxing and cajolery. She was as clever and shrewd as she was fascinating, and Mr. Maurice's admiration for her was not diminished by the fact that she was by no means addicted to conscientious scruples. She could romance with charming effrontery, and would have cheated him without the slightest compunction if he had ever given her a chance. He felt a sort of professional pride in getting the better of Mrs. Briscoe, which added a singular zest to their numerous transactions, and rendered her an honored customer in his eyes.

One of his hardest fought battles with the lady in question related to an old-fashioned tiara of diamonds set in silver, which had been presented to her by her husband's grandmother, the dowager countess of Asterisk. Mrs. Briscoe, being driven by adverse circumstances to part with this treasure, naturally brought it to Mr. Maurice and demanded a price which took the worthy man's breath away. He perceived, however, that the stones were of excellent quality, and was as eager to acquire them at his own price as his customer was to sell at hers. A long wrangling discussion ensued, which resulted in Mr. Maurice naming a price considerably nearer to the sum demanded than that which he had originally offered. But he resolutely declined to increase his last bid, and Mrs. Briscoe, finding that he was proof against her persuasive eloquence, said, rather crossly:

"Very well. I see we are not likely to come to terms, so I will trouble you to wrap the case up, Mr. Maurice, and I will take it back."

"You won't get a better offer anywhere," said Mr. Maurice, looking at the diamonds with evident longing. "I tell you what I'll do," he added, as though struck by a sudden thought. "I don't mind presenting you with a piece of modern jewelry in addition to what I've offered, and that must be my ultimatum."

"Thank you for nothing," said Mrs. Briscoe, pouting. "However, I may as well see what you have to offer."

Mr. Maurice secretly elated, shuffled off with his keys to his strong room, and after a short absence returned with half a dozen small leather cases in his hand. Mrs. Briscoe inspected the contents with the air of a connoisseur, and put each contemptuously on one side until she came to the last, which contained a diamond bracelet of chaste and peculiar design.

"That is rather pretty," she said carelessly.

"Pretty! It's handsome!" rejoined Mr. Maurice, holding it at arm's length; "it's worth $150 at least. No, ma'am, I didn't mean to offer that. I can't do it," he added, closing the case abruptly.

"I will take it," said Mrs. Briscoe, coolly. "I would sooner sell the diamonds to you than to a friend, to avoid scandal, and I rather want a new bracelet."

Mr. Maurice hesitated a moment, and inspected the ornament carefully, with a puzzled expression. His reflections were brought to a premature conclusion by an impatient movement on the part of his customer, which caused him to say, hurriedly:

"Well, well, ma'am. I suppose I must give way. But you have got the better of me this time; you have, indeed."

Mrs. Briscoe gave a little scornful laugh, and the dealer proceeded to write out a check for the amount agreed upon. He then prepared a formal receipt for their joint signature, stating that he had purchased the tiara for such and such a sum, and a diamond bracelet estimated to be worth so much. This formality was always insisted upon by Mrs. Briscoe, who had feminine notions of being strictly business-like, and Mr. Maurice knew from experience that he must humor her. He wrote out the receipt, as usual, in duplicate, handing one copy to the lady, and keeping the other himself. This terminated the transaction, and Mrs. Briscoe presently took her departure in high good humor.

Mr. Maurice was by no means dissatisfied with his bargain when he came to think it over. He had given a large sum for the diamonds, but they were clearly worth the money; in fact, he saw his way to making a handsome profit out of them. But he felt a little uneasy about the bracelet, for he could not for the life of him remember how he had come by it. His books showed no record of it, and this rather increased his uneasiness, for whenever he made a purchase under suspicious circumstances he was always careful not to make any entry of the transaction, to avoid accidents. Should there be a mystery attached to it, it might prove exceedingly awkward, not to say damaging, to his reputation, if the bracelet should be recognized by any of her friends.

This disagreeable possibility aroused Mr. Maurice's apprehensions to such a pitch that he was strongly inclined to call upon the lady immediately and purchase the bracelet back again at any price. Upon reflection, however, he abandoned the idea, partly from fear of exciting Mrs. Briscoe's suspicions, and partly because it was highly probable that he would have an opportunity of acquiring the bracelet upon his own terms before many weeks had elapsed. This last consideration quite reconciled him to the risk he ran in the meantime, and, although his expectations were not realized as soon as he anticipated, he did not suffer his anxiety to prey upon his mind.

At length he received another visit from Mrs. Briscoe, who was exceedingly gracious and affable. She made particular inquiries about his health, and, after chatting pleasantly for a few minutes on general topics, said, confidentially:

"Mr. Maurice, I have had such a dreadful upset. I don't know when I have been so much distressed in my mind!"

"Indeed! What is the matter, Mrs. Briscoe?" inquired Mr. Maurice, with solicitude.

"My maid—a girl whom I implicitly trusted, and whom I have treated with every kindness and indulgence—has been robbing me shamefully," said Mrs. Briscoe.

"I'm very sorry to hear that," returned Mr. Maurice, sympathetically. "Is your loss serious?"

"It is not that so much," said the lady, shrugging her shoulders. "What chiefly grieves me is her base ingratitude and wickedness."

"Very sad—very sad, indeed!" acquiesced Mr. Maurice, shaking his head. "Shall you prosecute?"

"I am afraid I have no alternative," said Mrs. Briscoe, with an air of reluctance. "You see, the wretched girl is actually in custody. She attempted to pawn something and was given in charge by the pawnbroker."

"What did she attempt to pawn?" inquired Mr. Maurice, with a sudden misgiving, as the lady glanced up at him significantly.

"That bracelet of mine which I purchased from you," said Mrs. Briscoe, in an innocent tone. "It is said—but, of course, this must be a mistake—that it formed part of the proceeds of some burglary or other, and that it is described in the police list."

Mr. Maurice gave an involuntary start, and turned very white. Up to that moment he had not suspected the drift of Mrs. Briscoe's artless remarks, but he now realized that they had an unpleasantly personal bearing. If it was true that the bracelet had been recognized by the police he was placed in a most awkward predicament. Inquiries would be made about him which might lead to damaging disclosures—even form the subject of a criminal charge. Mr. Maurice was so utterly disconcerted that he did not attempt to conceal his agitation.

"Good Lord!" he exclaimed, wiping away the beads of perspiration that had gathered on his brow. "You are joking, Mrs. Briscoe. I don't remember ever selling you a bracelet," he added, in desperation.

"Dear me! What a short memory you have, Mr. Maurice," said Mrs. Briscoe, with a wicked little laugh. "Here is your own receipt, in which the bracelet is especially mentioned. There is no doubt about its having come from you, and I thought I would warn you of what has happened, because I shall have to mention your name."

"Why should you, Mrs. Briscoe?" faltered Mr. Maurice. "Of course the police are mistaken about the bracelet, but still it is most unpleasant for a respectable tradesman to have his name mentioned in connection with an accusation of that kind. Is it absolutely necessary that you should mention my name, Mrs. Briscoe?" he added eagerly.

"How can I do otherwise?" said Mrs. Briscoe. "I am sure to be asked how I came by the bracelet, and I certainly shall be bound to tell the truth about it; besides, why should I not? You may be put to a little inconvenience, but that is unavoidable. No doubt the police will institute searching inquiries about you, and investigate your antecedents, and so forth. But, after all, Mr. Maurice, you have nothing to fear."

"Of course not; I never said I had," replied Mr. Maurice, trying to look unconcerned, but in reality trembling at the lady's words. "Still, I wish you had—had consulted me before you identified the bracelet."

"That is precisely what I am doing," returned Mrs. Briscoe, lifting her pretty eyebrows. "How dull you are, Mr. Maurice. I ought, perhaps, to have mentioned that I was out when the inspector of police called to see me this morning, and I only heard what he came about from the servants. It appears the wretched girl declares she found the bracelet, and unless I come forward and claim it as my property, she will probably be acquitted, the police will impound the bracelet, and the whole affair will be shut up."

"If you had only mentioned that before," said Mr. Maurice, feeling inexpressibly relieved, and beginning to breathe more freely.

"Well, I never imagined you would be so much disturbed by what has taken place," returned Mrs. Briscoe, smiling. "It was the merest chance that I thought of coming. Of course, if, for some reason or other, you would rather I did not claim the bracelet—"

"For the reasons I have stated, I would rather you did not, ma'am," interposed Mr. Maurice, with involuntary earnestness. "I am sure you do not wish to be hard upon the girl, and would be willing to give her an opportunity to mend her ways."

"I have no consideration whatever for the girl," said Mrs. Briscoe, frankly. "She deserves to be punished, and if she gets off it will be entirely on your account. Of course, I must be compensated for the loss of the bracelet."

"Certainly, ma'am, certainly," replied Mr. Maurice, with alacrity.

"That is the whole question. What do you consider is the value of—shall we say of the bracelet, Mr. Maurice?" said Mrs. Briscoe, with her most bewitching smile.

"I will either give you a hundred pounds in cash or another bracelet of the same description," returned Mr. Maurice. "Of course, I don't wish you to be a loser by your consideration for me."

"A hundred pounds!" repeated little Mrs. Briscoe, turning up her nose disdainfully. "If that is the value you set upon your reputation and your good name I am sorry I have wasted time in coming here to assist you to preserve it."

"I don't understand what you mean, ma'am," said Mr. Maurice, rather faintly. "If you don't think £100 is enough, perhaps you will prefer to select something from my stock."

"Upon my word, Mr. Maurice, your offer is simply contemptible!" exclaimed Mrs. Briscoe, rising from her seat indignantly. "As you evidently don't object to acquiring notoriety as a receiver of stolen property, I shall give evidence against the girl without the smallest compunction. Good morning!"

"Stay, ma'am, stay!" exclaimed Mr. Maurice, fairly startled out of his senses. "I—I am open to any reasonable suggestion you may have to make. Shall we say another fifty?"

"Another fifty, indeed! Look here, Mr. Maurice! I am not going to waste any more time talking to you," said Mrs. Briscoe, confronting him and looking him straight in the face. "Unless I receive from you £3,000 in bank notes within an hour I will set the police on your track, and you will be very rightly served. The inspector left word that he would call at my house again at 2 o'clock, and if I have not heard from you by that time I shall identify the bracelet and tell where I got it from."

"It's an awful price to ask for—for a bracelet," gasped Mr. Maurice. Nevertheless, when the inspector of police called upon Mrs. Briscoe at the appointed time he was smilingly informed by that lady that she had never possessed a diamond bracelet in her life.—[London Truth.

Gold in Alaska.

Private dispatches have been received in Washington of a reliable character with reference to the nature of the gold deposits in Alaska. Much discredit has been thrown over the reports of gold discovered in our northwestern Territory from time to time, until the impression has become pretty general that as a gold field Mr. Seward's purchase was not particularly valuable. The information alluded to is of such a character that as soon as it becomes known it will result in such a rush to the gold fields as has not been seen since the days of '49. It is stated that a quartz vein which will yield from $5 to $8 net to the ton has been discovered on the mainland in Southern Alaska, 200 feet in width. Many others equally rich in the same district are reported, and preparations are being made quietly, it is said, by a combination of New York and San Francisco capitalists to start early in the spring with mills and machinery to take possession of the mines and mill the quartz. Plenty of coal and lumber are reported at no great distance from the mines, so that the fuel supply will be abundant. Two gentlemen in conversation on this subject to-day said there would be 10,000 men from Nevada and California on the way to Alaska within three months, and that before a year the mining population of the Pacific Slope would be thoroughly drained of all surplus labor to supply the new field, unless some extraordinary excitement should be created by new discoveries near home.

THE HEAVENLY WORLD.

Oh, where is that heaven of glory,
That beautiful home of the blest,
Where hearts that are sad with life's story
Find peace and the sweetness of rest?
Do stars that smile on us at even
Hold loved ones who wait for us there
Will that be the precious home given
When we in their blessedness share?

We look on the sky's perfect azure,
And long with great longing to know
Just where it will be our Lord's pleasure
Our freed, happy spirits shall go.
Sometimes there comes o'er us a shrinking
At thought of the changing of place,
Of breaking the bonds that are linking
Our souls to this narrow earth space.
If only we knew where the spirit
Would dwell when the body doth sleep!
What place in the vastness inherit
Where God his beloved will keep!

The babe that is peacefully sleeping
The sleep that no waking can know,
In heaven has gained and is keeping
The knowledge we pant for below.
Oh, poor, troubled heart that is fretting
To know what has not been revealed,
Have faith that our lord, not forgetting
Keeps part of the future concealed.

But surely enough has been told thee
To give to the soul perfect peace.
For Christ's arms of love will enfold thee,
And sorrow forever shall cease.
No tears will there darken thy vision;
The parting of friends will be o'er;
While all, in that region elysian,
Shall dwell with the God they adore.

FOR RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

M. Ollivier and the Papal Question.

New York Tribune: M. Emile Ollivier's pamphlet, entitled The Pope: Is He Free in Rome? has just been published in Paris. The last minister of the empire admits that his holiness does not languish on a bed of straw and in irons in the depths of the Mamertine prisons. On the contrary, he inhabits the most beautiful palace in the universe, where dwell in glory Bramante, Michael Angelo and Raphael. If that constitutes the liberty of the pontiff, he is free. But—"The pope is not pope to be shut up in the Vatican, write encyclicals, keep a little court, and be surrounded by a few Swiss guards. No, he is pope to celebrate publicly the grand mysteries and august fetes in the temple elevated by the papacy with the gold of all nations. He is pope to send to the loggia, at the consecrated dates, in the light of the sun, and before the prostrate multitudes, his benediction urbi et orbi. Can he now fulfill the duties of his charge?" M. Ollivier thinks not. Recent occurrences have demonstrated the certainty of the fate that would await the pontiff were he to show himself to the inhabitants of the capital: "The least that could happen to him would be to be insulted and hissed. Besides, at Rome, in the present state of things, the pope has a superior; and if the pope has any one above him he is not free. It is, in fact, a dogma that the sovereign pontiff has received, by right divine, exemption from all sorts of secular jurisdiction. This privilege is perpetual, and its prerogative cannot be abandoned, seeing that it was conferred on the order, and not on a mere person. According to the law of guarantees, passed on May 13, 1871, the person of the pope is declared sacred and inviolable; the honors and protection due to a sovereign are assured to him, and besides an annual payment of 5,225,000 francs, he has enjoyment of the apostolic palaces of the Vatican, St. John de Lateran, and the Villa Castel Gandolfo. But these guarantees have a false air of immunities. To begin with, they are not perpetual, as what the law has given the law may take away. It was the Right who established them, it is the Left who apply them, and it may be that the Mountain (Radicals) will abolish them. True, the Italian government does not dream of so doing; but what confidence does such an ephemeral engagement inspire? The unfortunate experience of this same law of guarantee is not of a nature to give much encouragement on that head. The nomination of the bishops had been conceded to the pope in the name of the principle proclaimed by Cavour of a free church in a free state. But in a great number of cases this has been a mystification, the futility of the pretexts invoked for withholding the exequatur indicating the degree of confidence due to these guardians of the papacy, and presaging the fate in store for that institution. Italy decides alone and without appeal—pro lege voluntas. * * * Instead of allowing himself to be consumed in the Vatican, like a widow who has lost her husband, why should not the pontiff repair at times to the basilica of St. Peter, escorted by his court, to receive pilgrims? Let him visit the sick, and show himself in the Corso in his gala coach, and traverse Rome in all the majesty of father, bishop and priest. A crisis might break out, but it would do good. Even a crisis is better than continual enervating expectation. More prudent voices condemn these counsels as excessive, or at least premature. In their opinion the crisis should be waited for, but not sought. Humanly speaking, there exists no hope, although there are some reassuring signs, such as the comparative abstention shown by Italy in the anti-clerical legislation of recent years. She has not prevented these attacks, but has not been associated with them; sometimes even has cursed them. Italy loves her religion; she is proud of her papacy, and does not believe all the rubbish that its enemies say of it."

Rev. Heber Newton's Discoveries.

New York Observer: The Rev. Heber Newton has capped the climax of discoveries in theology. It is one of the notions of a modern school of religious thought that the process of evolution by which man was developed from the ape is going on in the moral world, and what we know now is a natural outgrowth of what we knew ten years ago. Dr. Newton has just evolved a novelty in Biblical science which has not been exceeded in its way since the apple did not fall on the head of the great philosopher whose name the rector bears. Since the art of writing was invented there was never written a more curious and unlearned dissertation on inspiration than this sermon on the Bible. The preacher has, since its delivery, stated his views more fully to a newspaper interviewer, and brings out what we inferred, that he has been stirred to follow in the wake of Dr. Ellis, the Unitarian divine who recently admitted that the Bible is an orthodox book, and supports the evangelical theology. Therefore there must be an expurgated Bible, or the so-called "liberal" school will be left out in the cold. The year 1882 was a bad year for the teachers of that school, and the new year will be worse.

Christian Register: Mr. Newton believes almost passionately in the inspiration of God flowing down into humanity, not confined to any book or age, but given to the world as an eternal source of joy, help and guidance. The Bible he cannot accept as a manual of science, or even an exact record of the history of past ages of the world. Reason, the Logos, must come in everywhere to separate the probable from the improbable. He deplores the use of the Bible as an oracle, as the diviners of old studied the entrails of birds to discover future events. He rejects the claim that the prophets foretold future or even thought they did. As far as there was prophecy of a Messiah, it sprang from the longing and travailing of the race which pointed

"To one far-off divine event."

No one has ever given brighter, more glowing testimony to the value of the poetry, the ethics and religion of the Bible, cleared from the archaic limitations of past ages. He would put into the hands of the young an expurgated Bible, for manifestly it is impossible for modern youth to read a good deal of the Bible as it now stands. As this great champion has now come boldly into the field, is it not the duty of liberals to hold up his hands?

Droppings from the Sanctuary.

Oh, thanks that from our daily need
The joy of simple faith is born,
And he who sows the spring-time seed,
May wait in hope the autumn corn.
Fill every part with praise,
Let all my being speak
Of thee and of thy love, O Lord,
Poor though I be, and weak.

The Rev. Dr. J. M. Reid, of the Methodist Missionary society, tells this good story about himself: While he was engaged in editorial work, some time ago, he was invited to preach in Chicago. As he took a seat early in a pew, to meditate on his sermon, he discovered that a prayer-meeting was going on in the adjacent room, and that he could overhear what was said. Presently a loud and lusty brother engaged in prayer, and the bulk of the petition was for the preacher of the evening, who was listening. After touching on various matters, in which he thought the Lord needed information, he said: "O Lord, bless him who is to speak to us this evening. He is a poor, weak man, but make him a power. Bless his message. We know that he is only an editor, and that he is rusty, but do, Lord, rub the rust off."

According to the existing Russian law, apostasy from the state religion entails severer penalties than that for murder. A Russian subject who abandons the orthodox faith for any other whatever is deprived of his children, his estate is handed over to guardians appointed by the state, and he himself is liable to prosecution by the holy synod until he abjures. The Golos now remarks that this severity defeats its own object, and its advises that this antiquated legislation should be abolished in favor of full religious toleranco and liberty of conscience, after the example of the states of Western Europe.

The decision of the following case will doubtless interest the Catholics in all parts of the world as to the stability of their future prospects: "The truth of the doctrine of purgatory as held by the Roman Catholics is about to be tested in the courts. A man in Australia left $7,000, to be used to deliver his soul from that alleged state of existence, and the executor declines to pay the money without legal proof that it has been really earned."

Over the grave of a Springfield, Mass., man in the old Methodist grounds, who died from the kick of a horse, is the following quaint epitaph cut in cold marble: "Blame not the beast who sent me to dust, For the God of nature said he must."

An amusing typographical error occurs in the Church Union. Speaking of the Center Congregational church of New Haven, it says that a moral tablet to his memory has recently been erected there, meaning, of course, a mural tablet.

The Rev. Joseph Richter, D. D., of Cincinnati, has been appointed the first bishop of the new Catholic diocese of Grand Rapids. He is thirty-seven years of age, and is the youngest bishop in the United States.

The proceeds of Bishop Ireland's temperance lecture in Chicago, which are to be donated to the Little Sisters of the Poor and St. Vincent's Foundlings' home, will probably amount to about $1,000.

The State Missionary society of Connecticut has made arrangements for holding thirty-three missionary conventions in the State. They will be held in different towns and at regular intervals.

The synod of the Reformed church in France, which recently met in Paris, appointed committees to prepare a new liturgy and catechism.

The archbishop of Quebec has warned the faithful not to participate in a Masonic ball to be given by the grand lodge next month in that city.

HOME AND HOUSEHOLD.

Flowers in Winter.

New England Farmer: In the cultivation of flowers in winter in our sitting rooms the same laws must be observed as in the cultivation of flowers in the open ground. There must not be too much heat nor too little sunshine. The soil must be rich and sufficiently mellow. Moisture must be controlled, and insects must be kept from doing harm. As blooming plants can not thrive even in summer in a dense shade, so in winter they will look weak and puny if kept in a north window. An east or west window will do, but a southern exposure will give best results. During the short days of winter, a south window will let in none too much sunshine. The number of plants must be governed by the amount of sunlight one can afford to give up to the flowers. Too many may darken the room and render it unpleasant or unhealthful for the inmates for whose pleasure they are grown. A few choice plants, well cared for, will give much greater satisfaction than a mass of sickly leaves and vines, so crowded as to darken the room in which they are kept, for our window panes should add to rather than take from the attractiveness and comfort of our rooms in winter. A single pot on either side of a window, and containing a bright flower, or a single vine or two trained around it, with plenty of warm sunshine flowing back and giving cheer to the whole room, gives a charm like a single rosebud to an otherwise plainly dressed person. So in attempting the cultivation of flowering plants in winter, do not attempt to do too much. If you want a greenhouse, then build a greenhouse, but do not attempt to turn your parlor into a winter garden. There is no cheaper nor perhaps better way to stock up a window garden than to start slips or cuttings from the plants in one's own grounds. The purchased flowers are often grown to sell, and do not improve very readily in new quarters. A purchased plant never gives half the pleasure and satisfaction of one equally good specimen grown under one's own care. In selecting varieties one should choose such as will bear a considerable variation in temperature, for it is next to impossible to keep a living room or parlor at a hothouse heat all the time during the twenty-four hours. We should select, then, such plants as will do well in the temperature we can easily maintain. A coal fire burning day and night will enable us to select from a wider range than if we must depend upon wood fires and old newspapers and shawls for protection at night. Outside windows screwed to the window frames, leaving a dead air space between the sashes, are a great protection against frost. We have seen the finest show of winter blooming plants in Northern Vermont farm houses, thus protected, that we have ever seen anywhere, and it was less work to take care of them than it would have been in rooms single glazed 200 or 300 miles further south. It is very desirable to have as even a temperature as may be, day and night, though it should be a little lower at night, or when the sun does not shine. Watering is a very important part of winter gardening. Some water too often and too freely, while others give too little, but the most common failing is in watering too irregularly. Some plants need a great deal of water, while others should have but little. Self-draining pots, with loose gravel or something of the kind at the bottom, are the best, as they will let a surplus through. Standing water will rot the roots of any but aquatic plants. The calla lily and some others will live in it. Watering is best done at night, but early in the day will do. Nature never waters plants while the sun is shining. We should learn a lesson from her. Neither does she often sprinkle with ice cold water. We should never forget to temper that which we pour upon ours in pots. Finally, we must love our flowers, and expect to give them some of our time. A successful feeder of hogs is reported to have said that the hog will always do a little better if the feeder will stay and look at him a little while every time he gives the swill, which is doubtless in a measure true. Flowers will certainly do much better in houses where the inmates love their pets, and like to give them a little time and attention not absolutely called for.

Corner Shelves.

A convenient arrangement of shelves in one corner of your room is easily made. Have a carpenter or some other competent person nail or screw cleats to the wall, on which the three-cornered shelves may rest; have them fastened securely to it, and see that they are level. These shelves may be three in number, and it is a good idea to have the lowest one about the height of an ordinary table—a trifle lower, perhaps; the reason for this is that it is more easily taken care of and kept free from dust than if it is so low as to oblige one to stoop or kneel down. These shelves may be made of common pine (well seasoned, of course), or of black walnut. They may be finished with narrow lambrequins, scalloped at the bottom; fringe is not desirable in a common room, as it catches dust. A shelf similar to one of those is especially convenient in the dining room. I saw one placed about as high as the top of a sideboard; it held a pretty tete-a-tete set, and was an ornament to the room. This was covered with cretonne, and had a band of the same for a lambrequin.

Kitchen Keramics.

An old-fashioned "plum cake" is made of one pound each of butter, sugar and flour, ten eggs, one pound of raisins, half a pound each of currants and of sliced citron, a teaspoonful of ground cloves, one of mace, one nutmeg, the juice and grated peel of a lemon, half of a coffee cup of New Orleans molasses. Beat the butter until it is soft and creamy, then add the sugar. Beat the whites and yolks of the eggs separately; stir the yolks in with the butter and sugar; stir the flour in gradually (having first mixed one heaping teaspoonful of cream of tartar with it). When the flour is about half worked in, put in a half teaspoonful of soda dissolved in as little water as it is possible to use; then add the whites of the eggs, and lastly the fruit, which is well covered with the rest of the flour. Bake in a large tin, with a buttered paper on the sides as well as on the bottom; it will need to bake slowly for five hours. Then, do not attempt to lift from the tin until it is perfectly cold. This should be made several days before it is used.

A pretty ornament for a desk is made by taking three penholders with pens in them, and painting or gilding them; then tie them together with a narrow ribbon, and arrange them so that they will stand upright like an easel; to this may be attached one of the pretty little gilt or silver buckets which can be bought at almost any store where fancy goods are kept; if a tiny chain is not already fastened to the bucket, it can be tied to the easel with ribbon. This is intended to hold pens. The little easel may be used as a frame for a Christmas card if you choose; the card can be fastened by means of a cord matching in color the fringed edge of the card.

This is the way the Massachusetts cook makes her lemon pies: One lemon, seventeen tablespoonfuls of sugar and three eggs; grate the yellow rind of the lemon and squeeze the juice of the lemon on the sugar; to this add the yolks of the eggs, which should be beaten till light; cover a plate with a rich paste, putting a ring around the edge; fill with the above mixture, and bake till the crust is done. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff broth, beating in a little powdered sugar; spread this on the top of the pie when it is done, and let it brown.

Browned kidneys make an excellent dish for the breakfast table. Melt some butter in a sauce pan, and when brown put in slices of kidney, cut thin and rolled in flour; if you do not cut the slices thin they should be cooked for five minutes before they are rolled in flour. One reason why kidneys in the various ways they may be cooked are not generally liked, is simply because they are frequently served when about half cooked, and there are few stomachs capable of digesting a raw kidney. If onion is an agreeable flavor, put a few bits in the melted butter.

Nice salad can be made by using veal, and the inexperienced housewife may be reminded that there is as much difference in veal as in beef or chickens. For the salad, choose a firm and lean piece, boil it until it is tender, and then proceed as if you are making chicken salad. It is a good plan to prepare this some day when you are to have chicken for dinner; then the veal can be boiled in the same kettle and will be flavored with the chicken broth. Reserve some of the broth when making gravy for the chicken to moisten the salad with.

An Indian pudding made after this recipe, although unlike the Indian pudding of our fathers, is delicious: Take four eggs, and the weight of three of them in meal, half a pound of sugar and a quarter of a pound of butter, and the juice and grated rind of one lemon. Beat the sugar and butter together till light, then break the eggs in the dish with them and beat briskly; then stir in the meal. Bake in a quick oven; serve in saucers, and pour over it some thin jelly or jam, or wine sauce.

In place of any known preparation sold under the name of "baby powder," use some fine starch. Put a few lumps in a cup and pour over it enough cold water to dissolve it. After you are sure it is dissolved, let it stand until the starch has all settled and the water is clear; then turn the water off. Let the starch dry, and then powder it and put it in a soft muslin bag, through which it will sift out. This is very healing and answers admirably any purpose the powder is supposed to do.

Port wine jelly is very nourishing and refreshing for an invalid. Put one ounce or one package of gelatine and an equal quantity of white sugar in about a gill of cold water; let this heat gradually, and stand on the back of the stove until the gelatine is entirely dissolved; then take it from the fire and add one pint of port wine; strain through a flannel jelly bag. When cold it will be found to be of the right consistency.

It is a good plan when making dresses for a very small boy to make two pairs of sleeves. Jonah's gourd did not grow faster than do the arms of a healthy infant, and it is frequently a cause of dismay when dresses that should be worn for six months answer only for three. It is a simple matter to rip out the small sleeves and sew in the large ones if they are already made.

Do not throw away the bones of turkey or chicken. Crack them and let them boil for two or three hours in a little water; put in also any nice bits of the fowl that are left, particularly the neck, which is never eaten. To this add any soup stock you have, and with a little barley or sago, you will have a nourishing soup. Season with pepper, salt, and any herbs you choose.

The housewife who made her first attempt at making "home made" wine this year, and who, while unwilling to acknowledge defeat, still does not exhibit it with any degree of pride, may still triumph over disaster, for unless there is something radically wrong about them, these wines can be used with excellent effect in pudding sauces and in the cheaper kinds of fruit cakes.

Soft gingerbread, if eaten while fresh and warm, may well take the place of more expensive cake. One egg, one cup of molasses, one-third of a cup of melted butter, one-half cup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of ginger, two and one-half cups of flour and a little salt; dissolve the soda in a very little hot water. Bake in a buttered tin.

A good way to remove dust from a carpet is to fasten a damp cloth over the broom; with this the dust may be literally taken up. This will be found useful in the sick room, and also in any room where there are many small articles to catch dust. It brightens a carpet to wipe it off in this way even after the usual sweeping has been done.

Corn pone is highly recommended as a breakfast dish. Take one heaping coffeecup of boiled hominy, beat it, and stir in a tablespoonful of butter, three eggs, and nearly one pint of sweet milk; as much corn meal may be added as will serve to thicken this till it is like the batter for "johnnycake." Bake this in a quick oven and serve hot.

Here is a suggestion which should be borne in mind: When you have the woodwork in a room painted, it is a good plan to have about two inches of the floor painted also; have the paint the same color as that of the baseboard; then if, when changing carpets, the carpet will not come close to the wall, the little space left will not be so unsightly.

Oilcloth may be kept bright when almost worn out if, after washing it, you take a flannel cloth and dip a corner of it in kerosene and rub the oilcloth with it. Of course, a very little oil goes a great way, and care must be taken not to use too much.

To keep pudding sauce warm, if prepared too long before dinner is served, set the basin containing it in a pan or pail of boiling water; do not let the water boil after the sauce-dish is set in it, but keep it hot.

If before you put rolls in the tin to bake them you rub the edges with a little melted butter, you will not be troubled by their sticking together when baked, and the edges will be smooth.

A simple but delicious dish for dessert is made by cutting up oranges in small pieces and then pouring over them some rich boiled custard. Serve with cake.

When boiling cabbage, put a slice of salt pork in the water; and an agreeable flavor, with no objectionable grease or fat, will be given to the cabbage.

Household Hints.

To extract ink from cotton, silk, or woolen goods, dip the spots in spirits of turpentine and let it remain for several hours; then rub thoroughly between the hands, and it will disappear without changing either the color or texture of the fabric.

To remove claret stains, spread a little salt over the stain while fresh; if the stain is an old one, wet it and rub on the spot pulverized chalk and salt, and lay it in the sun. Repeat this process, keeping it damp, until it is all out.

A strong solution of alum and lye water, applied with a paint brush to furniture or cracks in the wall where moths, bedbugs, or other vermin have found a hiding place, is said to destroy them.

An ounce of sugar of lead, dissolved in a pail of water, will set the color of goods liable to fade, if soaked in it. It is a poison, however, and should be used with care.

Ivory is best cleaned with alcohol. Piano keys should never be washed with soap suds. Hot water and soap are also ruinous to handsome ivory-handled knives.

One tablespoonful of bromo-chloralum to eight of soft water makes an excellent deodorizer, and will purify the room of any offensive smells.

Hair brushes and combs may be cleansed nicely by using a little borax in water. Spirits of ammonia is also good for the same purpose.

Ink stains may be removed from linen by applying melted tallow to the stained part, and then washing.

Ocean Steamers Overdue.

New York Special, 31st: The following steamships are overdue: The St. Olaf, which left Newcastle for this port on Dec. 26, 1882; the Rhodora, from Marseilles, Jan. 6; the Amaryllis, from Gibraltar, Jan. 7; the Crane, from Leith, Jan. 8; the Argosy, from Liverpool, Jan. 8; the Macedonia, from Newcastle, Jan. 9; the Frija, from Havre, Jan. 11; the Marengo, from Hull, Jan. 11; the Otranto, from Hull, Jan. 11; the Castor, from Amsterdam, Jan. 11; the Rotterdam, from Rotterdam, Jan. 13; the Leerdam, from Plymouth, Jan. 15. The agents of these vessels do not feel alarmed, as they think bad weather has been the only cause of delay. The Alaska, of the Guion line, which arrived to-day, was due here last Monday. She encountered a series of very severe gales, which prevented her from making her usual progress.

Croup, diphtheria and whooping cough get prompt relief and rapid cure, by the use of Kurakoff, the wonderful pine remedy.

THE LITTLE MISSIONARY.

I have met her many mornings
With her basket on her arm,
And a certain subtle charm,
Coming not from her adornings,
But the modest light that lies
Deep within her shaded eyes.

And she carries naught but blessing,
As she journeys up and down
Through the never-needing town,
With her looks the ground caressing;
Yet I know her steps are bent
On some task of good intent.

Maiden, though you do not ask it,
And your modest eyes may wink,
I will tell you what I think:
Queens might gladly bear your basket,
If they could appear as true
And as good and sweet as you.

ALES FOR TODDLERS.

What Once Happened in a Garden.

Many hundred years ago there was a king who owned a beautiful garden, in which all sorts of beautiful flowers grew. The queen and her little prince used to walk in this garden every pleasant day. There was a high wall around it, and in one corner, close to the wall, there sprang up a plain little plant, which looked like a common weed. For a long time no one in the place knew that the weed was in the garden.

The flowers were not kind to it; the bright red roses would not look at it, and the tall white lilies felt that it had no right in a king's garden. But the little plant stayed there and grew, and one day, when it had grown quite large, a little ugly worm crawled up its stem.

"The rose and the lily both shook me off," said the worm, "so I have come to you."

"What do you want of me?" said the weed, in a kind voice.

"A place to rest and something to eat," said the worm, "I feel as though I must have something to eat."

"Poor thing," said the weed, "I am sorry for you. See, I have plenty of leaves. Take just as many as you want."

So the hungry worm began to nibble the fresh, green leaves. How good they tasted! It ate and ate. By and by the worm grew sleepy, but the kind weed did not try to shake the tired creature off. The worm stayed many days, for the kind weed did not like to send it away. It grew very plump and round, as it ate all the time. It was also a pretty color; one could almost see through it.

At last the worm began to spin a web around itself and from leaf to leaf. The weed wondered what that strange visitor would do next. The worm spun round and round without stopping, the threads coming out of its mouth. They grew finer and whiter and the web grew thicker and thicker. In shape this web began to look like a bird's egg.

"I do believe it is building itself a little house," said the weed, "and means to stay here always."

By and by the worm was shut up in the soft little house it had spun for itself.

There was no door, no window, and the worm came out no more.

A few days after this the queen was walking up and down the garden in the shade of the high wall. One of the little princes was with her. He saw the weed in the corner and ran to pull it up. There must be no tall weed like that in his father's beautiful garden. But, as he put out his hand to pull it up, he saw a curious white ball among the leaves. What could be? He picked it of carefully and carried it to the queen, but she had never seen anything like it. She shook it up and down in her hands, and something seemed to rattle inside the ball.

She was standing on one of the pretty bridges of the garden, and as she turned to go back to the palace, the soft little ball rolled out of her hand and dropped into the stream below. The little prince ran down the bank to find his pretty plaything. He waded into the water and caught the tiny ball before it floated out of sight. But something had happened to it. Had the water opened it? There was a hole in one end, and a long fine thread hanging out at the other end. This thread began to unwind just like a kite string, and then a pretty little butterfly came out. It brushed against his hand. It must have been fast asleep inside the ball. The little prince ran up the bank and told his mother. They took the wonderful ball to the palace, and wise men came from far and near to see it. It was the first silk worm's cocoon that had ever been unrolled. This worm was a little silk worm, and the thread it spun into the web was a silk thread. Such a web is called a cocoon. There are about 13,000 yards or nearly seven and a half miles of silk in one cocoon.

In a few years the whole garden was planted full of weeds, like the one that had fed the hungry silk worm. This weed was a young mulberry bush. It had no beauty like the rose and lily; its fruit was not worth much; but its leaves were the right kind of food for the precious spinners; so the proud roses and lilies had to move out and make room for the useful weed.

Norwegian Snowshoe Racing.

One of the most popular winter sports in Norway is skee racing. A steep hill is selected by the committee which is to have charge of the race, and all the best skee runners in the district enter their names, eager to engage in the contest. The track is cleared of all accidental obstructions, but if there happens to be a stone or wooden fence crossing it the snow is dug away on the lower side of it and piled up above it. The object is to obtain what is called a "jump." The skee runner, of course, coming at full speed down the slope will slide over this "jump," shooting right out into the air and coming down either on his feet or any other convenient portion of his anatomy, as the case may be. To keep one's footing and, particularly, to prevent the skees from becoming crossed while in the air are the most difficult feats connected with skee racing; and it is no unusual thing to see even an excellent skee runner plunging headlong in the snow, while his skees pursue an independent race down the track and tell the spectators of his failure. Properly speaking, a skee race is not a race—not a test of speed, but a test of skill; for two runners rarely start simultaneously, as in the case one of them should fall the other could not possibly stop, and might not even have the time to change his course. He would thus be in danger of running into his competitor, and could hardly avoid maiming him seriously. If there were several parallel tracks, at a distance from twenty to thirty feet from each other, there would, of course, be less risk in having the runners start together. Usually, a number fall in the first run, and those who have not fallen then continue the contest until one gains the palm. If, as occasionally happens, the competition is narrowed down to two, who are about evenly matched, a proposal to run without staves is apt to result in a decisive victory for one or the other. It can be conceived how exciting these contests are, not only to the skee runners themselves, but, also, to the spectators, male and female, who gather in groups along the track and cheer their friends as they pass, waving their handkerchiefs and greeting with derisive cries the mishaps which are inseparable from this sport.

Champion Pigeon Shooters Matched.

The arrangements for the great pigeon match between Capt. A. H. Bogardus and Dr. W. F. Carver have been completed, and it will be shot at Louisville, Ky., on Thursday, Feb. 22. The match is for $500 a side, and Bogardus has already deposited that amount with Dr. N. Rowe, editor of the American Field, who has notified Carver of the fact. The Field of next Saturday will contain the articles of agreement, duly signed, fifteen in number, and which may be summarized as follows: The match will be at 100 pigeons each, on Feb. 22, at Louisville, for $500 a side, the winner to receive the $1,000 from Dr. N. Rowe as soon as the match is decided. The admission to the ground will be from $1 to $5, the winner to receive the whole. Two hundred and twenty-five birds will be furnished by a man mutually agreed upon, and the expense will be evenly divided. The traps will be ground traps, five in number, thirty yards from the shooter, and five yards apart, the puller or pullers of the traps to be appointed by the referee. The birds must be retrived by a dog or man mutually agreed upon, and the audience shall be kept twenty-five yards behind the shooters. The shooting is to begin at 1 o'clock, and the match will be finished in one day if possible. In case of a tie the referee must determine the time and place of finishing, but there must be no draw. The forfeit will be $250, independent of the stake money. The stakes, $1,000 each, must be in the hands of the stakeholder on Feb. 19. The boundary is to be eighty yards unless the match takes place in a regular shooting ground, when the fence is to be the boundary. The weight of the gun must not exceed eight pounds, the charge of powder four drams, and the charge of shot one and a quarter ounces by actual weight. All questions arising, not provided for in the articles, will be decided by the referee according to London Gun Club rules.

THE FARMERS' COURSE.

Prof. Arnold Dispels Popular Delusions on the Butter and Cheese Question, and Gives the People a Few Points.

The third week of the Farmers' Lecture course at the Agricultural college, Minneapolis, was brought to a close yesterday. Prof. L. B. Arnold lectured in the morning, taking for his topic, Cheese; Its Nature and Value as Food.

Before taking up the subject of cheese, Prof. Arnold referred to the matter of artificial coloring of butter, which he said might be done without injuring its quality. Butter was at one time colored with carrot juice, but it was found that the organic matter carried into the butter would soon decompose and the butter was spoiled. Then a preparation of annatto, with sal-soda and potash, was used; this was put into the cream when the churning was done, and it would color the butter, but it would also color the buttermilk. That was used very extensively and is to a considerable extent now, but it never should be. A preparation is now used, made by dissolving the coloring matter, usually the pure extract of annatto, or tumeric or saffron, in water, then some pure oil is mixed with it and the whole boiled until the water is evaporated, leaving the coloring in the oil. Lard oil is very commonly used and makes an excellent coloring. He also said that to make a success in dairying the creamery system should by all means be adopted.

The lecturer then proceeded to discuss the subject of cheese-making. In this country, he said, the manufacture of cheese is small compared with that of butter. We make annually over 800,000 pounds of butter, and only about 270,000 pounds of cheese. The manufacture of cheese has never flourished, and probably never will until some change of method is made from that which is now pursued. As now made, cheese is not so wholesome as most other food. It is extremely concentrated, and contains both the fats and the albumenoids of the milk. One of the first things in the manufacture of cheese is the rennet, the importance of which has never been properly recognized. Cheese makers, as a rule, seem to hold the opinion that it is used simply to

REGULATE THE MILK.

But this is one of its smallest functions. Cheese-making is a process of digestion, and rennet is necessary to do the digesting. After we get the albuminous matter into the curd and the water separated from it, and it is seasoned and ready for the press and put into the curing room, it is then to undergo a change, and that change is produced by rennet. It acts as a digestive agent to render soluble the curd, which would otherwise be insoluble. Curd as first formed, especially curd made by alum or alcohol, or by any acid, is very difficult of digestion. The modes of making cheese have been entirely empiric. Scarcely a single cheese-maker can tell why he does a single thing in the whole process of cheese-making. Prof. Arnold then proceeded to describe his method. The process is one of digestion. We start, said he, with the idea that the action of digestion is most rapid at blood heat; the gastric juice is made to act with its greatest efficiency at the natural temperature of the animal body. If the temperature raises above or sinks below this point it acts feebly. I use rennet enough to produce coagulation in night and morning's milk mixed, at 90 deg., in fifteen minutes. Ninety deg. is about the proper temperature. After it has got quite hard, cut it so that the whey will separate rapidly. By cutting it very fine while it is soft, the whey separates much more rapidly and thoroughly. By leaving it as long as you can before cutting it, the curd and whey will separate so imperfectly that you will get a very soft, dauby cheese. There is a medium time in which to cut to expel the right proportion of whey. After cutting it, and getting out the right proportion of whey, the temperature is raised to blood heat. The common practice is to let it lie in the whey until the whey becomes sour. This is wrong. It should be taken out of the whey before there is any sensible acidity developed in it. One of the most important agents in the maturing and flavoring of cheese is the free oxygen of the air.

THE CURING OF CHEESE

is not only a digesting, but an oxidizing process. Cured in the usual way, cheese requires thirty days to three months before it is fit to eat. Ordinarily, when taken from the press, it is covered with a coat of grease, and that shuts out the oxygen pretty effectually. The curing is retarded, it becomes covered with a hard rind and the flavor is developed very slowly. [The lecturer said his method is as follows:] Instead of taking the curd when it had reached the proper degree of firmness and immediately pressing it, it is finely pulverized, salted ready for the press, but instead of pressing, it is kept warm by exposure to the air and constantly stirring, and it will be ready for use in about forty-eight hours. It will do as much in forty-eight hours by this method as in forty-eight days by the usual process, and will be in the same condition for future preservation. There is some difficulty, however, in this process in deciding when the curd is in the best condition for pressing. It is best, after taking the curd out of the whey, to stir it fifteen or twenty minutes and allow it to ferment somewhat; let it air three hours and then press it. Lard is now much used to replace the butter contained in cheese, which, Prof. Arnold said, is a great saving and is very commendable, although there is now a prejudice against it. If the prejudice could be removed so that it could stand on its own merits it would make dairy farming "boom" right up. It would give two products from the milk instead of one. It is, however, not generally practiced, although those who do it are coining money.

The manufacture of sugar from the saccharine matter in the milk is carried on in Ohio on a large scale and is very profitable.

Prof. Arnold spoke at some length upon the preparation of rennets, and remarked that out of eighty factories which he examined only thirteen had rennet that was fit to use; they were unclean, sour and full of ferments.

He said that he used Bavarian rennets. The ends by which they are tied up should be trimmed off, the rennets split open and soaked in a pickle made by dissolving one pound of salt in twenty pounds of pure water.

In the afternoon Prof. Grange repeated his lecture on the Examination of the Horse for Soundness, illustrated with a living horse brought in before the audience. An outline of the lecture has already been published. The lectures will be continued next week, lectures and subjects to be announced.

Arthur Predicts a Lively Time.

Washington Special to the Chicago Herald: A politician who is on good terms at the White House said to the Herald correspondent to-night: "President Arthur is satisfied with the way things are shaping. There will be no change of policy, either one way or the other. The president believes that rest and quiet is all that is needed to restore the Republican party to perfect health. He recognizes that it was very sick a few months ago, but convalescence has set in, and it will be steady on its pins again before long. The president told me yesterday that the factional sores will be healed before 1884, and the party will sink all differences and wheel solidly into line for the presidential campaign. This feeling is taking possession of the leaders, and Democrats will be grievously mistaken if they imagine they have an easy victory before them. As to cabinet changes, nothing is contemplated at present, but I would not be surprised if the treasury and state departments have fresh and more vigorous heads before many months pass. Brewster is not as firm in his seat as he was. He cannot help making an occasional exhibition of himself, and will undoubtedly make one too many."

She Wouldn't Leave John.

Milwaukee Paper: The father of Ida Dean, who tried to get married on Sunday last to John Starr, with whom she eloped, arrived in Milwaukee from Belvidere, Ill., yesterday afternoon. He says that his daughter is only thirteen years of age, and that Starr betrayed the confidence placed in him in a shameful manner. Mr. Dean, however, admits that Starr was a faithful and efficient worker, and says that the story that Starr robbed him of a large sum previous to the elopement is false. Mr. Dean had a long interview with his daughter in the office of the Humane society, and the result was that Ida positively refuses to return to the parental home unless John accompanies her. The father is in a quandary what to do, because the girl is evidently too young to enter upon marital happiness. Chief Watson has advised the father not to blight the girl's whole life by prosecuting Starr, for whom she manifests so strong an affection.

Sharks of Whom Soldiers Should Beware.

Washington Special to the Chicago Herald: The postmaster has directed that money orders and registered letters be not delivered to Gazzan & Co., 2250 Third avenue, New York, and Gilmore & Gilmore, 629 F street, Washington, D. C. The former firm issued circulars stating that soldiers and other persons could by an agent as well as in person enter lands upon the bounty act, etc. They also purported to have special facilities in securing arrearages of pensions. The latter firm held out the same inducements, and it is evident that the firms are connected. Both required payment in advance, and are declared frauds because they hold out inducements not offered by the government of the State, and what is expressly prohibited by the land laws.

Why run any risk with your cough, cold hoarseness, or indeed any pulmonary or bronchial complaint, when a remedy safe, thorough, and so easily obtained as Dr. D. Jayne's Expectorant can be had? If you have contracted a severe cold, save your lungs from the dangerous irritation and inflammation, which frequently brings about consumption, by promptly resorting to the Expectorant; and if troubled with any affection of the throat, you will find this remedy equally effectual in affording relief from obstructing phlegm, and in healing the inflamed parts.

INTENTIONAL DUPLICATE EXPOSURE

DEFECTIVE PAGE

Polk County Journal.

[illegible]

CROOKSTON, ... MINNESOTA.

NEWS CONDENSED.

WASHINGTON NEWS NOTES.

A friendly suit will soon be brought by Attorney General Brewster against the Union Pacific Railroad company to settle the point whether or not the cost of construction of new tracks and the equipment of the main line shall be deducted from gross earnings to decide the amount of net earnings. This is the ground taken by Judge Dillon and Sidney Bartlett, who represent the interest of the road, and the reverse is held by Secretary Teller and the United State commissioner. The amount claimed by the interior department is $901,837. Of this the company admits but $306,477. The company is in good shape to pay either sum, as it holds a $1,500,000 judgement against the United States for compensation for postal services.

A good many officers of the army are dissatisfied with some of the clauses of Senator Logan's bill reorganizing the army, and also with the amendments made to the army appropriation bill, and quite a strong opposition will no doubt be stirred up. Two of the amendments proposed to the appropriation bill is to reduce the army pay corps from fifty-four to forty by stopping any additional appointments until the minimun figure is reached, and abolish the office of assistant surgeon general.

The president is just now giving a good deal of attention to Miss Beckwith, a New York lady about twenty-six years of age. He has had several very nice little dinners at the white house in her honor, and her table at the Arlington house is all the while decorated with the choicest flowers of the white house conservatory. Friday the president arranged a little party for her benefit to make a visit to Mount Vernon, going on the government boat, the Dispatch.

Washington is wrought up over the mysterious movements of a millionaire senator, who orders four dozen quarts of champagne every two days, and sips the same in the solitude of his room. It is alleged that when he is hungry he paralyzes his appetite with champagne, instead of appeasing it with substantial solids. He is expected shortly to tackle snakes as a regular diet. His identity is not disclosed.

The war department has been formally informed by the interior department of the threatened invasion of the Indian Territory by Payne and his followers and ordered to drive them out. Information has been received by Secretary Teller that the invaders threaten to enter the Territory at one place while intending to go in at some other point.

The report that Mr. Windom is to succeed Frelinghuysen in the cabinet, on account of the retirement of the latter on the ground of ill health, lacks one important basis. Frelinghuysen is not likely to retire. He has recovered from his illness in a great measure and has resumed his official duties.

Nominations of postmasters: Gustav A. Drentzer, Sturgeon Bay, Wis.; William Francis, Ackley, Iowa; Charles W. Reynolds, Grundy Center, Iowa; F. W. Crane, Maquoketa, Iowa.

Major Strait will be on the alert to catch the speaker's eye this week, to get in his bill providing for three new land offices in Dakota, and there is promise that he may succeed.

Frank B. Conger, son of Senator Conger, has been appointed assistant postmaster of the District of Columbia.

Cash in the United States treasury at the opening of business Thursday, $318,785,631.

RAILROAD RUMBLINGS.

Work has been begun on the new Northern Pacific bridge to be constructed across the Red river at Moorhead.

CASUALTIES OF THE WEEK.

The following is a list of vessels stricken from the navy register under the provisions of the naval appropriation act of 1882, they being unfit for further service: Congress Guard, Kansas, Massachusetts, Sabine, Connecticut, Iowa, Oregon, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Florida, New Orleans, Colossus, Java, Susquehanna, Burlington, Supply, Antietam, Dictator, Frolic, Relief, Pawnee, Benecia Old Monadrock, Naragansett, Nyac, Saco, Tuscara, Worcester, Connadalgua, Shawmut, Savannah, Santee, Wheeling, and Roanoke. Most of the vessels mentioned will be broken on the stocks, while a few will be sold at auction.

Fire and flood wrought a terrible destruction to oil in Ohio and Pennsylvania Sunday. The standard works at Cleveland burned, and the flowing oil from exploding tanks, all aflame, rolled down an adjecent creek in dense volumes. At Oil City an overflow of the streams from recent rains and melting snow in the mountains submerged the lower part of the town to a depth of ten feet. Bradford was also inundated. More than a million dollars' worth of oil and property were destroyed by fire and water, and Titusville was also a sufferer.

O. Robinson, a traveling salesman in the employ of Messrs. D. M. Ferry & Co., seed dealers, at Detroit, Mich., died suddenly near Rockford. Mr. Robinson was observed to fall out of his sleigh into the snow and at first his companions thought he did so in a mere freak, but it was soon discovered that he was unconscious and very ill. He was carried into the farmhouse of Mr. Lawrence, but expired immediately afterward.

At Troy, N. Y., on Sunday, the immense five story building occupied by Burdett, Smith & Co., as a stove sales room; August Hoeltzer and N. Klein, collar manufactory, Kelly & Knox, insurance brokers, and the Mutual Union Telegraph office, was destroyed by fire. The tenants lost nearly everything, except Burdett, Smith & Co., whose stock of sample stoves was damaged only by water.

D. G. Hopkins of Kansas City says he didn't know it was loaded, and his pretty young wife was killed by the rusty old thing.

GENERAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

A. H. Devine, editor of the Billings Herald, was in St. Paul last week, when he met Delegate Maginnis, and from him obtained information as to what is being done in the matter of the Crow reservation. The major is confident that part of the reservation from its present western boundary to the Big Horn river will shortly be restored to the public domain. A bill for the appointment of a commissioner, to deal with the Indians, will be passed during the session of congress.

At Providence, R. I., during argument for a new trial in the cause of William J. King vs. The Quidneck Company, Gov. Butler commented severely upon the character of Deacon King. His counsel B. F. Thurston, responded with sharp personal allusions to Butler's career in New Orleans and elsewhere, which were sensational.

At the operatic festival at Cincinnati held recently, seven thousand persons were in the house, 3,000 standing. The crowd was so dense in the standing space that persons in seats couldn't get out between the acts. More than 1,000 couldn't get sight of the stage. Patti and Scolchie were called before the curtain four times at the end of the first act. Speculators on the street sold tickets at $10 and $15.

There are now of whisky in bond in the United States 80,000,000 gallons, and the banks of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and other cities who have made advances on this whisky aggregating $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 claim that they will be seriously embarrassed, if not seriously crippled, unless congress affords them the relief provided for in the pending bond bill.

Postoffices discontinued: Lewis, Madison county, [illegible] shall to [illegible]. Postmasters commissioned: Mads Schmidt, New Liberty, Iowa; James L. Dent, Superior, Mont.; John G. Norton, Flambeau, Wis.; Peter L. Westlind, Wood River, Wis.

At the annual meeting of the society for the prevention of vice in New York, Anthony Comstock stated that during the year he had seized six tons of gambling furniture and apparatus, and made 118 arrests for offenses against decency.

Reports from the cattle ranges in Wyoming indicate that while there has yet been no loss from the storm and the deep snow, there will be unless the wind shall rise and waft the snow from the ranges.

The Michigan republicans will hold a state convention at East Saginaw on the 58th inst., to nominate supreme court judges and regents of the university.

Frank Speight, an old newspaper compositor of St. Paul, was found dead Sunday in a lodging house. Cause intemperance.

The United States fish commissioner has deposited 250,000 white fish and lake trout eggs in lake St. Croix.

The Montana legislative deadlock was broken on the seventeenth day of the session.

RECORD OF CRIME.

Samuel Raymond, who was captured in Chicago and committed to the Dane county jail at Madison Wis., last December by R. D. Sherman, United States marshall of the Northern district of Illinois, charged with robbing the Milton Junction postoffice escaped last Saturday evening by sawing his way through the ceiling to the garret and gaining liberty by means of a skylight. The prisoner was a professional cracksman, and had a saw concealed in the hollow heel of his shoe. His absence was not discovered for twenty-four hours. He was awaiting trial at the June term of the United States court.

The vigilants at Weeksville, a railroad camp wast of Missoula on the Northern Pacific, in Montana, rose upon their wrath, and five rustlers died with their boots on while pulling hemp. The visitation of frontier justice must remind the old timers of territorial days, when they worked off objectionable characters by the dozen. Others of these rustlers will take the short line across the divide unless they quiet down.

At Worcester, Mass., Jan. 31, Franklin Pierce, claiming to be a physician, was held in $3,000 for manslaughter, in causing the death of Mrs. Barna Bemes of Oakdale. He treated her for internal erysipelas by bathing her in kerosene and rolling her up in bandages saturated with that oil. The woman was literally blistered and skinned alive, and died after a week of horrible suffering.

The defalcation of Treasurer Vincent of Alabama, amounts to $213,000. Representative Smith of Selma has been recommended for the succession. A reward of $5,000 is to be voted by the legislature for the apprehension of the fugitive Vincent, whom Pinkerton's thrifty detectives are already shadowing, waiting for legislative action before bagging their game.

William Guy, a clerk of the Halifax, N. S. banking company, being sent to the postoffice with a parcel containing $5,000, abstracted the money and substituted waste paper. He has been arrested and confessed his guilt.

The great state of Illinois endorses Sheridan's protest against special privileges in the National Park.

PERSONAL NEWS NOTES.

Prof. George Washington Greene died Saturday at Providence, R. I., aged seventy-two. He was a grandson of Gen. Nathaniel Greene. He was United States consul at Rome from 1837 to 1845, and for many years professor of modern language in Brown university, and wrote many historical and critical articles for the North American Review. He was an intimate friend of Longfellow, and was, when seized by this last illness, engaged on a biography of the poet.

Henry G Langley, the veteran compiler of Pacific coast statistics and of various directories, died at San Francisco, aged seventy years. He was an old New York journalist, having started the Morning News in conjunction with James O. Sullivan and Samuel J. Tilden. He was very prominently known on the coast and came to California in 1849.

Mrs. W. R. Robbins, Jr., of Schuylerville, has fallen heir to $125,000 by the death of her uncle, Joseph Millens of Manistee, Mich., a wealthy lumberman, who owned about 7,000 acres of timber land.

Hattie Master, a beautiful girl from the interior of Kentucky, arrested at Louisville on a charge of shoplifting, has become a raving maniac and is believed to be the victim of a base conspiracy.

Pastor John Nickum, of St. John's Evangelical Lutheran church, in Syracuse, N. Y., is embroiled in a pastoral quarrel with his people.

Kate Claxton is still confined to her bed in New York, suffering from severe cold, and general exhaustion.

A Jackson, Mich., special says Andrew Cutler, owner of the famous trotting stallion Black Cloud, is dead.

FOREIGN NEWS GOSSIP.

London Cable: The low lying country in the central and western parts of Ireland, particularly Tipperary and Queens counties, was inundated. At Waterford on Saturday night great damage was done to property. Several old houses were blown down, and the harbor was crowded with vessels seeking shelter. At Ennis the principal streets are flooded, the river Fergus having overflowed its banks. The main thoroughfare looks like a canal, and all business is suspended. The effects of the storm in the neighborhood of Enniskillen have been very great. Much damage has been done to the town. The waters of Lough Erne reached a great height, and the river Doe overflowed its banks. In the vale of Llangollen many acres of land have been submerged. The inmates of the houses flooded by the waters had to leave their houses and find places of safety.

Jennings, London, Special: In the best informed circles here the state of affairs across the channel in France is looked upon with great and steadily increasing distress, and it is feared that the manifest weakness of the government, and the absence of any central and commanding man around whom to rally in case of emergency, may provoke disturbances that may not be easily quelled. The friends of the amiable and popular princes of the house of the Orleans are very anxious to see them safely out of harm's way. Especially are apprehensions entertained on account of the duke of Aumale, whose immense and priceless collection at Chantilly may at any moment be placed in jeopardy. Whenever the bill passes depriving the princes of civil rights, the socialists and communists need but little more encouragement to make an attack upon their property.

Dublin Dispatch: It is believed the government has accepted the evidence of men engaged in the Phoenix park plot. The ranger of the park has resigned, and is under police protection. He is not sure he can identify more than two persons. There was a hitch in the signaling along the park at the time of the murders caused by one of the men appointed to signal neglecting to wave a handkerchief. It is believed that this man had been killed because of supposed treachery. It is stated that the police discovered and frustrated a plot to murder Judge O'Brien on Sunday [illegible]

The compt de Paris is waiting in dignified reserve the action of the French republic on royalist prescription with one eye on the United States, for whose liberal republican institutions he professes the profoundest respect. He, and all the members of the Orleans family who have property interests at stake in France very naturally feel it to be a hardship that they should suffer from the foolish ambition of the imperialists who still dream of retrieving the family fortunes.

The new French cabinet, so far as agreed upon, is as follows: President of the council of foreign affairs, Fallieres; minister of justice, Deves; minister of public instruction, De Vaux; minister of finance, Tirard; minister of war, Thebaudin; minister of marine, De Maldy; minister of posts and telegraphs, Cochery; minister of commerce, Legrande.

De Geirs, on reassuming of the Russian foreign office, issued a circular to Russian representatives abroad explaining that the result of his personal exchange of opinion with the German, Austrian and Italian foreign ministers is satisfactory and tends to the preservation of peace.

The London Times says the fact that Gladstone will return to London at the end of next week is very satisfactory, as just after his arrival at Cannes the doctors held a consultation as to whether it would not be necessary for him to prolong his holiday until after Easter.

The English cabinet, as now constituted, consists of fourteen members—seven peers and seven commoners. The average age of the peers in the cabinet is nearly sixty, and that of the commoners a little over fifty-four, giving the whole cabinet an average age of fifty-seven.

Switzerland has rejected the naturalization treaty proposed by the United States, according to which nationality is forfeited by residing for a certain period abroad, on the ground that this clause of the treaty is contrary to Swiss law.

The new Dakota slate is J. M. Teller, territorial secretary; Mr. Cameron, of New York, justice, Deadwood district; Charles G. Williams, Wisconsin, register land office, Watertown; J. Jorgenson, receiver, Fargo.

The Dublin papers are advertising for the lost heir to an estate worth £10,000 per year.

The big hotel at Rockaway Beach, L. I., was sold for $76,000.

A "Mutual Investment" Swindle Exposed.

Chicago Special: The so-called commission firms of Fleming & Merriam, R. Kendall & Co., Charles J. Henry & Co., Cudworth & Co., and Bennet Kalzmann & Co., which have victimized thousands of countrymen during the past year, have met with a check in the shape of an order from the postmaster general forbidding the delivery of letters and payment of money orders to them. The firms have flooded the country with circulars advertising their ability to pay liberal dividends on all moneys placed in their hands for investment, and it has been found that their daily receipts for the first twenty days in January were $10,000 to $12,000. Over $20,000 in money orders and registered letters lies in the postoffice which would have gone into their coffers had not the postmaster general interfered. The number of persons who have been led by the extravagant promises of these houses to go into the "Mutual Investment clubs" is simply astonishing. Between Jan. 1 and Jan. 20 Fleming & Merriam received 775 registered letters, which probably enclosed at least $10 each and also 820 money orders for $20,419. Since the 20th they have drawn out as much more. Kendall & Co., have taken out about two-thirds as much and the other three firms about one-third. The postoffice department has been flooded with letters of inquiry coming from Canada, Iowa Illinois, North Carolina and all over the country.

Not Affected by Age.

Some old specimens of Royal Baking Powder that had been kept on the shelf of a grocery store for ten years were recently tested by Prof. Schedler of New York, for the purpose of measuring the loss of strength they had undergone. It was found that, although the powder had been exposed to atmospheric changes during all this time—its loss of raising power or strength was less than one per cent. the powder being practically as good as the day it was put up.

This is a most valuable quality in a baking powder, one which few possess. Most powders if not used when first made are found to be ineffective. If kept even a few weeks they lose their leavening power, become lumpy or caked, and valueless.

This superior keeping quality in the "Royal" arises from the extraordinary care in its manufacture, and the scientific principles employed in its combination. The articles used in its composition are thoroughly dried by heat before being compounded, and are so prepared and coated as to prevent the action of the acid upon the alkali prematurely or except under the influence of heat or water necessarily used in cooking or baking.

The Royal is now used extensively in Australia, Africa, and other low latitudes, where it has been found to be the only baking powder that will withstand the hot, moist atmosphere without deterioration.

A Rough Blizzard.

Nearly the whole northwest suffered a strong blizzard Tuesday; but fortunately the temperature was mild. The northwest was an area of low barometer, the highest—29.97—being at Bismarck. At that time Moorhead had had a snowfall of two inches, which was being sent spinning into the railroad cuts with a fourteen-mile-an-hour wind. Duluth's gentle zephyr attained a speed of twenty-two miles at the same time. Tuesday morning at 4:30 o'clock the storm center had reached St. Paul, and from that time until evening that point received the violence of the west end of the storm.

The severest wind storm of the winter has preval. 1 throughout Iowa. It is accompanied by a light snowfall, but there was no marked fall of temperature. The wind was northwest and blowed a severe gale.

The drifts on the highways, streets and railroads were the heaviest of the season.

Killed by his Wife.

In Bath township, Clinton county, Mich. David Clark, a farmer, was shot and instantly killed by his wife. The parties had lived unhappily for some years, often coming to blows. Their last disagreement arose from the wife's determination to administer medicine other than that prescribed by the attending physician to one of her children. The child's illness continued and grew worse, until she was supposed to be dying. While Clark was endeavoring to restore her to consciousness, his wife took a revolver from an adjoining room and deliberately shot her husband through the back. The murderess was arrested immediately afterward.

Suits have been instituted by the Rev. Dr. Hicks, late spiritual adviser of the talented Charles J. Guiteau, against the Evening Star of Washington and the Daily Graphic of New York, for $35,000 damages in each case. The grounds for the suit are alleged libel. The libel of the star consists of the publication of an interview with District Attorney Corkhill; that of the Graphic of an article in which it was charged that the reverend gentleman wanted pay for the bones of the departed murderer.

Rochester, Olmsted Co., was shocked Sunday morning by the announcement of the death of Robertson Comforth, one of the leading and influential citizens of Rochester. He was taken sick last Wednesday night with typhoid fever and died Sunday morning between 8 and 9 o'clock. He was born in [illegible], Franklin county, in 1825, and was fifty-eight years of age. He came to St. Paul in 1853, and from there to Rochester in 1857, and has resided there since. He leaves a wife and one child.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

Senate, Tuesday, January 30.

Bills were introduced: To authorize St. Paul to issue $40,000 of bonds for local improvement fund; to amend laws to allow savings banks to loan money in Dakota; to prevent recovery on promissory notes fraudulently obtained; to authorize state treasurer to transfer $35,000 from forestry fund to sinking fund. Bills were recommended passed by committees: Punishing carelessness of railway officials and employes; changing fiscal year of state institutions to end Jan. 31, and prescribing dates of reports. House bills to authorize Mankato to issue bonds, and to amend the act incorporating that city, were passed; also, senate bill for preservation of game. In committee of the whole the important bills recommended for passage were relating to the recording of chattel mortgages; prescribing punishment of murder in first degree; allowing district judges to incorporate villages.

House, Tuesday, January 30.

Bills were introduced: To amend the laws relative to minors holding real estate; to prevent fishing with a net in the Mississippi; to allow attorneys to collect statutory costs in justices' courts; amending the charter of New Ulm; to provide for the custody of bonds of state officers and the approval of same; providing for the custody of state funds; two bills defining the duties of the public examiner; amending the laws incorporating Wells, Faribault county; providing for the distribution of fish given the state by the general government; to increase the licenses for sale of liquors. The bill regulating the fees of the district court clerk, Kandiyohi county, was passed.

Senate, Wednesday, January 31.

Bills were introduced to provide for the platting of undescribed land; to appropriate $800 for a bridge in Douglas county; to amend the statues relating to appointment of court reporters; to allow Todd county to issue $25,000 in bonds.

Senate bills to amend rule as to statutory limitations in homesteads; relating to chattel mortgages given in other States; to punish murder in first degree by hanging—passed. House bill authorising Crow Wing county to issue $8,000 bonds to build a bridge at Brainerd—passed.

House Wednesday, January 31.

Bills were introduced: To annul the general statutes relating to the organization of villages; repealing the law for a district attorney in the Twelfth judicial district; repealing act for the publication of mortgage foreclosures; creating a board of correction and charities; the Baker railroad bill; making 8 per cent. the maximum rate of interest on mortgages; prescribing the effect of sheriffs' certificates of sales of mortgaged property; appropriating $5,000 annually for immigration; amending statutes relating to offenses against chastity; and several local acts.

Gen. Baker's railroad bill came into the house. Copies of the bill were introduced both by Mr. J. E. Child and Mr. M. Johnson, the printed copy of the senate bill answering the purposes of the gentlemen. A few changes are made in them however.

In section thirty in the clause relating to the building of warehouses, a clause is inserted providing that they shall be built "within reasonable distance from its freight depot." Sec. 39, relating to baggage weighing more than 250 pounds. A section is added making the railroads liable for the negligence of their employes for damages to co-employes, the same as provided in the Iowa law. Several verbal changes are also made.

Senate, Thursday, February 1.

Bills introduced: To reduce fees of registers of deeds; appropriating $5,000 to encourage tree-planting; to build bridges over Shell Rock river; to authorize the lowering of Dead lake outlet; to amend the charter of Washington.

House bills passed: Regulating clerk of court fees in Kandiyohi county; legalizing plat of village of Mandada; amending special laws as to drainage of Clear Lake, Waseca county.

Senate bills passed: Relating to summoning jurors; providing for repeal of charter of Worthington.

Adjourned.

House, Thursday, February 1.

Bills introduced: To regulate the operation of telegraph lines, and sundry bills for appropriations for bridges. Bills were passed: Amending statutes relating to attachments; the Bobleter military code bill; amending statutes relating to trials in justices' courts; making the revealing of contents of telegraph messages a penal offense; adding decoration day to the legal holidays; amending the statutes relating to highways; authorizing foreign accident insurance companies to do business in this state upon the same basis as other companies; amending the act relating to commitments to the reform school

Senate, Friday, February 2.

Bills introduced and passed: Authorizing Polk county to issue $40,000 in bonds; Renville county to issue $5,000 in bonds; to amend the act incorporating the Duluth fire department.

The house bill changing the name of Center, Murray county, to Slayton passed. The bill relating to chattel mortgages on grain was recommended to be passed.

Senator Clarke's forestry bill introduced, provides not only for an appropriation of $5,000 for the support of the state forestry association, but provides, also, methods by which tree planting shall be encouraged. The Forestry Manual is to be published, lecturers invited from abroad, the best information attainable as to the proper methods of arboriculture and the most hardy and thrifty species of trees procured and published, and part of the money may be expended in protecting the present plant.

This is the bill, purposes of which were recommended by Gov. Hubbard in his message, and the measure is ardently supported by all the arboriculturists in the state, as well as those who are members of the forestry association.

House, Friday, February 2.

Bills were introduced to establish the county of Hubbard, to amend the general statutes relating to boards of health; two bills amending the general law relating to villages; authorizing the city of St. Paul to pay $2,000 to the widow and orphans of Policeman O'Connell; authorizing the building of a bridge across the Mississippi at Brainerd; fixing the salary of the military storekeeper at $1,200; limiting the amount of incidental expenses to be allowed any department of state; authorizing chambers of commerce and boards of trade.

Senate, Saturday, February 3.

To require attorney general to bring suit against delinquent corporations; to provide for contesting elections in school districts, &c.; to appropriate $12,551.05 for expenses in Cox impeachment trial; for assessors for unorganized territory in counties.

Important bills passed relating to health of female employes; authorizing state treasurer to transfer funds; punishing negligent railway employes; changing fiscal year and time of making offical reports; authorizing St. Paul to issue $50,000 in bonds to complete high school; Senate adjourned to Tuesday, to allow members to attend the Sabin reception at Stillwater on Monday.

House, Saturday, February 3.

House.—Bills were introduced: Requiring the reports of state banks when called for; amending the statutes relating to cartways, roads and bridges; to reimburse Douglas county for expenses in a small pox spurge; authorizing Norman county to issue $10,000 of bonds; appropriating $8.0 for the expenses of the lunacy commission; and sundry local bills.

House bills passed: to pay the claim of J. B. Sanborn; changing time for making insurance reports; amending statues relating to lien dockets of United States Courts. Senate bills passed—Relating to the punishment of the crime of larceny. Adjourned.

THE JOINT CONVENTION.

Hon. Dwight M. Sabin of Stillwater the Successor of Windom.

On Tuesday 30th, the legislature reconvened after an intermission of three days, but many members were absent on account of the railroad blockade, and therefore the senatorial ballot was without significance. It stood—Windom, 39; Wilson, 29; Cole, 11; Hubbard, 9; Dunnell, 7; Kindred, 5; Start, 4; Farmer, 3; Davis, 3; Wakefield, 2; Berry, 1; Castle, 1; Strait, 1; Donnelly, 1. Total, 116; necessary to a choice, 59.

On Wednesday, 31st, something of a sensation was caused by the advent of D. W. Sabin as a senatorial candidate, but it was of short duration as his vote was not so large as expected. Three ballots were taken as follows:

First ballot—Windom, 40; Wilson, 31; Sabin, 17; Cole, 13; Hubbard, 10; Dunnell, 5; Start, 3; Farmer, 3; Davis, 2; Wakefield, 2; scattering, 5; total, 131. Second ballot—Windom, 40; Wilson, 31; Sabin, 22; Cole, 10; Hubbard, 14; Dunnell, 5; Start, 3; Wakefield, 2; Scattering, 5; total, 132. Third ballot—Windom, 38; Wilson, 30; Sabin, 22; Cole, 10; Hubbard, 18; Dunnell, 3; Start, 4; Wakefield, 2; scattering, 5; total, 132.

On the second ballot Messrs. Gotzian, Gray and Sadley, who had voted for Cole, went to D. M. Sabin. Senator Langdon, who had voted for Windom, and Senator Peterson, who had voted for Hubbard, went to Sabin.

Senator Sergeant and Representatives Baarnaas and Greer, who had voted for Farmer, went to Hubbard. Representatives Grimshaw and O. Peterson, who voted for Davis, went to Hubbard.

On the third ballot Mr. Billson, who had voted for Windom, Mr. O'Brien, who had voted for Dunnell, and Senator Peterson, who voted for Sabin on the second ballot, and Mr. Potter, who had voted for Dunnell went to Hubbard.

Mr. Boardman, who had voted for Windom, went to Sabin.

On Thursday, Feb. 1st, the dead lock was broken about 4 p. m. on the 7th ballot and Dwight May Sabin having received 81 votes from a total of 137 was declared by Speaker Fletcher, in manner and form as provided, senator from Minnesota for the term of six years next ensuing from March the 4th of the present year.

The balloting proceeded up to the fifth without any material change from those preceding, when, at last, the Sabin roster went up to thirty-nine by the time the last name was reached. As the clerk was about to announce the result Senator Castle (dem.) rose and said that in pursuance to a resolution adopted in the democratic caucus that when any candidate other than Mr. Windom should receive thirty-five votes the democrats should consider themselves absolved from caucus obligations, he wished to change his vote from Thomas Wilson to D. M. Sabin.

A number of changes were made. The Sabin vote on the sixth ballot came four short of enough to elect, and the excitement became intense. Senator Waite moved to adjourn and called for the ayes and noes. The roll was called and when Mr. Sabin's name was reached he made his appearance from the cloak room to vote in the negative. The motion was lost by 77 to 70.

After a good deal of fillibustering and dilatory motions, the previous question was carried and the convention proceeded to vote. The changes did not cease with a bare majority and the Sabin column rolled up to eighty-one by the time the roll call closed, thirty democrats having gone to him. Mr. Hill, a democrat, stated when his name was called that he wanted to vote to relieve the republican family and break the deadlock, and he should vote for Sabin.

The vote was announced and a long, loud, glad round of applause went up from floors, galleries and lobbies.

The following is the last and decisive ballot in detail:

FOR D. M. SABIN.

Ackerman,
Blake,
Buckman,
Castle,
Christensen,
Compton,
Comstock,
Craig,
Crosby,
Doran,
Gilfillan, C. D.,
Griggs,
Hollister,
Johnson,
Langdon,
Peck,
Peterson,
Rice,
Sackett,
Sergeant,
Shalleen,
Steenerson,
Vollmer,
Welch,
Anderson, H.,
Baarnaas,
Baker,
Baumgarten,
Becker,
Bell,
Boardman,
Bobleter,
Bobland,
Barck,
Brown,
Buck,
Capser,
Carson,
Child, E. A.,
Chisholm,
Gorniah,
Cullen,
Daniels,
Demeules,
Emery,
Frahm,
Frank,
Gotzian,
Gray,
Gregory,
Grimshaw,
Groetsch,
Halgren,
Hartley,
Hill,
Johnson, M.,
Johnson, W. H.,
Lenz,
Linnell,
McKusick,
McNamara,
Merriam,
Moore,
Morse,
Parker,
Patterson,
Paulson, H.,
Peterson, Ole,
Plummer,
Rahilly,
Randall,
Sadley,
Sampson,
Smith, James, Jr.,
Spaulding,
Stahlmann,
Stegeman,
Thayer,
Torgerson,
Van Dyke,
White—Total 81.

FOR WILLIAM WINDOM.

Chandler,
Greenleaf,
Pillsbury,
Wheat,
Batchelder,
Crawford,
Holmstrom,
Peterson, J. A.
Snow,
Thompson,
Fletcher, J. D. M.
Houlton,
Truax,
Anderson, W.
Bean,
Eude,
Lydiard,
Porter,
Strong,
Turrell,
Gilfillan, J. B.
McLaughlin,
Waitt,
Barker,
Collins,
Hicks,
Miller,
Smith, J.
Swenson,
Fletcher, L.—30.

FOR GORDON E. COLE.

Knudson,
Van Hoesen,
Ward,
Wilson,
Blackman,
Bormester,
Child, J. E.,
Dyar,
Finch,
Huleback,
Morris,
Mortenson,
Potter,
Seymour,
Wells—15

FOR LUCIUS F. HUBBARD.

Billson,
Lawrence,
O'Brien,
Cook,
Doyle,
Farrar,
Greer,
Paulson,
Sidener—9

OTHER CANDIDATES.

For James B. Wakefield—Goodrich.
For John L. Berry—Gordon M. Cole.

NOT VOTING.

Clarke,
Clement,
Hickman,
Morrison,
Sabin,
Washburn,
Dilley,
Jacklin,
Nelson,
Way—14.
Richardson,
Peterson John,
Peterson O.,
Richardson.

The speaker announced the election of Mr. Sabin in the usual form.

TOTALS OF BALLOTS.

The appended table shows the results of the thirty ballots taken, the first being by separate houses, and the others in joint session:

Ballots.	Windom.	Wilson.	Cole.	Dunnell.	Davis.	Kindred.	Hubbard.	Start.	Castle.	D. M. Sabin.	Dickinson.	Armstrong.	Gilman.	Berry.	Farmer.	Strait.	Wakefield.	Totals.
1	70	34	10	10	3	5	3	1	1	..	3	2	1	1	..	..	..	145
2	65	37	11	9	4	5	3	2	1	..	3	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	147
3	61	34	12	9	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	147
4	58	35	14	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	147
5	57	34	14	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	147
6	55	36	14	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	146
7	53	35	14	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	146
8	51	34	15	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	146
9	51	34	15	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	144
10	50	33	15	11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	143
11	48	32	17	10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	143
12	48	32	17	10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	139
13	44	26	16	10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	139
14	51	34	18	10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	128
15	51	32	17	10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	146
16	51	30	16	8	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	146
17	51	29	18	8	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	146
18	50	33	17	9	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	113
19	49	34	16	10	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	142
20	39	31	15	8	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	116
21	40	31	13	5	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	131
22	40	31	13	5	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	132
23	38	30	10	3	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	132
24	39	32	12	2	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	135
25	39	32	12	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	136
26	39	32	14	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	136
27	39	32	15	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	136
28	35	12	20	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	137
29	35	12	20	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	135
30	30	[illegible]	15	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	137

Dwight M. Sabin the New Senator.

Dwight May Sabin, the new senator elect from Minnesota, was born at Marsville, Ill., on the 25th of April, 1844. In 1856 the failing health of his father had imposed upon this lad of twelve years the entire supervision of the large farm and its variety of interests. The business qualities which he has since shown were there then, if partially in embryo; and for nearly a year this stripling managed affairs, to use a hackneyed phrase, "with neatness and dispatch." In 1857 continued ill-health induced his parents to sell out and remove to the home of their parents in Winsted, Conn., when eighteen years old Dwight attended the noted Phillips academy in Andover, and, under the tutelage of old "Uncle Doctor Taylor," paid special attention to mathematics and engineering. This was the only academical course he enjoyed. The war was raging and the call for troops was urgent. So in July, 1863, Dwight left for the seat of war, arriving on the field of Gettysburg on the second day of the fight. He had been promised and expected to receive a lieutenancy in the Eight Illinois cavalry, Col. Farnsworth commanding, but there was some unexpected hitch in the matter and pending its adjustment he was offered and accepted a position in the medical department. After the war he was a clerk in one of the departments for a brief period.

In 1867, he made a trip to Minnesota, returned to Connecticut and in 1868 again landed in St. Paul, and engaged in business at Stillwater. Before leaving Connecticut Mr. Sabin had given his heart to the keeping of Miss Ella Amelia Hutchins, of Norwich, Conn., and in 1870 as his business was already showing signs of the prosperity it was soon to insure, he returned to Connecticut and was married.

In 1870 he was elected state senator, and the next year re-elected. Mr. Sabin has served almost continuously, since, in the lower house, and will be much missed there. He is not a debater, but when he has the floor he has something to say, while his influence in the committee and with members individually is acknowledged great.

He was not in the legislature during the the Ramsey-Davis fight of 1875, resulting in the election of Mr. McMillan; but when Mr. Windom was re-elected to fill the unexpired portion of his own term in 1881, Mr. Sabin did him yeoman service, while in the fall of the same year, in the gubernatorial campaign he was recognized as the most potent factor in securing Gen. Hubbard's nomination. Persuasive of tongue, pheromenally cheerful under threatened defeat—he seems to know little of threatened disaster—his political career has been marked by a series of successes given to few men to attain.

Mr. Sabin is a man of great wealth, his personal income being set down at $100,000 per annum.

P. O. Stephens, of Wilmar has purchased the Barnes grain houses at Detroit and will erect a 30,000 bushel elevator.

At Madelia Henry Hudson was baptised on Thursday last by Mr. Stewart, a Campbellite preacher, by being immersed in the river through a hole cut in the ice.

Thomas Madden, of Wabasha, who was severely hurt last summer by a wreck on the Minneapolis & St. Louis road, has brought suit against the company to recover $25,000 damages for the injuries that he sustained.

Thomas Hatter, who burglarized a house near Zumbrota, was arrested at Northfield and confessed his guilt.

Foreign Gleanings.

The magnificent sarcophagus of the Duke of Wellington in the crypt of St. Paul's is one huge boulder of porphyry, weighing over seventy tons. Nearly the whole of it has been standing above ground for ages in the parish of Luxulion, Cornwall, and it is the actual fact that before it was selected the continent had been searched in vain for such a monolith.

The Prince of Wales proves himself possessed of one most valuable quality in a British monarch—one, too, in which his predecessors of the house of Brunswick, his mother included, have been wanting—political impartiality. Members of all parties are alike welcomed at Marlborough House and Sandringham. There are no cables or intrigues with this party or that, carried on by the present heir-apparent. It is not long since a pleasant trio breakfasted together at Paris, Sir Charles Dilke, the English radical, Leon Gambetta, the French radical, and H. R. H., the Prince of Wales, who likely enough dined that evening with some legitimist noble, and supped still later with a Bonapartist.

Louise Michel, is lecturing in London. The English find her to be quite a tame creature. Instead of advocating bombs and blood, she "has preached John Stuart Mill and common sense." Doubtless Michel is merely exercising that discretion which is the better part of valor. She has heard of British bastiles.

